Syria. And there is expresly this saying, that whē Benhadad came to him to sew for mercie, al that euer he said vnto him was no more but this, that the kings of Israel were mercifull and kind hearted. And behold, that goodly vertue of clemencie ouercame his heart: by meanes wherof whereas God commaunded him to execute rigour, he shewed mercie. But it happened vnto him as he had deserued. And why? For the Syrians had cōmitted horrible blasphemie against God & scorned him, saying: He is ỹ God of ỹ mountains, but if we come into ỹ plain grounds, we shal haue victorie, he can do nothing there. Thus were idols set vp in Gods place. And therefore it was saide to Achab, that the king of Syria should bee vanquished & rooted out. Now it came to passe that his aray was put to flight: but yet they founde a shift by & by to make peace. And why? For this goodly commendation liked Achabs eares well, when they called him a mercifull Prince. By meanes wherof he was dandled a sleepe, so as he made sale of the blasphemie ỹ was committed against God, as it is a common matter with vs to bee pitifull in cases where God is offended. For this cause a Prophet was sent vnto him, bringing his badge with him, that is to wit, that he had bin wouded by the commandement of God: and the first man, (who had refused to do it,) was deuoured of a Lion out of hand. Yet notwithstāding the Prophet came to Achab wounded and disfigured and said vnto him: I tooke a man to keepe, and he that deliuered him to mee bad mee I should not let him goe vpon paine of my life. Neuertheless while I turned mee too & fro, he scaped from me. And thou must answere him vpon thy life, quoth Achab. Then answered the Prophet vnto Achab: it is thy selfe that this toucheth. This message is sent to thee of God, to shewe thee that for as much as thou hast spared the king of Syria, whom God had put into thy hand to be reuenged of him for the outrage done to his Maiestie: thou must answere for him lyfe for life, and thy people with thee. So then we see that if Gods honor be impeached, it is not for vs to let things slip, but we must vnderstand that if wee make light of such a crime, God will surely make the vengeance to light vpon our selues. To be short, let vs marke well, that if such as haue commission to punish offenders doe it not: there will bee no excuse for them. For ỹ which is written will not be repealed for mens pleasures: that is to wit, that he which iustifieth or acquitteth ỹ guiltie person, is as abhominable before God, as he that condemneth the innocent. If a poore innocent bee oppressed, men can skill to say, there is no reason in it, and that the matter must come to account before God. And here God addeth the second part, that is to wit, that if an offender be quit, and Iustice and equitie so turned vpside downe: it must come to account as well as the other. Yee see then howe it is a lesson which all those ought to beare in minde, whom God hath commanded to punish mens offences: that they must bee well ware to vse one rule and one egall measure. For if a man punish one offender and pardon another, and thinke to goe halfe quit for it before GOD: it is cleane contrarie. And for proofe thereof, let vs consider the example that is set downe in Hoseas concerning king Iehu. Oseo, 1. 14. God commaunded him to destroy all Idolaters: he did it partly but not altogither: for hee destroyed those whom he stoode in feare of, and he did it for his owne vaine glory and suertie. God did him the honour to make him king, & he considered it not. But when he came once to ỹ kingdome, O he must maintaine himselfe in it. And what did he? He executed rigor ynough vpon those whom he lifted, and specially vpon such as he wist might doe him harme: but when he had so begun, he let the rest go vnpunished, he cared not what came of it, so he might reigne peaceably. Now at the first sight a man might well say it was a vertue worthie of commendation, that he punished those whom God had commanded him. Verily and so was it, if he had held on that trade still. But for as much as he destroyed one sort and spared another sort: it is said that God will punish the māslaughter that Iehu had committed. And how may that be? Is it manslaughter to haue executed the cōmandement of God? Yea, after the maner that he went to worke. He is said to bee a manslear, bicause he had not an eye to the thing that God commanded him. For he should haue gone through as he began. But he stayed in the middes of his way. For as for those whom he punished, he punished thē in respect of his owne peculiar profit. He had no regard of Gods honour, so the Crowne of the kingdome continued with him. Therefore is he iustly accoūted for a manslear and not a iudge. And therefore let vs beware that we take not more libertie than God giueth vs. For he can well skill to moderate his own doings, though we take not vpon vs to be more pitifull than he. And if wee make our hand of his honor, we must pay dearely for it when we come to our reckening before him. But if this seeme straunge vnto vs: let vs go a litle by degrees, & see if nature might not be a schoolemystresse good enough for vs, if we were not blinded by our wicked affections. If a mā haue children, he knoweth well ynough that it is his ductie to teach them, and to chastise them whē they doe amisse. For if he beare with his childrē, and dare not touch them, but cockereth them, and in the meane while they bee of euill nature: may it not bee saide that he is worthie that his children should picke out his eyes, and pluck his nose from his face? And on the contrarie part, if children were teachable & meeke of themselues: it were not meete that they should bee touched. But when a father perceiues his children to bee curst and vnruly: if he spare them then, men will say that he marreth them, and that he sendeth them to the gallowes, and that he is the cause of their vndoing. Now let vs compare a father with a Iudge. Whereas a father ought to chastise his children with roddes: a iudge hath an office that passeth yet further. Therefore he must haue an eye thereunto: and if he doe not, he is worthy to haue his eyes put out with the mischiefe, as Moses speaketh here of these people, saying: They shall be as thornes to prick thee on all sides, and Iosu. 23. 13.

to put out thine eyes: they shall be as waspes to sting thee in such sort as ỹ shalt not know which way to turne thee. Lo what reward ỹ Israelites had for their retchlesnesse in that they were not stout in putting the sentence in execution, which God had vttered with his own mouth. But howsoeuer the case stoode with them: let vs learne still to be pitifull. For the rigour that is spoken of here, must not make vs to forget how God commandeth vs to loue euen our enemies, & them Matt. 5. 44. that persecute vs, and to indeuour to doe them good to the vttermost of our power, that we may bring them into the right way of saluation. Then must we needes haue that. Yea and euen when a Iudge vseth rigour, his heart must mourne and lament, to see a creature that is made after the image of God so dealt withall: but yet must he go on still, and execute the office which GOD hath committed vnto him. These two thinges then are not vnmatchable: that is to wit, that gentlenesse should bee vsed in the executing of Iustice, so as our wicked moode should not carie vs away, but that we should alwayes hold vs still to this point, of louing euen those that shall haue done vs the worst they could. Thus ye see howe we ought to put this doctrine in vre. Gods intent is not to stirre vp his people to crueltie, his meaning is not to bereaue them vtterly of all compassion: and yet notwithstanding he will haue misdeedes to be punished.

And furthermore as touching the lande of Chanaan which hee had purposely appointed to his honour: hee woulde not haue it any longer so defyled with such infections. For the Nations that had dwelled therein before, had as it were defiled the land. Nowe Gods intent is to stablish his kingdome there, he will bee worshipped vncorruptly there: and therefore all abhominations must be rid away. For seeing that God will haue his righteousnesse put in vre through the whole world: whensoeuer he is knowen in any place, so as his trueth is there preached, and he hath set his Church in some good order and state: men must looke well about them that no offences, or defylinges may raigne there. For wheresoeuer God is worshipped and serued: that place is as a temple dedicated to his Maiestie, and Gods temple must be kept holy as it ought to bee. Then is it the greatest and intollerablest treacherie to Godward that can bee, when euill 2. Cor. 3. doings and crimes are fostered in his Churche. Therefore it is not said without cause, Thine eye shall not pardon any of all those Nations, they must bee consumed vtterly. And why? first the wickednesse that was among them was ouergreat, they were despisers of God, and therefore he was faine to be reuenged of them in the end. Againe, he hath an eye to the benefit and welfare of his Church, so as he woulde not haue his children intangled with such as might draw them to euill, & consequently to their ruine and destruction. God then wil haue his people rid of all stumbling blocks. Marke that for the second point. Moreouer for the third point, it was conuenient ỹ God should shewe himselfe a Iudge, to the intent that by beholding such vengeance, they might take warning to thinke thus with themselues: seeing that God hath done vs the honour to punish such as haue offended vs, to giue vs example by them, let vs beware ỹ wee fall not into the same offences: for then shall we be dubble to blame. Thus ye see how Gods committing of his vengeaunce vnto his owne people, to punish such as had bin giuen ouer to all naughtinesse, ought to serue all folkes for an example.

After he hath said so, he addeth now, Thou shalt not serue their Gods, for that would turne to thy decay. Although this saying haue bin set downe by Moses alreadie heretofore: yet is it not without cause ỹ he setteth it downe here againe. For we soone forget what God commandeth vs, if wee bee not quickened vp to put it in execution. We crie out dayly to haue iustice executed: but how do men discharge themselues therof? Let their eares be neuer so much beaten, it is to no purpose, they passe not much for it: but they be the more forgetfull from day to day. Therefore doeth Moses put them in minde of the things that he had told them before, to the intent that the people should in any wise refraine from seruing the idols of the heathen. And he addeth a threate, It would turne to thy decay. In deede the Hebrew word which he vseth is commonly taken for cordes or lines, but here by a similitude it is taken for snares or nets, and for ruine, decay, downfal, or stumbling. Then if thou fall into idolatrie: it will be a deadly fall to thee, saith he. Keepe thee from that. Thus we see that when God punisheth ỹ wicked, we must alwayes learne at their cost, to liue in his feare. For our condemning of other folkes wil not iustifie our selues, if we follow them or become like them: but rather they shalbe witnesses against vs to bereaue vs of al excuse. Therfore let vs thinke vpon that which is added here, that when God had commanded his people to destroy the idolaters: he addeth, beware ye meddle not with their superstitions, for then shall ye bee ouerthrowen out of hand. Yea & we see also that God did not beare with the people of Israel any long time after they had offended. For the heathen might yet haue some excuse, bicause they had not had any teaching: but the Israelites sinned wilfully, & their dooing was a manifest rebellion, bicause they had bin sufficiently warned thereof before, specially for as much as God had done them so great honor, as to put the sword into their hand, as if he should say, Thou shalt punish the misdoings of others. Seeing then ỹ God had so honored that people: was it not an increasing of their euill much more, whē they happened to become like those whom they punished? Yea: for ỹ punishment which they had executed vpon others, serued to bereaue thē of al colour of ignorance, and to dubble their owne fault. For after as God honoreth men: they ought to take ỹ more heede to liue in all purenes before him. That is the cause thē why those two things are matched together.

And hereupon wee may gather, that all such as haue the executing of Iustice, must lay away their owne fleshly passions, and looke that they be quite and cleare from all desire of reuenge, hatred and rancor. And this must be regarded of vs, not onely in punishing of euill doers, but also in the admonishments and warninges that wee giue. For if we be too sharpe, it is an ouer-shooting of our selues which proceedeth of our sinfulnesse, by reason whereof, although the correction which we minister be out of Gods word, yet is it already steined, and God alloweth it not. Sometimes wee think our selues to bee excused, if wee tell a man the truth. Yea, but wee would not tell it him, if our ouerwhelmed affection draue vs not to it. For nowadaies vices are fostred among men, and euery man is content to beare with his neighbour in his euill doeing: but if there happen any variance or quarell, then our flieth that which was cõcealed before. Therefore in rebuking men, it is not enough for vs that wee can alleage that we haue told them the truth: vnlesse we can also therewithall protest, that we were not led with desire of reuenge or otherwise. Let vs marke then, that if it be but in warninges by word of mouth, we must not be passionate nor desirous of reuenge, but simply do it of zeale to Godward. Now then it is much more reason that when a iudge holdeth the sword in his hand, and is to proceede further to the executing of iustice with rigour, hee should then lay aside all euill affections. That is the cause why God hath expresly shewed his people the end of the law which he had giuen them, to the intent they shoulde bee the better taught to walke in the pure religion, and not follow the superstitions which they should punish in the Heathen. That is the thing which we haue to note in effect.

Now Moses adderth immediatly, If thou say in thine heart, Alas these Nations are mee in nũber than I, & how is it possible that I should discomfite them? Remember what thy God did in the land of Egypt, how he handled Pharao & all his people, & what proofe of his power he gaue thee there. For euen so will hee doe to all the Nations whom thou art afraid of. Heere Moses intendeth to harten the people, to the intent they should not bee daunted with fearefulnesse. For the thing that doeth commonly hinder men in doing their duetie, is a certaine fearefulnesse which they conceiue. O (say they) this is hard to be done: and againe, if I doe it, I shall stirre vp many mens displeasure against mee, and such a harme may come to me by it. Thus in stead of walking as God commaundeth vs, we bowe with euery blast, and in the end turn quite away. Wee be but ouer bould and hardie in following our owne passions, and wee be so blinded with them, that although there bee daunger in them, yet wee think not vppon it: and although it come to our mind, yet doe our affections so ouermaister vs, that we ceasse not to goe on still. We see that if a man be in a rage, although death be before his eyes, yet hee goeth through with it like a mad man, or like a beast that is caried away with furiousnesse. After that maner doe we deale. And that is the cause why I sayd that we be but too bold in executing our owne wicked and excessiue moode. But if God commaund vs any thing: we make such nyseneesse at it, as is pitiull to see. And then come all these doubtes in our head: How is it possible that I should holde out, if I should followe my vocation faithfully? For beholde, there is such a blocke in my way, I shall haue such a man mine enemie, such a thing may befall mee, such a man will bee against me. All these forecastes (say I) will come to our mind. And therefore let vs marke, that God doth not without cause say thus to his people heere, doe these thinges, not respecting thine owne power, and abilitie, but respecting and knowing my strength; for that is inuincible. If thou haue mee on thy side, feare not but I will make thee ouercome all thine incombraunces, and all the euill incounters that thou canst meete with. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to mark vppon this text.

Howbeit forasmuch as the vice that is spoken of heere, is common among vs, and all of vs are (as yee would say) attainted with it: wee haue so much the more neede to bee earnest in putting this lesson in vre. We see that if men be against vs, by and by we ouershoote our selues, and we cannot serue God. And how so? If I should doe al that God commaundeth me, all the world would hate mee: I shalbe pointed at with mens fingers, I shal haue as many enemies as I haue neighbours about me. Heereuppon wee shrink in our hornes by and by, and we beare our selues in hand that wee bee excused before God. And this happeneth in maner continually. Yea verily, and forasmuch as the world is frowarde, we haue good cause to be afraid when we intend to liue in such vprightnesse and soundnesse as God commaundeth. Sith we see it is so, let vs returne to that which is said heere: namely that to obey GOD, wee must not passe what wee our selues are, nor what our owne credite and power is: but we must arme our selues with this promise. It is God that commaundeth me to doe it, and hee seeth well ynough what daungers and distresses are in it, he will stand by me and reach me his mighty hand. It behoueth me to rest vppon that, and to conceiue a stedfast trust, to ouercome all thinges that may turne me away from the doing of my duety. That is the thing which we haue to remember vppon this lesson of Moses. And in deede how should we doe without that? For wee see howe vices haue their full scope nowadaies, and he that intendeth to serue God purely, may wel say he is as a sheepe among wolues. But what for that? Wee haue a good Shepheard, who hath promised to defende vs. Let vs put our trust in him, and in the meane season walke on in the way that he hath shewed vs. Else, I beseech ye what would become of the poore Christians that are deteined among the enemies of the fayth? If they should passe for the daungers wherein they bee, how durst they open their mouthes to honour GOD? Should they not needes either giue themselues ouer to all euill, or else at leastwise be faine to strike sayle? Yes surely. But when they consider thus, Our God is the keeper of our soules, and seeing wee bee vnder his protection, let vs wait till hee reache vs his hande at our neede: then at the conceiuing of such thoughtes, they take newe courage & are inabled to serue God, or at leastwise the saide fearefulnesse ouermaistreth them not. True it is that wee cannot but bee afraide, and feele our flesh continually shrinking away, when wee bee disposed to walke according to Gods ordinance, and wee shall conceiue many crossebytings: but yet must wee not foster such vice to foade our selues in it. I say we must come to that which Moses telleth vs here: Thy God wil worke for thee.

Aboue all other, they that are in authoritie must arme themselues with this promise, or else there wilbe neither constancie nor stoutnesse in them. For wee see what threatninges, and spitings are wrought euery where. Insomuch that when euen the greatest kinges and princes are minded to doe right: there needeth but some Courtier to inuegle them, and hee shall so alter their minde as (doe what they can) they must needes yeeld to all naughtinesse. No doubt but that euen the greatest princes, (although they themselues intend no such thing) doe become starke naught for other mens pleasures, so as they be oftentimes inforced to say, I would faine doe the thing that I knowe to be good, but I dare not for displeasing of such as are about mee, bycause they may stirre mee vp great troubles and vnquietnesse, and therefore I must bee faine to yeeld to them. Againe there are a great number of people that wil set themselues against me, if I should doe my dewty. Lo in what taking a prince shall diuers times bee. Insomuch that if hee perceiue some officers of his to haue committed outrages, pillinges, pollinges, and extortions, O [saieth he] I shall lose all my seruantes hearties if I bee too rigorous: therefore must I let such thinges slippe, and though my people bee oppressed by it, yet must not I make any countenance y I see it. Ye see then that the greatest princes are the cause of all mischiefe by their inclining to the woorser part, when they thinke they cannot maintaine their state, but by fauoring wicked persons, and by laying the brydle in their necke. And how then shall they doe which haue not the like authoritie? Surely euery little blast of winde, and euery leafe that falleth from a tree, must needes astonish them out of hand, so as for feare they shal alleage thus and thus: Alas, I shal get such a mans displeasure, such an inconuenience may befall mee for it: therefore I must doe such a thing or such a thing to saue my selfe: I see my life would be in daunger, and I am but one man alone, I should bee made a pray for others. Yee see then howe these forecastes are a cause of the ouerthrow of all right & Iustice, so as men keepe not one continual train, nor hold themselues at one good stay, but that as soone as they haue done any one good deede that is worthy of prayse, by and by they vndoe it againe and marre all. Therefore it standeth vs so much the more in hande to beare this doctrine well printed in our mindes, y if we intend to serue God, wee must not haue an eye to our owne power, but trust to him that setteth vs a worke. For he wil not suffer vs to be disappointed, so we doe him the honour to call vpon him, and to flie to him for refuge, not mistrusting but that his power is able enoughe to maintaine vs. Yea and although we haue none enemies to the worldward, yet must that be our foundation, that wee may keepe the right way all our life long. For let euery of vs looke into himselfe, and hee shall see that wee haue a common enimie of Sathan, and wee see what wiles he hath to surprise vs: and what strength haue wee to withstande him? Againe the holy scripture telleth vs that wee must forsake our selues, mortifie all our affections and hold them in prison, and renounce all worldly thinges, if wee will come vnto God, & moreouer our life must shew y fruits thereof. Now we know our frailtie, we see infinite temptations to inuegle vs, we knowe that the diuell is the prince that raineth in the aire aboue vs, and alas what can wee doe? This might at the first make vs abashed. But what? Wee must not heere haue an eye to our owne freewill as these blind wretches doe, which presume vppon their owne strength, and rest vpon their own abilities: but wee must say, O Lorde, performe thou the thinges which thou commaundest vs, and then commaund vs what thou wilt. Let vs goe and put our selues after that fashion into the hand of our God, and suffer him to rule vs by his holy spirite: and then wee neede not doubt but we shal haue the vpperhand of al euils that incounter vs, and that although wee be troubled neuersomuch, yet in the end hee will giue vs a happie issewe, so as wee shall feele that our trusting in him hath not beene in vaine. To be short, we see how profitable this doctrine is for vs. For it were impossible for vs to ouercome the least assault that wee could be put vnto, vnlesse God reached out his hand to succour vs at our neede. Therefore let vs call vppon him, and that not for once and away, but forasmuch as it is right hard for vs to hold out to the end, and to haue a continuall stedfastnesse, let vs pray God that when he hath once set vs in the good trade, he continue the same, and suffer not vs to turne head again within two or three dayes after, but that when we haue walked rightly for a certaine time, we may goe foreward more and more, and shewe that we haue walked vnder his guidance, and not beene foolish hardie to raunge abroad at aduenture, but that wee haue put our trust in him, and imbraced his promises, whereby he telleth vs that he will neuer faile such as are his, but that like as they submit themselues to him, so he also will vtter his power towardes them, to maintain them and defende them against all the temptations of Sathan, and against all the wronges of the world.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs so to feele them as wee may learne to mislike of them, and giue our selues more and more to serue him: and that seeth we bee so sore tempted with our owne wicked lustes, and so assailed by them euery minute of an houre, as we bee not able to ouermaister them: wee may take the armor which he giueth vs from heauen, that is to wit, the grace of his holy holie spirite, wherewith to repulse all Sathans assaults, that by that meanes our God may bee glorified in vs, and his Kingdome aduaunced more and more, so as his righteousnesse, goodnesse, and wisedome may shine foorth euerywhere, and spetially be so printed in our hearts, as wee also may beare the badges of them in all our members. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewsday the xiij. of August. 1555.

The Lvj. Sermon which is the sixth vpon the seuenth Chapter.

19 That is to wit &c.

20 And also the Lord thy God will send Waspes among them, vntill he haue destroyed the remnant of them, and those that shall haue hidden themselues from thy presence.

21 Thou shalt not be afraid before them. For the Lord thy God is in the mids of thee, a great and terrible God.

22 And the Lord thy God will cast downe those nations before thee, by little and little. Thou maist not rid them away out of hand, for feare least the beastes of the feelde doe multiply against thee.

23 But the Lorde thy God will giue thee them before thee, and astonish them with a great astonishment, vntill they be vtterly destroyed.

24 And he will giue thee their kinges into thy handes, and thou shalt wype out their name from vnder heauen. And none of them all shalbe able to stand before thee, vntill thou haue rooted them out.

WE sawe yesterday what courage wee ought to haue to doe our duety, and wherupon we ought to grounde our selues: namely vppon the promise which God maketh vs, that we shalbe maintained by his hand and power. For if we haue an eye to our own power & ability, we shal haue no cause to conceiue anie trust: but if wee bee acquainted with Gods power, and haue his promise that he will ayde vs: then haue we no cause to bee afrayde. Then if wee see anie daungers that may make vs afrayde, or astonish vs: let vs learne to haue recourse to this lesson, that whensoeuer God commandeth vs to do any thing, he wil not faile vs at our neede, but rather wee shall feele his presence in such wise as we ought to do him the honour to rest vppon him. And to the ende this doctrine might be the better knowne, Moses hath therwithall set down the experience therof which God had giuen the people of Israel at their going out of Egypt. Thou hast seene the signes and wonders which God wrought: and he wil doe as much in this behalfe. It ought to suffise vs ỳ God bindeth himselfe to vs by his promise. Howbeit forasmuch as he perceiueth our infirmitie: he giueth vs this help more, of making vs to haue experience of ỳ things that we knew before. Nowe if this anaile vs not: we be not onely vnfaithfull, but also vnthankful. For when god doth vs good, it is not for an houre or twaine: but hee wil haue it to stande vs in steede all our life long, and to conclude boldly, that as he hath begun well, so will hee also continue. Then let vs beware that we be not guiltie of so great vnthankfulnesse, as to haue thrust Gods benefites vnderfoot, which ought to be so well knowen vnto vs. And that is to the end we may goe through with our course without stoppe. And because wee be as weake as is possible, or rather lasie and vnprofitable, when we shoulde do any good: let vs take corage as it is giuen vs here euen by hauing recourse vnto God, praying him to holde out his hand continually to helpe vs: and therewithall let vs doe whatsoeuer he commaundeth vs, and whatsoeuer wee knowe to bee our duetie, not doubting but the end of it wilbe good. Although the diuel practise to turne al vpsidedowne, and although men streine themselues and make neuer so greate assaultes to further the same: yet will God get the vpper hande. And if hee succour vs, let vs not doubt but wee shall ouercome all the assaultes which wee shall bee driuen to indure.

And furthermore Moses addeth, that God will sende Waspes to destroy the rest of those Nations, and those that hid themselues out of the way. As if he should say, that although the children of Israel were not able to destroy their enemies: yet woulde God prouide for it as one that hath all meanes in his hande. Thou shals not neede (saith hee) to haue the sworde alwayes in thine hande: for God hath other men of warre, hee will arme the Waspes against them. Nowe surely this may seeme straunge at the first sight. For seeing that God intendeth to shewe his power against the enemies of his people: why doeth he not rather dart his thunder at thé from heauen?

Why

Why maketh hee not the earth to open and to ſwallowe them vp? Why worketh hee not after ſome other faſhion than by ſending of Hornets? Nay, heereby hee ment to ſhewe, firſt that hee hath all creatures in his hande, and can ſerue his turne with them as he liſteth. And it is a greate aduauntage for vs to knowe, that if God bee on our ſide, there is not any thing, no not euen ſo much as a flie, but it ſhall make with vs and againſt our enemies. Likewiſe on the contrarie parte, if wee haue prouoked Gods wrath and hee bee minded to make vs feele his vengeance: although the whole worlde had linked themſelues together to helpe vs: yet notwithſtanding, all thinges (yea euen to the verie flies) ſhall be armed to execute his wrath againſt vs. This therefore is a thing that ought to make vs afraide when wee liue not as wee ought to doe: and contrariwiſe which ought to giue vs ſingular hope and comfort, ſo wee bee vnder the protection of our God. Marke it then for a ſpeciall point, that whereas God auoweth that hee will ſende Waſpes: his meaning is to ſhewe that hee hath incomprehenſible meanes in his hande, and that hee will cauſe all thinges to imploy themſelues in his ſeruice, to deſtroye his enemies and to helpe his people. But yet hee ſheweth his mightie power much better thereby, than if he vſed myracles: I meane in puniſhing the pride of ſuch as truſt in their owne ſtrength, and ſwell like Toades, and beare themſelues in hande that nothing can hurt them. The deſpiſers of God do make themſelues beleeue, that they can exempt themſelues from all inconueniences, either by their pollicie, or by their power and cunning. Heereuppon (for wee knowe that men are readie to burſt for pride, vntill Gods ſpirite reigne in them:) God, to humble them and to make them meeke, ſubdueth them and ouermaſtereth them as they deſerue.

Rom. 8. 28. 29.

True it is that God coulde confounde them at the firſt blowe, and make them to feele ſuch a heauenly force, as were able to dant the whole worlde: but hee will not deale ſo with them. Howe then? Hee vndermines them by ſuch meanes as they neuer thought of: and that is to ſcorne their fonde ouerweening the more, which made them worſe than mad, and wherewith they had beene beſotted before. And that is the cauſe why hee ſent flies and other vermin vppon Egypt, rather than raiſed his Angels to deſtroye the Egyptians. It is true that God wrought al manner of wayes to make them feele his power. Hee ſent darkeneſſe, hee turned the waters into bloude, and in the ende an Angel came and ſlewe all the firſt borne of their houſes. This was well done. But yet Gods meaning was to pull downe the pride of Egypt, by ſending vermine to conſume them. Lo what men of warre God chooſeth to wage battell for him, when hee liſteth to laugh mens loftineſſe to ſcorne, and to ſpite them that they may bee aſhamed of it. For by meanes thereof they come to knowe themſelues, whereas erſt they forgate themſelues, and bare themſelues in hande that their owne power was wonderfull. And indeede when wee reade that Herod was ſo conſumed of wormes: it ought to put vs in minde, that God ſent him a puniſhment fitte for him, becauſe hee had ſuffered men to call him a God. Hee was not contented with the degree of a mortall man: but hee woulde needs imagine that hee coulde transforme himſelfe. Therefore it was meete that hee ſhoulde bee abaced beneath all men, and that the filthines of his bodie ſhoulde make him droppe in peeces, ſo as hee ſhoulde ſeeke to murther himſelfe with his owne hand. Nowe then Gods handling of him after that faſhion, is to humble him the better. And when wee reade this preſent text, let vs looke that wee liue in the feare of our God: and then wee may bee ſure of his helpe, ſo as wee may liue not onely among Waſpes and Hornets and other ſuch vermine, but alſo euen among Dragons and wilde beaſts, according as it is ſaide in the foureſcore and eleuenth Pſalme, that when wee bee in Gods keeping, hee will maintaine our life in ſuch ſort, as the thinges whereof wee be moſt afraid, ſhall not bee able to annoy vs. But on the contrarie part, if wee become his enemies and deſpiſe his maieſtie: hee needeth not to make any great adoe in arming of himſelfe to confound vs. For flies wil be able ynough to execute his vengeance. Thus ye ſee what we haue to gather vppon this place.

Rom. 8. Pſal. 91.

Nowe againe Moſes confirmeth the doctrine which wee haue hearde: namely that the children of Iſrael ſhoulde not bee afraide of their enemies. For God is among you (ſaieth hee) yea euen the ſtronge and terrible God. Firſt hee ſetteth downe heere, that they ſhoulde not bee afraide of their enemies: and afterwarde hee addeth the reaſon, For God (ſaith hee) is among you. And thirdly hee ſheweth what manner a God the ſame is, to the intent that the people ſhoulde not doubt but hee is mightie ynough, and by comparing him to his creatures, reſolue themſelues that it ought to ſuffiſe them, if they had him on their ſide. This is the ſumme of the thinges that are ſaide heere. Now it ſeemeth at the firſt ſight that heere is ſome contrarietie. For hee had ſaide afore, God will deſtroy all the enemies whom thou feareſt: and heere hee forbiddeth them to bee afraide. Howe hang theſe two together? Whereas hee ſpeaketh of feare, wee haue to note that when any daunger is apparant and threateneth vs, wee feele the griefe thereof, and wee muſt needes be afraide of it, and it cannot be otherwiſe.

Nowe then in ſaying that God will deſtroye all thoſe whom his people were afraide of, Moſes meaneth that although the enemies bee dreadfull of themſelues, yet ſhall not God bee hindered to deſtroy them. And againe, we haue to note alſo, that God hath alwayes borne with the fainthartedneſſe of thoſe that are his. Indeede it was a fault in the people of Iſrael, that they were afraide of their enemes, for ſeeing they knewe themſelues to bee in the tuition of their God, they shoulde haue defiled all things that might haue abashed them. Yet notwithstanding, God beareth still with that default. And although the people was vnworthy to bee succoured, because of the fearefulnesse that proceeded of the saide infirmitie: yet did not God cease to holde them still by the hande. Neuertheleſſe if God beare with vs, his meaning is not to feede our vice, or to foade vs in it, when wee haue not such stoutnesse and constancie as is requisite. It is true that God ceaseth not to haue mercie vpon vs for all that: but howsoeuer the worlde goe, yet is that fearefulnesse alwayes worthie to be condemned. For let vs see from what spring it issueth. If we had a perfite trust in our God: it woulde put away all feare, and wee might defie all that euer is against vs, accordingly as Saint Paul saieth, if God bee on our side, who shalbe against vs? And Dauid saieth, If a Million of men of warre had beseeged mee, yet woulde I not bee afraide. Though I were in the darknesse of death, yet if I may see God my sheepeherd, and he shew me his sheepehooke, I will rest my selfe vppon that and bee in quiet.

Rom 8. 29. Psal. 27. 1.

Therefore let vs marke well, that our Lorde sheweth himselfe pitifull, when it pleaseth him to succour vs in such infirmitie. For hee needed to doe no more but say in one worde, prepare your selues to receiue my grace, and by and by thereuppon wee ought to imbrace his promises and to rest vppon them, and to take all our contentation in them. But wee doe not so: and yet notwithstanding hee ceaseth not to beare with vs therein. Neuertheleſſe, although hee vse such gentlenesse and patience towardes vs: yet doth it not followe that therefore there is no fault in our fearefulnesse, neither ought we to conclude that wee may fall a sleepe in it: but rather we must quicken vp our selues to say: how nowe wretched creature? Thou distrusteſt thy God. Thou hast beene as greatly afflicted as might bee, and hee hath succoured thee. What meaneſt thou by reiecting his goodnesse after that manner? Thinkeſt thou that his benefites haue alwayes beene lost towards thee, that thou diffeateſt them through thine owne leawdnesse, in that thou doeſt not acknowledge them? For if wee acknowledged not Gods benefits as they deserue, surely we should be confirmed by the as I haue saide alreadie. Then is it not without cause ỳ God addeth here, that his people should not be afraide of their enemies. True it is that he had saide, Thou shalt bee afraide of them: but there bee spake of the infirmitie that he knewe to bee in his people, which was faultie: for he condemneth it as it deserued. And thereuppon hee addeth, Thou shalt not bee afraide of them. As if hee shoulde say, true it is in deede your nature will alwayes bee fearefull: but yet yee must not bee afraide, yee must withstande such fearefulneſſe. And when yee see the multitude of your enemies, it cannot bee but that yee must bee somewhat moued: but yet yee must haue the buckler of faith to repulse all such feare, and ye must thinke that seeing I haue promised to succour you: I will not faile you.

True it is that doe what wee can, wee shall neuer be so well hartened, but that there will be some misdouting as wee haue heretofore seene. For wee ought to holde our selues vnto Gods promises, and to assure our selues of his succour. Surely if we seeme neuer so stout, and there bee but one sparke of feare in vs, wee must vnderstande that the same is euil. Yet notwithstanding, so wee bee not ouerwhelmed with feare, nor quaile not, but take courage, and after tossing too and fro, doe holde still our owne, and enter into the battell: our Lorde is contented with vs.

Nowe then, what is to bee done? When wee perceiue any daunger, it cannot bee but wee must haue some feeling of it: for otherwise we should be as blockes, and not to bee afraide of any thing, is no vertue. A drunkarde will runne vppon the swordes point, hee will leape out at a windowe, hee wil be afraide of no thing: and why is that? Because he is out of his right wittes. Likewise a madde man will throwe him selfe into the fire or kill himselfe. Therefore we see that it is no vertue to bee without feeling of griefe. Neuertheleſſe when wee feele the daungers, wee must resort to the remedie that God giueth vs.

True it is that our life hangeth as by a threed, and that there needeth not any thing to destroy vs. But yet howe weake soeuer we be, our Lord hath promised to holde vs shrowded vnder his wings: and therefore let vs runne vnto him. And seeing hee hath a care of our life, let vs trust thereto, and call vppon him as oft as wee see any daunger like to insue. And forasmuch as he hath promised neuer to shrinke away from vs: let vs approch boldly vnto him, and put our trust in him, and then shall wee bee fenced welynough. For the name of God is an inuincible forteresse, the righteous will flee thereto for refuge, and hee shall neuer perish. To the intent therefore that wee may haue a stedfast assurance in the middes of daunger, let vs learne to haue recourse immediatly to our God, by receiuing the promises which hee giueth vs: and they wilbe a sure and steadie leaningstock to rest vppon: and by that meanes also God shalbe glorified in vs.

Psal. 20. 2. and 33. 21.

True it is that wee may feele some such conceit as shall abash vs: but yet that feare of ours which wee doe so conceiue, shalbe but as an exercise of our faith, and the ouercoming thereof shalbe the more commendable. Howbeit if wee finde any difficultie, so as we cannot resolue our selues at the first: then let vs assure our selues there is yet still some infirmitie in vs, and wee yeelde not God his due honour, forasmuch as we bee slowe to beleeue his promises, and sticke not to them with a cheerefull courage. And therefore let vs blame our selues in that behalfe, yea and euen be sorie for it. Notwithstanding, we must not quail though there be infirmitie in vs: for God wil bring al to passe by his own power as shalbe declared yet more plainly hereafter. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpō this text, where Moses saith ỳ we must not in any

Now let vs come to the reason which hee addeth: Thy God (saith he) is in the mids of thee. This is the same promise that was giuen at the beginning: for we must always cal to mind what hath bin treated of heretofore, namely that God telleth vs not of our own strength, when he willeth vs to be well fenced with constancie, but calleth vs back to himself. The end then which we must alwayes begin at, is that we must not thinke our selues to haue any power, nor be besotted w any vaine opinion as we see men commonly be in esteeming and flattering themselues, insomuch ỳ although they be lesse thā nothing, yet they always imagin this and ỳ of themselues. And yet notwithstāding, that imagination is nothing else than an ouerweening. Also to incorage vs withal, god vseth none other mean but only to say, haue an eye to me. If it were in our owne selues to trust in him: surely god would not reproch vs any whit at al: for he is not loth ỳ there should be any vertue in vs. But when as hee saith, Haue an eye to me: it is a token ỳ we be destitute of all goodnes, and that if we serch & sift our abilitie throughly what it is, we cannot but be abashed at it. True it is that mē may welynough flatter themselues for a time: but yet in the end they shal find them selues deceiued in their own opinion. And as we see here & haue seene heretofore, our lord sheweth vs ỳ we shal neuer find firme ground to stand vpon, vntill we be come vnto him. And that is ỳ cause why it is said, Thy God is in the mids of thee. Surely it is an excellent promise, that God wilbe in the mids of vs. And for ỳ same cause also doth hee call vs his temple: which thing was figured in old time by the Sāctuarie. For it was Gods wil to haue it seated in the middes of al the people, and hee kept his residence in such wise in it, as men might perceiue his power to bee there. Not that hee was inclosed in that Arke or in the Tabernacle: but it was his will that the people shold haue a visible warrant, that they might not dout at all of him. For such is our rawnesse, that alwayes to our seeming God turneth his backe to vs, and thinketh not vpon vs, or else that hee is too farre of from vs to succour vs with his hand. Therefore it was Gods will that his Sanctuarie should be in the mids of his people, as a warrant of his presence and power. True it is that as now we haue not that, but wee haue other helpes as conuenient for vs. And first of all, the thinges that were figured by those outwarde shadowes, were truly, substancially, and throughly fulfilled in all poinces, by the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ. For seeing that the fulnesse of the Godheade dwelleth in him, wee must not doubt any more but that we haue God with vs. And for the same cause is hee called Emanuel, that is to say God with vs. Nowe then if this promise were made to the people of olde time, much more ought we to assure our selues of it at this day, in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And the cause also why hee tooke our flesh and nature vpon him, was to the ende it shoulde be a holy and indissoluble bonde of the vnion wherein it behoueth vs to put the whole trust of our salvation. And herewithall, we haue his promises, and the seales of them in his Sacraments: so ỳ when we bethinke vs of our baptisme, thereby the son of God doth witnesse vnto vs, that we were once clothed with him as saieth saint Paul. And when wee receiue the supper, he sheweth vs that he is our foode, and that the breade which wee eate, doth not nourish vs better, than we be nourished by his substance, in somuch that we liue in him and by him. Againe wee heare how he saith, that whersoeuer two or three be gathered together in his name, he wilbe in the middes of them. Seing it is so: let vs not thinke that this was saide alonely to the children of Israel: but let vs vnderstande that the vse thereof belongeth vnto vs also at this day. According whereunto we see howe the Church is called Gods restingplace, as is saide thereof in the Psalme, and in the eighth Chapiter of Esay, where it is saide that God will dwell in the middes of his holy Citie.

Let vs applie all these texts to our vse, and let vs not doubt but God is with vs nowadayes, yea and that he will not onely dwel among vs [generally] as in his temple: but also abide in euery one of vs seuerally. And that not onely to make vs feele his power, and to vnderstande that wee haue our life and mouing in him, as S. Paul saith in the Actes: but also to make vs perceiue the presence of his, which he hath promised to all ỳ faithfull. Now then he dwelleth in vs, when wee feele that he yeeldeth vs record of his adoption by his holy spirit, so as we can call vpon him as our father. And therin doth our lord Iesus Christ shew that we be members of his bodie, and that he is so knit vnto vs, as he keepeth not any thing seuerall to himselfe, ne withholdeth any thing from vs, but communicateth all his graces vnto vs. Now then let vs mark, ỳ no man can cal himself a beleeuer, vnles he be throughly perswaded ỳ God is with him. And al of vs in general ought to imbrace this promise, that God is in the mids of vs: specially when wee haue the preaching of his worde, and the order of calling vpon him is common, stablished among vs. If wee haue that onee: let vs not think that euer we shalbe disappointed of the thing that is conteined herein: that is to wit that God will dwell among vs, so as wee shal neuer neede to make long iourneys to seeke him, but we shall finde him still ready at hand to succour vs. Mark that for one point. Neuertheles it is true that this presēce is not perceiued by our mother wit: for it wil seeme oftentimes that God is very far of from vs, or that he hath forgotte vs and cast vs vp: but it is his wil to try our faith & patience by that meane. Howsoeuer the case stand, if we worship him, & haue a care to cal vpon him & to resort vnto him to rest vpō his goodnesse: it is a signe that he is neere at hand to vs. Then if wee haue a desirousnesse to resort vnto him, and doe learne to mourne in our aduersities, beseeching him to haue pitie vpon vs: it is a token that he hath not giuen vs ouer, but that he holdeth vs vp with his mightie hand, so as we doe rest vpon his power. Yee see then howe God euen in hiding of himselfe away, ceaseth not to shewe himselfe neere at hand vnto vs, and that he dwelleth continually in vs. And nowe wee see wherevppon wee ought to ground our selues to conceiue assured trust: that is to wit vppon this, that we haue God on our side. And that is a good token that we haue not any thing in our selues, but that it behoueth vs to be vterly destitute of all trust and hope, vntill our Lord haue shewed himselfe vnto vs to helpe vs.

Nowe although this promise ought to suffise vs: yet notwithstanding, Moses addeth one point more, which is not superfluous: namely that God is mighty and terrible. Truely it should seeme at the first blush, that this is not spoken to any purpose. For the case concerneth the strengthening of the faithfull, so as they shoulde plucke vp a good heart, and not doubt but they shal discomfite all their foes: now then hereupon to call him a terrible God, should rather serue to feare them out of their wits. For although God mean not to put them in feare: yet doth his onely maiesty so amaze vs, as we would faine hide vs from his presence if it were possible. Inasmuch then as he termeth himselfe terrible, it should seeme that insteede of giuing vs matter of comfort, he intended to driue vs away from him. But wee must marke that Gods terming of himself mightie and terrible, is to the ende to put vs out of doubt that hee is strong and mightie ynough to discomfite all our enemies. For we must alwayes come backe to this point, that his shewing of himselfe fauourable, mercifull and patient towardes vs, is altogether of his owne proper nature: for we know he is our God & sauiour. Forasmuch then as God is called our God: he wil haue vs to shewe our selues to be his people: that is to say, that his receiuing of vs is with condition, to gouerne vs with his goodnesse, as a sheepeherd that is carefull for his flocke, so as his esteeming of vs as his children, is because he hath adopted vs of his own freegoodnes, and is willing to shew himselfe alwayes fatherlike towards vs, by bearing with vs in our infirmities. So then, whereas he is termed here a terrible and mightie God, it is not in respect of his owne people: but in respect of the vnbeleeuers and infidels. And that is the cause of the often repeting of this worde, The everlasting, thy God. Moses speaketh of it here a fower or fiue times within a little space. Wherfore saith he so oft, Thy God? To the intent that the people should resort to their couenant. In deede it were not Lawfull to preace vnto him, vnlesse he called vs: but seeing that hee of his own good wil hath couenanted with vs to receiue vs to mercie, and hath tolde vs that he will take vs for his flocke & keep vs vnder his protection: we ought not to be afraide any more. Then let vs learne that wee cannot put any trust in God, vntill we knowe that he is willing to admit vs to him, and that he hath already chosē vs to be his household, and to bee vnder his gouernement. When we haue once this promise that he will be our God: then may we well trust in him. For we haue taken holde of his courtesie, and that is to the intent we should knowe, that he will vse the same towards vs euen to the end. Howbeit when we once knowe the goodnes that God vttereth vnto vs: we must also on the contrarie part consider his power against al our enemies. For why? we see we neede not any thing to feare vs or to make vs afraide. In deed if we heare of the promises of Gods goodnes, we feele some sweetenes in them: but yet if the diuell stirre vp any trouble against vs, by and by we bee dismayed. As long as it is preached vnto vs that our life is in Gods hand, and that we be safe when wee be vnder his protection: all is wel, we receiue that doctrine, and to our owne seeming, it hath taken good rooting in our hearts: But as soone as the leafe is turned, or any daunger shew it self, where are wee then? But had we bin wel settled & confirmed in the thing that we heard: we should bee safe ynough, and we would keepe on stil forward: but wee neuer thinke more vpon that, neither is there any meanes at all to comfort vs. Thus is it a signe that if there happen neuer so little daunger, we doubt of Gods power, & we doe him not y honor to say, he hath promised it, therfore will he perform it, for he is able. And for y same cause S. Paul speaking of Abrahams faith, saith that he beleeued euen against hope, knowing that hee which had made the promise, was also able to performe it. Is seemeth to haue bin a smal matter to say that Abraham beleeued that God was mightie. For who denyeth that? And therefore Abrahams faith is not so greatly to be commended in that respect: for there is no man but hee confesseth it. Yea, yea: but yet for al that, as smal a thing as it seemeth to bee, it is a very rare and difficult thing: and that doth experience shewe. For (as I saide) if we meete with any crabbed incumberance, we thinke there is no God in heauen to succour vs any more: and al that euer can be alledged vnto vs, wilbe so colde, as wee shall find no relieue in it. Therefore it is not without cause that Moses here magnifieth Gods mightie power, and saith that hee is terrible, to the ende that the people might therby assure themselues and say, very well, it is true that we be nothing in comparison of our enemies, but what for that? What maner a one is God? Seeing he saith that he wilbe our captain, & that we shalbe vnder his protection: what can all the men in the world, or all creatures doe? Is there any thing that can withstande the power of God? Againe, what is his maiestie? If he list to shew it: they that nowadayes are ouerlorded in their owne pride, shall out of hand be put to vtter confusion. For if God make the mountaines and Rocks to melt, and the earth to wash away at his presence: what shal become of mē with their frailtie? Thus ye see to what purpose and ende we ought to applie this saying, That God is mighty and terrible. It serueth not to dismay vs: for we know y whensoeuer we resort vnto him, we be alwayes receiued to mercie, his throne is not dreadfull to the beleeuers, but it is the throne of grace and goodnes. Wherfore if we see that our enemies make vs afraid, & that (to our seeming) they be as Wolues to swallow vs vp, & we as sheep in comparison of them: very wel, let vs resort to our God. And what maner a one is he? O, wee must not onely conceiue

this word de God: but wee muſt alſo attribute him his qualities therewithall, namely that hee is mightie and terrible: and then let vs not be afraide. For all the rage that our enemies do caſt and ſome our, is but a ſmoke, & God will make it to fade all away, as ſoone as it pleaſeth him to ſhewe his maieſtie: and we be ſure hee will doe it, becauſe he hath promiſed it. Therefore let vs ſo benefite our ſelues by this promiſe, that whenſoeuer we be aſtoniſhed, or in any doubt or griefe of minde, wee alwaies haue recourſe thither and ſay, Our God is mightie. And why? Wherein will he vtter his mightines? Alas, it is true that he might wel vtter it in confounding & deſtroying vs: but he is patient, gentle, & meeke, and hee wil not haue vs to feele his force to our Matt. 23. 37. harme: but rather he wil haue vs to feele his paſſing fatherly goodnes. All his deſire is to gather vs vnder his wings as a henne that broodeth her litle chickins. And it is a ſingular comfort vnto vs, when we know ỳ he wil be ſo louing & fauourable towards vs, and yet neuertheleſſe will bee knowen to be mightie and terrible in the ouerthrowing of our enemies, and in ouercomming all thinges that are againſt vs. Therefore let vs put our truſt therein. But yet therewithall let vs beware that wee abuſe not his promiſes. For if wee will haue him to ſhewe himſelfe vnto vs: we muſt bee a quiet people to himwarde and abide vnder the couert of his wings, and not play the wilde beaſtes in running away from him. For the hypocrites will brag wel ynough that they haue God on their ſide: but yet for al that, they ſhrink away from him, and let him alone. Now then let vs learne to ghe in ſuch wiſe to our God, as we may truſt in him and repoſe our ſelues vpon him. And in ſo dooing, let vs beare in minde what he commandeth, and examine our faultes according to his worde: and then ſhall we finde by experience, that he meant not to beguile vs, when he told vs ỳ he would be in the mids of vs mightie and terrible to diſcomfit al our enemies.

Now by the way Moſes addeth an exception, ſaying: that God will not deſtroy all the enemies of his people out of hande. And why? Leaſt the beaſts of the field (ſaith he) ſhould ſet themſelues againſt thee: But thou ſhalt weede them out by litle and litle. Thou ſhalt diſpatch euen their kinges: and to bee ſhort, thou ſhalt not leaue any thing at all of thoſe nations. Here Moſes giueth the people a very neceſſary warning, in telling them after what manner they ſhoulde proceede. For otherwiſe they might haue taken ſome euill conceite at their comming into the lande of Chanaan: and if they had not rooted out their enemies immediatly all at once: they might haue imagined with themſelues, what is become of Gods promiſes? It ſhoulde ſeeme that hee hath mocked vs. Therefore doeth Moſes holde them in awe, ſaying: It is true that your God wil diſcomfit all your enemies, but yet ſhall not that be done ſo ſoone as you woulde wiſhe, howbeit aſſure your ſelues there is good reaſon that hee ſhoulde ſo deale with you, and therefore put no diſtruſt in your God. For hee ſeeth that the lande woulde bee repleniſhed with wilde beaſtes, and they would bee ſo many enemies to make warre vpon you. God then doeth this to your benefite, in that hee will not haue the whole land to bee vtterly ridde of all enemies. For if your enemies ſhould be all deſtroied immediately vpon your comming into the lande: you coulde not repleniſh it againe vpon the ſudden, to defende your ſelues from the wilde beaſtes. Nowe we haue to note here, firſt that God intended to correct the peoples ouergreat haſt, by ſhewing them that they ſhould hold themſelues in peace and quiet, vntill God had put them in ful poſſeſſion of the whole lande. For it is the proper nature of faith to tary Gods leiſure, as the Apoſtle affirmeth in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, Heb. 10. 37. alledging this text of Abacuc, that if God delay Hab. 2. 3. the performance of his promiſes, wee muſt tary his leiſure, and not bee ouerhaſtie: for they ſhall come to paſſe time ynough, that is to ſay, they ſhall bee perfourmed in their due ſeaſon. Then let vs marke that faith cannot bee in vs without patience, that is to witte, without tarying of Gods leyſure, till it pleaſe him to execute the thing that hee hath ſpoken and ſaide, and without aſſigning or ſetting of any terme as men commonly doe, who are ſo bolde as to take vpon them to make God ſubiect to their wil. Let vs beware of ſuch ouerſtatelineſſe, and let vs rather learne to bridle our ſelues, til God diſpoſe of things accordingly as hee gaue ſentence of them afore by his owne mouth. And that accordeth with this ſaying of the Prophet Eſay: Our power ſhalbe in ſilence and reſt. Then muſt Eſay. 30. 15. we be ſtil and quiet, if we intend to do God ỳ honor to truſt in him, and to ſhew ỳ we doe it vnfeynedly. And here our Lorde had a regarde to bridle his people. For aſmuch (ſaith he) as mẽs affections are ouerhaſtie & headieſter it not giue you though your enemies bee not deſtroied all out of hand. Let that ſerue for the firſt point.

And herewithal let vs marke alſo, that here God ment to ſhew the reaſon why he differreth and delayeth the performaunce of the things that he determineth, and bringeth them not to paſſe out of hand. Truely he is not bound to doe it. Should God giue vs an account of his doings? If he worke not after our liking, is hee bounde to tell vs why? Ought not wee rather to ſtoope to him, and to ſay, Yea Lord, we bee ignorante, yea and euen ſtarke blinde, and it belongeth to thee onely to be wiſe? Foraſmuch as there is nothing but follie and vanitie in vs: rule thou vs according to thy prouidence. It were meete that we ſhould deale after that faſhion: but we ſee howe God yeeldeth to our rawneſſe. For inaſmuch as wee bee tikliſh, and cannot finde in our heartes to bee contented with his pleaſure, and to reſt wholly vpon it: here he ſheweth vs a reaſon for it. So then let vs mark wel ỳ inеſtimable goodnes of our God, in abaſing himſelf ſo far, as to ſhewe vs the reaſon why he doth things, according as Moſes telleth ỳ people of Iſrael here. For he hath an eie to your benefite, leaſt ỳ wild beaſts ſhould deuour you: for they would multiply, & there be not folke ynow of you to manure ỳ whole lande, but there would be diuers places which ſhould ỳ

vninhabited. Knowe ye therefore that whereas your God destroyeth not all your enemies out of hand, it is for your benefite, and it were not expedient for you that it should be otherwise. And so in effect Moses telleth the people heere, that Gods delaying to giue them full victorie, was to their benefit and welfare. Therefore let vs mark well, that if God make not such hast as we would haue him, he hath an eye to our welfare, so as he procureth the thing that is best for vs, though we perceiue it not at the first. True it is that wee weene our selues to bee wise and well aduised: and thereuppon wee take vpon vs to iudge that God is ouer slowe, and wee woulde fayne thrust him foreward straite wayes by the shoulders to cause him to make more haste. But (as I said) that is bicause wee knowe not what is good for vs, but wee imagine that we bee beguiled euery turning of a hand. God therefore must bee wise for vs, and see more clearely than wee doe, and dispose thinges, not after our liking (for that were ynough to marre all:) but after as hee himselfe knowes to bee good. And in the meane while we must shut our eyes, and doe nothing but glorifie him in his prouidence. And if wee perceyue not at the first why he worketh after that fashion: well, let vs tarie patiently till he shew vs why he made delay and woulde not satisfie our desires. This doctrine cannot bee fully declared as nowe, but yet must wee make an abridgement of it to conclude withall. Likewise now adayes wee may happen to languish all our life long. Now if we should hasten God to deliuer vs: what a thing were it? We would faine be in a paradise here aforehand: and that were the next way to rocke vs asleepe in the world. God therefore is fayne to wake vs by keeping vs occupyed with store of troubles and vexations: and that makes vs to long continually for the heauenly lyfe. Wee forget this geere at the first: but GOD maketh vs to perceyue howe frayle wee bee, by wayting with all patience and humilitie, to bee gouerned by him as he thinketh good. Finally he sheweth how greatly it is for our benefite to be beaten with his roddes. And therefore doeth hee make vs to passe through many troubles, and to bee greatly vexed and tormented. And if there were none other enemies to withstand vs than such as are spoken of here: wel, wee might hap to doe wel ynough with them, for they be men. But wee bee dayly assaulted by the diuel and by sinne: and wee would faine ouercome them at the first push, and obtaine victorie against Satan, and against all the temptations of the world. But what a thing were that? Our pride would be intollerable, wee would thinke our selues to bee Gods, wee would not passe to call any more vpon God, nor to sigh and mourne for our own weakenesse, wee shoulde not tell what it were to mislike of our selues, nor to vnderstand that there is none which hath all power in him but onely God. So then although God haue assured vs that we shall haue the vpper hand of all our enemies: yet shall not y be performed at y first brunt. And why? Bicause it were not good for vs. True it is that wild beastes would not come and deuour vs: but wee haue pride and vainegloric, and wee bee sotted with selfweening. And that deuilish ouerlustinesse would carie vs away, so as wee should fall asleepe in our vanities and delightes, and that would bee worse to vs than all the wilde beastes in the worlde. And therefore let vs assure our selues, that Gods leisurely working, as it were by degrees and by lyne and by leuell: is to our benefite. For coulde he be letted to accomplish all his worke in one minute of an houre? No: but he listeth not to doe it so soone. And therefore let vs learne to keepe the spirituall rest or Sabboth as it is spoken of in the fifth Chapter, that is to say, to imprison our wit, reason and will, and all that euer wee haue besides, and to hold them in such awe, as none but onely God may haue the rule of vs, and dispose of all things at his will. And moreouer, let vs go on when he leadeth vs the way. For that is no breaking of the Sabboth. To occupie our selues euerie man in the charge that God calleth him vnto, and to doe our duties faithfully euery man in his vocation, according to the measure of grace that GOD hath giuen him, are the workes of God, and we must vnderstand that it is God which woorketh them in vs. But yet for all that wee must not bee too hastie, as who shoulde say that God were at our commaundement, or that wee would haue him doe what wee list and when wee list: but all our wisedome must bee to submit our selues to his will. The thing then which wee haue to remember vpon this text that we may fare the better by it: is that we must learne to bee obedient to our God all the time of this our mortall and transitorie life, not doubting but that at length he will vanquish Satan and all that is against vs, and turne euen those things to our benefite and saluation, which we thinke as now to be hurtful and harmfull to vs.

Deut. 5. 14. Esa. 58. 13.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue doone, so as wee may bee drawen to a right repentaunce, and learne more and more to distrust our selues and to settle our trust in him: and that when wee haue imbraced his promises, wee may fare the better by them by applying our selues to his seruice, so as wee may not be vnprofitable in the world, but that as soone as his spirit dwelleth in vs, it may forthwith auaile vs, and shewe by effect that he hath not adopted vs in vaine in our Lord Iesus Christ, so as wee may grow in the same knowledge more and more till he haue throughly accomplished it in vs, and that wee haue the full measure of it, wherof we haue but a very small portion as now. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

The Lvij. Sermon which is the ſeuenth vpon the ſeuenth Chapter.

22.23.24 And the Lord &c.

25 Thou ſhalt burne the images of their Gods with fire. And neither couet ne take thou to thee the golde or ſiluer that is vpon them, for feare leaſt it turne to thy decay. For ſuch things are abhomination to the Lord thy God.

26 Therefore thou ſhalt not bring anie abhomination into thine houſe, leaſt thou thy ſelfe become accurſed as well as it. But thou ſhalt abhorre it and loath it vtterly: for it is a curſed thing.

YEſterday I began to ſhew that we muſt be conſtant vnto the end in truſting vnto God, & in holding of our ſelues to his promiſes, though the thing that he ſpeaketh be not performed out of hande, nor his determination put in execution by and by: for he hath alwayes good reaſon to make delay thereof. True it is that wee perceiue it not, and that is becauſe our eyeſight extendeth not farre. We ſee euen among men, that ſuch as haue lued long time, and haue had moſt experience of thinges, haue moſt ſtay of themſelues, and are not ſo haſtie to doe and attempt things, as younger folkes are, which caſt no perils but runne all on head. A yong man hauing a whot braine, wil needs diſpatch al things out of hand in one day. But he that hath ſome ſtay of himſelfe by reaſon of much experience, will looke about him how to diſpoſe his matters, and to doe his things in good order. Now there is no compariſon betweene God and men. It is not to be ſaide that he is an olde expert artificer (as men terme it): for all thinges are euer preſent vnto him, and euer haue bin ſince the creation of the worlde: and againe, his will is the rule of all wiſedome and right. Sith it is ſo, let vs forbeare to be ouerhaſtie, and if it pleaſe him to let vs linger for a time, let vs beare it patiently. Moreouer wee haue to note the thing that was declared yeſterday in a word or twaine: that is to wit, that if GOD deliuer vs not from all troubles and vexations out of hande: it is thorough our fault. For as ſoone as one miſchiefe is paſt, we procure another to come in the neck of it. This is not to be wited vpon God, nor vpon the ſtate of the life wherein wee bee. But we our ſelues are ſo fruitfull in bringing forth of euill, that although God purge vs of neuer ſo much, yet will the ſeede of it ſpring vp newe againe, and yeelde manifolde increaſe by and by after. That (ſay I) proceedeth of our ſinfulneſſe. And therefore let vs marke well, that if God ſet vs not in quiet at the firſt daſhe, but ſuffer vs to haue enemies to grieue vs and vexe vs: it is becauſe it is not for our benefite nor for our ſaluation, that hee ſhould maintaine vs in too great eaſe. And for proofe thereof (as I ſaide) wee could well finde in our heartes to amend the euil in other folkes, but we thinke not vpon it in our ſelues: and yet is that the end which we ought to begin at. If we wil be good iudges to condéne other mens faultes: we muſt firſt looke to our owne: & we muſt not only bethinke vs of thoſe which are knowen to vs: but wee muſt alſo paſſe yet further, to craue pardon of God for the faults that are better knowen to him than to our ſelues. And beſides that, let vs bee well aduiſed, that we proceede ſoberly in that behalfe. For it may come to paſſe, that he which ſhal haue ſhewed ſome good zeale in chaſtiſing the faulte of his neighbour, ſhall not onely fall into the like fault himſelfe: but alſo doe much worſe. Seeing then that we be ſo inclined vnto euill, let vs vnderſtand that it is good for vs that God ſhoulde exerciſe vs after the maner that Moſes ſpeaketh of here. For the wilde beaſts neede not to come to worke vs diſpleaſure, or to pick out our eyes: wee haue anoyances and deceits ynowe in our ſelues. Why then is it that our Lord ſuffereth vs to be ſo ſore vexed & troubled outwardly by men? but bicauſe we haue as it were an hoſt within vs, ranged in aray againſt God and his lawe? Therefore is hee faine to ſtoppe vs and to keepe vs occupyed by other men: and that is to our benefite.

Furthermore, God is faine to leaue vs ſtill in our infirmities, becauſe that if he ſhould giue vs the full perfection, there is none of vs all but he would aduaunce himſelfe too much and be too proud. It is certain that we haue victorie alredie againſt Satan, as it was purchaſed for vs in the perſon of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt: but yet muſt we bee faine to endure many encounters, and many rough aſſaultes, yea and to bee brought to ſo great perplexities, as we ſhal not wote which way to turne vs, but wee ſhall haue ouer much adoe to withſtand our owne vices, and the great number of imperfections that are in vs. And why is that? Euen to humble vs. In deede we haue a promiſe that God will vanquiſhe Satan, and thruſt him downe as it were vnder our feete, as S. Paul ſpeaketh of it in the ſixteenth of the Romanes: But yet ſhall not that be done at the firſt day: to the intente wee may haue cauſe to praiſe God, in that wee ſee our ſelues ſo fraile, and yet hee giueth vs ſtrength to holde on our way ſtill continually. Yee ſee then that wee muſt keepe ſtil our way in walking through this worlde: for it is a iourney as the Scripture alſo terme termeth it. Nowe then, let vs fully determine with our selues to suffer it patiently, if God delay to giue vs full victorie of our enemies, yea euen of our ghostly enemies, assuring our selues that he doeth it not without iust cause. But yet must wee bee fully perswaded of another point also, namely that although we linger a long time, and things be out of order as in respect of the world, and God inlighten vs not, but let vs alone in great distresse: yet he wil giue vs the vpper hand in the ende. Wee must be fully resolued of that: for without such certaintie wee could not haue any courage one minute of an houre, but wee should quaile out of hand; and it would seeme to vs that the diuell should ouerwhelme vs. And specially when wee were to fight against our own lustes, howe might wee get the vpper hand of them? And if wee finde our selues so combered to day: what shall wee finde to morrowe? The mischiefe will increase continually: and the great number of our owne experiences do shew vs that wee neede none other thing to ouerthrowe vs. Then coulde wee not holde out, vnlesse wee were fully and throughly out of doubt that the promise of God should bee wholly accomplished vnto vs, and y in the end our enemies shal not be able to stand before our faces. Therfore let vs fight boldly against Sathan, and against all the lustes of our owne flesshe: and we shall ouercome them, so wee haue Iesus Christ for our Captaine. For we must be hopelesse as in respect of our selues, and not imagin that our owne strength can suffice: but wee must learne to call vppon him that is able to helpe vs at our neede. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in mind yea and euen in respecte of this present life. Let vs not doubt but that although we be faine to passe through many miseries, yet notwithstanding all shall turne to our benefite and welfare in the end. Let vs beare this saying well in mind, so as wee may fare the better by it, yea euen in such sorte as wee yeeld not to murmur against God, though hee graunt not our desires at the first. And in so doing we shall haue inuincible constancie to keepe on our way still, though it seeme neuer so hard vnto vs. And although we see neuer so many perils: yet shall we haue such constancie, as to hold on still till wee bee come to our wayes end. For why? Gods promising of vs to giue vs full victorie, is not to disappoint vs: he is faithfull in his sayings. Nevertheless, if it please him to make as though he regarded not thinges, wee must not take vpon vs to set him any terme, but let him dispose matters according to his owne infinite wisedome.

1.Thess.5.3

Yea and Moses sayeth that euen Kings shall be deliuered into the people of Israels handes. As if hee should say, that there is not any power or strength so great that ought to dismay vs. And this saying is not added without cause. For euery thing of nothing will dasle our eyes, and make vs to forget the mightinesse of Gods promises. For if we perceiue any greatnesse in men and that our enemies are of abilitie to trouble vs: wee beare our selues on hand that all is mard, and by and by we be halfe straught at it. True it is that our presumptuousnesse blindeth vs ouermuch, so as we perceiue not the daungers when we bee once minded to followe our owne foolish rashnesse. But when wee should obey God, and doe our dewty: the whisking of a flie ouerthwart our faces will turne vs away by and by. For this cause doth Moses say expressly, that wee must not bee dismayed for any greatnesse of the world. In so much that although our enimies shine as the Sunne, although they perke vp neuer so high, although they seeme to haue neuer so many meanes wherewith to ouerwhelme vs at the first brunt: yet must wee not bee discouraged for all that. And why? Let vs consider what Gods hand is, and then will all thinges vanish away which we feare as in respect of the world, so as we shall see that it is but vanitie. For who is he that can withstand him that made all thinges and vpholdeth all thinges still by his power? Can not our Lord as well bring all thinges to naught, as hee made the world of nothing? Yes: and whensoeuer he listeth to doe it, it is enough for him to speake the woord, that is to say to vtter his will. Now then, seeing that the creatures haue not any state or being further foorth than God voutsafeth to maintaine them, can they stop the bringing to passe of his good purpose? No: and therefore let vs learne to yeeld God so much honour, as to make none accounte of all worldly greatnesse, strength, and power, in comparison of him, and to knowe that hee can cast them all downe when hee thinketh good. Loe what wee haue to marke. And thereby we may see what a happinesse it is to be able to rest vpon God. For whe men stay vpon their own strength, although they vaunt themselues, flatter themselues, and besot themselues neuer so much in their owne presumption: yet is it a wonder to see how they be toppled downe in the turning of a hand: and God also laugheth their pride to scorne. But when we haue the ground of Gods promises to rest vppon, which assure vs that wee can neuer quaile: then may we be bould to defie the world and all the creatures therein. And although we bee nothing of our selues: yet shall wee haue enough whereof to glory, and wee may well tryumph aforehand, forasmuch God is on our side. But what? Wee see that men are so wedded to themselues, as they cannot by any meanes be rid of this diuelish ouerweening wherewith they be as it were bewitched, but that they will euer bee drawing of somewhat to themselues, insomuch that it is vnpossible to plucke them backe vnto God, and to make them to ground and settle themselues vppon him. But yet is not this doctrine written in vaine. And therefore let vs vnderstand thereby, that if our Lorde doe send vs vexations, and wee linger in a number of torments in this world: it is to exercise vs withall. And why? To the ende that euery of vs shoulde examine himselfe to amend his faultes, and not sticke so much at other mens faultes [as to forget our owne,] but to thinke vpon our selues first, and consider that wee haue neede to bee handled roughly, so as wee shall no sooner haue escaped

Psal.104.28 29.

Rom.8.31.

ped one trouble, but wee shall by and by meete with another, vnlesse wee turne againe to him that is able to defend vs. Therefore wee must shape our selues to it all our lyfe long, and behaue our selues after such a sorte, as wee haue our eyes continually fastened vppon our God, assuring our selues that his executing of his iudgementes in our sighte, is to the ende to holde vs in awe, and to make vs beware that wee intangle not our selues in our leawd lustes to abyde in them: for they bee tootoo daungerous enemyes. Let vs beware wee resemble not those whome wee see that GOD coulde not abyde, and let vs conclude thereuppon, that the same matter concerneth vs, that is to wit, that wee must profite our selues by such instruction. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to marke vpon this text of Moses.

Now he addeth immediatly, That the Israelites must burne all the Images of their Gods in the fire, and not so much as saue the golde and siluer of them: for feare (sayeth hee) least thou bee snared by it, or that it serue to thy decay. For the Hebrewe woorde that Moses vseth heere, signifyeth sometymes to bee snared, and sometimes to stumble by meeting with some wicked iob or stoppe. And he vsed a word deriued of the same Verbe heretofore when he said, Keepe thy selfe from their idoles, for that will bee thy decay, or that will marre all: the which two sayings come both to one ende. And therefore yee see wee must not stande vppon termes, it is ynough for vs that wee knowe the true meaning of them. Heere GOD warneth his people, that if they cast any fansie or liking to the idoles of the heathen, or to the things that serued their superstitions: it will turne to their ouerthrowe like a nette or snare, so as they shall bee caught and snarled in it, and to bee shorte, it will bee as a pit for them to fall headlong into. That is the effect of the matter which is tolde vs here. And nowe againe he addeth a seconde threate, Euerie whit of it (saieth he) is accursed or interdyted (as men commonly terme it,) or forbidden. Therefore beware: for thy GOD misliketh it, and hee cannot away with the thinges that haue beene so defiled with the seruice of Idols. Take heede therefore that thou leaue not any whit of it: beware that thou defyle not thy house with it. For if any of it come within thy doores, the vengeaunce and wrath of GOD will immediately come in with it. That is the pith of the thinges which wee haue to marke heere. The matter in question, is that the people shoulde not commit idolatrie: but GOD addeth a further commaundement of greater rigour: which is, that they shoulde burne all that euer had serued about the idols, though there were no superstition in them. As howe? If the people shoulde haue taken to them selues the Golde, Siluer, Precious stones, or other Iewelles that were about the idoles: it had beene as a filthinesse that is lothsome in Gods sight. And if they shoulde haue alledged, wee doo it not for any deuotions sake, for wee knowe it was a heynous matter to haue abused Gods creatures after that fashion; but wee take them to our owne vse, yea and euen to serue GOD withall: [that allegation woulde not haue gone for payment:] For God on the contrarie part will haue them to bee all burned. And so wee see howe greatly he is displeased with idolatrie, in that folke are so straitly forbidden heere to apply any of all the thinges to their owne vse, which shall haue bin defyled aforetimes with superstition. And thereuppon must wee also note, that the purenesse of Gods seruice is the thing that he is most chary of aboue all other thinges. Will wee then direct our lyfe after such a sorte as God may allowe of it? Let vs looke that wee honour him, yea and that wee honour him after such maniere, as we seeke not to haue some faire shew of vertue onely to the worldward: but so follow simply whatsoeuer God ordeineth. For we may seeme to bee as Angels of Paradise, & yet in the meane while God shall esteeme vs as diuels. Though we liue neuer so honestly & vnblamably among men, yet doth it not folow ỳ therfore we be discharged before God. And why? For although I be no cheefe in stealing away my neighbours gold and siluer: to what purpose shal that serue mee, if I rob God of his honour? Though I be no theefe to men, yet am I a false traitor to God. If I speake no euil of any mortall man, & yet fal to blaspheming of the liuing God: what a dealing is ỳ? Now then let vs mark, ỳ the faultes which are committed against Gods Maiestie, are much grieuouser and heynouser than all the offences & wrongs that can be done against our neighbors. And it is a lesson which we ought to marke well: for wee see that men make smal account of it now adayes. If any wrong bee doone to a man, the partie must bee condemned for it. But if Gods glorie be defaced, and himselfe spyted all the wayes that can bee, what for that? Men do but wring their mouthes aside at it, with who findes any fault with me for it? and in the meane while God hath no man to take his part, but there are ynow ỳ will take part against him. If any blasphemie, any outrage, any lewdnes, or any wickednes be committed, that in Gods word is openly troden vnder foote: no man thinkes vpon that. But for the fauour of men, we wil not sticke to maintaine euen the euil: and as for the number of the zealous, it is very small. Hardly shall a man finde one among a hundred, ỳ wil put forth himselfe to maintaine Gods quarrell: & yet his doing of it shal bee but coldly neither. But ỳ wicked shal alwaies finde champions ynow, to fight against God & his righteousnesse. And yet for al ỳ, we consider not ỳ in so doing we iustle against God, & that is too hard a match for vs, so as we shalbe driuen to feele ỳ he is so hard a stone, ỳ whosoeuer iustleth or rusheth against him, doth but go about to bruse & breake himself in peeces: & finally if it fall, it will quash them all to sitters ỳ set themselues against him. Then let vs mark that it is not ynough for vs to haue liued with our neighbors without doing any wrong or harme: for God maketh more account of his honor than he doth of all the things in the world. Therefore the offences that are committed against his Maiestie, are ỳ heynouseſt of all other.

And

And why? There is not a more precious & deare thing than his seruice. And that doeth he shewe vs here, in that we see he will haue the pureneſſe of his seruice maintained, vndefiled of any superstition. And he can so ill away with idolaters, that he cannot abide, the things which had bin dedicated to idolatrie beforetimes, should bee suffered to remaine in the worlde, but will haue them rid away quite and cleane. And hereupon we may gather what vengeance is prepared for such as haue peruerted and corrupted the true seruice of God, and the pure Religion. Although they alledge neuer so fayre excuses, and pretend to haue doone it vppon good intent as they terme it: yet will not GOD receyue those things for payment. And why? For he will haue obedience aboue all things: & he knoweth which is the true rule of seruing him well and duely: he hath shewed vs it, & therefore we must holde vs to it. Otherwise wee may well protest that our intent is to serue GOD: howbeit our seruice is not doone to him but vnto idols, when we inuent what we our selues thinke good. As for example, whereas the Papistes protest, that their meaning is to serue GOD with their Masse, & with all other their baggage and Ceremonies: it is true that they may well rest thereuppon confusedly: but in the meane while God disclaimeth and disliketh euery whit of it: for it is the diuel whom they serue in deed. And why? For there is not any thing there, which is not manifestly found to be against Gods word and his trueth. Therefore it is not ynough to pretend Gods name: (for we see that the worlde hath not ceassed to abuse that fayre colour at all times:) But wee must holde vs to Gods commandement: for without that, there is nothing but vtter corruption.

And nowe let vs marke well the reason that Moses addeth: that is to wit that it shall bee as a snare to catche the people, or that it shall be their ouerthrow. Heere we haue to marke, first of all what our frailtie is. For although wee minde not to doe euill at the first dashe: yet will it amaze vs to see howe the deuill will haue intrapped vs out of hande, by his wiles which wee perceiued not. Most commonly, if a man bee tolde of his fault, when hee hath doone amisse: hee thinketh not (to his owne seeming) that his doinges are euill. And why? Bycause he perceiueth it not. Surely if we were well aduised, we should espy Sathans guiles a farre off: and it is a point of wisedome which Saincte Paule attributeth to the faithfull. You (sayth hee) doe knowe his wiles, so as yee can beware of them. Yea, but hee speaketh of such as suffer themselues to be gouerned by Gods spirite, which giueth them good discretion and aduisednes: but as for vs, wee shet our eyes wilfully, and beare our selues on hande that it is enough for vs so wee knowe not the euill. But we be not competent iudges in our owne case. And againe our owne affections blinde vs, and are as towels to keepe vs from seeing three fingers bredth before our noses. Yet notwithstanding we ceasse not to bee hampered in Sathans snares, so as hee holdeth vs as his pray, bycause wee bee not watchfull enough in taking good heede to our selues, accordingly as Moses sheweth vs heere, in telling the people that if they tooke to them the riches of the heathen, and the gold and siluer of their Idoles: all would turne to their decay. And this is not saide without cause. For when we meete with the furtherances of idolatrie, for as much as wee bee giuen thereto alreadie by nature: it is a woonder to see howe soone wee bee snarled in it. For the Diuell sheweth vs not his snares at the first, vntill wee bee falne into them. But GOD who foreseeth all thinges, warneth vs of them aforehand, to the ende wee shoulde wake and keepe good watch, and not giue Satan any enterance to winne vs to him or to intrappe vs. So then let vs marke generally, that to keepe our selues from all offence against GOD, wee must preuent the occasions of euill. For he that casteth himselfe headlong into any hazard, tempteth GOD. Wee bee not so strong as to bee able to outstande euill, when wee fall to iustling against it. For wee see howe wee bee daunted at euerie shadowe of it: and what will become of vs when wee shall bee put to the pinche? Seeing then that men doo feele such frailtie in themselues: they ought not to seeke occasions. For if a man fling himselfe wilfully into the fyre, doeth hee not make open warre against God? Yes: and euen so doe wee, when we take occasions to doe euill. If a man yeeld to a thing, seemeth not to be any great vice at the first he perceiueth it not, howbeit he proceedeth from the lesser to the greater, and from euill to woorse, vntill at last he fall into the ditch. Men shall not perceiue at the first, that daunsing is a bait of whoredome, and a tricke of bawdry to marre all. Men perceiue not at the first, that wanton songs serue to impeach & corrupt good maners, as the scripture speaketh of them: and therfore they thinke not of it. Men perceiue not y playing and gaming are daungerous, or rather mischieuous, yea and that they serue to destroy mens houses & to make hauocke of all: y they be as a seede or roote whence all vngodlineſſe groweth to spyte GOD withall: that they breede occasions of strife, debate, quarels, swearing, and all manner of naughtineſſe: that they bee a meane to impouerish such as otherwise might beare an honest porte and countenaunce: and to bee shorte, that they bee meanes to make Christians to become bruite beastes. Men perceiue not all these thinges, neither make they accoume to keep themselues from them. But yet for all that, the diuell is the founder of them, who increaseth the mischiefe continually, and God also doeth giue him the bridle, bycause wee vouchsafe not to receiue the warning that hee geueth vs, wee bee worthy to perishe and to tumble into the pit to breake our neckes. Now then let vs marke, that to eschew the offences to Godward, that may lead vs to destruction, we must also shun the occasions of them a farre off. Mark that for one point.

such a cursed inclination of nature, that idolatrie is as it were rooted in vs, so as euery of vs is able to keepe a schoole of it, and to bee Doctors of it without any further teaching: therefore doeth it stand vs on hande to shun all furtherances thereof. Nowe then whereas some nowe adayes will needes rowe betweene two streames, and beare folke in hand that men may beare with the time, graunting that men may well cut off the things that are vtterly intollerable and manifestly against God, but yet [auowching] that the things may well bee borne with, which are eyther indifferent, or not vtterly euil. I say that they which speake after that fashion, doe shewe full well that they haue no right meaning in them, nor any desire that there should be any such reformation as were meete to be had. And yet notwithstanding, the worlde is full of such disguisers, which would faine haue a particoloured fashion of seruing God, & a religion ỳ were neither fish nor flesh (as mé say,) but half of one sute & half of another, as is said in ỳ prouerb. But for our part let vs vnderstand, ỳ in as much as we be giue to idolatrie, it standeth vs on hand to flee the further from it, that wee meete not with any of the thinges that may leade vs to it. For if there bee any thing that may drawe vs that way, by and by wee be seduced, yea and we bee infected with it inwardly, like a man that hath a secrete disease within him which he perceiueth not, and yet is neuer the lesse but rather the more in daunger, bicause the mischiefe is vnespyed. Euen so is it with vs: If wee retayne still the furtheraunces and occasions of idolatry and superstition, wee shalbe ouertaken vnwares by Sathans suttlery which we marked not. Thus ye see what wee haue to remember, considering the snares and trappes that draw vs to destruction, as Moses speaketh of them heere.

Nowe let vs come to the second threat which he addeth. Hee sayeth, It is an abhomination [or lothsomenesse] before God: and therefore that euerie man must beware of the bringing in of such abhomination for feare of being accursed. It should seeme heere that Gods rigour was too great, in forbidding the vse of gold and siluer. For are they not Gods good creatures, and such as may bee put to good vse? And although some men haue abused the thinges which God did put into their hands: doth it follow that they haue the power to defile his creatures, and to corrupt and marre them? No: For we heare how Sainct Paule saith, Tit.1.15. that all thinges are pure and cleane to such as haue cleane consciences before God: and there is no vncleannesse, but that which proceedeth of our selues. How is it then that hee forbiddeth folke to couet that gold or siluer? Let vs marke that this lawe is a parte of the auncient order whereto God ment to binde the Iewes: and I haue tould you already that the ten verses haue Matt.5.18. one euerlasting rule, which God hath giuen to continue to the worldes end. If wee minde to haue a doctrine that shall please and like God, our life must be conformable to the law that is contcined in the ten commaundementes: howbeit, this present commaundement serued but for an order: like as when Christen magistrates make lawes nowadayes, are they against Gods woord? No: but they doe it in way of gouernement and ciuill order, that their people may be held the better in the feare of God and in the right religion. Now then this law whereby God forbad the coueting of golde and siluer, serued but for a time. For God trained vp that people like little babes. And Sainct Paule alleadgeth the same similitude, which may bee as a solution to the doubt that might be moued vppon this present place. When little children are vnder Tutors and gouernours, they bee held in the feare and awe, and they inioy not their goods and liberty at their own will, insomuch that their state seemeth to bee a bondage, and yet notwithstanding they be free, yea and heires too, but they be not of age to haue the guiding and gouerning of themselues. Euen so the people of olde time were in straiter subiection vnder the lawe, than we bee nowadayes [vnder the Gospell,] by reason whereof it is lawfull for vs to vse the things which we may put to a good vse. For otherwise the Papistes might starue vs. They would fall to making of their coniurings vppon Corne and wine: now if we might not be so bolde as to eate of the Corne that were so charmed, or to drinke of the wine that weere so coniured: if we might not touch any thing which they had defiled with their pelting trash: wee should be faine to starue for hunger. But they haue not any power ouer the creatures of God, in so much that they continue pure of themselues, spyte of all their abhomanations. Neuertheleſſe it was Gods will to hold the people of old time in awe, after the maner of yong children as I said afore. But he hath giuen vs greater libertie at this day. And what maner of libertie? Not a licentious libertie to do what wee list: for S. Paule addeth that exception, that although we haue greater libertie nowadayes than the Iewes had, yet must wee not therefore lay the bridle in our neckes: but we must haue a speciall care to behaue our selues honestly, and to be constant in seruing GOD purely. For as I said, wee shall alwayes be weake, and may easily swarue aside to idolatrie: and therefore wee must cut off all occasions thereof. And yet notwithstanding, wee may vse ỳ things that are good of themselues: yea, so we doe without giuing any cause of offence, and beeing that wee wipe away all that may induce vs to euill and to the corrupting of Gods seruice. That is the thing which wee haue to remember vpon this place. For it behoueth vs to marke well the resemblance that is betweene vs and the Iewes, and the diuersitie that is betweene [the libertie of] the Lawe, and the libertie that God giueth vs now a dayes. But yet must wee moderate this libertie in such sort, as it turne not into loosenes to giue ouer our selues to euil, knowing that we bee but too much inclined thereunto, and wee should be yet much more prouoked vnto it, if we would needes haue furtherances and seeke occasions thereof. And in this respect was Achan stoned to death for stealing of the [wedge] gage that was about the puppets [of the Chaldeans.]

nitte]. Surely his intent was not to builde any altar with them: but hee was led to it by his couetousnesse, [which made him beleeue] that if he could filche and conuey them away cleanly, hee should saue so much by it. But all the people were faine to be accursed for it, vntill it was bewrayed. Lottes were cast: and when Iosua had made him to hold vp his hand to put him to his othe, saying, My sonne giue glory vnto God immediatly vpon his confessing of the crime wherof he was accused, hee was stoned to death, onely for stealing of certeine of the thinges that had bin forbidden. Yet had hee not robbed any person: hee might well haue sayd, who can complayne of me? But hee had done against Gods commaundement. Therefore let vs marke well, that whereas GOD dealeth more freely with vs nowadayes, so as we may vse the thinges ỹ were earst defiled by ỹ vnbeleuers, & which haue bin applyed aforetimes to superstition: we neuertheless must cast away all that euer may drawe vs vnto euill. For if wee should keepe stil images & such other lyke thinges: it were the next way to pull to vs still some euill inconuenience, so as mẽ might conceiue some hope of returning againe to the superstitions of the time past. And therefore let vs beware of all such thinges.

Now whereas it is sayd, Beware thou bring not cursednesse into thy house: herby we be put in minde ỹ instead of going forward and of profiting our selues we not onely go backe, but also worke our owne ouerthrow, when we vse vnlawfull meanes & such as displease God. And ỹ is a very notable rule. Trueth it is that the matter which Moses speaketh of here, is idolatrie, & he sayth ỹ whosoeuer they be which take to thẽselues the golde & the siluer ỹ hath serued to that purpose: they shal defile their howses & prouoke Gods wrath, and in stead of gathering treasure to their profit, they shall but rake vp a fire to consume all ỹ they haue in the end. That is Moseses meaning. But we both may and ought to gather a generaller doctrine vppon this matter: namely that whereas it is sayd, that it is a bringing in of cursednesse into our howses: it serueth to shewe vs ỹ when men imagine to benefite themselues by it, they doe but prouoke Gods wrath against themselues & throw themselues headlong into destruction. As how? They that heape vp goods by hooke & by crooke, they that pill & poll, they ỹ eate vp & deuoure, they that filch al ỹ comes in their way, they ỹ vse craft and subtiltie to rake other mens goods vnto them: doe beare thẽselues in hand ỹ they worke wonders, & that they shall builde them houses, and make immortall monuments not onely of wood & stone, but also of euerlasting renowne, so as their children shall haue whereof to triumph after their decease. But yet for all their gathering & heaping vp of goods, what do they? they doe but pile vp a stacke of wood and coale, whereunder lyeth Gods wrath as a fire hidden within it. In deede it shall not kindle at the first day: but in the end the flame will burst out, so as all shall be consumed anon after. Now if wee did marke this well, surely wee would not bring Gods curse into our houses as we doe, and as most men doe. What is to be done then?

First and formost let vs marke, that all such as defile themselues with Churchtheft, cannot scape the punishment which Moses denounceth in this place. I say that all they bee Churchrobbers, which haue taken to them the goods of the Church, of which sort are the priestes, the Monkes, and the rest of the stinking rable of the popish cleargie, who haue deuowred and still doe deuowre all that was dedicated vnto God. Now then, if we also doe the like: shall it not be ỹ next way to bring Gods curse into our howses? Yes surely. Therefore let not vs offend in the same thinges which we haue condemned in thẽ ỹ liued amisse: but let vs keepe our selues from them. And if we intend to prosper: let vs assure our selues there is none other meanes thereof than the blessing of God. But we know that God hath not promised his blessing to any other, thẽ such as trauell faithfully for their liuing, & earne their bread with rightfull labor: which offer no man wrong, but content themselues with their meane state, so as if they be rich, they couet not more and more, or if they be poore, they be contented with their estate. To such folke hath God promised his blessing. Now if I doe otherwise, so as I beguile my neighbor, so as I deale crookedly, so as I labor to inrich my selfe by violence and robberie: what doe I then? should I looke for the blessing that God hath promised? Wee must not thinke to binde him, when wee fall to spiting of him so wilfully: nor to haue his blessing light vpon vs, when we fall to straying out of the right way, shaking off his yoke & bridle frõ our necke: but we must cõtrarywise looke ỹ he should curse vs, & that his wrath shold light vpõ vs, & not only vpõ our selues, but also vpon our childrẽ. And so we see what instructiõ we ought to gather vpõ this place. Namely ỹ euery of vs ought to look to himself, & ỹ if we purpose to haue God to keepe vs through his fauor & goodnesse: our howses must not be defiled with robberie & deceit, neither must our hands be imbrued with stealing & filching: but to be short, we must be cleane from all spottes. Yea & we must beware that we keepe ỹ order which our Lord hath commaunded vs: which is, ỹ he which is desirous to bee blessed in his owne person & in his household, must looke wel to it ỹ god be serued & honored in his house, that there be no filthinesse lurking any where, ỹ there be no whordom, no swearing, nor no other disorder, ỹ there be not any thing against God, nor any euil bolstered or borne out. If we doe so, then shall wee prosper better than wee doe: and although things fal not out as we would wishe to the worldward: yet will God graunt vs the grace to bee contented with his only blessing, which wil satisfy vs more than if we had all ỹ heapes of golde & siluer that were possible to be imagined. But on ỹ contrary part, if a man haue not a care to keepe his house pure and cleane as a tẽple of God: ỹ thing ỹ Moses speaketh here must needs be performed, ỹ is to wit, Gods curse must come into it, accordingly as it is sayd in ỹ prophet Zacharie, that this same curse possessed al ỹ houses of that time, because iniquitie reigned in thẽ and departed not from them. Will wee then haue God to shed out his blessing vppon vs? Let vs be sure that we cleanse both our selues & our houses from all filthinesse: and then will the curse depart from thence out of hand. But if wee cease not to prouoke Gods wrath by abusing his patience too long: hee will kindle a fire that shall neuer be quenched: and if wee fall still asleepe, hee will wake vs to our cost: and when we think our selues to be escaped, then shall wee be new to begin. And therefore let vs be circumspect to preuent the mischiefe, specially sith wee be warned, yea & warned by our God himself. Wherein hee sheweth vs what a care he hath, both of our worldly welfare, and of our saluation.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God w acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to vouchsafe to make vs feele the better than wee haue done, so as it may make vs to resort vnto him, & to be sorie for our sinnes, and to condemne them, & that we be not so frowarde as to spite him, & to harden our selues, but that we may haue a meeke & pliable heart, to receiue al his warninges & correctiõs in such wise, as we may haue the skill to fare ỹ better by them. And so let vs say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c

On Thursday the fifteenth of August. 1555.

The Lviij Sermon which is the first vppon the eight Chapter.

Keepe al the commaundementes which I haue commaunded you this day to do them: that yee may liue and encrease, and go in and possesse the land by right of inheritance, which the Lord swore to your fathers.

2 And be mindfull of al the way wherethrough the Lord thy GOD hath made thee to walk these fortie yeares in the wildernesse: to the intent to afflict and try thee, that hee might knowe what is in thine hart, and see whether thou wouldest keepe his commaundements or no.

3 Hee afflicted thee, and made thee to endure hunger, and fedde thee with Manna which neither thou, nor thy fathers knew, to make thee to know that man lyueth not onely by bread, but that man lyueth by all that euer commeth out of the mouth of the Lord.

4 Thy rayment hath not worne vpon thee, neyther hath thy foote been swolne all these fortie yeares.

HEre againe Moses sheweth ỹ people, ỹ God gaue not his law in vain, but that his will is to haue it kept and that is the way for vs also to fare ỹ better by it. True it is, that whensoeuer any man speaketh to vs in Gods name, we must haue our eares open to heare what is tolde vs: for by that meane doth faith come. But yet must we bring our handes and feete with vs also, to offer them obediently vnto God, & to imploy all the power that hee hath giuen vs in his seruice. Therefore let vs not come hither onely to haue our eares beaten with the thinges that are preached vnto vs: but let vs also apply them to our vse. Instruction must be matched with practise: or else we shall neuer knowe what hath bin shewed vs and taught vs. And so we see what we haue to beare in minde. Moreouer let vs marke, that Moses thinketh it not enough to haue sayd these things at once and away: but he repeteth them again for a larger confirmation. Looke (sayth he) that thou keepe the commaundements which I inioyne thee not to the end thou maist knowe them w thy fingers endes, or bee able to vtter them with thy mouth: that is not enough: but thou must put them in execution. And to confirme this matter the better, hee addeth a promise, saying: That thou mayst liue, and increase, and go into the land which the Lord thy God did sweare vnto thy Fathers. This hath beene expounded alreadie heretofore: and there remaineth no more to doe, but only to renewe the remembrance thereof, according also as we see that ỹ was the intent of Moses, or rather of ỹ holy Ghost. Now thẽ, our Lord alloreth vs to him by promises, of purpose to giue vs ỹ better corage to serue him: & he doth it of his own free goodnesse, without being bound thereto. For he needed no more but to say the word: he hath authoritie to commaund vs what he listeth, and it is our part to obey him. Why then doth he ad his promises, but to win vs by louingnesse lyke a father, who though he haue al soueraignitie ouer his childe: doeth neuertheles vse gentlenes in promising, to ỹ inset his child shall serue him with the cherefuller heart? True it is that the child is bound thereto aforehand by nature: but yet when hee seeth his father so wil-right towardes him, as to offer him more than his duenesse moueth him the more, if he be not too too vnkind & lewdely disposed. Therefore let vs learne that in this case God stoopeth to vs, as if he were a mortall man. Yet is not that any derogation to his maiestie: but rather a recorde of his infinite goodnesse, in that he vseth not his right with rigor, but forbeareth it and applyeth himselfe after that fashion vnto vs, to doe the thinges which hee knoweth to be meete for our rudenesse. And therefore whensoeuer wee heare that God promiseth to prosper vs, if wee honor and serue him: Let vs vnderstand ỳ his so dooing is of free goodnesse, to win vs the better, & because he is loth to vse rigor towardes vs as he might doe. But yet for all this, we must not imagin that he is bound to yeelde vs any recompence or reward for our seruice. For it is not for vs to enter into account in this behalfe, as though wee could win any thing by it: but wee must receiue whatsoeuer hee offereth vs as of his free gift, knowing our selues to bee so much the more bound vnto him.

Moreouer let vs marke what hath bin tolde vs heretofore: namely that the land which Moses promiseth here vnto the people, had bin promised already fourehundred yeeres afore, whē none of them all was yet borne: & therfore God had not an eye to anie of their deseruinges. But now he saith that they should inioy the promise which God had made them of his owne mere goodnesse. And so we haue to gather in effect, that all ỳ euer we receyue at Gods hand, springeth out of none other fountaine than onely his meere mercie, because he is good, because hee hath pitie vpon vs, because he hath not any respect to our worthinesse but onely to himselfe, & because it pleaseth him to be so bountiful towards vs. Marke ỳ for a speciall poynt. But yet for all ỳ, if we will well inioy his benefites, if we will haue them auaileable to our saluatiō, & if we wil haue the continual possession of them: we on our side must looke to answere to ỳ grace ỳ God sheweth vs. And how shall we answere it? Verily not by shrinking away frō him, not by refusing ỳ things ỳ he offereth vs to drawe vs to him: but by knowing the right & lawful vse of the benefites which he bestoweth vpō vs, so as we loue him & glorify him for them, & euery of vs spend himselfe in his seruice. Therefore whēsoeuer our Lord shall haue done vs any good: let vs vnderstand ỳ the same cōmeth not for aught on our behalf, but rather ỳ we be so much ỳ more beholdē vnto him. And to ỳ end we may possesse & inioy the same benefites, & ỳ they may profite vs to our soules healthdet vs be well aduised therewithall, ỳ wee be ỳ more prouoked thereby to serue God, forasmuch as he sheweth himself so liberal towards vs. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to gather vpon that text.

Now Moses addeth, that the people must bethinke them of all the iourney whereby the Lord their God led them. This bethinking of themselues was very needefull. And if we were wise & well aduised, we would bethink vs better than we doe, of ỳ things which our Lorde sheweth vs throughout all our lyfe. For both the aduersities & also the prosperities which he sendeth vs, are instructiōs which we ought to marke well, & this present lyfe is as a schoole wherein we ought to cal to minde that lesson both euening & morning. But what? Although God doe the office of a good schoolemaister, & neuer leaue teaching of vs: yet there is none of vs that taketh heede of it, but ỳ time is lost, we be lyke children that are hardened or become trueandes, so as doe ỳ maister what he can, the childe doth but laugh him to skorne, he giues not his minde at all to learning, but his wittes are wandering abroad, & either he giueth himself to follie & lewdnesse, or else runnes loytering vp & downe the streetes when hee should haue his booke in his hād. At ỳ same point are wee: For we haue ỳ booke opē before vs, & as lōg as we bee in this world, God teacheth vs by all maner of meanes to loue him & to feare him, and to put our trust in him and to submit our selues to his good will. If he send vs blessings, it is to this end that wee should learne, to giue our selues wholy ouer vnto him. If he afflict vs, it is to waken vs, that we should liue in his feare. If he send vs any neede, or hold vs in any distresse: it is as a quickening of vs vp to call vpon him, & to flee to him for refuge. If he giue vs any taste of his fauor: it is to the end we should be the better confirmed, not onely that he will helpe vs during this mortall lyfe, but also that hee will bring vs to the kingdome of heauen: and thereof must wee be fully resolued. Thus ye see how God neuer ceaseth to rehearse our lesson to vs: and yet doth none of vs giue heede to it, but we wander away in our owne imaginations, the pleasures of this world doe cary vs away, and euery of vs is so combered with these vanities, that wee haue no leasure at all to thinke vppon our God, or vpon the thinges that he sheweth vs.

Gen. 3. 14

Yet notwithstanding, it is not for naught that Moses sayth here, Bethinke thee of the way wherethrough the Lorde thy God hath led thee. True it is that the people of Israell had peculiar instructions, so as a number of thinges befell them in their trauelling through the wildernesse, which belong not vnto vs in these dayes: but yet was that a figure of mans lyfe. The wildernesse (say I) wherein the people were by the space of fortie yeeres, was as a mirrour of this earthly wayfaring of ours, wherethrough wee must passe vntill GOD take vs hence into his rest. Lykewise the resting place of the land of Chanaan (accordingly as it is named in the fourescore and fifteenth psalme) was as a warrant of the endlesse lyfe that is prepared for vs, and wherein wee shall no more bee tossed and turmoyled as we be in this world. Now seeing it is so: Let vs note that as the Iewes were exhorted to remember the iourney wherein God had led them through the wildernesse: so now the chiefe poynt of our duetie is to cōsider that inasmuch as God gouerneth vs, we liue through his fatherly care, so as he guideth all our steppes which we haue to goe or come. And it behoueth vs to bethinke vs well of all the time of our lyfe, & to consider throwly what we haue had experience

rience of in this world. True it is that we thinke oftentimes both vppon the good and vppon the euill which we haue receiued: but that is cleane contrary to the intent of our God. For our thinking vppon our aduersities is not to knowe them to be as rods wherewith God beateth vs for our chastisement. No, it is but to frette and chafe against him, and to gather matter to grudge at, saying, what will become of this? Shall I alwayes be new to begin? It should seeme that God intendeth to confound me presently: for my affliction was great enough afore: and was it meete that hee shoulde increase it yet more? After ỳ maner doe we gather a summe of all the miseries which we haue felt from our childehode to our old age. Howbeit that is but to sharpé our selues against God, whereas we should rather thinke thus: Goe to, my God hath not ceased to chastise me euen from my childhood vpward: and if I had returned vnto him, surely he would haue spared me: but he was faine to dubble his stripes, & to hold on still, because I haue alwayes waxed harder & harder, & rebelled against him: & ought not ỳ to haue suffised me if I had not bin quite paste grace? But yet for all this, I hold on still mine accustomed trade: neuertheless he ceaseth not to waken me vp with afflictions. He is loth that I should welter in mine owne dung, and yet doe I continue still in my stubbornesse: and what will come of it in the end? After this maner (say I) must we quicken vp our selues, & call to remembraunce the whole time of our lyfe, or elsse we shall neuer bethinke vs of the aduersities that we haue indured, but with murmuring & grudging against God. In lyke case is it with prosperitie. If God make vs to prosper, & afterward cast some affliction vppon vs: wee be the more greeued at it, insomuch ỳ in stead of saying with Iob, wee haue receiued good at the Lordes hand, & why should we not receiue euill also? (for when he doth vs good, he is not vnwilling to continue it, & his ceasing of it, is not for that he is become nigardly, or vnable to doe vs good any more: but because he knoweth it to be expedient for vs to be so exercised, that he may try our patience: & so ought we to thinke:) But what? we on the contrary part say thus: it comes to my minde that I was well at mine ease, and I had this & that. To be short, wee coulde finde in our heartes to serue Satan, so wee might haue prosperitie, & we seeke to make our selues merry, bearing our selues on hand in ỳ meane while, that it is but lost labor to serue God. Thus wee see how men turne to the cleane contrary, both the prosperitie & the aduersitie ỳ God sendeth them. But when we should learne any thing, our remembraunce is very short: for if God haue afflicted vs for a time, we neuer think of it after. In deede as long as the crosse indureth, wee can skill to sigh & to play the hypocrites, & to pretend that if God would voutsafe to abate his rigor, we will become little Angels: but as soone as he withdraweth his hand from vs, our nature falles by and by to his olde byasse, wee doe but shake our eares a little, & we neuer thinke more vpon his corrections to doe our selues any good by them. If God send vs any prosperitie, we haue forgotten them out of hand. Insomuch that whē we haue once crammed our selues full, in stead of yeelding him thanks, we fal to kicking against him lyke ouerpampered iades, as shall be declared in the two & thirtith chapter. ye see thē that our wittes are very short in remēbring the way wherethrough God hath led vs. As touching goods, they serue vs not to stirre vs vp to loue our God, and to put our trust in him & to call vpon him. As touching aduersitie, it serueth not to humble vs, nor to make vs renounce ỳ world, nor to cause vs to bethinke vs of our sinnes, that wee might be sory for them: and craue forgiuenesse: but rather to the cleane contrarie. Now then seeing we be so faultie, wee haue the more needé to marke well this text, & the exhortation that Moses maketh to vs here, that we may remember the way whereby God leadeth vs. So then, let vs dayly haue an eye to ỳ things whereof we shal haue had experience during this transitory lyfe. How hath God dealt with mee euer since I was borne? I haue waded through an hundred thowsand miseries, & he hath deliuered me from them all: & ought not this to make me thinke him to be my father, and to put my selfe wholy into his protection? Againe, I haue bin cumbred a number of wayes: and God hath alwayes had an eye to me, & brought me home againe to himselfe. How oftentimes haue I tempted him, casting my selfe vp to the spoyle, and running into the snares of Satan? And yet my God would not let me perish. Now ought not I to perceiue his goodnesse therein? Ought I not to betake my selfe to his keeping with stirer trust? Moreouer my God hath visited me with a great sorte of afflictions: and should I still rebell against him? Shall I not bee tamed for all the stripes that I haue receiued at his rodde? Shall God haue lost his labor in chastising me? After this maner must we bethinke vs, both in our prosperitie and in aduersitie: and that not for once and away, but with such imprinting of it in our hearts, as we may haue it so ingraued there ỳ it may neuer be blotted out. That is the thing which wee haue to remember vppon the text of Moses.

Iob. 2. 10.

Now hee speaketh expressely of the afflictions which the people had indured in the wildernesse: as if hee shoulde say that these afflictions heere are profitable for men, so they can vse them well, and referre them to their right end. It is not without cause that Moses vttereth this thing here: inasmuch as it seemeth at the first, that we cānot thinke vpon our aduersities without griefe and grudging, so as they should prouoke vs to repine against God, and consequently to shrinke away from him. For we know there is nothing more against our nature, than to bee poore, sicke, diseased, or afflicted with any miserie: they bee thinges which wee hate. And therefore when God smiteth vs, it seemeth to be the next way to withdrawe vs from him. But Moses telleth vs, that if we were so wise and well disposed as wisely to apply to our vse the afflictions that God sendeth vs: thy shoulde rather teach vs to returne home to him. The Lorde thy God (sayth he) hath scourged thee. And to what end? To knowe what was in thy heart, and whether thou wouldest keepe his commaundements or no. Here Moses sheweth, first that Gods afflicting of vs is as an examination to trye what we bee, and how wee be minded. In deede, prosperitie also is a good triall to bewray what is in mens heartes. For if a man be any thing at ease, he ouershootes himselfe, and pleasures corrupt vs yea and vtterly dull vs. If a man bee riche, wheras hee was taken to haue bin lowly and meeke, hee will bewray his pride and crueltie. If a man bee in authoritie, hee becommeth intollerable. And so yee see that GOD may try what is in vs and take experience of it, euen by making vs to prosper. But yet is pouertie set downe here of set purpose, because it is the meane whereby God tryeth whether wee bee subiect to him or no. And why? For patience (as men say) is a singular vertue: but how may it bee knowen that wee bee patient, but by aduersitie? Therefore when God sendeth vs aduersities that are hard and troublesome to vs: then doth hee as it were lay open our hartes. For if wee abide quietly vnder his hand, and suffer him to deale with vs according to his good will, so as wee prayse his name though he handle vs roughly: it is a token that wee loue him in deed, and that hypocrisie taketh no place at all in vs. And therefore it is not without cause, that Moses intending to shewe how God tryeth vs; and prooueth vs, speaketh heere expreslly of afflictions.

Now wee haue to gather vpon this text, that it is no woonder though God afflict vs diuerse wayes. And why so? For it is expedient for vs to bee fitted and to haue it knowen what is in vs: There is not a more needefull and profitable thing for vs: and that is done by afflictions. Therefore must wee submit our selues to them, and vnderstand that they neuer bee superfluous or more than needeth. Mark that for one point. Yea and vnto the same end must wee apply this saying of the Apostle, that it is the very meane whereby to try our obedience. For hee vseth the same word, and setteth downe Iesus Christ for an example. For although hee be the mirror & paterne of all righteousnesse, yet was he faine to passe vnder Gods scourges. And why? Euen to the end that his obedience might be knowen. And that which is shewed vs in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ: good reason would that the same should bee accomplished in vs that are his members. Now is there any thing more requisite, than to knowe whether wee bee obedient to God or no? And that is not knowen but by aduersitie, when thinges fall out contrary to our desire, and God handleth vs in such sort as our flesshe and nature striue against it. When we be in that case, if we can hold our selues in subiection to God, to say, in deed Lord this is hard for me to beare, it goeth against my stomacke, it is cleane contrary to my nature, but yet howsoeuer I fare I renounce mine owne will: I would faine haue health, but sith it pleaseth thee to leaue me sicke, thy name be blessed for it: I could finde in my heart to be rich, and to haue mine owne ease and pleasure, but thou wilt haue me to be poore & needy. I would be in honor & credit, & thou wilt haue me to liue in reproche and shame: and good reason it is O Lorde that wee should haue the humilitie to submit our selues to whatsoeuer it pleaseth thee to sende vs, and not that wee should followe our owne fansies when we be come to such a sacrifice of renouncing all our affections and all our owne wilthen is our obedience rightly knowen. For what matter is it to say amen, when God followeth our desires, and handleth vs according to the lyking of our owne flesshe? How is there any vertue in vs? And therefore let vs remember wel this text, where Moses telleth vs that Gods afflicting of vs, is to try what we be. For we might set a faire face vpon thinges, and pretend to loue and honor God: and yet notwithstanding all should be but counterfetting and leasing. But when wee bee handled roughly, and God sheweth himselfe as our enemie, so as wee bee prouoked to rebellion, and would faine striue against him if it were Lawfull: and yet notwithstanding wee continue still as Lambes, so as wee bowe downe our neckes vnder his yoke, and forsake all our owne affections to obey him: that (say I) is a due tryall of vs. And that is the cause why the holy scripture lykeneth aduersitie to a furnace. Lyke as golde and siluer are tryed by fire: so must God bee faine to try and examine vs by afflictions. 2. Pet. 4. 12.

But here it might bee demaunded, whether God doe not knowe what we be without tryall? Let vs marke that it is not to bee surmised that God is ignorant of any thing or that he needeth to try vs after the maner of men: but it is the common speach of the holy scripture, to attribute the thinges to God which are peculiar to men. For if it should speake to vs of his maiestie according to the worthinesse thereof, we should bee vtterly rauished, and yet knowe neuer the more what were sayd to vs. God therefore to vtter himselfe, is faine to descend from his owne highnesse and to transfigure himselfe, to the end wee may knowe so much of him as is for our behoofe. To be short, let vs vnderstand that God knoweth what is in mes hearts, though he should let them alone as they bee. For it is sayd in the psalme, Shal not hee that made the heart knowe it? Yes: but yet for all that, it behoueth vs to bee brought to the touchstone. Not that God hath any neede of it on his behalfe: but it is done for our owne sakes. Now then, wheras it is sayd in this text, that Gods will was to trye the people of Israel: let vs marke the meaning thereof is, that God intended to shewe in deed, and to bewray in trueth what that people was of whom it was his will to haue open record and proofe, to the end they might not vse any odde shiftes to keepe their naughtinesse from discouering. Now then, Gods afflicting of vs is not for that hee hath any neede to sift vs narrowly: but because wee on our side haue neede to be so tryed. For wee see how men beleeue wonderously wel of their own strength. So long as God letteth them alone in rest, they thinke there is Psal. 33. 15. & 94. 9.

nothing but substantiall stoutnesse in them. But if God doe but pricke them: by and by the venim commeth out, which was hidden within before. Such as made faire wether before, and were very skilfull in preaching of Gods goodnesse, and in teaching men how they ought to rest thereupon, fall to gnashing of their teeth when they themselues are afflicted, and can no more tell what patientnesse is, or how to glorify God. Therefore is God faine to draw vs forth into the light. For as long as he handleth vs gently, we dwell as it were in couert, and wee lye hidde in darkenesse. But as soone as aduersitie commeth, we learne to perceiue what we be. Whereas afore, there seemed to be nothing but perfect obedientnesse in vs: then wee perceiue how our flesh is ful of stubbornnesse, & we could finde in our heartes to withstand God. That then is the tryall which Moses speaketh of.

Therefore to be short, this text must be referred to our selues, and we must take heede to apply it well to our own benefite, and consider that we be vtterly ignorant, and that the loue of our selues doth so blinde vs, yea and quite stoppe our eyes, that we bee besotted with fond follie, vntill God haue cleansed vs of it in deede, and shewed vs our own shame by open proofe. Again it is a good tryall also when God vouchsafeth to giue vs power to beare our afflictions patiently. For we haue cause to glorify him for his vpholding of vs by his hand: and we must alwayes beleeue y wee could not indure any thing, vnlesse we were strengthened by the holy Ghost. Therfore when we haue ouercome any temptation, and passed thorowe any aduersitie meekely: let vs assure our selues that God ayded vs. And so yee see it is a good tryall that commeth to vs by afflictions, & that it is the way for vs to gather instruction by this text, where it is sayd that Gods afflicting of his people, was to the end to searche what was in their hearts.

And here is expresse mention made of the heart. For it is not enough to haue a faire showe to the worldward. Those whom God letteth alone in quiet and pleasure, may well haue many goodly vertues worthie of commendatiō: but in the meane while their heart is hidden and wrapped vp within, so as it is not knowen what they be vntill God discouer them. For prosperitie is as a cloke that hideth much vncleanesse. If a man delight in his riches, in his credit, in his quietnesse, or in his ease: men see not what hee is but rather doe stay vppon the outward appearance, which doth euen dim & dazle their eyes: but in the meane while they looke not vpon that which is within. And like as a faire garment may hide many fowle deformities: so doth prosperitie hide a man that he can not be knowen what he is. But if God afflict him, hee layeth him bare by and by, insomuch that if hee haue any vice in him, then it appeareth both to himselfe & to others, so as we be driuē to humble our selues, whereas before wee had nothing but vanitie in vs to deceiue our selues withall. And whereas wee stoode too much in our own conceites: now we see there was no cause why we should doe so. Thus ye see what Moses meant in saying y God intended to try what was in his peoples hearts, by afflicting thē after y fashion in the wildernes.

Now hereby we see yet better the thing that I haue touched afore: namely that afflictions are more than necessarie and profitable for vs. And therefore let vs learne to beare them more patiently than we haue bin wont to doe, seeing our Lord hath layd that condition vppon vs, & that they be furtherances of our saluation, and there is not any thing woorse and deadlyer to men, than to be so blinded as not to know what is in themselues. Seeing that man is transitorie: wherein can hee glorie but onely in GOD, who is his power and strength? Now then if hee bee so proude, as hee not onely despiseth him of whom hee holdeth all thinges, but also falleth to push with his hornes against his maiestie in despite of him: is there any thing more pernicious? No: and yet can not this be amended otherwise than by affliction. Ought wee to take sickenesse in euill part, seeing that God doth thereby make vs to renounce our owne nature, to drawe vs to himselfe? No: and therefore let vs learne to obey our God: and let vs bethinke vs of this lesson whensoeuer we be so sorrowful in our afflictions: and when wee be tempted to grudge against God, let vs thinke that: yea verily, but yet is this to our benefite. In deede it is hard and troublesome, but God playeth the phisition, and purgeth vs of our diseases which else would be deadly, and is incurable by any other meanes. That (say I) is the thing which we haue to note, that we may fare well by the warning that Moses giueth vs heere.

Now hee addeth immediately, that God had suffered his people to hunger and thirst, and had fed them with Manna which was a foode that they were not acquainted with, nor yet their fathers: and that in so doing was to the ende that they might know, that Man liueth not onely by bread, but by euery word that commeth out of the mouth of God, doth man liue. Here Moses meant to giue a particular lesson: which is, that GOD teacheth his people to seeke their sustenance in him. And it is a very good lesson. Truely when we say that God giueth vs our dayly or ordinary bread, it seemeth at the first blushe to bee but a childishe thing. And soothly men teach little children to pray vnto GOD, when they would haue their breakefastes. Yea and in very deede there are a sorte of ouerweening fooles, who neuertheles doe take themselues to bee very wise, and are chamed to bee great doctors, which haue held opinion that it is not meete for Christians to pray to GOD for bodily sustenaunce, but that they must tende to a higher and more exquisite perfection. Yea, but in the meane while, is it not a tending to great perfection, when wee can pray GOD to bee our fosterfather, and when wee can knowe his goodnesse towardes vs? Yes: and for proofe thereof, wherein doth the beleefe or vnbeleefe of men shewe it selfe moste? Surely euen in the maintenaunce of this transitory life. In deede that is not the chiefe point of our faith. For we must looke vp to the euerlasting inheritance that is promised vs. But yet is the thing true which I say now: that is to wit, that our beleefe and also our vnbeleefe shew thémselues more in that behalfe, than in any other. For if a man can trust in God that he will maintaine him in this mortall lyfe: surely he will also hope for all the rest. And on the contrary part, when wee wante foode, or haue not helpes at our own wishing: by and by we be out of heart and vexed with vnquietnesse. And so our vnbeleefe bewrayes it selfe in the ouercarefulnesse which we haue for this earthly lyfe. Now therefore, let vs marke well that wee haue greatly profited, not onely for one day but also for all our life lóg, whé we haue once learned throughly to commit our selues to Gods prouidence, to be fed by his hand, and to receiue sustenance by his grace. When we be come to that point, then are wee mounted very high, and thereby wee shall learne to trust in him for the heauenly lyfe, and for all thinges belonging thereunto. And so is Moses meaning in this text: namely that the people should be throughly perswaded, that God will nourish them, and that they should not trust either in bread or wine or in any other foode, but consider that it is Gods peculiar office to maintaine them by his power. Let that serue for one poynt.

And Moses alledgeth the feeding of the people with Manna in the wildernesse. The Lorde (saith hee) did let thee indure hunger, and sent thee Manna from heauen as a warrant to assure thee that hee will alwayes bee thy father. And although he make the earth to yeeld thee fruite in bringing forth both corne and wine: and although thou haue both flesshe, & fish, & whitemeate to nourish thee withall: yet doth not thy God cease to maintaine thee by his power. Therefore thou must looke that way, and not haue thy minde tyed to the dead creatures, as though they gaue thee lyfe, or as though thou receiuedst thy strength of them. Assure thy selfe it is thy God that nourisheth & susteineth thee. And truely the Manna cõtinued not alway with the people of Israell. But if God worke a thing for a time: wee must profit our selues by it euer after, although the thing continue not still. If wee should remember the thinges that GOD sheweth vs, no longer than wee see them with our eyes: wee should bee too brutish. Therefore when wee haue once seene any instruction: we must beare it in minde all the dayes of our lyfe. In lyke case is it concerning the Manna. God fed his people with it by the space of fortie yeeres. Now must wee learne thereby to the worldes end, that wee be fed by the same power whereby that people was. In deed the meanes are farre other: (for wee nowadayes doe eate of the bread which the earth yeeldeth, and we haue other kindes of foode to susteine vs withall:) but is that any derogation to the heauenly power? Is it not God that breatheth lyfe into vs, so as wee bee susteined by him? Yes: and therefore whensoeuer wee eate bread, let vs learne not to stay vpon that, but to cal to minde that GOD nourished his people without bread, without wine, and without any other victels. And to what end? Hee wrought not that miracle to haue it buryed. Was it but onely to the end that ỹ people of that time should be taught by it that God was their father? No no: but we must apply the same storie to our instruction in these dayes too: that is to wit, that although GOD send vs bread and wine, yet he ceaseth not to feede vs still for all that. So then let vs marke well, that the miracles which God hath wrought, neuertheless must serue for our instruction, although wee behold them not presently at this day. And specially whereas heere is mention made of the Manna: let it be an euerlasting president to vs, to teach vs that God hath a care of his creatures, and that we haue our sustenaunce and preseruation at his hand: so that although hee make the Sunne to shine, yet doth the light come from himselfe: and although hee giue strength to the earth, so as wee take sustenaunce and nourishment from out of the bowels of it, yet is it hee himselfe that worketh after that fashion. And let vs alwayes hold this for a rule, that our lyfe with all the appurtenances thereof dependeth vpon the onely hand of GOD, and that wee must haue our whole recourse vnto him. That is the meaning of Moses.

Howbeit to the end we may knowe it yet better, wee haue to marke first of all, that whereas hee sayth that man is nourished by euery worde that commeth out of the mouth of God: hee speaketh not but of this presét life. There are which take it to bee spoken of the spiritual lyfe of our soules. In deede it is a good doctrine of it selfe, ỹ we liue not only in this life as Oxen and Asses, but ỹ we haue also a better and excellenter life, inasmuch as God quickeneth our soules by his worde, and knitteth vs to himselfe so as hee vpholdeth vs by the power of his holy spirit, which is the fountaine of life. All this is true, and it behoueth vs to acknowledge it so to bee, as I sayd afore. But yet as concerning the vnderstanding of this text, Moses goeth no further but to shewe vs that we liue by euery word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God, that is to say, we liue by the blessing which GOD giueth vs. For the doctrine that hee treateth of heere, is not that our soules are quickened to saluation because wee bee taught by the holy scripture: Moses meant not that thing: but rather hee sheweth vs that bread hath not any power of it selfe, forasmuch as it is but a dead thing. And can a senselesse creature haue power to giue vs mouing? No. Can a dead thing haue power to giue vs life? No surely, that can it not. How then can bread and wine which haue no lyfe of themselues, bee able to giue lyfe vnto men? How can they make vs to liue? It seemeth that we gather strength of bread. For whé a man is brought low with ouerlong fasting, & pined w̃ hunger: whereas he was as good as half dead before, if he eate meate, by and by he is as it were renewed & set vp againe. In deed ỹ bread is ỹ meane to refresh men, & God serueth his owne turn by it: but yet for all that, shall wee tye our lyfe to bread and wine? No: but wee must consider that although God haue set that order in nature: yet notwithstanding it serueth not to bereaue him of his prayse, nor to rob him of his right: but rather, his vttering of his power by his creatures, serueth to shewe that he hath them all in his hand, and can dispose of them after his own good pleasure. That is the thing which wee haue to remẽber cõcerning these wordes, where Moses saith, that man liueth by euery word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God. And in deede wee cannot haue a better expounder of this text, than our Lorde Iesus Christ: for hee applying this text to himselfe, sheweth that hee should bee susteined by trusting in God, although hee wanted bread. In deede I can not dispatch this matter at this present: but yet must wee beare somewhat of it away, to the end that the rest may be y better set forth to morrowe. See then how our Lorde Iesus Christ expounded the wordes of Moses. He was tẽpted by Satan to turne stones into bread. And with what intent? Verily as though he could not haue liued without bread. But hee sheweth that although he wanted bread, yet hee should not faile to bee susteined by the power of GOD his father. For why? It is not by bread (saith hee) that man doth liue: that is to say, God is not bound by any necessitie to vse bread, whẽ he will susteine vs. If an earthly father will susteine his children, hee must needes haue bread: and if hee haue none, he will weepe and say, alas my children, I can not but bee in great griefe of minde, to see you in this necessitie: if I coulde feede you with mine owne bloud, I would doe it. So then, a father shall not alwayes haue wherewith to mainteine his children: but it is not so with God, for he is not bound to any necessitie. Now then, doth bread faile through the whole world? Is there such drought as the earth can yeelde no substance? Yet doth not God faile to bee almightie still, and to haue wherewith to maintaine those that are his. Thus yee see how Iesus Christ did beate backe the diuels temptation, by telling him that wee must not imagine Gods power to be shut vp within his creatures, but that we must learne to trust in him, not douting but that he can finde meanes well enough to maintaine vs, yea euen though all things faile vs. If he giue vs bread: let vs eate of it: for wee must not tempt him. But if all meane helps faile, let vs betake our selues to him that is almightie, and to his onely power, which shall alwayes haue his course, though there be no meane help at all. Yee see then how Moseses meaning is, that euen in respect of this transitorie lyfe, wee must not be so beastly as to hang our groynes vppon the bread and meate, as though our life lay hidden there. But when we haue wherewith to feede our selues, let vs lift our eyes vpward to acknowledge that it is God which hath set that order in nature. And againe, if wee haue little let vs bee contented with it, and pray God to make it effectuall, as though it were Manna frõ heauen, so as one morsel may feede vs and make vs as lustie, as if we had all the abundance of the world. And if we bee driuen to pouertie, let vs proceede yet further, and pray God to supply our want, and let vs put this sentence in practise, that man liueth not onely by bread, that is to say, he is not susteined alonely by these ordinary meanes: but although he were at vtter necessitie and wanted all thinges, yet would not God faile to succor him. And therefore let vs resort vnto him, and to the secrete power whereby we bee susteined, that wee may bee so mainteined by the same, as we may liue in him, and by him, and al through his onely meere goodnesse.

Matt. 4. 4.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe to pitie vs: that seeing wee be so wretched creatures, that although he haue a care to bring vs back against to him, yet notwithstanding wee would fainst striue against him: it may please him so to purge vs from all stubbornesse, as our whole seeking may bee to submit our selues to his wil: and that bee suffer vs not to bee giuen still to our owne wicked affections, and to the lustes of our flesh: but rather that hee correct them, yea and that in such sorte, as we may seeke to mount vpward, and to passe in such wise through this world, as wee may alwayes remember that it is but a wayfaring, to the intent wee may keepe on still in the marke whereunto our Lord calleth vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

Matt. 4. 4.

On Fryday the xvj. of Auguſt. 1555.

The Lix. Sermon which is the ſecond vpon the eight Chapter.

3. 4 He afflicted thee &c.

5 Knowe thou therfore in thyne hart, that the Lord thy God nurtured thee as a man nurtureth hys owne child.

6 Therefore keepe thou the commaundementes of the Lord thy God, by walking in his wayes, and by fearing him.

7 For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land wherein are riuers of water, fountaines and ſpringes which come out of the valleys and hilles,

8 A land

8 A land of wheate, and barely, of Vines, figtrees, and Poungarnets: a lande wherein are Oliuetrees, Oyle, and honnie.

9 A lande wherein thou shalt eate bread without scarcetie, so as thou shalt not want any thing in it: a Lande whose stones are iron, and out of whose hils thou shalt digge brasse.

YEsterday wee sawe first of all, how the myracle that GOD wrought in feeding his people with Manna by the space of fortie yeeres togither in the wildernesse, ought to serue for euer. And therewithall was shewed the ende thereof: that is to wit, that the Iewes ought to haue considered, that it is not the bread ỹ maintaineth a man, neither is the power of our lyfe shut vp within it: but rather it is God ỹ breatheth liuelinesse into vs, and which giueth the breade that nature wherby it is able to sustaine vs. And so we see ỹ the matter here concerneth not the life of our soules, but that God sheweth vs howe this slightfull and transitorie life is maintayned by his onely power: so that, whether wee haue meate and drinke, or whether we suffer hunger, wee must alwayes haue recourse to Gods goodnesse, assuring our selues that he is our foster father, and that our life is in his hand, and that it is his office to preserue it in good plight. That is the summe of the things which wee haue to remember here. And ye haue seene also howe our Lord Iesus vsed the same text, as was declared in fewe wordes: but yet must we lay forth the residue of the things a little more at length.

Now then wee haue to marke, that if GOD giue vs abundance, our minds must not be wedded to it: for can the bread quicken vs, seeing it is a dead thing? Although God vse it as an instrument, it is not to deface his owne commendation, no more than when he giueth vs light by the Sunne. For we knowe that in the creation of the world, light was made before the Sunne was created. And why? To the intent we should not conuey the honour of God vnto creatures. Therefore let vs so vse the light of the Sunne, as wee acknowledge therewithall, that there is but onely one God, to whom the glorie of that benefite ought to bee yeelded. And when wee haue bread to eate, it is not the bread that sustaineth vs, but it is God, who powreth out his goodnesse continually vpon vs. Although he apply those meanes to our vse: yet is it he himselfe that worketh, it is he that is the author of them. And in that respect is it that hee saith hee will breake the staffe of breade. True it is that hee threatneth to shut vp the heauen as if it were iron, and to make the earth to bee of brasse, so that when the earth crieth out to the heauen, the heauen shall not heare it. God then when he intendeth to send barrennesse vppon a land, vseth such meanes as he thinketh good: by reason whereof wee haue not wherewith to sustaine our selues: in so much that when the grounde hath borne a haruest good and great ynough, yet wil God wel ynough diminish it and make it so moulder away, yea and when the corne is caried to the mill, it shall consume in the grinding: and when it is brought from the mill to the ouen, if it bee measured or weied againe, it shall not hold full weighs and measure. Howbeit, we must come to this point, that the strength which bread hath, is not of ỹ bread it selfe, but of Gods breathing of this woord into it whereof Moses speaketh here: that is to wit, that when God will haue vs to bee nourished and susteined by the bread, he vttereth his goodnesse towards vs, by making vs to feele his blessing which sheadeth it selfe into it after a secret fashion. Albeit that we behold it not with our eyesight, yet must wee be throughly perswaded of it by faith. Then let vs marke well, that when wee haue whereof to feede, we must not be so doulish as to think that the power is inclosed in the breade or in any other vittles or drinkes: but that therein God vttereth his goodnesse towardes vs, and sheadeth it into vs, as we see the raine come from heauen which moisteneth ỹ earth and giueth it strength: On the other side if wee haue want: let vs vnderstand that God can sustaine vs by turning bread into Manna, that is to say: if all ordinarie meanes fayle vs, God will prouide for vs after another fashion, as wee see hee remedied the necessitie of his people, when they were in the wildernes: And for ỹ same cause did our Lord Iesus Christ answere Satan, it is written that man liueth not by bread only, but by euery word that commeth out of the mouth of God. For Sathan tempted him to distrust, vnder colour that in the wildernesse God sent him not the thinges that were expedient to liue withall. He had not any foode there, and yet in the meane while he was pinched, with hunger as a mortall man: for he vouchsafed to become subiect to our passions or sufferinges. Now heere vpon, Sathan taketh occasion to enter vppon him, saying: Seeing thou art the sonne of God, shouldest thou want any thing? Is it not reason that all creatures should serue thee? yes: for thou art the heire of the world. Thou hast no bread: and therefore thou must be faine to try the power of God, that these stones may bee turned into bread, or else thou seest how thy God forsaketh thee, for if he had a care of thee, thou shouldest perceiue his blessing and fauour, so as thou shouldest haue heere wherwith to susteine thee. Now thé seeing thou wantest such helpes, it is a signe that God hath no regard of thee. But Iesus Christ aunswereth hereunto: I shalbe susteined well enough though bread faile mee. And why? For the life of man dependeth not vpon theie meanes. And surely God were of very small and weake force, if hee could not helpe a man but by breade: he should be no better than an earthly man. A riche man can doe welinough, if hee haue wherewith: but if he fall into pouerty, he must be faine to begge himselfe. And so should it bee [by your saying,] with God. But although there were neuer a whit of bread in the world: yet hath he alwayes his word in his mouth, that is to wit, hee needes no more but to say the worde. Like as he created the worlde of nothing, by vttering his will that it pleased him to haue it so: and all thinges were made and are maintained still at this day in their state, by his onely commaundement: so can he maintaine those that are his, as he thinketh good. He needeth no more but to breath foorth his secrete power: and all shall be as well satisfied, as if they had their fill of meate and drinke. According to this lesson, if God at any time withdrawe our foode and make vs to feele necessitie: let vs learne to waite vpon him, and to rest vpon his prouidence, praying him to supply our want: and wee shall finde that this is not written in vaine.

Nowe then wee see there is a dubble vse in this doctrine, and that wee must apply it as well to the time of abundance, as to the time of scarcitie. When wee haue great store of things, let not that stop our eyes to make vs trust too much to them: assuring our selues that our eating of the bread can not sustaine vs, except GOD giue it force. For if he once breake the staffe of it: there will bee no more leaning vnto it, it will rather bee but a griefe to vs. For wee must alwayes marke this similitude, that as a weake man stayeth himselfe vpon a staffe: so GOD strengtheneth our powers agayne by bread and drinke. But if the staffe bee broken: to what purpose will it serue, but to breake his neeke that shall trust vnto it? Then let vs learne to trust vnto GOD and to leane vnto him in our abundaunce, and to giue him thankes for vouchsafyng to make his creatures to serue our turne after that fashion: and let vs beware that wee conuey not ouer his power and prayse to any other thing. For that were to make an idoll of the bread. God hath ordayned it to doe vs seruice, and hee hath put it in subiection to vs: and shall wee notwithstanding goe and worshippe it? If the bread [of it selfe] doe sustayne vs, hath it not the office of God, so as GOD must sit still like an idle and dead thing? Let vs beware that wee make not idols of the benefites which God bestoweth vppon vs: for that were an intollerable vnthankfulnesse. Thus much concerning abundance. And therefore let not riche men thinke they can forbeare Gods helpe bicause they haue their garners well stuffed and stored: for if God doe but blowe vppon them, all vanisheth away. When they haue the morsels in their mouthes: they shall sticke faste in their throtes: and when they haue their bellyes crammed neuer so full, yet shall they receiue no nourishment by it, except God giue it them by his secret working. By this meanes shal all of vs liue in humilitie, and such as are wel stored shall not ceasse to make this prayer without hypocrisie: Giue vs this day our dayly bread. For otherwise, were it not a mocking of God, if a man should thinke himselfe to be well ynough prouided, bicause hee hath great store of corne and wine, or bicause he hath money in his purse and rentes comming in, or bicause he perceyueth himselfe to be throughly furnished and stored of all things? Howe shall he craue his dayly bread at Gods hand, vnlesse he knowe that the thinges which he hath are nothing, and that GOD must bee faine to worke, yea and to continue his secrete operation alwayes? If that were not: a man might defye GOD and bidde scorne of him, as in verie deede he might well ynough forbeare him. But if wee bee fully resolued of this lesson in our hearetes, that nothing sustayneth vs but onely GOD: it will put vs in minde to praye him, to continue his fatherlyng of vs to morrowe as well as he hath fedde vs to day, notwithstanding that we haue a whole yeeres prouision before hand. For wee must alwayes consider, that all that euer we haue without him, is nothing.

Againe, in time of pouertie, it is a great comfort vnto vs that wee may resorte to our God, and beseeche him to haue pitie vppon vs, and [bee sure] that although there were no bread in the worlde, yet he will not fayle to sustaine vs by his power. Seeing then that wee haue this promise, it ought to bee an incouragement vnto vs to pray boldly, and to reioyce, and not to torment our selues out of measure, as they that thinke there is no God at all in heauen, when they see not the helpes wherewith they bee acquainted. And why is that? Bicause wee tye all Gods power to our eyesight and outward sense. Therefore let vs beware of such fondnesse, and let vs put this lesson in vre. And truely God sheweth vs the experience thereof euen still at this day. If wee had our eyes open: wee should perceiue that this is not written in vaine. For yee see that euen they which are best fed receiue no benefite by their meate, whereas in the meane while the children ỹ are neither wel fed nor wel clad, are neuertheless both fat & lustie, & thriue well to see to. What eate they? For want of good sustenaunce, they eate thinges that may hurt them: & yet notwithstanding God maketh them to grow and increase, by turning the things into good iuice, which might ingender euill nourishment. Wee bee sure that wee see this. So then, let vs marke well that our Lord hath left still in the world some remnant of the thing that Moses witnesseth heere. And let vs marke moreouer, that the worde which is spoken of here, betokeneth ỹ power or operation, like as when the Apostle sayeth in the first to the Hebrewes, that Christ hath the fulnesse of the whole Godhead in him, & that he beareth vp the whole world by his word: according wherunto also it is said in the Psalme, ỹ the Heauens were created by ỹ word, and ỹ the same word shewed it selfe there: so as God shewed by his stablishing of ỹ order of nature, ỹ it is he in whō al things haue their being. Ye see then how he worketh towards vs, & that he needeth not to trauel with great labour and paines taking: it is inough if he do but say ỹ word, ỹ is to say if he do but vtter his good pleasure, for ỹ performance will follow by & by therwithall.

But

But by the way we haue here a reſemblance to gather: That if our bodies be nouriſhed and ſuſtained by Gods woord, that is to wit, by the ſecrete power which he breatheth into bread, wine, and all other vittels: much rather are our ſoules nouriſhed by his doctrine that is dayly preached vnto vs. In deede, that is not the meaning of this text, as is ſhewed afore: but yet for all that, when God hath once taught vs what this temporal lyfe is, and ſhewed vs that it dependeth wholly vppon his power and grace: he will haue the ſame to conuey vs yet higher. For when we know that God ſheweth himſelfe a father to vs in giuing vs meate and drink: we muſt alſo paſſe on to the heauenly heritage. [Wee muſt conſider] that his adopting of vs to be his children, is not to feede vs in this worlde like brute beaſtes: but to drawe vs to the euerlaſting lyfe. And therefore when wee perceyue the operation and power of this ſecret word of God in the nouriſhing of our bodyes: wee muſt mount vp hygher, and conſider that our ſoules are not fed neither with bread nor with wine, but ỳ they haue a priciouſer foode, namely that God giueth them life by nouriſhing them to the ſaluation that is prepared for vs. Therefore when we haue ſought our foode at Gods hand, and giuen him thankes for our meate and drink, ſtaying our ſelues altogether vpõ the truſt of his goodneſſe, in hope that hee will alwayes be our fofterfather, yea euen in the time of extreame dearthe: let vs aſſure our ſelues that he will neuer faile vs any more, ſpecially in reſpecte of our ſoules, for as much as that is the thing aboue all other, whereby hee intendeth to certifie vs that he taketh vs for his children. Thus yee ſee how we ought to put this text in vre.

Hebr.12.9.

And heerewithall let vs marke that it was meete that the people of Iſrael ſhould acknowledge the benefite that is ſpoken of in the pſalm Pſal.78.25. where it is ſayd that man was fed with Angels foode. For the prophet, to magnifie Gods grace the more in that hee had fed his people with Manna, ſaieth that when they were a hungred, God ſent the bread from heauen, ſo as mortal & earthly men did eate ỳ bread of Angels. Not that the Angels are fed with Manna: (for they be ſpirits, which haue no neede of meate & drink:) but ỳ the Prophet ment to ſhew that it was an excellent thing, and ỳ whereas ỳ earth yeeldeth foode vnto vs, the heauens were opened vnto them, & mortall men did after a ſorte communicate with the inhabiters of heauen. This ſo great benefite and prerogatiue ought to be acknowledged of ỳ Iewes: but yet the inſtruction that commeth of the thinges that God ſhewed at that time, ought to indure for euer. And therfore although we neuer ſaw the Manna: yet muſt we giue ſuch credit to the things which God did at that time, as to apply the ſame to our owne inſtruction at this day. And that was the cauſe alſo why God willed a Cup to be filled with Manna, and to bee kept in the Tabernacle with the Arke of his Couenant: that although the people [which were to come] ſaw not the wonders that had bin wrought in the wildernes: yet notwithſtãding they might haue a memoriall thereof, to put them alwayes in mind of it, that they might profit them ſelues by it. Then let vs vnderſtand, that although God ſend vs not Manna from heauen nowadays: yet he wil not haue vs to doubt, but that he hath ſuch a care to ſuſteine vs, as we ſhall perceiue he doth not tell vs for nought in this text, that the woord which proceedeth out of his mouth, is the thing whereby wee liue, and whence wee take all our ſuſtenance.

Nowe Moſes addeth immediately, That their garmentes were not worne, nor the people ſore ſwolne in the wildernes by the ſpace of fortie yeares. And thereuppon he concludeth thus, Know then with thine heart, for ſo is it woord for woord: but the meaning thereof is; Aſſure thy ſelfe in thine heart, that as a man nurtureth his owne child, ſo hath God nurtured thee. Now then like as God did feede that people with heauẽly foode, ſo did he cloth them myraculouſly: for otherwiſe their apparell would ſoone haue bin worne out. But God prouided for it, ỳ of al thoſe fortie yeeres together they were ſhod & clad with the ſame rayment & ſhooes, which they brought with them out of Egypt. And it is a preſident which muſt aſſure vs, ỳ although we be clothed with ỳ wooll of Sheep, & haue linnen to weare: yet notwithſtanding it is God ỳ giueth vs continually wherwith to feed & cloth vs: & ſo long as he liſteth to make ỳ helpes auailable which he giueth vs, he will ſo bleſſe them as one Coate ſhall laſt vs our three coates, yea and a whole dooſen ſhall not do ſo much as one alone when God liſteth to curſe them. Likewiſe when he breatheth his bleſſing & fauor into bread, one ounce of it ſhall do more than a whole pounde otherwiſe: and when hee liſteth to breake the ſtaffe of bread, a pound ſhall not do ſo much ſeruice as halfe an ounce. This is the meaning of Moſes in this text. And therefore let vs marke, that if God liſt to proſper vs, we muſt haue ſuch contentatiõ as we be not too eagre and carefull for it as wee commonly be, bearing our ſelues on hande that the earth ſhoulde faile vs, if wee made not the better prouiſion to haue all things aforehand. And what a thing is that? It is true that we ought to thinke vpon our needes. But how? Firſt by calling vpon God, ſaying: Alas Lord, wee bee much poorer and wretchedder creatures than any beaſts in the world: for dogges, aſſes and all other beaſtes are coted with their owne ſkinnes, and they be ynough for them: but if a man be naked, hee ſtarueth out of hand. So Lord, we be the pooreſt and miſerableſt of all other creatures. All beaſtes can find their foode in the fields: but as for vs, if we be not riuiſhed, we decay by and by. God then doth well vouchſafe that we ſhould haue a care to prouide for our neceſſities. Howbeit, that is to the end we ſhold reſort to him referring our ſelues to his fatherly goodneſſe. Againe, we muſt trauell according to the skill ỳ he giueth vs, we muſt not ſpare our ſelues, we muſt folowe ỳ meanes that he appointeth vs, we muſt not be laſie and ſlothfull: for he wil not haue vs to be ydle, nor to be as blocks. But yet muſt this carefulneſſe be bridled, ỳ it vex vs not too much, & we muſt alwayes plucke vp a good heart to call vpon God, and commit our selues vnto him, assuring our selues that he will neuer faile vs. That is the care which God willeth vs to haue. Neuertheless wee must also put the thing in practise that is spoken here: that is to wit, that God will giue vs sufficient to serue our turne, so as if we want cote or shooes, he will either prouide vs of them, or else make one paire of soles to doe vs more seruice than a dooszen, when it pleaseth him. And we may see this with our eyes. For they that are warmest clad, fayle not for all that to bee as it were halfe dead thorowe colde: and on the other side, whereas it seemeth that poore folke should starue and bee frosen with yce a hundred times [ere the yeere goe about:] God warmeth them, yea and they bee so preserued, as though he kept them in a stooue, or as though some Phistio were alwaies at hand with them, ministring good remedies to them to saue them from the colde. After that maner doeth God worke. And that is the cause why that in the time of the Law, God commanded that all newe things should be blessed, to the ende that men should thinke vpon him, & consider thus with themselues: Go to, I haue a newe garment, and I must looke that I thanke him for it which gaue it mee. For seeing it pleaseth my God to clothe mee thus, and to giue me this apparell to vse it as mine owne: it becommeth me to acknowledge that it is of his goodnesse and mercie that I am so prouided for. Yee see then, that the intent why he caused all things to bee dedicated vnto him which men should occupie: was that they should acknowledge the giuer of them, and that if he blessed not the helps which he had giuen them, all was nothing and nought-woorth. And as for now adayes, although wee haue not the like Ceremonie: yet must we hold still the truth thereof.

Leui. 23. 10. 14. 23. 23. & Num. 15. 20

Nowe for a conclusion Moses addeth, Knowe thou in thy Heart, that as a father nourisheth his owne childe, so hath thy God nourished thee. In deede the hebrew woord that Moses vseth in this place, signifieth sometimes to Chastise: and therefore it might be taken as if he sayd thus: Know thou that the intent of thy God in all the afflictions which thou hast indured, hath beene to correct thy faultes: that like as a man intending to reforme his child when he hath doone a misse, taketh the rod by and by in his hande: so likewise thy God hath chastised thee, not suffering thee to become an vnruly and froward child, but holding thee alwaies vnder awe. And this doctrine were very good: but the same woord doth by a similitude betoken likewise all instruction and good gouernment. No doubt but the intent of Moses in this place, was to make a generall conclusion of the matters that hee had treated of. For hee had spoken of Afflictions, and hee had spoken likewise of Gods benefites, and of his leading of the people, al the time y they were in the wilderneesse. Now therefore, to all those matters he applieth this finall sentence, saying: know thou that thy God hath nurtured thee after a gentle and louing fashion, so as thou needest not to wander farre, or to make long vagaries to know whether thy God hath beene with thee or no: he hath applyed himselfe to thee as familiarly as may bee: Is not the instruction that he hath giuen thee, so familiar as no man can frame himselfe more familiar? That therefore is the meaning of Moses.

And whereas he saieth, Know thou in thy heart It is to the end that men should bee the diligenter in applying y things to their instructio, which God teacheth them. For it is pitie to see howe dull wee bee of our selues. Although God vseth himselfe familiarly vnto vs: yet doe not we see him a whit. And what is the cause thereof? A man that is dulsighted and hath sore eyes, discerneth not things well though they be layd afore him. Nowe, wee bee not onely dimsighted, but also starke blinde in Gods workes. True it is that he must bee faine to inlighten vs: but yet must wee also doe our indeuour, and apply our mindes to judge well of his workes, when it pleaseth him to shewe them to vs. And so it is not a needelesse speech of Moses, to say know thou in thy heart. As if he should say, euerie man must enter into himselfe, and indeuour earnestly to know the grace and goodnesse of God. We must not slumber in that case, but euery of vs must do his diligence to the vttermost. To bee short, these sayinges, Let men inforce themselues, and let men streine themselues, are well woorth the noting. For when God teacheth vs, by and by euery of vs must enter into his owne heart.

And now againe, whereas hee sayth that God taught [or trained] his people, as a man doth his children: It is to cut off al occasion of starting holes, that men might not pretend any ignorance. For in as much as thinges are declared here according to our rudenesse: wee cannot excuse our selues by saying that our wit is too dul, and that we be vnable to mount so high: for this doctrine is giuen vs familiarly ynough. To the end therefore that no man might take occasion of excuse, Moses sayth at a woord, what? hath not thy God taught thee after a commō fashion and as men doe? When a father intendeth to teach his child, will he do more than thy God hath doone to thee? Nowe sith it is so: these thinges were not spoken for that time onely: but our Lord woorketh after the same maner yet still at this day, so as wee may perceiue the thinges that Moses telleth them heere. In deede Gods woorkes are likened to a bottomlesse pit, and it is not lawfull for vs to bee so inquisitiue of his doings, as to seeke to know all the reasons of them: for we be not able to conceiue them: and therefore (as we haue seene in Iob,) we must be contented to see the outleetes of his woorkes. And this similitude importeth much, where it is saide that wee see but the outleets, that is to say the outermost partes of Gods woorkes. As for to attaine to the middes of them, or to search al that which lyeth hidden within: that is vtterly impossible. And let vs beware of rushing so farre, for God would surely punish our rashnesse. But yet must wee looke vppon the outleetes and lides or bondes of Gods woorkes, and take such rules of them as wee may learne so much of them as may bee for our welfare and ſaluation. If wee doe ſo: wee ſhall perceiue that God applyeth himſelfe to our rudeneſſe, and that hee dealeth with vs after the maner of men, that teach little children, inſtructing vs in ſuch wiſe as wee cannot ſay to him, yea, but I am not as an Angell of heauen to comprehend Gods doings. For (as I ſaid) God vouchſafeth to ſtoope to vs: & to the intent wee ſhould vnderſtand his workes, he becommeth familiar with vs. Of whom is it long then ỳ we profit not by the inſtructions that he giueth vs? For wee cannot ſay but ỳ he manifeſteth himſelfe to vs ſo many ways, ỳ there is no more excuſe for vs if we knowe him not. Verily euen by the order of nature, wee may knowe him generally, as by the ſeaſons of the yeere, by the growing of fruites vpon the earth, and by the ſhining of the Sunne, the Moone, and ỳ ſtarres. Euen by theſe thinges may we ſee that our Lord hath applied himſelfe wholly vnto vs, and to the feebleneſſe of our vnderſtanding, and that he hath (as it were) transfigured himſelfe, by taking vppon him the perſon of a man, to the end that we might know him. Again, when he ſcourgeth vs, doe wee not ſee that hee handleth vs as a father handleth his owne children? If he ſee a man wax ouerluſtie and malapert: after hee hath borne a while with him, he taketh the rod in his hand. For on the one ſide he warneth vs by his word. And afterward if he ſmite vs with his hand, doth hee not vſe the greater kindneſſe towardes vs, to the intent wee ſhoulde receiue his corrections to our benefite? Againe, when he ſendeth vs of his benefites, it is all one as if a father being deſirous to winne his childe by gentleneſſe, ſhoulde ſay vnto him, My Sonne, what wilt thou doe? Who ſhall maintaine thee when thou art gone away from mee? Here thou haſt alwayes whereon to liue: thou ſeeſt howe I take paines for thee: get thee to a ſtraunger, and ſee if hee will deale better with thee. Nowe then like as a father will ſpeake after that maner to his childe: ſo doeth our Lorde ſhewe himſelfe vnto vs, and hee matcheth his worde with his deeds: that is to ſay, whereas he ſendeth vs proſperitie and quietneſſe, he telleth vs alſo that it is to allure vs to him, that his gentlenes might winne vs to him, and make vs to returne familiarly vnto him, and to depart from our ſinnes. Sith it is ſo: let vs learne that there will be no excuſe for vs, if we take not inſtruction by al the order which God keepeth to teach vs withall in this worlde. For why? Hee behaueth himſelfe like a mortal man towards vs, and worketh not after the manner of his owne incomprehenſible maieſtie, becauſe it woulde confounde vs. Wee be too weake to mount ſo high: and therefore hee ſtoopeth vnto vs. Seeing then that hee dealeth ſo friendly on his behalfe: Let not vs be ſo ſlouthfull, as not to enter into our owne harts, and to conſider thinges accordingly, and to inforce our ſelues to beare Gods benefites well in minde, ſo as we take inſtruction by them as wee ought to do. Thus ye ſee what we haue to mark vpon that place.

Nowe Moſes ſheweth to what end he exhorted the people to deeme well of Gods workes: namely to the end they might keepe al his commaundementes, to walke in his wayes, and to feare him. Keepe the commaundements of the Lorde thy God (ſaith he) that thou maiſt walke in his wayes and feare him. Firſt wee haue to marke here, that Moſes ſendeth the people to the Lawe, as to the perfect and chief doctrine of our whole life. And it is a point well worthie to bee marked. For thereuppon we haue to gather, that when God hath taught vs neuer ſo many wayes, yet ſhall they neuer boote vs, vnleſſe wee haue recourſe vnto his worde. Beholde, the Infidels can well ynough ſearch the ſecrets of nature, they can well not onely alledge reaſons, but alſo ſay, this is done after this faſhion. Yea and they haue deemed God to bee good, righteous, and wiſe, & wee ſee that the heathen Philoſophers knewe Gods workes ſo farre, as they couldе take of his maieſtie. But what? It was all confuſedly, and in the end they vaniſhed away in their owne imaginations, ſo as they neuer attained to the point whereto they ſhould haue come. Then let vs vnderſtande that all is to no purpoſe, vntill wee haue Gods doctrine for all perfection. True it is that the things which we behold in the worlde, and all the inſtructions which God giueth vs thereby, are good and profitable helpes: but yet for all that, the marke that we muſt ſhoote at is the doctrine [of his worde,] ſo as wee ſet all our wittes vppon that, to the ende wee wander not out of the way. For if a man ſhoote, and haue no marke to ſhoote at: what doth hee elſe but loſe all his ſhotte? Euen ſo is it with vs: we may well ſhoote, that is to ſay, we may take paine to know Gods works: but what ſhall we gaine by it, if we haue not the ſaide marke to ſhoote at? It ſhalbe but loſt labour. And this marke is not to be choſen at our owne diſcretion: but God muſt ſet vs vp our whyte: and that white is the Lawe, the Prophets, and the Goſpel. And ſo ye ſee that that is the cauſe why Moſes hauing ſpoken of ỳ wonders which the people had ſeene, & hauing told them that the ſame ought to ſerue to their inſtruction, and hauing exhorted the faithfull to profite wel in that ſchoole: ſendeth them backe againe to the word. Keepe the commaundements of the Lord thy God, ſaith hee: and afterward he addeth, that thou maiſt walke in his wayes.

Pſal. 1. 9. 8.

Rom. 1. 20.

Here wee haue to note, that whenſoeuer wee ſwarue from Gods word, wee ſhal but wander, as hath beene ſhewed heretofore: and we may well goe vp and downe, but wee ſhal be neuer the further forwarde: Let men breake their ſhankes as much as they liſt, & yet ſhal they either go back, or elſe find theſelues all in one place ſtill, vnleſſe they know ỳ way which they ought to keepe. For let vs mark wel ỳ our own ways are croked, and ỳ there is nothing but ſtraying and wandering in vaine. And therfore God will haue vs to walk in his ways, which are ſtrait and leuell. In ſaying ſo, Moſes ſetteth down a cõpariſon of things cõtrarie. As if he ſhould ſay, Wretched folk, ye thinke to further your ſelues when ye walk in your own ways, by deuiſing euery man a ſundry way at his owne pleaſure. But what? Yee doe but marre your your selues in vaine: for God will haue men to walke in his wayes, that is to say, in the wayes that he sheweth them, and he will haue them to be followed. Therefore let vs learne to submitte our selues to Gods worde, knowing well that our life shall neuer be well ordered, except wee obey him. Yea and whereas hee saith the wayes of the Lord in the plurall number: wee must apply it to that which hath beene saide heretofore: that is to wit, that God hath giuen vs so full a doctrine, as wee cannot alledge that it is not ynough, or that more may bee added to it. Let vs marke that our Lorde will not fayle vs in any thing. Therfore let vs not be wise in our own conceit, but let vs aske counsel of him. And if wee doubt that wee goe astray, or if we bee afraide of wandering vp and downe: let vs keepe his way, and wee can not goe amisse. For why? God hath not made one way onely: but he hath shewed vs all his wayes, that is to say, all that euer is requisite to make a man walke aright, so as wee can neuer goe amisse, if wee followe the direction that he setteth afore vs. Nowe hee addeth hereunto, To the ende that we should feare the Lord. Herein hee sheweth to what ende God gaue vs his Lawe. Why will he haue men to keepe it? To doe him homage aboue all thinges. For wee knowe that he receiueth neither harme nor benefite by vs. What can wee doe to him? Our seruing of him is not to aduauntage him any whit: for hee hath no neede of any thing. Againe what riches haue we to increase him withall? Why then hath hee giuen vs his lawe, but to the ende that wee should dedicate our whole life vnto him, and by keeping his commaundementes shewe our selues willing to bee subiect vnto him, and that hee hath all souereine dominion ouer vs? That is the thing which is meant by the feare that Moses speaketh of heere. And let vs note that he meaneth not a slauish feare-fulnesse, that is to say, that men should submitte themselues to him as inforced: but that wee should stand in reuerend awe of him, not onely as of our master but also as of our father. The feare which GOD requireth, is matched with heartie loue: so as wee bee gladde and faine to serue him. And why? Because it is good reason that we should be his, and that he shoulde haue the gouerning of vs, & that we should frame our liues according to his wil. And so yee see what is the chiefe point in the keeping of the Lawe.

Iob. 35.7. & Psal. 16.2. & 50.10. & Act. 17.25. & Rom. 8.15 & 2. Tim. 1.7

Furthermore let vs mark, that it is not ynough for men to liue vprightly, so as they abstaine from all euill and vice, and deale in such sort as nothing but vertue can bee founde in them: For a man may well bee chast, and abstaine from all wrong, anoyance, deceit, blasphemie, and lewd talke: and yet shall all this be nothing worth, except he referre all to the said end of offering vp of himselfe in sacrifice vnto God. Vertues therefore are not of estimation in themselues, so as it may bee saide, O this is an excellent fellowe in vertue, he hath done this and that, he hath abstayned from all euill: but wee must goe on further to the vertue of all vertues, the fountaine and welspring of all holinesse, righteousnesse, and vpright dealing: namely that wee tende to our God, seeking to honour and glorifie him, and to bee wholly his and vnder his gouernement. When wee bee at that point: then is our life well ordered. But wee may make the faireſt shewe in the worlde, and yet if wee haue not respect to our God, to submit our selues to him that his name may bee exalted and magnified, & that he may haue his due right at our handes: all is but leasing, be it neuer so highly esteemed. Yee see then in effect that the thing which wee haue to remember, is ỳ when God hath shewed vs his workes, then doth he call vs to his worde, telling vs that that is the thing whereunto wee must holde our selues without wandering here and there: and thirdly that if wee will haue our life well ordered, wee must alwayes haue our eye vpon the thing that he commandeth. And howe is that? Euen to honour him in such sort, as wee come to him with a free and cleare hart, to serue him, & to dedicate our selues to him: & also liue among our neighbors without working any deceit or wrong to any man, & without ouershooting of our selues into any outrage. But yet the chief point is ỳ God haue his due, ỳ is to wit, that he gouerne vs, and be glorified by al our life, because it is good reason that he should haue vs at his deuotion, and that we shoulde bee subiect to him, forsomuch as we bee beholden to him for all good things. And we must not only do so because he is our maker and hath soueraine dominion ouer vs: but we must also loue him because he is our father. And againe, seeing he bestoweth so many benefits vpon vs: we ought at leastwise to yeelde him his due reuerence.

And that is the cause why Moses addeth in the end, God will bring thee into the Land which hath promised thee, a rich and wealthie Lande, a Land that is full of all good thinges, wherein there is plenty of wheate, barly, wyne, honny, and Oyle, and of all other thinges. And this is saide to prouoke the people the more, to the feare that was spoken of before. For truely if wee feele nothing but rigour at Gods hande: wee may wel yeelde to him, but it will bee but perforce, it will not bee with a free will, there will bee nothing but hypocrisie in all our life. Indeede wee will not faile to pretende a faire countenãce of seruing our God: but our doing of it will bee by constreint, like as they which haue done euill may well go on still, howbeit that is but for feare of stripes, and in the meane while they haue no lust nor good will to it. But when wee haue once marked well the good turnes that God doeth vs: then are we the more moued and prouoked to honour him, knowing that wee ought to yeelde him a willing and freehearted reuerence, so as our whole seeking bee to make an offering of our selues vnto him, and to sacrifice euen our liues to him. To that ende then doeth Moses alledge the good turnes which God was about to doe vnto his people. And hee not onely speaketh of the former benefites which they ought to haue borne well in minde: but he saieth also, when thy God shall haue brought thee into the Lande: then put forth thy selfe to serue him with the better courage, accordingly as he goeth through with his benefites towardes thee.

Now let vs kneele down in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to touch vs in such wise, as we may be drawen to true repentance: and ỳ forasmuch as we be wretched creatures ỳ haue neede to bee sustained by him euery minute of an houre, we may resort to his bountifulnesse, assuring our selues that although wee had all the abundance of the world, yet could we not bee sustained and nourished by it, except his hand were stretched out ouer vs to blesse vs: and therefore that wee may depend wholly vpon his blessing, & vpon his grace, and drawe out of that fountaine of his which can neuer drie vp: and that when we are once filled therewith, we may learne to thanke him for his gracious goodnesse, so as his feeding of vs here beneath, may not tie vs to this transitorie life like brute beastes, but rather make vs to know that we must alwayes trauel towards the heauenly life, whereunto it may please him to guide vs, & to bring vs euer neerer and neerer vnto it, vntill he haue brought vs fully thither, for the sake & by the meanes of his welbeloued sonne our Lord Iesus Christ. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations, &c.

On Wednesday the xxj. of Auguſt. 1555.

The threescore Sermon, which is the third vpon the eight Chapter.

10 Thou shalt eate and be filled, and blesse the Lorde thy God for the good land which he shall haue giuen thee.

11 Take heede that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commaundements, Lawes, and Ordinances, which I commaund thee this day:

12 To the ende that when thou shalt haue eaten and beene satisfied, and haue builded faire houses and dwelt in them:

13 And that thine Oxen and sheepe are multiplyed, and thy siluer and golde are increased, and all that thou hast is multiplied:

14 Thy heart do not then swel, and thou forget the Lord thy God which hath brought thee out of the land of Egypt from the house of bondage.

IF God commaund vs to be patient in aduersitie, wee thinke it a hard thing: and yet is it good reason that we should passe that way, seeing wee haue a paterne and image thereof in our Lorde Iesus Christ, vnto whome wee must bee like fashioned, if wee will bee Gods children, not onely in suffering quietly the afflictions which hee sendeth vs in this present lyfe, but also in being readie and obedient to him euen to the death. Yee see then that it is a most rightful condition: and yet we on our side doe finde it combersome. And why? Bicause we be too nyce, and our selfe loue doeth so carie vs away, that wee can not abyde to suffer any thing. Nowe if we bewraye great vnthankefulnesse and faulte in this: much more doe wee bewraye the same when we cannot so conceiue of Gods benefites, as to bee thankefull to him for them. Herein (say I) wee shewe our selues to bee too too lewd. For if GOD deale gently with vs and shewe himselfe fatherlike towards vs: must it not needs be ỳ we are worse than brute beasts, if we vouchsafe not to lift vp our eyes towards heauē, to yeld him some acknowledgmēt of his goodnes. Now although this be a detestable vice: yet is it cōmō & too cōmon amōg men. And if euery mā looke into himself: in maner al shal find themselues guilty of it. If there were no further than ỳ outward Ceremonie of thanksgiuing: yet is it apparant that men make none account of it. Doe all men beare in minde to call vppon Gods name when they sit downe to the table? Or when they haue taken their repast, doe they remember to acknowledge that they bee beholden to him for their life, and for all things else that are requisite for their sustenance? Nay rather, they chop downe to the table like Swyne, and start vp like dogges, so as there is no tydings nor remembrance of Gods name among them, but to their seeming it is a spice of moonkish hypocrisie or popeholinesse to thanke God. Loe howe farre the worlde is out of square: Howbeit when we haue praised God both at the beginning and at the ending of our repast, yet is not that ynough to discharge vs. Therefore if we faile in that: we bee double vnhappie. For what will wee doe in the greater things, if wee cannot performe the lesser? For this manner of calling vpon God is as good as nothing, I meane in comparison of the knowledge that lyeth hidden vnder it, and which hath a liuely roote, which shall bee treated of more largely anon. For if men cannot finde in their hearts to discharge their duetie in the lesser thinges, as in the lifting vp of their handes, and in yeelding some praise vnto God by some outward signes: I pray you howe will they doe that which is commaunded them here, that is to wit, how will they bleſſe God in all their whole life, which is the harder thing to doe? Therefore let vs marke, that this vnthankfulneſſe of forgetting God, and of yeelding no ſigne of acknowledgement of his benefites, is an ordinarie vice. But although it be ſorye yet ſayle they not to be blameworthie for it: neither let vs thinke to iuſtifie or excuſe our ſelues by wicked cuſtome as a number do, which would faine make a bucklar of it againſt God, bearing themſelues on hand, that foraſmuch as [the ouerſlipping of thankeſgiuing vnto God] is ſo common a thing among men, therefore it is lawfull for them to doe ſo alſo: But that will bee no excuſe for vs, as I ſaide afore. For although there be not a commoner thing than this leaudnes of forgetting God which is daily ſeene amõg men: doth it followe that therefore their fault ſhould not be imputed vnto them? No no: but the more y one of them haue hardened another, and al of thẽ are become bruiſh, & haue cõſpired againſt God: ſo much the more horrible muſt their vengeance be.

And therefore let vs marke firſt of al, that the warning which Moſes giueth vs here, (that is to wit, that when we be full fed we ſhould doo kindly vpon God, that is to ſay, yeeld him his due praiſe,) is no more than needeth. For if wee did it of our owne accord, ſo as euery man gaue his minde to it: we ſhould not neede to be put in minde of it by others. But foraſmuch as we bee negligent: the holy Ghoſt is faine to pricke vs forward, and to quicken vs vp as he doeth in this text. And ſith wee ſee that the thing which God requireth of vs is ſo reaſonable, and ſuch as wee ought to haue learned aforehãd by nature: let vs be dubble aſhamed to continue ſtill vnluſtie, and at leaſtwiſe not to be touched with ſuch warning. It ought to ſhame vs aforehand, that God ſhould bee faine to tell vs of the thing which euen litle children ought to knowe. For ſeeing hee is ſo liberall as to feede vs and to nouriſh vs: let vs at the leaſt call him our father, and ſhewe that wee thinke our ſelues beholden to him for that benefite. Ye ſee then how it is to our great ſhame, that God muſt be faine to ſtirre vs vp to y thing, which euen nature ought to haue taught vs. But if we continue weltring ſtil in that brutiſhneſſe: what excuſe will there remaine for vs?] None at all:] and therefore let vs practiſe this leſſon: that when GOD filleth vs, wee at leaſtewiſe yeelde him thankes, and ſhew that wee haue not forgotten the authour of all welfare.

Here a man might demaund, why God ſaith no more, but that men ſhoulde praiſe him and bleſſe him in the time of proſperitie? (For that (as I ſaide) is not all that a Chriſtian man hath to doe. Hee muſt proceede yet further: that is to wit, when it pleaſeth God to ſend vs trouble, anguiſh, pouertie, ſickeneſſe, iniurie, reproche, [and ſuch other things]: wee muſt bee obedient to him, and bowe downe our neckes in all caſes, to receiue his yoke & to beare it without gainſaying or ſtriuing. Therein (ſay I) lyeth the perfect true vertue [of obedience]: namely when God ſhall rule vs after his good pleaſure, and we like well of all his doings towards vs, and are euer ready to bowe and to ſtoope vnto his hande, whether it be to liue or to die. And ſo al the ſeruice that we can doe vnto God, is nothing without patience. For one of the chiefe ſacrifices that he requireth, is that wee ſhould quietly endure all the aduerſitie that hee ſendeth vs. And why then maketh he no mention of it here? The reaſon is, firſt becauſe his deſire is to deale gently with vs. And if we on our ſide could ſuffer it, ſurely we ſhould be priuiledged from all the aduerſities that trouble vs. For had a man no leaud luſtes in him, were he not wedded to the world, were hee forward to ſubmitte himſelfe to Gods will in all thinges, had hee no ſeede of vanitie or pride in him, nor were hee not ſoned in his owne delightes: GOD woulde maintaine him here as in an earthly Paradiſe. For his ſcourging of vs is of neceſſitie, becauſe he ſeeth that wee haue neede of ſuch medicines. To bee ſhort, if wee were ſound in our ſoules: God would deale with vs as with ſtrong folke, to whõ men miniſter neither medicines, nor pilles, nor purgations, nor any ſuch other things. But foraſmuch as he ſeeth that wee be diſeaſed: he is faine to cut vs our morſels, and to binde vs to ſuch diet as hee knoweth to bee good for vs. He is faine to let vs bloud, and to giue vs bitter drinkes, pilles, and ſuch like thinges. Yea and moreouer he is faine nowe and then to ſcare vs, when he perceiueth our diſeaſes to be otherwiſe vncurable. Let vs marke therefore that in this place God hath ſpoken according to his owne nature, becauſe hee is inclyned of himſelfe to deale gently with men, and is deſirous to giue vs our fill of his benefites, and to holde vs as it were in his lappe, as a mother doeth her owne childe. After that manner would GOD deale with vs, if wee could beare it.

And that is the cauſe why hee ſaith, When thy God ſhall haue brought thee into the good lande, and there haue filled thee with his benefites: Looke to thy wife that thou bleſſe his name. Wherefore let vs marke the order which God keepeth in exhorting vs to ſerue him. The firſt point is that foraſmuch as he is deſirous to ſhewe himſelfe a father towardes vs: his ſhewing of himſelfe to be ſuch a one, ſhould mooue vs and make vs the willinger to honour him, & to loue him ſo much the more: and that ſeeing he handleth vs ſo gently, wee alſo ſhoulde acknowledge it and glorifie him for it al our life long: and that as he is a father towards vs, ſo we ſhould bee as children towardes him. (That ſay I) is the ende that we muſt begin at. But on the contrarie part, forſmuch as we be wildeheaded children, of nature froward, vnruly, & leawd: God is faine to ſcourge vs, and to chaſtiſe vs, and tame vs with hauing. Sith it is ſo: let vs learne, that if God ſhewe vs an angry looke & frowne vpon vs, or liſt to deale roughly with vs becauſe hee ſeeth vs abuſe his benefites, and that we haue not honored him as wee ought to doe: wee muſt not harden our hearts against him, nor take occasion to withdrawe our selues from his obedience: neither must wee play these vnthriftes that forsake their fathers houses, and run gadding abrode at randon, as though they liked better of the galowes than of their inheritance. Let vs refraine from misbehauing our selues after ỹ fashion against our God, and let vs learne to submit our selues meekly vnder his hand, assuring our selues that if he afflict vs he hath good reason to do it. And although we perceiue not ỹ cause why he doth it let vs do him the honour to submit our selues to him, and to shut our owne eyes, that he may dispose of vs according to his own wisedom which is vnknowen to vs. After this manner must wee come from the acknowledgment of Gods benefites, to the subiection which we ought to yeelde vnto him, to humble our selues vnder his mightie hand, whensoeuer he listeth to chastise vs or to tame vs for our stubbornesse, and to cleanse vs of our vices and wicked lustes, and of the infirmities which he knoweth to be in vs.

And now proceeding with that which I haue touched alreadie: let vs marke that it is not ynough for vs to pray vnto God with our mouths onely: but it must bee as a helpe to conuey vs further, namely to the dedicating of our whole lyfe vnto him, accordingly as Moses sheweth here, adding: Then shalt not forget the Lord thy God, to dispise his Commandements, statutes, & Lawes, which I inioyne thee this day. Hereby he sheweth vs that to yeeld thankes vnto God is a good & holy exercise: but yet it is not all ỹ we haue to doe: our life must be answerable to our tongue, and as we haue protested our selues to bee beholden vnto God, so must we shew it by our deedes. That is ỹ cause why it is expresly said, beware thou forget not thy God by foreslowing to keepe al his commandements and Lawes. Now first of all Moses sheweth here, whence this vnthankfulnes of mẽ springeth, ỹ they acknowledge not ỹ party which hath done them so much good, but forget him vtterly. And may ỹ excuse vs? Nay it rather maketh our fault the heynouser, when we think not vpon God, seeing he setteth his goodnes before our eyes, so as wee may beholde him therein, & we haue as faire presidents of him there as if he were liuely painted before vs in a table, & yet we looke not vpon him. If God withheld himself from vs, so as we found no fauour at his hand, and he suffered vs to linger in all maner of miserie, without giuing vs any succour when we called vppon him: yet were that no sufficient excuse, that wee shoulde not seeke him. For it is the meane whereby hee quickeneth vs vp to call vpon him the more earnestly. Neuertheless, wee might haue some colour to say, Alas I wote not what to doe, for God seemeth to be gone quite and cleane from me, & it is no marueil though I set not my minde vppon him, for I haue no meane to allure mee thereto. But nowe contrariwise, seeing hee offereth himselfe to vs, and maketh vs to perceyue his goodnesse, so as we might euen feele him by groping though we were blind: must it not needs bee that we be worse than froward, if we thinke not vpon him? Yes, and yet we see this naughtinesse to bee ordinarie among men. For why? When wee bee once full, wee beare our selues on hand that wee haue no more neede of Gods helpe. If necessitie pinch vs, then we come running to him. But if he send vs the worlde at will, wee become as it were drunken in our delights, all our seeking is to wade deeper and deeper, and to bee short, wee neuer come to God but by constraint. Wherein we see that all the prayers which wee make vnto him when hee afflicteth vs, are but fained and vntrue. For then wee will confesse well ynough, that wee be miserable creatures if he pitie vs not. But what? As soone as he hath withdrawen his hand, we neuer think vpon him more. Therefore it is a token that all was but hypocrisie in vs before, & that we were not rightly and syncerely minded. Now then we shall not faile to be ỹ grieuouslier condemned, if we forget our God when he draweth neere to vs. For the moe good turnes that he doeth vs, the moe signes and recordes haue we that he is willing to be our father, and to take vs for his children, and that hee sheweth himselfe in such sort vnto vs, as we cannot but know him. If this will not moue vs, our cursednesse is double. And therefore let vs learne that when our God hath made vs wealthie, we must not play the beastly folke, which despise God when they haue the world at wil, as who should say they had ynough of their owne to content themselues withall: but wee must bethinke vs of two things. First (as I saide) that if our Lord be liberall to vs, his comming to vs and his shewing of himself so familiar & friendly towardes vs, is to the end we shoulde know him ỹ better. That is for ỹ first point. And again for the second, let vs vnderstand that if we haue abundance to day, we may bee bereft of it in a minute of an houre, so as ỹ man that thinks himselfe well stored, shall finde himselfe naked, bare, and poore, in lesse than the turning of a hande. Why so? Because God auengeth himselfe of the saide vnthankfulnesse. And it is good reason also that hee shoulde not suffer men to forget him, when hee hath shewed himselfe after that fashion vnto them. Wherefore let vs vnderstande, that when we be in prosperitie wee haue the iuster cause to call vppon God, not onely to shewe that wee bee bounde vnto him for the good that he hath done vs alreadie: but also to shewe that the goods which we possesse were nothing, if he should not continue them and maintaine vs in them. These are the things which wee must beare in minde.

And therefore let vs marke, that the more God powreth out his benefits vpon vs, the more ought we to be quickened vp by them to thinke the better vppon him. But what? Wee bee farre wyde from the hauing of any such discretion with vs: and therefore haue wee so much the more neede to bethinke vs of this lesson that is shewed vs here, considering what hath happened in all ages. As for the vnbeleeuers, they are often enough vpbraided, that when God sends them the world most at will, then do they most kicke against him, and shewe themPsal. 73. 5. 9

selues most stubborne and rebellious. But as touching them ẏ call themselues beleeuers: euẽ Deut.32.15 in them also is the same vice blamed by ẏ holy scripture. And not without cause: for we see that euen the children of God haue bin subiect to it. What is written of Ezechias? Although he was 2.Kin.20.13 Esa.39.2.& 2.kin.18.5. a peereleſſe perle and mirror of all holines: yet wee see that as soone as God gaue him ease, he was no more mindfull to thinke vpon him. Yea and at what point was euẽ Dauid himself? See-
1.Sam.21.2. ing then that this misdealing fell euen vpõ them ẏ were as halfe Angels in this world: let vs be the watchfuller, & let euery of vs labour to redresse himselfe both earely & late. And seeing there is such slowneſſe in vs, let the same spurre vs forewarde to bethinke vs of Gods grace, ẏ his name may be blessed and magnified by vs. Yea & Moses doeth expressly make a comparison here, betweene Gods former guiding of his people, and his leading of them through the wildernes with his afflicting of thẽ there, after he had brought them out of the thraldome of Egypt, to the end ẏ the same might prouoke them the more to be thankfull vnto God. For when we haue once felt many miseries, & God hath deliuered vs from them: if it moue vs not the more to yeeld him his due praise, it is the fouler & hainouser fault. And that is the cause why Moses speaketh of it. But what? We see how the people of old time behaued themselues. After this deliuerãce, God deliuered his people another time from the captiuitie of Babylon, wherein he reached out his arme after so noble a fashion, as the Prophetes could neuer thinke themselues to haue spoken ynough of his power which he shewed therein. Neuertheleſſe, they were no sooner returned home, but euery man was busie about the buil-
Zac.1.16.17 Agge.1.8.9 ding of his owne house, & Gods temple was let alone, no man made account of it. It lay open to raine & snowe, so as the sacrifices & al the order of the Church lay dead. And what was ẏ cause thereof? Euen priuate profit, which possessed al such as had receiued that benefit at Gods hand. And how fare wee nowe adayes I praye you? For if our Lord giue vs rest & ease, then in stead of knowing our shepheard like good sheepe, we play the wild beasts with him, and fall to kicking at him. And what are we the better by remembring our former miseries? Without going any further, in what plyght haue they bin, which at this present are well at their ease and rest? And yet are they so farre off from faring the better by it, that it grieueth them at the heart that any man should tell them of it. They would haue all the things buryed which they haue indured aforetimes, & also the benefites which they haue receiued since, and in the meane while become brutish like swine. They could finde in their hearts (say I) to aduance thẽselues against God, without being aknowen ẏ they bee beholden to him for any thing: They neuer passe for the procuring of Gods honor, neither regard they how much they be bound vnto him. But euery man in the meane season followes his owne likings. One burnes in couetousneſſe, and another in vaine glorie, seeking to be aduaunced to authoritie and honour, and to bee taken to be I wot not what. Thus ye see at what point they bee, which will needes be taken to bee greatest and zealousest Christians. Now then seeing it is not onely among ẏ Iewes ẏ this foule vnthankfulnes hath reigned, but that wee also are steyned, yea and vnmeasurablie attainted with it at this day: Let vs be sure that ẏ holy Ghost warneth vs also, & ẏ this doctrine of Moseses pointeth at vs too. Nowe therefore let vs followe his saying: that is to wit, that our life must bee answerable to our speech, so as wee may shewe that wee play not the hypocrites in praysing God. Indeede the mouth must doe his office, and euery man must inure himselfe to praise God: and if wee doe it not, our leawdneſſe is apparant euen to litle children. For they that sit downe to the table, and when they haue filled their bellies rise vp againe without shewing any signe of feare or reuerence to Godward, deserue to haue litle children to spitte in their faces, or else to haue dung cast vpon them, as they that defie nature. For the very Asses and Oxen obserue a naturall order in their feeding. Such folke doe spite GOD through their intemperance and exceſſe, and finally would haue his name abolished, as they shewe wellynough. Therefore are they vnto monsters, whome men ought euen to abhorre. But yet must wee not stay there. For heere is a rule giuen vs to pray in such sort vnto God with our mouth, as our life may beare witnesse therewithall, that our praying to him is done truly and vnfeynedly. For if when wee haue prouoked with our mouth, that God is our father and shewed himselfe liberall to vs, and that wee liue by his grace, and that he giueth vs all things which he knoweth to bee for our welfare: we after wee haue saide so, doe giue our selues to all naughtinesse, and take leaue to exempt our selues from all subiection wherto shal our thanksgiuing serue which we haue yeelded with our tongues, but to be as a bond to hold our noses to ẏ grindestone, so as wee may haue no shift to helpe our selues? Then let vs learne to sing vnto God with such melodie as Moses speaketh of here: ẏ is to wit, as our whole life agree with our mouth, and as god be honored truly and effectually.

Nowe herewithall let vs marke well howe he adderh, Take good heede, that when thou hast eaten and drunke thy fill, and builded thee faire houses, and increased thy Cattell: thy heart doe not swell, and thou forgete the Lord thy God. Here Moses bringeth vs to the very welhead of ẏ naughtinesse that I haue touched already. Men are vnthankeful & forget god though he shew him selfe friendly vnto thẽ, and their praying to him w̃ their tongues is but feining. And wherof commeth that? Moses saith ẏ it commeth of ẏ loftines of the heart. But let vs mark wel, ẏ in so saying he tanteth mens selfewening, in chalenging ẏ things to thẽselues which belong alonely vnto God, as he will expresse yet better in ẏ end: but all cannot be spoken at once. Then if God haue done vs any good, no doubt but it will inforce vs to graunte in wordes that it is so indeede: but yet for all that, wee will not fayle to father all thinges either vppon our owne wisedome, or vppon our good fortune, or vpon one thing or other. And therefore no maruell though we bee so besotted therwithal, that we thinke no more vpon God. For why? Is there any greater or horribler blindnes, than for men to bee so proude as to set vp their bristles and to knowe themselues no more, but contrariwise to imagine themselues to bee that which they be not? Nowe then, when men are caried away with this false opinion of selfestimation: they bee so ouerblinded as they haue neither reason nor wit, insomuch that tell them what a man can, they passe not for it, but continue still in their wilfulnesse. Therefore let vs beware of this Highmindednesse which Moses speaketh of here. And that we may be the warer to keepe our selues from it: let vs assure our selues that euery one of vs haue as it were a roote of it in vs, vntill God haue rid vs of it. In deede there are some to bee seene which are modest, so as if God aduance them to honour or wealth, yee shall not perceiue any pride or chaunge at all in them. If they become great whereas they were little before: ye shall see them holde an euen hande, and continue still gentle. But whersoeuer wee see that: let vs note that God hath wrought there, or else it were vnpossible. For not without cause are Lowelinesse and meekenes fathered vpon his holy spirit. When the holy scripture speaketh of those vertues, exhorting men to be mielde, & not to grow proud, but rather to liue quietly with their inferiors: it saith that they be singular gifts of ỹ holy ghost. Againe, we see they be verie rare gifts. For howe do most men behaue themselues when they bee aduaunced? [Mieldly?] Nay contrariwise we see they be intollerable, as who shoulde saye they came out of the cloudes. But let them beware that they tumble not downe: for there is no loftines so high, which God cannot cast downe, if men stande in their owne conceites and forget themselues. Neuertheless, the worlde sees that this is too too common, and there is a double vnthankfulnes in it. For first they consider not that the wealth which they haue, cõmeth from aboue: but their hearts are hardened in that behalfe. And secondly they fall not to consider with themselues afterwarde, that they bee not worthy of it, to the end they might humble themselues & thank God for it. But contrariwise they be so malicious, as they could find in their harts that all the grace of God in the world were suppressed. Wee see this apparantly in those which cannot abide to offer God the sacrifice of praise that Moses speaks of here: that is to wit, to giue ouer themselues vnto him with all humilitie, & not to challendge any vertue at all to thẽselues.

Now, that we may so do: let vs ad that which hath bin touched: that is to wit, ỹ as God chastised his people in the wildernes, so was he also their guide and leader. So then, let vs marke well, that after he hath rebuked the pride that is in vs, and told vs that if God reach out his hand to aduaunce vs, our heart must not be puffed vp therefore, but we must walk on stil in mieldnesse and awfulnes [towards God,] yea and be gentle louing and courteous towards our neighbours: he bringeth vs backe to consider what we were, when God vouchsafed to aduaunce vs to worship, riches, and such other like thinges. Nowe if we could take hold of this: surely whereas we set vp our bristles, we would all of vs cast downe our eyes continually. True it is that when God hath deliuered vs from our miseries, we must put thẽ quite out of our minde, euen of purpose to bee no more disquieted with the griefe that we haue indured, after that God hath once asswaged it after that fashion: but yet is it not ment that we shoulde neuer thinke vpon it more. For why? It must alwayes bee as a lookingglasse for vs to holde vs in awe, that we play not the loose colts: Then if a man bee rich, and God haue increased him, let him bethinke himselfe from whence comes this to me? Indeede if a man bee rich by inheritance: he is the more bounde vnto God, so as hee ought to acknowledge thus, beholde what a number of goods God hath prouided for me euen before I was borne, so as I haue wherewith to content me, and although I bee not one pennie increased, yet haue I alreadie more than I need. Such acknowledgement ought they to yeld (say I), which are welthy by succession or inheritance. And when a mans goods are of his owne gathering: let him alwayes haue this regard, I was once poore, and howe am I come to the state wherein I see my selfe as now? It is not meete I should cast a scarfe before mine eyes in this case to forget God: but it behoueth mee to acknowledge his liberalitie towardes mee, and that I am beholden to his free mercie for all that euer I haue. After this manner ought hee that is growen rich, to bethinke him of his former pouertie. For it will serue to bridle him, that he shall not be so misaduised as to wax stout against God, or to deale cruelly with his neighbours, by oppressing or reiecting thẽ that seeme to bee his inferiours: but rather practise this warning of S. Pauls, of applying our selues to the meanest sort, that is to say, that although there seeme to bee some cause that we shoulde exalt our selues: yet we must yeelde vnto them and stoope to our God. Let him that is aduanced in degree think thus: Alas am I worthy of it? Hath God brought me to this for my faire eyes sakes? No: but forasmuch as it hath pleased him to exalt me, it becommeth me to acknowledge what I was before. For had not God looked mercifully vppon me, I should not onely haue continued in my former state: but also gone to decay, yea and vtterly come to nought. Nowe if a man bethinke himself after this fashion: surely he wil behaue himselfe mieldly, and not bee so lustie as to holde scorne of others. And wee haue the more neede to marke wel this doctrine, forasmuch as wee see that the haultinesse of heart which Moses speakes of here, is not a single or dubble mischiefe, but such a one as draweth a long tayle of manie inconueniences after it. What is this aduauncing of our selues whereas wee shoulde humble our selues? Is it not (as yee woulde say) a defying of God, and a proclayming of open warre against him? Yes: but alas hee is too ſtrong an aduerſarie. It is ſaid ỳ God will caſt downe the eyelids of the proud. Beholde, God proclaymeth warre not for a day or for a yeere, but for euer, againſt all ſuch as exalt themſelues: and yet in the meane while wee ceaſe not to waxe proude continually more and more. And what thinke wee to winne by ſo doing? On the other ſide, if vnthankfulneſſe be ſo intollerable towards men: howe much more heynous will it be towardes God? If a poore man haue his dinner ſent him: hee can well ynough tell that hee had it not before. Some man hath had pittie of him, and ſendes him Corne, breade, or wine. Nowe if hee deuour it and cramme himſelfe full, and in the meane while conſider not who did him that good turne: will not men ſay hee is a hoggiſh vilane? hee is not worthie to haue any good done vnto him. And yet this vnthankfulneſſe toucheth but a mortall man. Beholde, God reacheth vs his hand from heauen, and wheras the earth bringeth foorth fruites for vs: it is the hande of God that beſtoweth thoſe benefites vppon vs. Nowe if wee vouchſafe not to lift vp our eyes vnto him when hee commeth ſo vnto vs, but muſſell with our groynes in the earth, or elſe thinke thoſe thinges to be of our owne getting and deſeruing: I pray you is not ſuch vnthankefulneſſe too too deteſtable? Yes: and yet moreouer it is matched with ſcorneful-neſſe towards our neighbours. For if wee cannot finde in our heartes to diſcharge our duetie towardes God, what will wee doe towardes our neighbours? So then, pride doeth euer carie crueltie with it: that is to ſaye, they that foade themſelues ſo in their owne naughtineſſe, are alwayes churliſh towards their neighbours, and their churliſhnes is alwais matched with ſpite & enuie. Inſomuch that if wee bee not perſwaded that God giueth vs all thinges of his owne free goodneſſe, & that it belongeth to him to maine-taine vs in the poſſeſſion of our goods: whenſoeuer wee ſee any man in whom Gods gifts ſhine forth, wee ſhall fall to oppreſſing of him, & wee ſhalbe loth that he ſhould be preferred. And that is yet another ouer outrageous leawdnes. Now therefore ſeeing that this ouerloftines of minde carieth ſo many vyces with it, and maketh vs guiltie ſo many wayes before God, yea & that euen the worlde it ſelfe perceiueth ỳ ſhameful-nes therof, and may wel abhor it: Let vs learn to ſubmit our ſelues to ỳ which Moſes ſaith here, ỳ is to wit, let not our harts be puffed vp when our Lord hath increaſed and multiplied vs.

Pſal. 18, 28.

Hee doeth not ſimply condemne that men ſhoulde growe wealthie: for Gods bleſſing is of ſuch force, that ſuch as are no great wiſhers, do neuertheleſſe attaine to ỳ things which they neuer looked for, and God outgoeth their deſires, ſo that whereas they were contented with their ſlender ſtate, he ſendeth them much more. Wel then, this of it ſelfe is not to be condemned. Not withſtanding, let vs learne to keepe our heartes from ſwelling, and to be alwayes poore in ſpirit. Although we haue riches, yet let vs be readie to forgo them whenſoeuer it ſhal pleaſe God: let vs not bee wedded to them: let vs not delight to feede our ſelues with them vnmeaſurablie: neither let vs make them an occaſion to trouble and to oppreſſe our neighbors. That is the thing which we haue to remember vpon this text.

Wherefore let vs mark that it is no wonder to ſee ſo ſmall continuance of things in this world, & ſo many alterations from day to day. For why? Thoſe to whom God hath ſhewed himſelf moſt liberall, do giue ouer themſelues to all naughti-nes, & moſt forget him: and therefore is he iuſte to withdrawe his fauour & goodnes from them, and to ſend them ſcarcetie as they bee worthy. Wee ſee what cauſed Ieroboam to turne away from the true religion. God had reached him his hande, and aduanced him to the kingdome, yea euen whē he neuer thought of it. The Prophet came to him w̄ this meſſage: God wil giue thē eleuen tribes of Iſrael, ſo as there ſhall remaine but one & a halfe in ỳ houſe of Dauid. Now as ſone as he was thus made king beyond his hope, he thought thus with himſelf: Seing I am in poſ-ſeſſion of ỳ kingdome, it ſtandeth me on hand to looke about me how I may maintaine my ſelf in it. And the beſt way is to prouide ỳ the people go no more to the Temple of Ieruſalem to worſhip there. For ỳ would be a meane to turne them away from my obedience, and to make them to fall away from me: which thing they cannot do if they haue temples heere at home, that they may worſhip the God ỳ is within the countrie of mine owne Iuriſdiction. Thus yee ſee how Ie-boam corrupted ỳ whole ſeruice of God, in hope to maintaine his owne kingdom by it. And what was ỳ cauſe thereof? Euen ỳ he remembred no more of whom hee held his royal crowne, and how it came vnto him of Gods meere free goodnes: but blinded himſelf in ſuch ſort, ỳ he thought to maintaine himſelfe euen as it were in deſpite of God. But we ſee it was the cauſe of horrible de-ſtruction: ſo as ỳ people was vtterly cōſumed, & Gods vengeance neuer departed frō thē. Sith it is ſo, let vs learne ỳ the more our Lorde ſheweth himſelfe to vs, ỳ more muſt we on our ſide lue in ſuch modeſty, as we alwayes do him homage for the good turnes ỳ hee hath done vs, and as ỳ re-membrance of ỳ miſeries which we haue felt, & of the ſlender & wretched ſtate wherin we haue bin, may quicken vs vp & prouoke vs the more, to loue our God for ſhewing himſelfe ſo friendly to vs, & to honor him for giuing vs ſuch occaſion thereof by his beſtowing of benefites vppon vs which we neuer looked for. That is the effect of the things which we haue to marke vppon this text. And we ſee nowadayes what need we haue to bethinke our ſelues of the good ỳ God hath done vs. For what a one hath he ſhewed himſelf towardes vs? I meane if it were but euen in reſpect of the goods of this worlde. Let vs not ſpeake of euerie one ſeuerally, but generally of this place where wee bee. Alas, it was in op-preſſion and bondage, and it ſeemed to haue beene a place appointed to vtter ruine, ſo as there was no hope of recouery as in reſpect of ỳ world. And yet hath God not only planted his worde here, but alſo added freedome moreouer, and also giuen vs quietnesse, as wee see. All other Countries are troubled, vexed and as good as deliuered vp to the spoile: and in the meane while God giueth vs respit here. And is not that to the end that wee should haue the more leasure to serue and honour him? Yes: and yet contrariwise the worlde seeth what lewdnesse and loosenesse raigneth nowe more than euer afore: so that the more rest wee haue, the more doe we striue against God, and wee haue no minde to bethinke vs howe bountifull hee hath shewed himselfe towardes vs. Therefore let vs see that we liue in feare, and whereas we haue beene in some miserie, and God hath had pitie vppon vs to rid vs of it: let vs vnderstand that his so doing was bicause he was loth that wee should perish. Hee hath reached out his hand and ouercome our malice, he hath fought with his goodnesse against our naughtinesse: and ought not that patientnesse of his, to breake our heartes the more [though they were neuer so hard?] Ought wee not to thinke vpon those thinges otherwise than we doe? Is not necessitie still present before vs? Yes. Then let vs marke that Moses spake not alonely to the people of olde time: but that this exhortation belongeth to vs also at this day.

And generally let vs vnderstand further, that euery of vs ought to consider well with himselfe, in what case and in what plight God found him, when he vouchsafed to choose vs and to call vs to his Gospell. Alas in what taking were wee? We were borne the heires of euerlasting death, vnder the tyrannie of Satan: and God adopted vs to bee his children. In what wretchednesse are wee borne euen in respect of the world? And God sheweth himselfe a father to vs euen from our mothers wombe, as is saide of it in the two and twentith Psalme. Againe, let euerie of vs bethinke himselfe howe many perils and daungers he hath passed through: and howe GOD hath deliuered vs from them all. Seeing then that wee doe liue in this world, haue wee not good cause to minde Gods benefites continually without ceassing, yea and to liue meekely therewithall? Yes: for when wee haue cast vp our account, I pray you what cause haue wee to bee proude? I meane euen of those that are of greatest abilitie, and beare a goodly porte of vertue and wisedome, and of all things else that can bee named. Alas, if all bee well examined, haue wee not good cause euerichone of vs to cast downe our eyes? And seeing that GOD doeth vs good euen while wee bee asleepe, and while wee thinke not vppon it: are wee not dubble bound vnto him? Yes verily. Therefore let vs knowe these thinges, and let vs profite our selues by the things that Moses telleth vs heere, so as euery of vs in his state and calling, both great and small, may all serue God, and for the performing thereof humble our selues and not stand in our owne conceites, but alwayes haue a care to call vpon him on whom we depend. And let vs knowe also, that the way to prayse God aright, is both to magnifie his name, and also to make our life correspondent thereunto, so as we shewe by our deedes, that we bee willing to giue ouer our selues wholly vnto him.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue done, that being cast downe in our selues, wee may seeke none other meanes than to resort vnto him, and to pray him to hold vs vp with his hand, and specially to strengthen vs with the power of his holy spirite, so as wee may fight in his seruice, and ouercome al the assaultes of Satan, the worlde, and sinne, euen vntill he haue gathered vs into his kingdome. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly, &c.

On Munday the xxvj. of August. 1555.

The Lxj. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the eight Chapter.

14 Thy heart doe not then swell, and thou forget the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Egypt from the house of bondage.

15 And led thee through the great and terrible wildernesse, full of Serpentes that spouted fire, and of Scorpions, and of dryth without water. But hee brought thee water from out of the hard rocke.

16 And fed thee in the wildernesse with Manna, which thy fathers knew not: of purpose to afflict thee, and to trye thee, that hee might doe thee good afterward.

17 That thou mightest not say in thy hart, mine own power, and the strength of mine owne hand haue gotten mee these goods:

18 But that thou mightest remember the Lorde thy God. For it is hee that gaue thee this power to get these goods, to the intent to make good the couenant which he had sworne to thy fathers, as appeareth this day.

19 But if thou forget the Lord thy God, and walke after straunge Gods, and serue them, and bow down before them: I protest vnto you this day that you shall surely perishe.

20 As the Lord destroyeth the Nations before you: so shall you perishe, because yee haue not obeyed the voyce of the Lord your God.

HEre wee must goe foreward still with the matter which Moses had touched afore, and which I haue partly expounded already; which is that he telleth the people what fauour had bin shewed them in Gods deliuering of them from the bondage of Egypt, and in his leading of them through the wilderneſse, which thinges were not doone but of Gods wonderfull goodneſse. For when we haue beene in aduersitie, and God hath deliuered vs from it, and done vs good: his mercie hath the greater beautie, and becommeth the better knowen to vs, if the aduersitie bee set before vs againe, and that wee bee put in minde of it. That then is the meaning of Moses. To the intent that the people shoulde not fall asleepe in their pleasures, he sayeth vnto them, consider in what plyght and taking yee were, whē God reached you his hand to succour you. Consider by what means he brought you into this land where he giueth you rest at this time. Bee mindfull of those thinges, and ye shall haue cause to say that ye haue found so great mercie, as there is no excuse for ye if ye forget it. And he speaketh purposely of the Manna, not to the same ende that he spake of it a while ago: but to doe the people to vnderstand, that they had bin fedde after such a straunge fashion, as had not bin commonly seene. Behold (saith he,) ye haue liued this fortie yeeres togither without bread or vittels. God hath fed ye with Manna, which was a thing vnknowen: and he gaue you a new kinde of drinke: for he made freth water to come out of the drie and hard rocke for you. Thus chaunged he the order of nature, that yee might the better perceiue the presence of his Maiestie. True it is (as hath bin declared heretofore) that when the earth bringeth foorth corne, it is through Gods blessing of it, & through his breathing of that power into it, howbeit we perceiue it not. For wee despise the things that are common among vs, and whē we speake of the course of nature, wee perswade our selues y God should be excluded, and that he should beare no sway at all. Now bicause we bee so dull: it was Gods will to alter the things that are ordinarie among mē, and to appoint his people to bee fed with Manna, and to drink of the water which he had made to come out of the hard rocke. That then serued to shewe his people his heauenly power the better, that they might be driuen to thinke, wee bee not nourished after the maner of men. Beholde, God vttereth himselfe in this behalfe, and withdraweth vs from the world, as though wee were going vnto him, or as though the heauens were set open vnto vs, that we might the better behold his goodneſse and power, and perceiue that it is he that hath deliuered vs, and maintaineth vs.

Finally Moses declareth how it was Gods will to afflict and try his people, to the ende they shoulde not say, It is mine owne power and mine owne strength that hath gotten me this abundance. And here wee haue to note, first the order which God keepeth in teaching his people: which is, to begin with afflictions as Moses expresseth here. And so must it be: or else we shall neuer bee well taught, except our Lord haue made vs to feele hunger and thirst, and to indure pouertie and aduersitie. We knowe what pride is in men by nature: they be wedded to themselues and stand in their own conceits, and vntil God haue subdewed them by force, they be besotted with vaine selfesoothing. Moreouer when they be full fed, they fall to lacking against God and acknowledge him not for their mayster. Therefore to bring vs to lowlinesse and obedience, God is faine to afflict vs. Marke that for one point. And God maketh this triall that Moses speaketh of, not for that he needeth to search vs, as I haue declared heretofore (for mortall men are faine to make some tryall, bycause they knowe not what is in folkes hearte. But God hath no neede thereof: all thinges are knowne vnto him) but he speaketh after the maner of men when he layeth things open, and discouereth them whether there be any fayning or hypocrisie in them, or whether their heart be right, so as they walke roundly and sincerely. Whē God discouereth & bewrayeth these things he is said to search, examine, and try men. Howbeit his so doeing is not for himselfe, but for vs. For we see how men stand in their own conceite, bearing themselues on hande that there is nothing in them but perfect vertue and holinesse: but if God nip them a little, by and by the byle bursteth, and out comes the poyson. Thus yee see why it is sayd that God trieth vs.

And here wee haue to beare in mind, that if God afflict vs oftentimes, wee must not think it straunge, considering the needefulnesse thereof. For if hee should let vs alone in our delightes, and handle euery of vs according to our owne liking: what a thing were that? Wee would neuer submit our selues vnder his yoke, we should not know what it is to feare him, wee should not skill what it is to humble our selues vnder his hand, we should not know what it is to call vpon him, and to seeke all our welfare in him. Seeing then that afflictions are so beneficiall let vs learn to beare them patiently, and to submit our selues to them willingly, though they goe against our stomacks. Here is expresse mention made of humilitie and obedience. For first of all, if men continue in their loftinesse: they cannot bowe to obey God & to serue him, but they wil needes haue the brydle layd loose vpon their necke, & be let alone to follow their own wicked affections and lustes. Yee see then what stubbornesse is rooted in vs, vntil God correct it by mainforce. And so there is no obedience, vnlesse men be bowed beate down with maine ſtrokes, neither is there any lowlines in them, til then. And why? Bicauſe they ſooth themſelues, and take maruelouſly vpon them, bearing themſelues on hande that they want nothing, but that they bee very able men, vntill God haue prooued the contrary vpon them. And that is the thing which Moſes expreſſeth in this text when he ſaith, It was Gods will ſo to afflict thee. And to what end? To the end thou ſhouldeſt not ſay, It is mine owne ſtrength and myne owne power that haue gotten mee this aboundance. Wee ſee that when GOD ſuffereth the order of nature to proceede, he that is riche thinketh not that his wealth commeth from heauē, or that God did ſet any hand to it: but he ſayth that all came to him by inheritaunce, or by ſucceſſion, or that he hath gotten it by his own trauell and policie. Thus doe men euer aduaunce themſelues, vntill our Lord ſhew them that they be nothing, nor nothing can do, and make them to feele it ſpite of their hartes. Therefore were the people of Iſraell fed after a wonderfull faſhion by the ſpace of fortie yeeres together in the wilderneſſe, to the intent that when they were come into the land that had bin promiſed them and did eate meate, they ſhoulde thinke thus: True it is that as nowe God giueth mee meate, but it was not alwayes ſo: the time hath beene that hee fed mee with Manna: therefore muſt I needes conclude that mine own power hath not purchaſed me the things that I poſſeſſe: I cannot ſay that I my ſelfe am ỹ founder of them: I muſt do homage to my God for them, and hold them al of him: I muſt accept them as of his free gifte, that he may let me inioy them ſtill: for I am worthy to bee bereft of them, if I acknowledge not that they come of him. Now albeit that this inſtruction ſerued for the people of olde tyme: yet belonges it alſo vnto vs, to the end that ſuch as poſſeſſe goods may vnderſtande, that they haue none other intereſt in them, than bycauſe God hath bleſſed them, and powred out his fauour & bountie vpon them. True it is that God reſpecteth not the worthines of men in this caſe: for oftentimes he giueth riches to the wicked, to ỹ intent it ſhould turn to their ſorer condemnatiō. Foraſmuch as he hath ſhewed himſelfe ſo liberall towards them: they muſt come to accoūt & be puniſhed dubble, if they benefite not themſelues by the fauour that was ſhewed them. Yet notwithſtanding we muſt take this for a generall rule, ỹ men attaine not to riches by their owne power, wiſedome, or trauell, but onely by Gods bleſſing, whereof it hath pleaſed him to giue a continuall preſident, which ſerueth not onely for the Iewes but alſo for vs, ſo as it behoueth vs to vnderſtand, that although ſome ſeeme to be inriched by their greate diligence, yet is it Gods bleſſing, which worketh with them after that faſhion: and that wheras otherſome are riche before they be borne, ſo as their auncetors haue purchaſed them great poſſeſſions, yet doe none of theſe things happen to them by chaunce, but Gods prouidence ouerruleth all. We muſt (ſay I) referre all theſe things to that which is told vs in the Pſalme namely ỹ a man may well riſe earely and go late to bed, drinke water & eate browne bread not half his fill: & yet ſhall he nothing auaile by it, vnleſſe God reache out his hand and goodnes. On ỹ contrarie part, ſometimes he will cauſe goods to light vpō his children as they lie aſleepe. And ỹ ſheweth vs ỹ men beguile themſelues, if they thinke to inrich thēſelues by their owne power: and ỹ they be ſtark mad if they become proud, as though their goods came to thē by their owne meanes. For in ſo doing they blaſpheme God, & rob him of his peculiar honor: & therefore is it good reaſon ỹ they alſo ſhould be bereft of the things ỹ he hath giuen them. As for example, if a Vaſſall ſhoulde ſtep vp againſt his lord to whō he hath promiſed fealtie & homage, & refuſe all the dueties ỹ he is bound vnto: his goods ſhould be ſeaſed, & he be turned out of all ỹ euer he hath, & wel worthy. Now behold here, God dealeth his benefits vnto vs as vnto his Vaſſals, reſeruing ỹ royalties ſtill to himſelf, ſo as he wil be knowne to bee chief Lord of ỹ fee: & it is good reaſon ỹ he ſhould be ſo, ſpecially ſeeing he doth it not for his own benefit but for ours. Now if we be ſo malitious and froward as to defraud him, & to ſet him beſides his right: ſhould he not bereaue vs of the goods ỹ he had giuen vs and make vs poore againe, ỹ he may driue vs of force to ſue vnto him? Yes: & ſo ye ſee whence ỹ chaūges come which we beholde in the worlde, that whereas a houſe is riche and wealthy and neuer like to decay: a man ſhall be at his wits endes to ſee it conſume and ebbe away. I ſpeake not onely of houſes of meane Citizens: but alſo of ỹ houſes of great Lordes, which haue ſo many thouſande poundes of yeerely Rent: it is a wonder to ſee howe they waſte away, firſt to the halfe, then to a third part, & finally to nothing. And how may this come to paſſe? It ſhoulde ſeeme that God makes paſtime, and taketh pleaſure in turning of worldly thinges vpſide downe: howbeit, that is bicauſe of our vnthankfulneſſe. For as much as men hold not the things with good conſcience, which he hath put into their hands: it is meete ỹ they ſhould be diſpatched of them. Therefore it ſtandeth vs ſo much the more on hand, to marke well this doctrine ỹ is contained in theſe words, Thy God afflicted thee, yea euen of purpoſe that thou ſhouldeſt not now ſay, It is mine owne hand that hath gotten me this aboundance. That if loue & good will cannot perſwade vs to come to ſo much reaſon, as to glorifie God by acknowledging our ſelues to holde all thinges of him: at leaſtwiſe his ſcourging of vs may make vs to thinke it, and driue vs by ſome meanes to bee mindefull of his grace, ſo as wee may fare the better by the examples that hee hath giuen vs at all times, and not onely haue an eye to the things that wee haue ſeene in our owne life, but alſo to the thinges which are reported to vs in the holy ſcripture, to haue bin done long ago: I ſay let vs call them to remembrance, bicauſe God will haue them to ſerue for our inſtructiō. Now if we be vnthankfull to our God in theſe ſmall things: what wil wee bee in the greater things? [much more vnthankefull,] as the worlde ſeeth. And if wee haue needs to bee tamed by afflictions, leaſt wee ſhould bee puffed vp with pride for our meate and drinke: ſurely we ought much more to be taught by ſuch meanes, in ſpirituall matters. For Gods honour is more greeuouſly impeached in theſe caſes: and yet we ſee that men are moſt inclyned y way. Truly it is too great & vntollerable leaudneſſe already, when mortall men furmiſe themſelues to be fed and ſuſteined by their owne power and labour: their yeelding of commendation to their owne policie for their meate and drinke, is already too ſhameful a preſumption. But if they not onely imagin themſelues to be ſuſteined by their own paines taking and trauell, but alſo perſwade themſelues, that they get the kingdome of heauen, and become the children of God, and liue in holineſſe, and all through their owne free will: is not God thereby robbed of the praiſe that is due to him alone? Yes: for he is not onely bereft of his right in theſe flightfull and tranſitorie thinges of the world: but alſo the chiefe part of his honour is taken from him, that is to wit, that he correcteth the naughtineſſe which is in vs, that he quickeneth vs through his goodneſſe, that he calleth vs to ſaluation, and that all the goodneſſe which wee haue, ſhould be acknowledged to come of him. And yet notwithſtanding, wee ſee howe Freewill hath beene magnified, and euen at this day one of the greateſt controuerſies which we haue with the papiſtes, is that they cannot bee made to beleeue, that men are vtterly corrupted and mard, and that they be not onely weake, but alſo vtterly vnable to doe any good. In deede they will well ynough graunt that there is ſome feebleneſſe and faultie infirmitie in men: but yet to their ſeeming there is ſtill ſome power in them, and that if God doe but helpe vs and ſupply our weakeneſſe, it is ynough. But when men ouerſhoote themſelues ſo farre, and will needes chalenge a diuine power to themſelues: Is it not meete that they ſhould bee beaten backe, and that God ſhoulde ſubdue them by force, and make them to ſtoope, yea and beate downe and break aſunder the diuliſh pride that is in them? Yes. And indeede that is the very cauſe why hee handleth vs in this tranſitory life, as he handled his people in the deſert. For the life that wee lead here beneath, is anſwerable to the iorney which the people of Iſraell made thoſe fortie yeeres in the wilderneſſe. We be fed heere with bread and wine: but yet neuertheleſſe we craue our ordinary foode at Gods hand as if he ſent vs Manna from heauen. And verily we bee in this world, as in a wilderneſſe: we ſee what daungers hem vs in on all ſides: God is faine to guide vs, and to make vs perceiue his preſence ſo many wayes, as we may well think that the wildernes was a true figure of our ſtate ſuch as it is at this day. For as yet God letteth vs alone in our infirmities, we feele our ſelues in pitifull plight, we be ſo weake as we neede not any thing to caſt vs downe, the deuill doth drawe vs into his netres, we be deſtitute of al grace, we ſee what troubles doe ſtop our eyes, and we wote not what to ſay, neither on which ſide to turne vs. And why doth God handle vs ſo? Why be we not here as in an earthly paradiſe? Bycauſe we haue neede to be nurtured after that faſhion: for otherwiſe what woulde become of our pride? Wee woulde not thinke ourſelues beholden to God for any thing, but euery of vs would make an ydoll of himſelfe, and worſhippe himſelfe in his owne conceite. Therefore is our Lord fayne to afflict vs, and to ſhewe vs what wee bee, to the ende to make vs ſtoope, and thereby to teache vs to glorifie him. Thus ye ſee what we haue to marke vppon this text of Moſeſes: where hee ſayth, Thy God eſtabliſhed thee in the wilderneſſe.

And ſo let vs know y Gods chaſtiſing of vs all our life long, is not only to ſubdue vs to his will, to the intent wee ſhould bee obedient: but alſo and chiefely to humble vs, that wee might not preſume any thing of our ſelues, but vtterly diſtruſt our owne ſtrength and abilitie, and reſort vnto him: and moreouer that when he giueth vs proſperitie, wee ſhould conſider whence it commeth, for it is not in our owne power to compaſſe it: and finally that wee ſhould not doe as a nomber of hypocrites doe, who wil welynough confeſſe themſelues to bee in rufull caſe, and that they bee wretched creatures: but as ſoone as God hath releeued them and deliuered them from their bondage, they fall to ſtouting againſt him, and thinke no more vpon the miſerie that is paſt. Nowe then it is not ynough for vs to condemne our ſelues when we be pinched by Gods hand, and to ſay, In deede it is true that if God ſuccoured mee not I ſhould bee deſtitute of all that might doe mee good: but alſo when God ſhall haue giuen vs all that we can wiſh, and we feele his bleſſing abundantly, euen then muſt we bee warer than euer wee were that wee forget him not, and we muſt not compare the time preſent, with the time that wee haue ouerpaſt, as thus: what had become of mee, if God had not reached mee his hand? I had beene vndone a hundred thouſand times. And hath not his maner of ſuccouring me beene wonderfull? Should I now chalenge any thing to my ſelfe? Thus ye ſee how that euen in the time of our abundance, that is to ſay, euen when God giueth vs our harts deſire, wee muſt alwayes bee mindefull of our former aduerſitie, and that in ſuch ſorte, as the honour may redound alonely vnto God, as meete is it ſhould. That is the thing which we haue to beare away in effect vpon thoſe wordes of Moſes.

Nowe hee addeth, Thou ſhalt remember the Lorde thy God, that it is hee which hath giuen thee abilitie to get all the goods which thou haſt. Here Moſes intended to preuent all that euer men can aledge on their owne behalfe. For they bee but too much giuen continually to ſeek ſome colour and ſhew that their welth cõmeth of themſelues. When men take paines for their liuing, they haue an eye to their owne policie, whether they be of ſufficient abilitie & skill or no: that is y thing which they looke at. It ſeemeth then, that when a man hath traueled for his liuing, he had at leaſtwiſe a good and forewarde wit, hee was vigilant, hee tooke good opportunities, hee ſhunned the things that might doe him dam-sure: and therfore men should doe him wrong to say he did nothing to it, and that it was the free gift of God: for experience is against it. But Moses answereth to all this, saying that although men take neuer so much paynes, and streine themselues, and haue neuer so good forecast to shift for themselues, and bee neuer so well aduised and discreete: yet must not God be bereft of his honor. For why? who is it that giueth men discretion, aptnesse of body, strength to indure paynes, furtherances, and helpes? Is it not God that putteth all thinges into their handes? And yet is not this all. For God must also blesse all the benefites that he giueth vs: or else though a man be neuer so highly aduaunced, God needeth no more but to giue him a tickle with his litle finger, or to blowe vppon him, and by and by all is quite swept away: all is but as an herbe that is greene in the morning, which withereth and dryeth away as soone as the sunne shineth vpon it, as is sayd in the Psalme, Then let vs marke wel, that Moses added not this saying wout cause, namely ỳ we must thinke our selues beholden to God for all thinges, and acknowledge that it is hee which giueth vs the power to get goods. And vnder the word Power his intent is to comprehend all that euer we can attribute to our selues, whether it be of naturall abilitie and handsomnesse to doe thinges, or of helpes and meanes ỳ wee haue to further vs withall. For vnlesse God gouerne & guide vs with his hand: surely all ỳ we can doe is to no purpose, but all shall goe cleane contrary to our intent. And in deed we see how ỳ ablest men that are, do deceiue thẽselues, & men need not teach them any deceites (as they say) in respect of ỳ world. God laugheth at their fondnesse in making their discourses, & at their reckoning wout their hoste, & in the end ouerthroweth all. And so, by ỳ word Power or Strẽgth, Moses meant not onely ỳ health & disposition of body to trauel, & the wit & discretion of minde which wee ought to haue: but also the hauing of thinges in our handes, and Gods blessing of thẽ, that he make our labor come to good passe, so as it fall out to our benefite. If we beare this lesson well in minde, it wil doe vs good al our lyfe long, so as prosperitie shall not blinde vs, neither shall we fall asleepe to forget our God: but wee shall vnderstand ỳ when he giueth vs wealth, we must thinke our selues beholden to him for it, and by what meanes soeuer it came to vs, ỳ glory thereof must not therefore redownd vnto vs, but bee reserued vnto him, as to the partie that bestoweth his benefites vppon vs, distributing them as hee himselfe thinketh good, and giuing to euery man such portion of them as hee listeth, not for any desert of ours, but to make vs feele his goodnesse. Be wee once throughly perswaded of this, we will thereby take warning not to abuse our abundance, as they doe which ouershoote themselues into al vnrulynesse, which mount vp into pride, and which are giuen to pomp and vanitie to make a showe of themselues. I say we shal be restrained from all these vices. For it not for any desert of ours that God giueth vs riches. Wherfore is it then? To draw vs to him, that we might haue him to be our Sauiour, & finde him beneficiall & kinde towardes vs. Therefore wee must vse his benefites soberly and measurably: & besides that, we must not be giuen to lustinesse & brauery in vanting our selues to ỳ worldward. Finally we must not think to haue a state of perpetuitie in our goods, as though they might not be taken from vs: but we must alwayes put them into Gods hand, so as if he giue vs abundance to day, we in yeelding him thankes for the same, should be ready to beare pouertie with patience to morrowe. By that meanes ye see ỳ neither riches nor any other like thing shal dazle our eyes to make vs stand too much in our owne conceit, and to glorie in our selues. For wee will alwayes thinke thus: what am I, but ỳ it pleaseth my God to giue mee more goods than hee doth to my neighbors? He may take thẽ away againe whensoeuer it pleaseth him. Then must I not imagin that I haue deserued aught: but I am the more bound to my God, in that he hath voutsafed to make me thus to feele his fauor. And I must not be proude of it: for that were a kicking against my maister that feedeth me. Therefore must I abate the fatnesse which would prouoke mee to pride, and in the ende make mee to forgette God.

Phil. 4. 12.

Againe, when wee be thus humbled as touching the transitorie thinges of this world: let vs repaire to the principall point, which is, that when our Lord shall haue strengthened vs with his holy spirite, so as wee shall haue fought manfully against all the temptations of the world, and haue serued him in such wise as it may bee sayd of vs, that we haue giuẽ good example vnto others: yet we be not caryed away with folish vaineglory: but consider thus wt our selues, It is my God that hath giuen me this power. Why am not I as bad as the woorst naughtipacke in ỳ world? why am I not caryed away with blinde & beastly lustes to giue my selfe to all leawdnesse, but because my God preserueth mee? I haue had incounters that were hard to beare: & how happeneth it ỳ I haue gotten the vpper hand of them? It is my God that gaue it me. They therfore to whom God giueth the power of his holy Ghost, must acknowledge themselues so much ỳ more bound vnto him, and that they haue not ỳ power by natural inheritance, but by Gods gift, to ỳ end ỳ he onely should be glorifyed wt all humilitie, & ỳ we should not play ỳ lying hypocrits, as they doe which confesse wt their mouthes ỳ it is God which hath graunted them ỳ grace, & yet cease not to perswade them selues ỳ it commeth of their owne freewill. But let vs vtterly emptie & quite rid our selues of such ouerweening: & let vs confesse truely ỳ we know our selues to haue all thinges of God. And if this be to be acknowledged in bread & wine: what ought to be done concerning the heauẽly life, & in ỳ thinges ỳ belong peculiarly to god, & are aboue ỳ rech of mã? It should seeme ỳ men are able euen of nature to get thẽselues meate & drinke: but whẽ it cõmeth to ỳ making of them selues Gods childrẽ, & cõpanions of the Angels & that they should leade a holy life: in ỳ case they haue nothing of their owne.

owne. And therefore when wee thinke vppon the corruption wherein wee bee by the sin of Adam, and consider that God hath cleansed vs frō it: let vs assure our selues it is Gods free gift, as wel as is his continual maintaining of vs, and his strengthening of vs at our neede.

Rom. 3. 26. & 5. 15. & Eph. 2. 8. 9.

After that Moses hath spoken so: he addeth, That if the people turne away from GOD and serue strange Gods: God will bee angry with them, and they shall perish as the people did whom hee was about to cast downe before them. You shall perish after the same maner sayth hee. Moseses adding of this threat, is to waken them vp the better, which cannot thinke vppon God when they bee too full fed with the good that he hath done them. And it happeneth well neere continually to all men, that if God warne them gently, and deale friendly with them, and let them sit at rest as it were in his lap: then it is no speaking to them: for they giue him the deafe eare, and abuse his fauour by tempting his patience, and the more that hee spareth them, the lesse doe they seeme to regard his loue and fauour. Therefore doth it behooue men to be wakened and quickened vp with threateninges. It is true, that God indeuoreth as much as is possible to win vs by gentlenesse and not by constreint. But when he seeth vs so hardharted, that if hee speake gently vnto vs, we make but a mocke of his doctrine, and voutsafe not to thinke vppon it: then doth hee adde threatenings. After the same maner dealeth Moses both here & in many other places, and it is the common order of speach of the holy Ghost throughout al ỹ holy scripture. Then let vs marke well, that God for his parte is loth to speake otherwise than gently vnto vs, and would faine so waken vs as we should come to him willingly. But our naughtinesse and lewdnesse bewrayeth it selfe, in that in stead of comming to him, we retire from him. Seeing he allureth vs gently, speaking to vs as a father, or father as a mother to her little children: must it not needes be that we be too froward, when we turne our backes vpon him, and despise him for shewing himselfe so louing to vs? Yes: & yet is it an ordinary vice among vs. And therefore let vs not thinke it straunge, though we heare threatninges oftentimes in ỹ holy scripture, and that God setteth his wrath before vs: & that we be so rebuked when we come at Sermons. For why? Let euery man looke into himselfe: and if God should alwayes set his promises afore vs & say, come my children, come: let vs see if that would suffice. Nay contrary wise we see how euery man abuseth such goodnesse. And therefore whensoeuer there is any sharpenesse or vehemencie in the doctrine that is set forth vnto vs in ỹ name of God: let vs vnderstand that our naughtinesse requireth it, and that without it we should continue still in our filthinesse & rotte in our owne doung, so as there would be no meanes to pluck vs out of it, because euery man delightes in his owne destruction. And if we were not afraid of Gods iudgement, neuer would any of vs all play the iudge towardes himselfe, but we would think our selues to be scaped out of Gods hand, and euery of vs would winke at his owne faultes. For although God cite vs to his iudgement seate, & indite vs there to make vs ashamed: yet cease we not to sleepe still in our sinnes. And what would we then doe if we were not threatned? So then is is not without cause, that the holy Ghost hauing vsed gentlenesse, falleth to roughnesse. For it is meete that men shoulde bee so dealt withall, and that God should not onely wring them by ỹ eares, but also stryke them hard, to the intent to bowe them, ỹ they may yeeld themselues teachable and be disposed to come vnto him, which thing they would neuer doe with their good will.

And now Moses sayth expressly, If you forget the Lord your God, and goe after strange Gods: Whereby he doth vs to vnderstand, ỹ inasmuch as the Israelites had bin trayned in the sound doctrine, and in the right religion: they could not turne away to superstition and idolatrie, but through vnthankefulnesse in forgetting God. For why? If God haue once taught vs his truth, and manifested himselfe to vs: it ought to suffice vs, because it is so greate a light as we cannot passe amisse, but of wilfulnesse. If a man that walketh at noonedayes doe run against a stone or tumble into a ditch, can hee say I see it not? Hee seeth playnely, and besides that, hee hath the Sunne to guide him: and how can hee then excuse himselfe? Euen so is it with vs: When God hath inlightned vs by giuing vs his worde, we can no more walke in darkenesse, insomuch that if wee rush against any thing, it is through our owne wilfulnesse: and if wee fall into the ditch, wee our selues are too blame for it. That is the thing which Moses meant in saying, If ye goe after strange Gods, yee forget the Lord your God. The poore Paynims that were in those dayes, had more to excuse themselues withall than the Iewes had, because God shewed not himselfe vnto them. But forasmuch as the people of Israell had receiued Gods lawe, so as hee had set them in the way of saluation: they could not say We knowe him not, according to the solemne protestation which wee shall see that Moses maketh in the two and thirtith Chapter. I call heauen and earth to witnesse this day (sayth hee) that I haue set you in the way of saluation, so as yee cannot henceforth alledge that yee haue not heard any thing, or that if yee had bin taught, yee would haue done your indeuour to liue according to Gods will. I haue shewed it you sufficiently, therefore followe it.

Now must wee benefite our selues by this doctrine, and apply it to our vse nowadayes. For the Papistes, Turkes, and Paynims liue in ignorance, and no maruell at all. True it is that yet for all that they shal not faile to be condemned before God. But yet are wee much more blameworthie than they, if wee sticke not to our God. And why? For hee hath sent vs the pure doctrine of his Gospell, hee hath vouchsafed to giue vs the vnderstanding of his trueth, so as wee may now discerne betweene good and euil. Now if wee turne againe to our olde superstitions, can wee say wee were deceiued through ignorance? No: but God will alwayes holde vs at this day, that we haue forsaken him lyke backsliders, and broken our faith lyke periured and disloyall kaytifes. Yee see then that the thing which wee haue to marke vppon this place, is that when God hath manifested himselfe to vs by his worde, so as wee knowe the way of saluation: it behoueth vs to be the more circumspect, and to hold our selues the faster to the pureneſſe of his doctrine. For if wee swarue from it, it is because wee haue forgotten our God, that is to say, wee haue wilfully turned our backe vppon him, and forsaken him after our knowing of him. In deede this is layd to the charge of all men in generall, I meane euen of the ignoranteſt: for God manifesteth himselfe to all men, euen by heauen and earth though he doe no more. But heere the case concerneth Gods word, which is the familiar maner of shewing himselfe to vs. And had we this lesson wel printed in our hearts so as wee could bethinke vs to benefite our selues by the thinges that are shewed vs nowadayes in the Gospell: wee would neuer forget our God, to step aside after superstitions.

Notwithstanding, let vs marke by the way, that if other sinnes bee intollerable before God: hee abhorreth idolatrie and the corruption of his seruice aboue all other crimes. In deede if a man that knoweth the Gospel doe giue himselfe to deceite and extorsion, or be ful of pride, crueltie, and malice, or cast himself into whoredome and other filthineſſe and infection: God will surely punish him: for it is too great a prouoking of him, when wee defile our selues so, after he hath sanctifyed vs. But if wee decline to idolatrie: that is not a priuate offence, springing onely of infirmitie that caryeth vs away: but it is an vtter renouncing of God, it is a giuing of him ouer, as though wee intended to haue no more to doe with him. And wee must marke moreouer, that although an vpright, honest, chaste and sober conuersation be a parte of Gods seruice: yet the chiefe seruing of him, is to put our trust in him, to honor him, to call vpon him, and to professe him to bee our onely God. But when wee fall to making of idols, and set them vp in his place: is it not a robbing of him of his Godhead? Can wee make any more open warre against him? Is it not all one as if we would plucke him downe from heauen, and put him from the gouernment of the world? Yes. Seeing then that the corrupting of Gods seruice bringeth so horrible confusion: let vs not thinke it strange that Moses should tel the Israelites here, that if they gaue themselues lewdly to idolatrie, God would consume them: Yea and that not by gentle and fauorable meanes as in way of chastisement: but by roosing of them out quite and cleane, as the people should be roosed out which had dwelt before them in the land that hee had promised them. The thing was not yet don but yet Moses speaketh of it as of a thing that was most certeine to them.

And surely Gods promise ought to beare great sway with vs, when hee behighteth vs any goods and so ought his threatnings to bee taken to bee as sure, when he cannot draw vs to him by gentleneſſe. And that is the cause why Moses sayth, I protest vnto you this day. Now by this saying we bee warned that God taketh as it were a solemn recognisance of vs, when he sendeth vs his word: and that the faithfull preaching thereof is as an open proclamation to summon vs and to cite vs. Lyke as when a man refuseth to doe his duetie, then to the intent he may answere to the Lawe, hee is cited, and his aduersary commenceth sute against him: euen so doth God deale with vs. For (as I sayd afore) hee desireth no more but that we should come to him by gentleneſſe and friendly dealing. But yet if wee bee slowe and negligent, so as hee cannot allure vs to him: then doth he enter his sute and make protestation against vs after this maner: wel then, I haue done what I could to win you, and yet notwithstanding yee haue bin stubborne still towardes me, and therefore I protest against you. He sendeth his ministers as his proctors, yea and hee sendeth them with solemne commission, as if some Notary were by to make a publike instrument, [as if hee should say,] I protest against you that it was not long of mee that yee were not rid out of the destruction wherein yee are: if ye perish, the fault is in your selues. Wherefore let vs mark this well, to the end that when wee come to a Sermon, or reade the holy scriptures, if we finde any sowreneſſe or vehemencie that greeueth vs: wee doe not therefore forbeare to receiue the thinges that are told vs in Gods name, assuring our selues it is the greateſt benefite that can befall vs, to suffer our selues to bee so rebuked by Gods word, forasmuch as it bringeth vs to him by repentance. And therefore let vs see that we bee not bereft of such a benefite by our owne lewdneſſe.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, so as we may be brought to true repentance, to mortify all our wicked lustes, that wee may be wholy subiect vnto him, desiring nothing but to please him in al respects, and to lead our liues according to his holy commaundementes: and that although we be weake, yet wee may not ceaſe to goe foreward still towardes our wayes end through his power, assuring our selues that hee will haue his hand continually stretched out ouer vs to strengthen vs, vntill hee haue giuen vs full victorie ouer all assaultes, and finally taken vs vp into the glorie which hee hath promised vs in the kingdome of heauen. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewſday the xxvij. of Auguſt. 1555.

The Lxij. Sermon, which is the firſt vpon the ninth Chapter.

HEarken O Iſrael, This day ſhalt thou goe ouer Iordan, to enter poſſeſſion vpon Nations greater and mightier than thy ſelfe, and vpon Cities that are houge and walled vp to heauen,

2 A people greate and tall, euen the children of the Enakims whome thou haſt knowen, and of whom thou haſt heard ſay, who is hee that can ſtand againſt the children of Enacke?

3 Knowe thou therefore this day, that the Lord thy God goeth before thee as a burning fire: he will deſtroy them and ſubdue them before thy face, he will driue them out and rid them away, as the Lord hath ſaid to thee.

4 And when the Lord thy God ſhall haue caſt them out before thy face: ſay not thou in thy heart, The Lord hath brought mee into this lande to poſſeſſe it, for my righteouſneſſe ſake: for the Lorde hath driuen out theſe Nations before thy face for their wickedneſſe.

5 It is not through thine owne righteouſneſſe or for the rightneſſe of thy heart, that thou art come to the poſſeſſion of their Land. But for the wickedneſſe of thoſe nations, hath the Lord thy God driuen them out before thy face: and to performe the word which the Lord thy God ſware to thy fathers Abraham, Iſaak, and Iacob.

6 Knowe thou therefore that it is not for thine owne righteouſneſſe that the Lorde thy God hath giuen thee this good land to poſſeſſe: for thou art a ſtiffnecked people.

WE haue two extreme vices in vs. The one is that if God promiſe vs any thing, and we find it hard: we bee vtterly diſmayed, & to our ſeeming there is no way for God to performe the thing that he hath ſpoken: wherein we deface his power, and yeelde him not his due honor. For as ſoone as God hath ſayd the worde: although the thing ſeeme vtterly vnpoſſible: yet ought wee to conclude, that hee will finde meanes wel ynough to bring it to paſſe. And why? For his power is infinite and ought not to bee meaſured after our imagination. Therefore wee muſt glorify the Lorde, ſaying: Alas my God: in deed I am at my wits end in this caſe: but I leaue ỹ matter in thy hand, thou canſt worke after ſuch a faſhion as I cannot now comprehend. But in ſtead of honoring the Lord after that maner, wee bee full of douting and vnbeleefe, and fal to skanning whether God wil be as good as his worde or no. And if any let come in our way, wee thinke wee be diſappointed of our hope.

Rom. 9, 19. Eſa. 40, 18.

Alſo there is another extremitie on the contrarie part: which is, ỹ when God hath brought thinges to paſſe, and matters are diſpatched, we father the doing of them vppon our ſelues, as though God were no body, and forgetting the perplexitie wherein wee were before, we bolne our ſelues with fond ouerweening, to ſet out our owne prayſe. Thus is God robbed of his honor two wayes: and it is our maner of dealing in all caſes.

For as I ſayd, if wee thinke the thing to bee hard: wee perſwade our ſelues that it ſhall neuer come to paſſe: And when it is done, we deface his working, and indeuour to take the prayſe of it to our ſelues, and we be ſo vnthankfull to him, that wee would haue him pluckt out of his ſeate. For this cauſe Moſes maketh ſuch an exhortation here, as wherein hee reproueth both partes. For on the one ſide hee ſayth, Hearken, yee bee now at the point to enter into the lande that was promiſed you. Nowe I am ſure you will bee afraid: for ye muſt fight againſt great and ſtrong Nations, which doe farre ſurmount you euery way. It may bee therefore that yee will be diſmayed and out of hart, and thereupon turne head, ſo ye ſhall be diſappointed of the heritage that God hath promiſed you. But plucke you vp a good courage in him, and aſſure your ſelues that it is through his power that you muſt conquere ỹ land of Chanaan, your God will be your guide:

and ye muſt vnderſtande that he is a deuouring fire, to conſume all your enimies. Therefore be not afraide for any thing that ye ſhal ſee, but aſſure your ſelues that the power of God paſſeth all capacitie of man. Now then, if you finde your ſelues abaſhed: ſtay, and let God goe through with his worke, and he will ſhewe that he can (without help of man) conſume all thoſe againſt whome he hath armed himſelfe in his wrath. Be mindfull therefore of the power of your God, & truſt thereunto, and be bolde to reſt vpon it. That is the firſt point which Moſes toucheth here, and it ſerueth to correct the ſaid diſtruſt withall, namely, that men looke no further but whether a thing be eaſie or no, & therupon conclude ſo fondly, that they make not ſuch account of God as they ought to do. Beware (ſaith Moſes) that yee imbace not the power of your God, through any imagination of vnbeeliefe.

And afterwarde he commeth to the ſeconde part, and telleth them that when God ſhall haue giuen them the vpper hande of their enimies, they muſt not boaſt themſelues of it, as though it proceeded of their owne worthineſſe, deſert, abilitie, power, or skill. And why? For God (ſaith he) will driue out thoſe nations becauſe of their wickednes. And to confirme this withall, I haue tolde you alreadie heretofore, that determinate ſentence was concluded & giuen againſt thoſe nations, foure hundred yeares afore, and that God had taryed patiently for them, to ſee if there were any amendment and conuerſion. But when they continued hardharted ſtill, and that the miſchief increaſed more and more: was it not reaſon, God ſhould execute his iudgement? Yes verily. So then the Iewes are warned that they ſhoulde not be puffed vp with any vaine ſelfeweening, as though they had beene worthie to bee placed in the land of Chanaan: but rather conſider that God executed his vengeance vpon thoſe nations for their euil life, & therefore that they which ſhoulde ſucceede them, ought to humble themſelues the more. And moreouer, that if they compared themſelues with their enimies, there was no cauſe why they ſhould thinke themſelues to haue the better eaſe, or that they ought to be preferred before them: I ſay, there was no cauſe why they ſhould haue any ſuch conceit. For Moſes telleth them, that the couenant which God had made with their fathers, was concluded long afore any of them were borne: whereupon it followeth, that God had no reſpect to their deſerues. I haue tolde you moreouer that the ſame couenant was freebeſtowed: for it was not grounded vppon any ſeruice of men, but Gods intent therein was to ſet foorth his owne goodneſſe and mercie. Yeſee then that the Iſraelites are bereft of al power and glorie, and that all worldly loftineſſe is here beaten downe, ſo as onely God muſt bee knowen to be good and righteous, and men are bounde to him in all caſes, inſomuch that they muſt keepe their mouthes ſhut, and not boaſt of their owne power or vertue, as though they were folke of good abilitie. That in effect is the thing that is treated of in the text which I haue rehearſed.

And theſe two vices which Moſes rebuketh, reigned not onely at ſome one time: but they reigne ſtill at this day, and we haue them rooted in our nature. Therefore let vs marke well that this doctrine is directed to vs at this day, and that it behoueth vs to benefite our ſelues by it. So then, as touching the firſt point, let vs call to minde the leſſon that is ſhewed vs by the example of our father Abraham, when it is ſaide, that he beleeued beyond hope, giuing glorie to him that had made the promiſe, in beleeuing him to be able to bring the ſame to paſſe. Lo here a generall rule for all the faithfull: which is, that if they purpoſe to leane vnto Gods promiſes, they muſt not deeme of them after their owne witte and imagination: (for what a thing were that?) but they muſt aſſure them ſelues that God hath meanes in his hande, which are vnknowen to them, and which they conceiue not, and that it is enough for them to haue his word, which is the infallible trueth. This reacheth verie farre: but it ſhall ſuffice for this preſent, to gather a ſhort ſumme of it. For when God calleth vs to him, if wee conſider but what wee our ſelues are: ſurely wee ſhalbee vtterly diſmayed. As for example, when God promiſed iſſue vnto Abraham, he was a man alreadie decayed and ſore broken, as well with age as with trauell that he had endured. His wife alſo was paſt the age of childbearing, and moreouer ſhe had beene barren all the time of her life: it might ſeeme then that God had mocked him in promiſing him iſſue. But what? hee had not an eye to his owne bodie which was forworne and broken with age, (as ſayeth Sainct Paul:) neither had hee an eye whether his wife were able to conceiue or no: but ſeeing that God had ſpoken the worde, hee reſted thereupon, aſſuring himſelfe that foraſmuch as God is faithfull, he ſhoulde not be diſappointed in truſting vnto him. And after the ſame maner muſt wee deale, ſeeing wee haue ſo faire a looking glaſſe. For (as I ſaide) if wee haue an eye to our owne frailtie: in reſpect of our bodies wee be but carions and rottenneſſe: and yet doth God promiſe vs the glorie of his euerlaſting kingdome. Doth the thing ſeeme poſſible to vs? yet then we faile of our duetie euery minute of an houre: and yet doth God promiſe vs ſuch ſtrength as ſhall get the vpper hande of the whole worlde. Let Satan do the worſt he can, and let al the powers of hell imbattell themſelues againſt vs: and yet ſhall wee neuer be ouercome. Where nowe ſhall wee finde this ſtrength? So then it may ſeeme that GOD dalyeth with vs, when hee promiſeth vs the things which we cannot conceiue, ne reache vnto by our owne vnderſtanding. But what? Wee muſt mount vp higher, and wee muſt ſubmit our ſelues to him with ſuch humilitie and ſubiection, as to acknowledge that he is able to performe his promiſe towardes vs in all things whatſoeuer he hath ſpoken. And how? We knowe not that: that paſſeth our capacitie: but let vs haue our eye vppon God. For

Gen.15.16.

WE haue two extreme vices in vs. The one is that if God promiſe vs any thing, and we find it hard: we bee vtterly diſmayed, & to our ſeeming there is no way for God to performe the thing that he hath ſpoken: wherein we deface his power, and yeelde him not his due honor. For as ſoone as God hath ſayd the worde: although the thing ſeeme vtterly vnpoſſible: yet ought wee to conclude, that hee will finde meanes wel ynough to bring it to paſſe. And why? For his power is infinite and ought not to bee meaſured after our imagination. Therefore wee muſt glorify the Lorde, ſaying: Alas my God: in deed I am at my wits end in this caſe: but I leaue ỹ matter in thy hand, thou canſt worke after ſuch a faſhion as I cannot now comprehend. But in ſtead of honoring the Lord after that maner, wee bee full of douting and vnbeleefe, and fal to skanning whether God wil be as good as his worde or no. And if any let come in our way, wee thinke wee be diſappointed of our hope.

Rom.9.19. Eſa.40.18.

Alſo there is another extremitie on the contrarie part: which is, ỹ when God hath brought thinges to paſſe, and matters are diſpatched, we father the doing of them vppon our ſelues, as though God were no body, and forgetting the perplexitie wherein wee were before, we bolne our ſelues with fond ouerweening, to ſet out our owne prayſe. Thus is God robbed of his honor two wayes: and it is our maner of dealing in all caſes.

For as I ſayd, if wee thinke the thing to bee hard: wee perſwade our ſelues that it ſhall neuer come to paſſe: And when it is done, we deface his working, and indeuour to take the prayſe of it to our ſelues, and we be ſo vnthankfull to him, that wee would haue him plucked out of his ſeate. For this cauſe Moſes maketh ſuch an exhortation here, as wherein hee reproueth both partes. For on the one ſide hee ſayth, Hearken, yee bee now at the point to enter into the lande that was promiſed you. Nowe I am ſure you will bee afraid: for ye muſt fight againſt great and ſtrong Nations, which doe farre ſurmount you euery way. It may bee therefore that yee will be diſmayed and out of hart, and thereupon turne head, ſo as ye ſhall be diſappointed of the heritage that God hath promiſed you. But plucke you vp a good courage in him, and aſſure your ſelues that it is through his power that you muſt conquer ỹ land of Chanaan, your God will be your guide and

and ye muſt vnderſtande that he is a deuouring fire, to conſume all your enimies. Therefore be not afraide for any thing that ye ſhal ſee, but aſſure your ſelues that the power of God paſſeth all capacitie of man. Now then, if you finde your ſelues abaſhed: ſtay, and let God goe through with his worke, and he will ſhewe that he can (without help of man) conſume all thoſe againſt whome he hath armed himſelfe in his wrath. Be mindfull therefore of the power of your God, & truſt thereunto, and be bolde to reſt vpon it. That is the firſt point which Moſes toucheth here, and it ſerueth to correct the ſaid diſtruſt withall, namely, that men looke no further but whether a thing be eaſie or no, & therupon conclude ſo fondly, that they make not ſuch account of God as they ought to do. Beware (ſaith Moſes) that yee imbace not the power of your God, through any imagination of vnbeeliefe.

And afterwarde he commeth to the ſeconde part, and telleth them that when God ſhall haue giuen them the vpper hande of their enimies, they muſt not boaſt themſelues of it, as though it proceeded of their owne worthineſſe, deſert, abilitie, power, or skill. And why? For God (ſaith he) will driue out thoſe nations becauſe of their wickedneſſe. And to confirme this withall, I haue tolde you alreadie heretofore, that determinate ſentence was concluded & giuen againſt thoſe Gen.15.16. nations, foure hundred yeares afore, and that God had taryed patiently for them, to ſee if there were any amendment and conuerſion. But when they continued hardharted ſtill, and that the miſchief increaſed more and more: was it not reaſon y God ſhould execute his iudgement? Yes verily. So then the Iewes are warned that they ſhoulde not be puffed vp with any vaine ſelfweening, as though they had beene worthie to bee placed in the land of Chanaan: but rather conſider that God executed his vengeance vpon thoſe nations for their euil life, & therefore that they which ſhoulde ſucceede them, ought to humble themſelues the more. And moreouer, that if they compared themſelues with their enimies, there was no cauſe why they ſhould thinke themſelues to haue the better caſe, or that they ought to be preferred before them: I ſay, there was no cauſe why they ſhould haue any ſuch conceit. For Moſes telleth them, that the couenant which God had made with their fathers, was concluded long afore any of them were borne: whereupon it followeth, that God had no reſpect to their deſertes. I haue tolde you moreouer that the ſame couenant was freebeſtowed: for it was not grounded vppon any ſeruice of men, but Gods intent therein was to ſet foorth his owne goodneſſe and mercie. Yeſee then that the Iſraelites are bereft of al power and glorie, and that all worldly loftineſſe is here beaten downe, ſo as onely God muſt bee knowen to be good and righteous, and men are bounde to him in all caſes, inſomuch that they muſt keepe their mouthes ſhut, and not boaſt of their owne power or vertue, as though they were folke of good abilitie. That in effect is the thing that is treated of in the text which I haue rehearſed.

And theſe two vices which Moſes rebuketh, reigned not onely at ſome one time: but they reigne ſtill at this day, and we haue them rooted in our nature. Therefore let vs marke well that this doctrine is directed to vs at this day, and that it behoueth vs to beneſite our ſelues by it. So then, as touching the firſt point, let vs call to minde the leſſon that is ſhewed vs by the example of our father Abraham, when it is ſaide, that he beleeued beyond hope, giuing glorie to him that had made the promiſe, in beleeuing him to be able to bring the ſame to paſſe. Lo here a generall rule for all the faithfull: which is, that if they purpoſe to leane vnto Gods promiſes, they muſt not deeme of them after their owne witte and imagination: (for what a thing were that?) but they muſt aſſure them ſelues that God hath meanes in his hande, which are vnknowen to them, and which they conceiue not, and that it is enough for them to haue his word, which is the infallible trueth. This reacheth verie farre: but it ſhall ſuffice for this preſent, to gather a ſhort ſumme of it. For when God calleth vs to him, if wee conſider but what wee our ſelues are: ſurely wee ſhalbee vtterly diſmayed. As for example, when God promiſed iſſue vnto Abraham, he was a man alreadie decayed and ſore broken, as well with age as with trauell that he had endured. His wife alſo was paſt the age of childbearing, and moreouer ſhe had beene barren all the time of her life: it might ſeeme then that God had mocked him in promiſing him iſſue. But what? hee had not an eye to his owne bodie which was forworne and broken with age, (as ſayeth Sainct Paul:) neither had hee an eye whether his wife were able to conceiue or no: but ſeeing that God had ſpoken the worde, hee reſted thereupon, aſſuring himſelfe that foraſmuch as God is faithfull, he ſhoulde not be diſappointed in truſting vnto him. And after the ſame maner muſt wee deale, ſeeing wee haue ſo faire a looking glaſſe. For (as I ſaide) if wee haue an eye to our owne frailtie: in reſpect of our bodies wee be but carions and rottenneſſe: and yet doth God promiſe vs the glorie of his euerlaſting kingdome. Doth the thing ſeeme poſſible to vs? yet then we faile of our duetie euery minute of an houre: and yet doth God promiſe vs ſuch ſtrength as ſhall get the vpper hande of the whole worlde. Let Satan do the worſt he can, and let al the powers of hell imbattell themſelues againſt vs: and yet ſhall wee neuer be ouercome. Where nowe ſhall wee finde this ſtrength? So then it may ſeeme that GOD dalyeth with vs, when hee promiſeth vs the things which we cannot conceiue, ne reache vnto by our owne vnderſtanding. But what? Wee muſt mount vp higher, and wee muſt ſubmit our ſelues to him with ſuch humilitie and ſubiection, as to acknowledge that he is able to performe his promiſe towardes vs in all things whatſoeuer he hath ſpoken. And how? We knowe not that: that paſſeth our capacitie: but let vs haue our eye vppon God. For the chiefe honour that he requireth at our hãds,

1.Sa.15.22. and the verie sacrifice that hee requireth, is that wee shoulde acknowledge his worde to bee the verie vndoubted trueth, notwithstanding that our wit and imagination tell vs the cleane contrarie.
Abac.2.1. And that is the cause why the Prophet Abacucke sayeth that hee will goe vp into his tower to keepe watche. When the case concerneth faith, wee must not stay here beneath vppon the earth, neither must wee looke but before our noses as they saye: but we must learne to goe vp into our tower, that is to saye, to discharge our selues of all worldly incumbrances, and to consider, that if wee haue not pitched Hebr.6.19. our anker in heauen as the Apostle sayeth, wee shalbee tossed with such stormes and whirlewindes, as will swallowe vs vp. Looke mee vpon them that sayle on the sea. If they spye a storme, they cast Anker, for that is their trust. Though there come neuer so great waues, and although their vessell bee weatherbeaten and driuen to and fro, yet doeth their Anker preserue them. And hee vseth this similitude, to shewe vs that our ankerholde must reache vp into heauen, and that wee must conclude boldly, that Gods saying of the worde is ynough. For hee is not variable as mortall men are. Againe, hee is not lauish in promising fondly, without knowing whether hee bee able to performe or no. But if hee speake a thing and performe it not out of hande: let vs assure our selues that his meaning is to humble vs thereby, though we conceiue not his dealings. And therefore let vs remember at one worde, that wee must take God for our guyde and leader all our life long. If wee be weake, let vs leane vnto his strength. If wee haue strong and mightie enemies: let vs hope that beeing vnder the keeping and protection of our God, wee shalbee preserued from all daunger, and our enemies shall not be able to do any thing against vs.

And nowe let vs applie this doctrine to our owne vse two manner of wayes. For wee be assailed on all sides in this worlde, both in body & in soule. Wee see what the Church of God is nowadayes: wee be but a small handful of folke, and our enemies are a huge multitude: they seeme able ynough to eat vs vp at one bit: wee be like sheepe without any strength, and they bee like rauening wolues full of crueltie, they haue all the might and power of the worlde on their side. Thus yee see in what plight and taking the faithfull are at this day. Neuertheless sith wee heare that our Lorde broodeth vs vnder his winges, and wilbe the preseruer of our life, assuring vs y he wilbe both a wal a rempire and a dytche vnto vs: let vs trust thereunto, and not doubt but hee will preserue vs. Although the worlde practise what it can against vs, yet shall wee bee alwayes safe, so wee flee for refuge to our God, and grounde our selues vppon the Psal.116.15. promise that hee hath made vs, which is, that both our life and our death are precious in his sight. And that is the cause why Moses vseth this preface: Hearken O Israel. It is not a needelesse speache: but forasmuch as wee be tempted to vnbeleefe, and cannot holde our selues to God and sticke to his promises, because the combrances of this worlde haue gotten the vpper hand of vs alreadie: therefore doth God exhort vs to harken to his worde, and hee wakeneth vs vp, to the ende wee shoulde not lye still asleepe, but vnderstande, that hee is able to ouercome all the daungers wherwith wee be besotted and affayled in this worlde. Now then, as concerning our worldly enemies, which practise the destruction of our bodyes: let vs not doubt but God is able to withstande them. Againe, there is the diuel, there are infinite temptations, and wee haue warre euery man within him selfe, so as sinne dwelleth in vs which is the worst and deadliest enemie that we haue. But yet let vs not doubt but wee shall well ynough wade out, seeing it is sayde that God will be our leader. For although our strength be weake or rather none at all: yet will God reach vs his hande, so as wee shalbee vnuanquishable. And when it seemeth that wee shoulde bee vterly ouerthrowen: wee shalbee holde vp by the power of our God. Therfore let vs put our trust in him: let vs rest vppon his promise: and let vs not be afrayde that wee shalbee deceiued. On the contrarie parte wee cannot trust to our selues (bee it neuer so little): but God will laugh such ouerweening to skorne: insomuch that if wee put our trust in creatures, wee must needes bee deceiued and beguyled. But if the case concerne the yeelding of glory vnto God let vs not bee afrayde, that our boldnesse shall turne vs to shame, as the Scripture saith in a number of places.

And Moses plainly sayeth here, that God shall be their leader, yea, and euen as a consuming fire to destroy all thinges that shalbee against them. This is not added without cause. For when wee be disposed to further our owne fearfulnesse, wee exalt the power of our enemies aboue measure, and of little dwarfes wee make Gyants. And what will wee doe then, when our enemies be tall and strong in deede? Wee will much more astonished at them. But yet doeth Moses tell vs here, that wee must not feede such doutes and distrustes. And for the same cause hee vseth this similitude, that Gods fighting for vs shall not bee after the common fashion: but that hee wilbee as a fire to deuoure all. Albeit then that wee haue neither sworde, speare, gunne, nor other artillerie: yet let it suffise vs to knowe, that God hath meanes ynough to helpe vs withall, which wee know not of. And because this cannot bee so well expressed as were requisite: hee sayeth that if wee see a fire, wee knowe it is able to burne vp a forest, a citie, or a whole countrie: and therefore wee ought not to doute, but that God is strong ynough for our enemies, seeing hee is a consuming fire. So likewise, when Dauid intendeth to comfort himselfe in the middest of his greatest troubles, so as hee seemeth to be hemmed in on all sydes, and readie to be swallowed vp into the gulfes of hel, we heare how he oftentimes sayeth that God is a consuming fire, & assureth himselfe that that all they which set themselues after that fashion against him, shalbe consumed thereof, and they that conspire his death shalbe deuowred of that fire which consumeth all things. After this maner must we put this saying of Moses in practise. And from hence hath Dauid drawen his saide doctrine, as from the fountaine that serued all the other Prophets to gather right comfort of, wherewith to resist and ouercome all the troubles that coulde befall them: and the same also is the cause why Moses declareth that God is a consuming fire to dispatche all the enimies of his people. Also Dauid fleeth therunto for refuge, whensoeuer hee seeth great armies imbattled against him, so as he is as a man past hope [of victorie,] and is as good as banished out of his owne countrie, yea and moreouer there are so manie that practise his destruction, that he is vexed out of all measure. Yee see then that he is as a wretched man in vtter extremitie, and as a silie creature past hope of recouerie: and yet for all that, hee ceasseth not to make his boast, that hee will neuer bee afrayd as long as hee hath God on his side. And after the same manner doeth Sainct Paul conclude: If God bee on our side, who shalbe against vs? Not that wee shall not haue store of enimies: but that they shall not bee able to preuayle against vs. They shall make their triumphes aforehande, but the victorie shall goe with vs, if wee haue God for our defence. Nowe wee see the reason of this similitude. In the fourth Chapter of this booke Moses vsed the like saying, but it was to another purpose. For there his meaning was to stirre vp the people to feare and warinesse. And in deede wee haue neede to knowe that God is a consuming fire two wayes. The one is the same that wee haue seene in the fourth chapiter, which is also alleaged by the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, who expoundeth this text faithfully, saying: My frendes, it is a dreadfull thing to fall into the handes of the liuing God: let vs beware howe wee dally with such a Lorde, and let vs receiue his worde with all reuerence, or else wee shall finde therein that God is a fire to consume vs. In deed when God commeth to vs and calleth vs vnto him, hee allureth vs graciously, and hee sheweth vs all manner of gentlenesse and fatherly louing kindnesse. But yet howsoeuer he deale, his meaning is not that men should abuse his goodnesse, as we see these scorners do, of whō there is euer too great store. We see a nūber of scorners in these days which skoffe at Gods worde, bearing themselues on hande, that he which reigneth in heauen, hath no authoritie ouer them. They ouershoote themselues with desperate malapertnesse, and bewray themselues to haue no more religion than dogs, & yet they perswade themselues that they may mocke with God after that fashion in al matters, & yet notwithstanding that they shall skape vnpunished. Now forasmuch as men are so thankelesse, & do set vp their hellish bristles against god to despise his goodnes, it is saide, that they shall feele him to be a consuming fire. Although hee shewe himselfe a father, & auowe vs to be as his children, so as he will hold vs & nourish vs in his lappe, of purpose that we should behaue our selues mildly towardes him, & yeld him his due honor and loue: yet if we abuse his gracious fauour, so as we yeeld him no reuerence nor subiection: then in steed of feeling his fatherly louing kindnesse, wee shall finde him a consuming fire to deuour vs. Thus yee see howe wee must first of all take holde of that which Moses sayeth here, to the intent wee may liue in awe, feare, and humilitie, and alwayes holde our selues vnder the yoke and obedience of him that hath adopted vs, and be true children towardes him as he is a father towardes vs.

Howbeit let vs marke herewithall, that he is a consuming fire to deuour our enemies. When wee see our enemies threaten vs, and that they become proude and stately against vs, so as it may seeme that they shoulde destroy vs with their onely lookes: let vs take holde of Gods power to comfort vs in all our afflictions, and let vs consider that it is ynough for vs that God is a consuming fire. Thus ye see howe we must apply this doctrine to double vse: first, that it may bee as a brydle to holde vs in awe and subiection vnder our God: and secondly that it may bee as a bulwarke to outstande all temptations. When wee bee striken in feare, because wee heare that our enemies doe practise all that euer they can against vs: and that it is in their hande to ouerthrowe vs and destroy vs: yet let vs come still backe to this point and say, Well then, and what shall our God doe? Thinke wee that he sitteth ydle in heauen? In deede it may well bee that for a time hee will suffer vs to bee vexed, and to haue our neckes vnder the sworde, and to bee as silly sheepe led to the slaughter: but yet for all that, our life is precious in his sight, because hee hath chosen vs to bee his heritage. And although hee suffer vs to bee troubled for a time, yet in the ende hee will make vs to perceiue that hee was alwayes at hande with vs, so as wee shall haue continuall cause to glorifie him, specially when wee shall see that hee shall haue ouerthrowen all those which now haue their whole swindge against vs, in comparison of whom wee be nothing at all. Thus much concerning the saying wherein God is called a consuming fire.

Now Moses commeth to the seconde matter which wee haue touched, which ought to be wel marked: namely, that when God hath helped & succoured vs, and done more for vs than wee looked for, or than our witte could conceiue: we must yeeld him his deserued glorie, so as wee be not sotted with pride and ouerweening, to challengde that to our selues which belongeth alonly vnto God: let vs beware of such vnthankfulnesse. Againe, let vs not imagine that God serueth his turne by vs, in respect of any worthinesse of ours: but let vs vnderstand that his choosing of vs is onely in respect of his owne good will. Wee shall not finde any deseruing at all in our selues in this behalfe: but it is of his onely free mercie, which hee will haue vs to magnifie aboue all things.

True it is, that Moſes ſpeaketh here of the lande of Chanaan. But if men cannot deſerue any thing in this worlde in reſpect of tranſitorie things: howe ſhall they deſerue euerlaſting life? If I cannot winne a little peece of grounde: how ſhall I winne a whole realme? So then, let vs marke that of the things that are ſayd here, wee muſt gather a generall doctrine, which is, that if the children of Iſrael were put in poſſeſſion of the lande that had beene promiſed them, not for their owne righteouſneſſe ſake, but through Gods free goodneſſe: it is much more reaſon that when we ſpeake of the heauenly life, and of the inheritance of the heauenly glorie, wee ſhoulde not dreame vppon any power of our owne, but acknowledge that God hath vttered his righteouſneſſe and ſhewed his goodneſſe in his vouchſafing to chooſe vs. And let vs marke well the argumentes and reaſons which Moſes alleageth here, to pull downe all pride withall, that men might not take occaſion to vaunt themſelues. God (ſayeth hee) hath driuen out theſe people before you. That is one point. So then, wil wee bee rid of all vaineglorie? Let vs beholde our ſelues aduiſedly in thoſe whome God puniſheth, and againſt whome he vſeth his extreme rigour. Are wee any better than they? In deede a number of vs can well flatter our ſelues: but yet wee recken without our hoſte, wee come all of Adams corrupt raſe, wee be all forlorne and damned by nature. What is to be done then? Surely if wee conſider well what wee bee: it will ſuffice to beate downe all our preſumption. It is ſaide in the prouerbe, that hee which knoweth himſelfe beſt, ſettes leaſt by himſelfe: but it is ill put in vre. And wee muſt not ſaye, hee ſetteth little by himſelfe: but wee muſt paſſe yet farther: namely, that hee which knoweth himſelfe well, may ſet nothing at all by himſelfe, but rather vtterly abaſe himſelfe, and bee vtterly aſhamed of himſelfe. And hereyee ſee what the true knowledge of a mans ſelfe is. Humilitie or lowlineſſe is not a counterfaiting to doe little before God, or to vſe ſome niſe ceremonies: but a through examining and ſifting of a mans ſelfe, ſo as hee acknowledge that there is neither wiſedome, power, righteouſneſſe, nor aught elſe in him, whereof hee may boaſt: but rather conſider on the contrarie parte, that wee bee full of vanitie, leaſing, and vnfaithfulneſſe, that wee bee vnruly and rebellious againſt God, that wee bee fraught full of wicked luſtes, that there is a ſea of all naughtineſſe in vs, and that the faireſt ſhewe of vertue which wee haue, is but filth and dung before God. Lo howe the Scripture ſpeaketh of vs: lo howe it blazeth our armes. Nowe therefore, when men haue well conſidered themſelues: they muſt make this compariſon. Alas, I ſee Gods wrath lye vppon ſuch a man or ſuch a woman, yea and vppon ſuch great and excellent nations. Wee ſee a great number nowadayes which are farre off from the light of life, whereas in the meane while the Goſpell is preached vnto vs, and the way into Gods kingdome is ſet open vnto vs. And yet for all this, are wee better worthie of it than they? Wherein? Let vs looke a little vppon our owne deſeruinges, and let vs alledge all that is poſſible to bee deuiſed. Why then doeth God preferre vs before them? Becauſe it pleaſeth him ſo to doe. So then, looke howe many wretched caſtawayes wee ſee ſtraying away from God, and looke how many ſilly ſoules wee ſee puniſhed at Gods hande: let them all bee as lookingglaſſes for vs to behold our ſelues in, and to make vs conclude, that if God liſted to ſhewe himſelfe a iudge in handling vs after our deſertes, wee ſhoulde bee no more ſpared than they bee, and that our ſtanding is through his free goodneſſe, in aſmuch as hee beareth with vs, and vouchſafeth to ſhewe himſelfe fauourable. Lo what light wee ought to take of Gods mercie towardes vs, when wee ſee his vengeance vppon the vnbeleeuers and rebelles, accordingly alſo as Saint Paul telleth vs in the Epiſtle to the Romanes, that we ſhoulde be vterly damned with the wicked, if God ſpared vs not of his owne free goodneſſe. And that is ſaide vnto vs to the intent wee ſhoulde not take any fonde conceit in our ſelues, that might puffe vs vp and make vs drunken. For if wee giue not God the glorie, acknowledging his goodneſſe to be the thing that wee reſt vppon: ſurely hee muſt needes make vs feele to our coſt, that wee bee not worthie to finde ſuch mercie and fauour at his hande. Thus yee ſee why Moſes tolde the Iewes, that the Chananites & their neighbours ſhoulde bee deſtroyed at Gods hande for their ſinnes ſake. Well then, the Iewes might haue replyed at the firſt bluſh, If God puniſh them becauſe of their ſinnes: his putting of vs in their place, is a token that hee findeth vs to bee better and righteouſer than them. It is not ſo. For Moſes declareth, that Gods chooſing of the Iewes (as ſhalbee ſhewed more fully hereafter) was not for that they were worthier: for they were much more incorrigible than thoſe nations: and yet did God chooſe them. Now then, let vs learne to profite our ſelues by all the chaſticementes which wee ſee, and which God ſheweth vs in this worlde. And forſmuch as the blowes light not vppon our ſelues, let vs not forbeare to come to his ſchoole and to humble our ſelues vnto him. For wee haue deſerued to bee touched as roughly by God, as they haue done which are damned. But what? As I ſaide afore, he beareth with vs. That is the firſt argument.

Pſal.62.10. & Luk.16.15 & Ro.3.6,7.

The ſeconde is this: When the Lord ſhall haue driuen out the people before thee. Here Moſes cuteth off all the fonde bragges wherewith men deceiue themſelues. As howe? If wee had not played the tall fellowes in fighting manfully againſt our enemies, what had become of vs? We had ſtrong enemies, they were mightie and puiſſant, they had huge fortreſſes and munitions, they were tall of ſtature like Gyants, and wee were but dwarfes in compariſon of them: and therefore it ſtoode vs on bande to pluche vp ſtout courage. Moſes wypeth away all this ſaying: Ye ſilly ſoules, it is your God that fought for you, it was not your ſelues. So then, let vs learne learne, that although God vse our seruice, and wee seeme to do somewhat: yet the work is not ours, it is alwayes his that worketh it by vs, and which breatheth his secrete power into vs. Wee haue nothing of our owne, whereof wee may boast, but God must alwayes be acknowledged to bee the author of his owne. This is the seconde reason which Moses alleageth here, to teach the people that they should not be proud, not beleeue marueilously of their owne power, so as they shoulde say, I haue done this or that, I haue brought this or that to passe. No (sayeth he) thy God is he that driueth out nations, and rooteth them out.

Nowe if this were saide of temporall enemies: what is to be sayde of Satan, and of the enemies of our soules? Are wee able to ouercome them? Will the bringing of our owne free will, our merites, and our good workes bee able to ouercome the diuel, the worlde, death it selfe, and hell? No, but the blinde wretches are well apayd that they may bee deceiued in bearing themselues in hande that they can do much, & that they be verie able folke. Yet notwithstanding, they bee disgraced heere by the holye Ghost, and it is tolde vs that nothing wee be, ne nothing can do of our selues: but that all ỹ good Phil.2.13. which wee do commeth of God, and it is he that doeth it in vs. For if a man cannot stirre one finger towardes the sauing of this transitorie life: can he saue his soule vnto the kingdome of heauen? If a man cannot doe any thing against his aduersarie which is a mortall and fraile creature as well as himselfe: howe shal he ouercome the worlde, and all the diuels in hell? So then, let vs learne to deceiue our selues no more with these fonde imaginations, in thinking our selues to haue free will to doe this and that: but let vs knowe that if God reache vs his hand, then shall wee be able to stand through him & not through our selues. Saint Paul glorieth sufficiently: but Phil.4.13. howe is that? I can doe all thinges (sayeth hee) through Iesus Christ which strengtheneth mee. He sayeth he can doe all thinges: and by that meane he defyeth the diuell, (which maner of boldnesse wee see he vseth chiefely in the Epistle to the Philippians:) but yet he reserueth nothing to himselfe. He sayeth that he is strengthened by Iesus Christ. Then if wee be strengthened from aboue: wee shall get the vpper hande: But yet (as I sayd) wee must alwayes acknowledge how it is God that strengtheneth vs, and that it is in him and by him that wee stande out and get the victorie.

The thirde reason that Moses alleageth is this: that God in setting his people in possession of the promised lande, had an eye to the promise which he had made and sworne to Abraham, Isaac, & Iacob. Hereby the Iewes are put in minde, that God chose them not as more worthie, more noble, & more excellent than other men, as hath beene shewed alreadie: but because hee had made promise to their forefathers. But nowe let vs see what cause moued and led God to giue this lande to Abraham and to his seede. If he had had an eye to mans worthinesse: Abraham deserued much more than any other, to haue beene set in possession of that lande. And yet contrariwise, his dwelling there was but as a stranger, he was driuen out of it, and hee was so farre off from hauing of it at his commaundement, that he was Heb.11.9. kept euen from water, not onely when he would haue borowed it at other mennes pittes, but also when he had digged pittes by his owne labour: both hee and his successours were driuen from Gen.21.25. them. Lo how the holy Patriarches were tossed too and fro, and how men mocked them & did them many outrages & wrongs, and of all that while they had not one foote of grounde more than a burying place. In so much that at length, Iacob was driuen to pay for the grounde where Gen.32.18. & 33.19. & 46.1. he lodged and pitched his tents: and finally constrayned to goe into the lande of Egypt, by reason of dearth which draue him out of the lande of Chanaan. Now seeing that the holie fathers were not putte in possession of it during their liues: shall wee say that their posteritie were worthier than they? No: it followeth then that Gods couenãt was merely of free gift, and that he had no respect to any desertes of mẽ. And why? Because he loued that people. Wee must not aske whether he founde any vertue in them or no: but it must suffice vs that hee listed to magnifie his mercie. As if he should say, I seek no cause in men to doe them good. But I find it in my selfe. For of men that are worthie to bee vtterly reiected, I choose out some and take them to bee my children, to the intent they shoulde giue mee all the prayse thereof. That is the thing which Moses had an eye vnto, in alleaging the couenant which God had made with their fathers. Nowe wee knowe (as I said afore) that this couenant was made before these people were borne. They could not say that God regarded what they were, as some phantasticall persons do, which say that God foresawe what men woulde be. If he doe but foresee: surely he shall finde vs all diuels, that is to say vnhappie and cursed creatures, full of all wickednesse, and such as haue nothing but vtter abhomination in vs. Those are the thinges that God shall finde in vs, if he doe but foresee. Nay, if he wil haue vs good: he him selfe must frame vs thereto: for wee bee his workemanship as sayeth Saint Paul in the seconde to the Ephesians. And Eph.2.10. the same is also expressed plainly in the foure-score and fifteenth Psalme, where it is sayde Psal.95.6. that it is he that made vs. And Dauid in that place speaketh not of Gods first creating of vs, when wee were set into the worlde as his creatures: but hee meaneth it of his reforming of vs by his grace. Nowe then, if God did but foresee things: then sawe he nothing in vs but vtter rebellion and wickednesse. To bee short wee bee damnable in all respects, and heires of endlesse death. And therefore if hee chose vs before wee had done either good or euill: it was to magnifie his owne grace, as Saint Paul declareth in the nyenth to the Romanes. Rom.9.11. And so yee may see what Moses telleth vs here.

But nowe must wee come backe againe

True it is, that Moſes ſpeaketh here of the lande of Chanaan. But if men cannot deſerue any thing in this worlde in reſpect of tranſitorie things: howe ſhall they deſerue euerlaſting life? If I cannot winne a little peece of grounde: how ſhall I winne a whole realme? So then, let vs marke that of the things that are ſayd here, wee muſt gather a generall doctrine, which is, that if the children of Iſrael were put in poſſeſſion of the lande that had beene promiſed them, not for their owne righteouſneſſe ſake, but through Gods free goodneſſe: it is much more reaſon that when we ſpeake of the heauenly life, and of the inheritance of the heauenly glorie, wee ſhoulde not dreame vppon any power of our owne, but acknowledge that God hath vttered his righteouſneſſe and ſhewed his goodneſſe in his vouchſafing to chooſe vs. And let vs marke well the argumentes and reaſons which Moſes alleageth here, to pull downe all pride withall, that men might not take occaſion to vaunt themſelues. God (ſayeth hee) hath driuen out theſe people before you. That is one point. So then, wil wee bee rid of all vaineglorie? Let vs beholde our ſelues aduiſedly in thoſe whome God puniſheth, and againſt whome he vſeth his extreme rigour. Are wee any better than they? In deede a number of vs can well flatter our ſelues: but yet wee recken without our hoſte, wee come all of Adams corrupt raſe, wee be all forlorne and damned by nature. What is to be done then? Surely if wee conſider well what wee bee: it will ſuffice to beate downe all our preſumption. It is ſaide in the prouerbe, that hee which knoweth himſelfe beſt, ſettes leaſt by himſelfe: but it is ill put in vre. And wee muſt not ſaye, hee ſetteth little by himſelfe: but wee muſt paſſe yet farther: namely, that hee which knoweth himſelfe well, may ſet nothing at all by himſelfe, but rather vtterly abaſe himſelfe, and bee vtterly aſhamed of himſelfe. And here yee ſee what the true knowledge of a mans ſelfe is. Humilitie or lowlineſſe is not a counterfaiting to doe little before God, or to vſe ſome niſe ceremonies: but a through examining and ſifting of a mans ſelfe, ſo as hee acknowledge that there is neither wiſedome, power, righteouſneſſe, nor aught elſe in him, whereof hee may boaſt: but rather conſider on the contrarie parte, that wee bee full of vanitie, leaſing, and vnfaithfulneſſe, that wee bee vnruly and rebellious againſt God, that wee bee fraught full of wicked luſtes, that there is a ſea of all naughtineſſe in vs, and that the faireſt ſhewe of vertue which wee haue, is but filth and dung before God. Lo howe the Scripture ſpeaketh of vs: lo howe it blazeth our armes. Nowe therefore, when men haue well conſidered themſelues: they muſt make this compariſon. Alas, I ſee Gods wrath lye vppon ſuch a man or ſuch a woman, yea and vppon ſuch great and excellent nations. Wee ſee a great number nowadayes which are farre off from the light of life, whereas in the meane while the Goſpell is preached vnto vs, and the way into Gods kingdome is ſet open vnto vs. And yet for all this, are wee better worthie of it than they? Wherein? Let vs looke a little vppon our owne deſeruinges, and let vs alledge all that is poſſible to bee deuiſed. Why then doeth God preferre vs before them? Becauſe it pleaſeth him ſo to doe. So then, looke howe many wretched caſtawayes wee ſee ſtraying away from God, and looke how many ſilly ſoules wee ſee puniſhed at Gods hande: let them all bee as lookingglaſſes for vs to behold our ſelues in, and to make vs conclude, that if God liſted to ſhewe himſelfe a iudge in handling vs after our deſertes, wee ſhoulde bee no more ſpared than they bee, and that our ſtanding is through his free goodneſſe, in aſmuch as hee beareth with vs, and vouchſafeth to ſhewe himſelfe fauourable. Lo what light wee ought to take at Gods mercie towardes vs, when wee ſee his vengeance vppon the vnbeleeuers and rebelles, accordingly alſo as Saint Paul telleth vs in the Epiſtle to the Romanes, that we ſhoulde be vterly damned with the wicked, if God ſpared vs not of his owne free goodneſſe. And that is ſaide vnto vs to the intent wee ſhoulde not take any fonde conceit in our ſelues, that might puffe vs vp and make vs drunken. For if wee giue not God the glorie, acknowledging his goodneſſe to be the thing that wee reſt vppon: lurely hee muſt needes make vs feele to our coſt, that wee bee not worthie to finde ſuch mercie and fauour at his hande. Thus yee ſee why Moſes tolde the Iewes, that the Chananites & their neighbours ſhoulde bee deſtroyed at Gods hande for their ſinnes ſake. Well then, the Iewes might haue replyed at the firſt bluſh, If God puniſh them becauſe of their ſinnes: his putting of vs in their place, is a token that hee findeth vs to bee better and righteouſer than them. It is not ſo. For Moſes declareth, that Gods chooſing of the Iewes (as ſhalbee ſhewed more fully hereafter) was not for that they were worthier: for they were much more incorrigible than thoſe nations: and yet did God chooſe them. Now then, let vs learne to profite our ſelues by all the chaſticementes which wee ſee, and which God ſheweth vs in this worlde. And foraſmuch as the blowes light not vppon our ſelues, let vs not forbeare to come to his ſchoole and to humble our ſelues vnto him. For wee haue deſerued to bee touched as roughly by God, as they haue done which are damned. But what? As I ſaide afore, he beareth with vs. That is the firſt argument.

Pſal. 62. 10. & Luk. 16. 15 & Ro. 8. 6, 7.

Deut. 9. 4.

Pſal. 147.

The ſeconde is this: When the Lord ſhall haue driuen out the people before thee. Here Moſes cutteth off all the fonde bragges wherewith men deceiue themſelues. As howe? If wee had not played the tall fellowes in fighting manfully againſt our enemies, what had become of vs? We had ſtrong enemies, they were mightie and puiſſant, they had huge fortreſſes and munitions, they were tall of ſtature like Gyants, and wee were but dwarfes in compariſon of them: and therefore it ſtoode vs on bande to pluche vp a ſtout courage. Moſes wypeth away all this ſaying: Ye ſilly ſoules, it is your God that fought for you, it was not your ſelues. So then, let vs learne learne, that although God vse our seruice, and wee seeme to do somewhat: yet the work is not ours, it is alwayes his that worketh it by vs, and which breatheth his secrete power into vs. Wee haue nothing of our owne, whereof wee may boast, but God must alwayes be acknowledged to bee the author of his owne. This is the seconde reason which Moses alleageth here, to teach the people that they should not be proud, nor beleeue marueilously of their owne power, so as they shoulde say, I haue done this or that, I haue brought this or that to passe. No (sayeth he) thy God is he that driueth out nations, and rooteth them out.

Nowe if this were saide of temporall enemies: what is to be sayde of Satan, and of the enemies of our soules? Are wee able to ouercome them? Will the bringing of our owne free will, our merites, and our good workes bee able to ouercome the diuel, the worlde, death it selfe, and hell? No, but the blinde wretches are well apayd that they may bee deceiued in bearing themselues in hande that they can do much, & that they be verie able folke. Yet notwithstanding, they bee disgraced heere by the holye Ghost, and it is tolde vs that nothing wee be, ne nothing can do of our selues: but that all ỹ good which wee do commeth of God, and it is he that Phil.2.13. doeth it in vs. For if a man cannot stirre one finger towardes the sauing of this transitorie life: can he saue his soule vnto the kingdome of heauen? If a man cannot doe any thing against his aduersarie which is a mortall and fraile creature as well as himselfe: howe shal he ouercome the worlde, and all the diuels in hell? So then, let vs learne to deceiue our selues no more with these fonde imaginations, in thinking our selues to haue free will to doe this and that: but let vs knowe that if God reache vs his hand, then shall wee be able to stand through him & not through our selues. Saint Paul glorieth sufficiently: but Phil.4.13. howe is that? I can doe all thinges (sayeth hee) through Iesus Christ which strengtheneth mee. He sayeth he can doe all thinges: and by that meane he defyeth the diuell, (which maner of boldnesse wee see he vseth chiefely in the Epistle to the Philippians:) but yet he reserueth nothing to himselfe. He sayeth that he is strengthened by Iesus Christ. Then if wee be strengthened from aboue: wee shall get the vpper hande: But yet (as I sayd) wee must alwayes acknowledge how it is God that strengtheneth vs, and that it is in him and by him that wee stande out and get the victorie.

The thirde reason that Moses alleageth is this: that God in seising his people in possession of the promised lande, had an eye to the promise which he had made and sworne to Abraham, Isaac, & Iacob. Hereby the Iewes are put in minde, that God chose them not as more worthie, more noble, & more excellent than other men, as hath beene shewed alreadie: but because hee had made promise to their forefathers. But nowe let vs see what cause moued and led God to giue this lande to Abraham and to his seede. If he had had an eye to mans worthinesse: Abraham deserued much more than any other, to haue beene set in possession of that lande. And yet contrariwise, his dwelling there was but as a stranger, he was driuen out of it, and hee was so farre off from hauing of it at his commaundement, that he was Heb.11.9. kept euen from water, not onely when he would haue borowed it at other mennes pittes, but also when he had digged pittes by his owne labour: both hee and his successours were driuen from Gen.21.25. them. Lo how the holy Patriarches were tossed too and fro, and how men mocked them & did them many outrages & wrongs, and of all that while they had not one foote of grounde more than a burying place. In so much that at length, Iacob was driuen to pay for the grounde where Gen.32.18. & 33.19.& he lodged and pitched his tents: and finally constrayned to goe into the lande of Egypt, by reason of dearth which draue him out of the lande of Chanaan. Now seeing that the holie fathers were not putte in possession of it during their liues: shall wee say that their posteritie were worthier than they? No: it followeth then that Gods couenãt was merely of free gift, and that he had no respect to any desertes of mẽ. And why? Because he loued that people. Wee must not aske whether he founde any vertue in them or no: but it must suffice vs that hee listed to magnifie his mercie. As if he should say, I seek no cause in men to doe them good. But I find it in my selfe. For of men that are worthie to bee vtterly reiected, I choose out some and take them to bee my children, to the intent they shoulde giue mee all the prayse thereof. That is the thing which Moses had an eye vnto, in alleaging the couenant which God had made with their fathers. Nowe wee knowe (as I said afore) that this couenant was made before these people were borne. They could not say that God regarded what they were, as some phantasticall persons do, which say that God foresawe what men woulde be. If he doe but foresee: surely he shall finde vs all diuels, that is to say vnhappie and cursed creatures, full of all wickednesse, and such as haue nothing but vtter abhomination in vs. Those are the thinges that God shall finde in vs, if he doe but foresee. Nay, if he wil haue vs good: he him selfe must frame vs thereto: for wee bee his workemanship as sayeth Saint Paul in the seconde to the Ephesians. And Eph.2.10. the same is also expressed plainly in the fourescore and fifteenth Psalme, where it is sayde Psal.95.6. that it is he that made vs. And Dauid in that place speaketh not of Gods first creating of vs, when wee were set into the worlde as his creatures: but hee meaneth it of his reforming of vs by his grace. And therefore if hee chose vs before wee had done either good or euill: it was to magnifie his owne grace, as Saint Paul declareth in the nyenth to the Romanes. Rom.9.21. And so yee may see what Moses telleth vs here.

But nowe must wee come backe againe

to the sayde comparison that I touched afore: which is, that if God woulde haue the saide couenant which hee made concerning the lande of Chanaan and the temporal succession, to bee knowen to be of his free goodnesse: it is much more reason, that when he calleth vs to be heires of his kingdome, and sheweth him selfe to bee our God and Sauiour, his goodnesse shoulde haue the highest degree, and all respectes of deseruing be layde awaye, so as men shoulde not imagine themselues to haue I wote not what power of their owne, to preuent Gods goodnesse. Then let vs marke well, that Gods calling of vs, and his vouchsafing to inlighten vs in the beliefe of his Gospell: is because he had chosen vs, not onely from our mothers wombes, but also before the worlde was created, yea, and because it pleased him to haue vs and to take vs for his owne, euen before all eternitie. And so wee haue no cause to alleage any thing at all in our owne behalfe, but rather to bee ashamed of our selues, that God may onely bee exalted, and haue all praise giuen vnto him. Furthermore let vs consider well, that wee knowe not why God hath preferred vs before others: for it is only he that putteth a difference betwixt vs, as sayth Saint Paul to the Corinthians. Who is he (saith Paul) that maketh thee to excell? And in deede God sheweth vs matter ynough why hee shoulde altogether cast vs downe, in so much that when the faithfull haue throughly examined what is in themselues: they see nothing there but vtter wretchednesse, and those are they that knowe them selues best. What is the cause that a number become so proude? It is for that they keepe aloofe from God, and are so full of hypocrisie that they take vice to bee vertue, and (which woorse is) doe sooth themselues in their vices, filth, and wretchednesse. But the faithfull beeing well wakened, doe consider what Gods iustice is. After they haue well examined themselues, they haue an eye to their faultes, and without flattering of themselues, they take Gods worde to them to discouer all the naughtinesse in them, whereby they knowe howe to condemne themselues in good earneſt, & they hinder not themselues through any hypocrisie. Therefore when God commeth to the faithfull, they acknowledge their owne misdeedes and hate them in their hearts. And when God hath refourmed them, so as they feele that hee hath wrought in them by his holye Ghoste: they father all vppon his free goodnesse, knowing well that there is no thing in them woorthie to bee made account of.

2. Cor. 4. 7.

And let vs marke herewithall, that sith our Lorde vouchsafed to keepe the couenaunt which hee sware to the holy Patriarches: wee neede not to dout but that hee will keepe and perfourme the promise at this day, whereby he hath willingly bounde himselfe vnto vs. The worde Sweare is set downe, because God considering mennes frailne, thinkes it not ynough to make them a single promise, as I haue tolde you heretofore: but also hath vouchsafed to sweare, that they might haue the better warrant to rest vppon him and vppon his sayings. In deede God ought to bee heard and obeyed, though hee giue but his bare worde: but yet he condescendeth to our infirmitie, and so hath hee vouchsafed to doe euen from the beginning, so as hee hath not thought it ynough to giue vs his bare worde, but hee hath also warranted it with a solemne othe. Wherefore, if in these dayes there rise any dout concerning our saluation, yea, or but euen concerning this transitorie life: if wee dout what shall become of vs let vs haue an eye to his promises, assuring our selues that they bee warranted to the vttermost, to the intent wee shoulde haue no cause to cast any dout of them at all. Beholde our God sweareth, and yet wee charge him with vnfaithfulnesse: yea, and wee accuse him, not onely of vntrueth, but also of trecherie, yea, and euen of periurie: and what a diuelish blasphemie is that? So then, let vs learne to sticke to the promises that are so well warranted vnto vs, vnlesse wee will bee blamed for blaspheming God after that fashion.

And let vs marke moreouer, that if he haue kept the promise which hee made to Abraham, who was but a poore mortall man, and confirmed the same to Isaac and Iacob, who were but weake creatures though they had receiued ma- Heb. uer so excellent giftes of grace: wee may much better trust that hee will not fayle vs in the couenant which hee hath made with vs, by the hande of our Lorde Iesus Christ the king of glorie and head of Angels, which is the fountayne of all righteousnesse and holinesse.

So then, wee see howe this doctrine belongeth vnto vs, at leastwise, if wee stop not our eares, and forsake not the thinges that are offered vs through the great bountifulnesse of our God, as wee see the moste parte of the worlde doeth nowadayes, seeking altogither to blinde their owne eyes, that they might not knowe any whit at all of the thinges that are vttred them concerning Gods promises. Let a man call them to the Gospell, let him shewe them the way of saluation, and they wote not what it meaneth, they take no taste of it. And why? Because some of them bee traytours and hypocrites, some be open despisers of Gods maiestie, and othersome bee so forepossessed of their owne wicked affections, as they will not giue any eare vnto God, nor suffer him to haue any entrance in vnto them. But as for vs, let vs looke that wee submit our selues willingly to his sayings, and receiue his worde with awe and reuerence, and bee readie to fight vnder the Ensigne of our Captaine Iesus Christ, in resisting all the temptations of this worlde stoutly, and in ridding awaye of all our wicked lustes.

And in so dooing, let vs not dout but that as GOD adopted vs before wee were borne, and chose vs of his owne mercie, and hath called vs to his Gospel, and receiueth vs presently into his protection: so in the ende hee will bring vs to his euerlasting inheritaunce, to

enioye the endeleſſe glorie which hee hath promiſed vs.

Nowe lette vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchſafe ſo to cleanſe vs of them, as wee may bee ledde to true repentaunce, and learne to miſlike more of our ſelues than we haue done, that wee may hate the ſinnes whereby we prouoke him to diſpleaſure, and hee ſo arme vs with his ſtrength as wee quayle not: and againe that foraſmuch as this life is a continuall battell, we may not be ſlothfull nor fall aſleepe, but euerie man indeuor to make the ſtrength of the hol. Ghoſt auayleable vnto him, ſo as it may make vs to get the vpper hande of all our ghoſtly enemies, euen vntill GOD haue taken vs hence into his reſt. That it may pleaſe him to grant this grace not only to vs but alſo to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Wedneſday the xxviii of Auguſt. 1555.

The Lxiij. Sermon which is the ſeconde vpon the ninth Chapter.

7 Remember and forget not that thou diddeſt anger the Lord thy God in the wilderneſſe. Euen from the day that yee came out of the land of Egypt, vnto the time that you came vnto this place, you haue rebelled againſt the Lord.

WE haue ſeene already yeſterday, howe Moſes warned the people that they ſhoulde not boaſt of themſelues when they were come into the Lande of promiſe: and howe hee tolde them that they had not obtained that benefite for their owne deſertes, but through Gods meere grace and goodneſſe. Wee haue ſeene the three reaſons that he alleaged for the ſame. Howebeit for as much as it is harde to bring men to humilitie, ſo as they may knowe themſelues as they be in deede, and bee vtterly aſhamed of themſelues, not attributing any thing to their owne power, but depending altogether vpon Gods free mercie: Moſes addeth a plaine demonſtration and ſayeth: If ye alleadge your owne worthineſſe and deſertes: Ye be a ſtiffenecked people, euen ſuch a one as can not bowe vnder the yoke and obedience of your GOD. Whereby it appeareth that you bee not worthie to bee choſen of your GOD, or to haue ſuch an heritage allotted you, or to bee preferred before other nations, foraſmuch as ye haue not beene any better than they. And he rehearſed the thinges that were yet freſh in remembrance and the rebellions which they had committed in the wilderneſſe, concluding thereupon that they were the leſſe to bee excuſed, becauſe they had forgotten the miracles which GOD had wrought in deliuering them from the bondage of Egypt: for that made their ſinne the haynouſer. Remember therefore (ſayeth hee) howe yee prouoked God to wrath, whyle yee were in the wilderneſſe. And he addeth that the people did it not for once onely: but that they went on ſtill from euill to worſe, and neuer ceaſed their hardening of themſelues in their wilfulneſſe: and therefore they deſerued full well to be vtterly curte off. And ſo wee muſt needes conclude, that GOD vſed exceeding greate mercie, in that he reſerued that people to himſelfe, and brought them into their promiſed heritage, and that he gaue them the inioying and poſſeſſion thereof of his owne meere goodneſſe. That is the effect of the thing that is conteined here.

Nowe wee haue to note firſt of all, that men will neuer come to confeſſe their faultes and to humble themſelues, vntill they bee conuicted, to their faces: I ſay till they be conuicted, as an offender that is arrained at the barre. For as wee ſee that offenders doe ſhameleſſely denie the faultes that they haue committed, as farre as they can: euen ſo doe all men deale when they be cited before GOD: they doe alwayes ſhrinke backe, and vſe fonde excuſes, rather than openly ſtande to the deniall of it. The knitting vp of the matter is, that they neuer ſerue him but by conſtraynte. That is the cauſe why GOD diſcouereth our leaudeneſſe to make vs aſhamed of it. For if hee ſhoulde not vſe vs after that ſorte, he ſhoulde neuer compaſſe vs to make vs to ſtoope. For firſt wee be combered with pride, and ſecondely wee be blinded with hypocriſie. And therefore foraſmuch as men are ſo high minded, that they can not finde in their heartes to bee acknowen of their owne wretchedneſſe: and therewithall ſo beſotted, that they flatter themſelues in their owne ſinnes: it is requiſite that GOD ſhoulde bring them to it after ſuch manner as wee ſee heere, ſo as he ſhoulde arraigne them and lay their faultes afore them. For men doe not to the sayde comparison that I touched afore: which is, that if God woulde haue the saide couenant which hee made concerning the lande of Chanaan and the temporal succession, to bee knowen to be of his free goodnesse: it is much more reason, that when he calleth vs to be heires of his kingdome, and sheweth him selfe to bee our God and Sauiour, his goodnesse shoulde haue the highest degree, and all respectes of deseruing be layde awaye, so as men shoulde not imagine themselues to haue I wote not what power of their owne, to preuent Gods goodnesse. Then let vs marke well, that Gods calling of vs, and his vouchsafing to inlighten vs in the beliefe of his Gospell: is because he had chosen vs, not onely from our mothers wombes, but also before the worlde was created, yea, and because it pleased him to haue vs and to take vs for his owne, euen before all eternitie. Therefore when God commeth to the faithfull, they acknowledge their owne misdeedes and hate them in their hearts. And when God hath reformed them, so as they feele that hee hath wrought in them by his holye Ghoste: they father all vppon his free goodnesse, knowing well that there is no thing in them woorthie to bee made account of.

Beholde our God sweareth, and yet wee charge him with vnfaithfulnesse: yea, and wee accuse him, not onely of vntrueth, but also of trecherie, yea, and euen of periurie: and what a diuelish blasphemie is that? So then, let vs learne to sticke to the promises that are so well warranted vnto vs, vnlesse wee will bee blamed for blaspheming God after that fashion.

And let vs marke moreouer, that if he haue kept the promise which hee made to Abraham, who was but a poore mortall man, and confirmed the same to Isaac and Iacob, who were but weake creatures though they had receiued neuer so excellent giftes of grace: wee may much better trust that hee will not fayle vs in the couenant which hee hath made with vs, by the hande of our Lorde Iesus Christ the king of glorie and head of Angels, which is the fountayne of all righteousnesse and holinesse. Heb. 1.

So then, wee see howe this doctrine belongeth vnto vs, at leastwise, if wee stop not our eares, and forsake not the thinges that are offered vs through the great bountifulnesse of our God, as wee see the moste parte of the worlde doeth nowadayes, seeking altogither to blinde their owne eyes, that they might not knowe any whit at all of the thinges that are tolde them concerning Gods promises. Let a man call them to the Gospell, let him shewe them the way of saluation, and they wote not what it meaneth, they take no taste of it. And why? Because some of them bee traytours and hypocrites, some be open despisers of Gods maiestie, and othersome bee so forepossessed of their owne wicked affections, as they will not giue any eare vnto God, nor suffer him to haue any entrance in vnto them. But as for vs, let vs looke that wee submit our selues willingly to his sayings, and receiue his worde with awe and reuerence, and bee readie to fight vnder the Ensigne of our Captaine Iesus Christ, in resisting all the temptations of this worlde stoutly, and in ridding awaye of all our wicked lustes.

And in so dooing, let vs not dout but that as GOD adopted vs before wee were borne, and chose vs of his owne mercie, and hath called vs to his Gospel, and receiueth vs presently into his protection: so in the ende hee will bring vs to his euerlasting inheritance, to

enioye the endeleſſe glorie which hee hath promiſed vs.

Nowe lette vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchſafe ſo to cleanſe vs of them, as wee may bee ledde to true repentaunce, and learne to miſlike more of our ſelues than we haue done, that wee may hate the ſinnes whereby we prouoke him to diſpleaſure, and hee ſo arme vs with his ſtrength as wee quayle not: and againe that foraſmuch as this life is a continuall battell, we may not be ſlothfull nor fall aſleepe, but euerie man indeuor to make the ſtrength of the holy Ghoſt auayleable vnto him, ſo as it may make vs to get the vpper hande of all our ghoſtly enemies, euen vntill GOD haue taken vs hence into his reſt. That it may pleaſe him to grant this grace not only to vs but alſo to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Wedneſday the xxviii of Auguſt. 1555.

The Lxiij. Sermon which is the ſeconde vpon the ninth Chapter.

7 Remember and forget not that thou diddeſt anger the Lord thy God in the wilderneſſe. Euen from the day that yee came out of the land of Egypt, vnto the time that you came vnto this place, you haue rebelled againſt the Lord.

WE haue ſeene already yeſterday, howe Moſes warned the people that they ſhoulde not boaſt of themſelues when they were come into the Lande of promiſe: and howe hee tolde them that they had not obtained that benefite for their owne deſertes, but through Gods meere grace and goodneſſe. Wee haue ſeene the three reaſons that he alleaged for the ſame. Howebeit for as much as it is harde to bring men to humilitie, ſo as they may knowe themſelues as they be in deede, and bee vtterly aſhamed of themſelues, not attributing any thing to their owne power, but depending altogether vpon Gods free mercie: Moſes addeth a plaine demonſtration and ſayeth: If ye alleadge your owne worthineſſe and deſertes: Ye be a ſtiffenecked people, euen ſuch a one as can not bowe vnder the yoke and obedience of your GOD. Whereby it appeareth that you bee not worthie to bee choſen of your GOD, or to haue ſuch an heritage allotted you, or to bee preferred before other nations, foraſmuch as ye haue not beene any better than they. And he rehearſed the thinges that were yet freſh in remembrance and the rebellions which they had committed in the wilderneſſe, concluding thereupon that they were the leſſe to bee excuſed, becauſe they had forgotten the miracles which GOD had wrought in deliuering them from the bondage of Egypt: for that made their ſinne the haynouſer. Remember therefore (ſayeth hee) howe yee prouoked God to wrath, whyle yee were in the wilderneſſe. And he addeth that the people did it not for once onely: but that they went on ſtill from euill to worſe, and neuer ceaſed their hardening of themſelues in their wilfulneſſe: and therefore they deſerued full well to be vtterly cutte off. And ſo wee muſt needes conclude, that GOD vſed exceeding greate mercie, in that he reſerued that people to himſelfe, and brought them into their promiſed heritage, and that he gaue them the inioying and poſſeſſion thereof of his owne meere goodneſſe. That is the effect of the thing that is conteined here.

Nowe wee haue to note firſt of all, that men will neuer come to confeſſe their faultes and to humble themſelues, vntill they bee conuicted, to their faces: I ſay till they be conuicted, as an offender that is arrained at the barre. For as wee ſee that offenders doe ſhameleſſely denie the faultes that they haue committed, as farre as they can: euen ſo doe all men deale when they be cited before GOD: they doe alwayes ſhrinke backe, and vſe fonde excuſes, rather than openly ſtande to the deniall of it. The knitting vp of the matter is, that they neuer ſerue him but by conſtraynte. That is the cauſe why GOD diſcouereth our leaudeneſſe to make vs aſhamed of it. For if hee ſhoulde not vſe vs after that ſorte, he ſhoulde neuer compaſſe vs to make vs to ſtoope. For firſt wee be combered with pride, and ſecondely wee be blinded with hypocriſie. And therefore foraſmuch as men are ſo high minded, that they can not finde in their heartes to bee acknowen of their owne wretchednesſe: and therewithall ſo beſotted, that they flatter themſelues in their owne ſinnes: it is requiſite that GOD ſhoulde bring them to it after ſuch manner as wee ſee heere, ſo as he ſhoulde arraigne them and lay their faultes afore them. For men doe not onely onely endeuour to iustifie themselues, but also proceede so farre, as euen to accuse God. And that is the cause why he sayeth by his prophete Esaie, Well then, let vs goe to lawe together, and let there be some vmper betwixt vs, to see who shall haue the better hande. True it is that God can not be subiect to any iudge or vmper, for his maiestie can not beare it. But hee laugheth mens cursed statelinesse to scorne, in y they repyne so against him, and would bring him downe (as it were to the barre) againste them, to weete who had the better case. God therefore in respect of such presumptuousnesse, sayeth, I am contented to haue the matter debated and discussed, I will alleage my reasons and you shall alleadge yours, and men shall discerne who hath the right and who hath the wrong. Nowe, hee speaketh not after the same fashion heere: but he telleth the people in one worde, that if they pretende any righteousnesse of their owne, he can well disproue them. And for certainetie thereof, knowe yee (sayeth Moses) that yee bee a Stiffenecked people.

Esa. 43.26.

We see that this doctrine is more than needefull nowe adayes. For if euer men were puffed vppe with pride: if euer they were setled in hypocrisie: wee see it is nowe in these dayes. GOD is mocked with open mouth, and yet the wickeddest sorte will needes be highliest exalted, and that no man shoulde bee so bolde as to open his lippes against them. So muche the more therefore hath this doctrine neede to bee set foorth, that all loftinesse may bee beaten downe, and no man presume anie more to exalt him selfe: to that poynt must wee come.

Wee see that euen among the Papists, they that holde this opinion most, namely that men are iustified by their workes, are leaudest losselles in all their conuersation. Looke me vpon these hypocrites, and vppon all the doctors of poperie: when they intende to maintaine their owne merites, and that men are not iustified by fayth: they crie out with full throte and open mouth, What? Ought not Christians to be a holy people sanctified vnto God? And ought not the holie Ghoste to gouerne vs? Ought we not to leade an Angelicall life? And yet for all this, yee shall see them to be whoremongers, drunkardes, periurers, traytours, full of vnfaithfulnesse, guyle, and extortion, so as there shall not be one sparke of feare towardes GOD, or of honestie towardes man in them. And yet notwithstanding, they pretende to bee the earnestest defenders of merites, and the deuoutest persons that can be: insomuch that to heare them, yee would thinke there were nothing but holinesse in them, when as in the meane whyle their life is most detestable, and shamefull, as all the worlde may playnely see. But yet doe men deceiue themselues after that fashion. And for that cause hath Moses sette downe this text, not onely for his owne time, but also as a rule for vs to practise to the worldes ende.

Therefore when wee bee tempted with ouerweening, so as our flesh prouoketh vs to presume I worte not howe to magnifie ourselues: lette vs remember what is sayde heere, [and let vs thinke thus with our selues:] Howe nowe? Consider what thou arte, and howe thou hast liued. If thou shouldest come to account before GOD, couldest thou go through with it? Considerest thou not that thou arte one of the miserablest kaytifes in the worlde? And when thou goest about to aduaunce thyselfe: is it not a robbing of GOD of his righteousnesse, that he might not be knowen to bee as he is in deede? Yes: For Gods righteousnesse can not otherwise shine foorth, vnlesse we be vtterly confounded, so as we be condemned and hee onely iustified, and that wee acknowledge the same willingly. Hee then that will haue anie righteousnesse of his owne, doeth certainely defie GOD, and make warre against him. And therefore must wee haue an eye to this warning: How nowe? What is thy life? 'Art thou able to make answere when thou shalt be cited to the iudgement seate of thy maker? And therewithall lette vs consider howe it is sayde, that for euerie poynte which wee bee able to alleadge for our selues, GOD is able to alleadge a thousande against vs, so as we must needes be confounded. Thus yee see howe men shoulde be ledde to the considering of their liues, when they bee puffed vppe with any pryde, and bee desirous to iustifie themselues, that is to say, to chalendge anie deserte or worthinesse before GOD. And to make the Iewes vtterly condemned, Moses telleth them expresly that they were a stiffenecked people. This similitude is taken of beastes that shoulde beare the yoke. For if they bee sturdie and will not bowe their neckes to beare the yooke: they can doe a manne no seruice, they be vnprofitable: nay rather they do much harme in striking with their hornes, they breake all thinges asunder, and in steede of going forewarde, they drawe backe. In this respecte Moses declareth in one worde, that stiffenecked folke can by no meanes bee taken for righteous.

Iob 31.6. & Psal. 62.

Ier. 7.22.

And for the better vnderstanding hereof, lette vs marke howe it is sayde, that obedience is better than all the sacrifices in the worlde. 1. Sam. 15.22. Then lette vs beare in minde, that if men will needes chalendge righteousnesse to themselues, they must examine well whether they bowe downe their neckes to submit themselues wholely vnto God. For if they haue not that all the rest is nothing. They may well vaunt themselues before men: but yet all their vertues are no better than dunge, vntill they bee come so farre as to beare Gods yoke, that is to say, to behaue themselues according to his will, and t offer their life vnto him that hee may haue the ouer ruling of them, as hee lysteth, so as they bee contented to obey him simplye and without exception. Thus yee see that our trewe righteousnesse is obedience dience: yea and such an obedience, as seeketh not to please mortall men, but the liuing God. And it is a point which we ought to marke well: for hereby the doctrine that I declared afore, is the better confirmed. Men doe alwayes surmise some meriting or deserving in themselues at their owne pleasure. When they will bee taken for holy and righteous, they haue their priuate deuotions, but in the meane while they make none account of beeing disobedient to GOD. Contrariwise it is tolde vs heere, that God requireth nothing more than obedience. For all that euer we can bring him of our owne, is nothing: but he tryeth whether we loue him and honour him or no, by telling vs his will, and by laying as it were a bridle or a yooke vpon our neckes, as if he shoulde say: Bee plyable vnder mee, come not perking vp with your heades against mee, sette not vppe your crestes, ne playe not the wylde coltes: but dispose your selues to order your liues according to my Lawes & commandements. That is the thing whereto GOD hath an eye. Not that he reapeth anie commoditie by vs, neither that wee can doe him anie harme: but because it is a true proofe that wee bee willing to honour him, when wee suffer him to gouerne vs, and runne not euerie man vpon his owne heade, but leaue to him his dewe souerainetie and dominion, saying: Lorde we be thy poore cattell, directe thou vs according to thine owne will. For we haue neither witte nor reason in vs, our lustes are vtterly frowarde. Nowe therefore reigne thou ouer vs O Lorde, and let thy lawe bee as a yooke and a bridle to vs. And it is the same thing also which hee meaneth by the sentence that I alleadged out of the first of Samuel, namely that obedience is better than al the Sacrifices in the worlde. Also the same thing is confirmed by Ieremie, saying: When thy fathers cam out of Egypt, did I require sacrifices or such other thinges at their handes? In deede God commaunded sacrifices: but yet the chiefe thing that hee required, was that they shoulde obey his voyce. The thing that God aimed at, the thing wherein all our righteousnesse consisteth, is to herken to his speeche, that his authoritie may weye with vs, so as wee fall not to replying to bee wise of our selues, nor to doe what wee thinke good: but that hee onely may haue the maistrie, and wee no more but open our eares and be heedeful to receiue his doctrin, yea and to receiue it in such wise as it may be as a yoke or bridle as I sayde afore, and ouer rule vs without any gainesaying. And heereby it appeareth, that if men bee not milde in submitting themselues wholely to Gods will: farewell all their honestie, their life is but leaude. For why? Whereas is nothing but disobedience, there is not any righteousnes, because the foundation of all righteousnesse and of all good behauiour, is to bee reformed according to the good will of GOD. We must not bring our owne meeteyeard nor our owne measure in this behalfe: but onely GOD himselfe must speake and be the iudge to discerne betwene good and bad: for it is hee to whome it belongeth to acquit or condemne. And hee alloweth or disalloweth what he himselfe thinkes good: and there remayneth nothing for vs but to say Amen, by allowing whatsoeuer hee thinketh good, and by condemning whatsoeuer he misliketh.

And Moses thinkes it not enough to haue sayde in one worde, Thou art a stiffenecked people: but he addeth therewithall, Remember and forgesse not that thou diddest anger the Lorde thy God in the wildernesse, and howe many times ye haue disobeyed him, from the day that hee brought you out of the lande of Egypt, euen vnto this present time of his bringing of you vnto this place. Nowe whereas he sayeth, Remember and forgesse not: it serueth to quicken them vppe the better, because men doe still couer their missedeedes, and as soone as they finde neuer so little a shadowe, or peece of colour to ouerlay their offences withall: they doe but wring their mouthes awrye, and by and by they thinke themselues verie righteous. Wee see howe it happened to our father Adam: it was no long time ere hee went to seeke figge leaues to couer himselfe withal. But as soone as he hadde offended, and GOD rebuked him, and that hee felt his owne rebellion and disobedience: what did hee? Whereas he shoulde haue come vnto GOD, and confessed his fault, that hee might haue obteined mercie and forgiuenesse: he runnes among the leaues and beares himselfe in hande that hee was wel couered, and that GOD shoulde see him no more, so he had some litle shadowe to hide himselfe withall. We put the same still in vre daily: wee haue no sooner committed anie faulte, but by and by we fall to shifting, and wee beate our braynes and wittes to finde out some lurkinghoole that GOD might not espye vs. To bee shorte, there is none of vs but hee makes a denne of theeues of his owne heart, vntill our Lorde doe touch him to the quicke, to bring vs to the simplicitie of acknowledgeing our faults. Nowe if we be so much inclined to disguise ourselues [out of hande,] by seeking shiftes and couertes to withstande Gods vengeance: what will we doe in length of time? Will wee not vtterly forgoe the remembraunce of our sinnes altogether? Yes: and that is the cause why Moses sayde, Remember thy selfe and forgesse not. It hadde beene ynough for him to haue sayde, Remember thy selfe. But forasmuch as men doe what they can to rocke themselues asleepe, and seeke meanes to sooth themselues: Moses doeth as it were twitch them by the eare heere, saying: Goe to sirs, it is not for you to fall a sleepe in this matter: although your nature be inclined thereto, yet must you not burie your sinnes, but yee must beare them still in minde, and sette them before your eyes, and then shall yee haue cause ynough to humble yourselues. Thus are we warned here, to bethinke vs oftentimes of the faultes that wee haue committed, and to beware that wee seeke not vaine colours, ne thinke not that wee haue spedde well, when wee haue founde some trifling shifte to iustifie our selues with all: but to learne to cast our

ſelues vtterly downe, and to miſlike of ourſelues, and to bee as men condemned, ſo as there remayne none other ſhift for vs, than to flee for refuge to the infinite mercie of our GOD. That is the greateſt benefite that wee can deuiſe to worke to our ſelues, all our life long. But howe ſhall wee be brought to it? By the knowingof our faultes. Now then, in ſteede of ſhunning it as a matter of greefe, and whereas weebe loth to thinke vpon the offences that haue prouoked Gods wrath: let euerie of vs bethinke himſelfe of them early and late, and let vs enter into the examination of our ſelues, to ſay, Alas, howe haue I liued in this worlde? Againe, lette vs not thinke vppon other folkes faultes, to make a buckler of them as wee bee wont to doe: but let vs call all our owne life to minde, nowe one ſinne, and nowe an other, and let vs caſt foorth our ſighes and ſobbes before GOD as witneſſes that wee be not willing to beſot our ſelues, nor to burie our ſelues in our owne dunge by welt'ring in it: but rather that wee woulde faine attaine to his righteouſneſſe, as whoſe indeuour is to hate and abhorre our ſinnes, and to magnifie Gods grace towardes vs. Which thing can not bee doone, vnleſſe our ſinnes miſlike vs, and wee thinke thus with our ſelues: Well then, needes muſt GOD haue vſed greate goodneſſe towardes mee, ſeeing he hath called me at ſuch time as I was forlorne. Againe, ſince his calling of mee, howe oft haue I deſerued to bee ſhaken off, and to be quite cutte off from his Church? And yet for all that, hee beareth with mee vnto this houre, and continueth his goodneſſe towardes mee ſtill. Thus ye ſee howe wee muſt bethinke vs of our ſinnes, to the ende that Gods goodneſſe may be knowen, and that wee may not onelie taſte of it, but alſo be fully ſatisfied with it.

And furthermore, according to Saint Paules exhortation, which is, that euery man ſhoulde quicken and ſpurre vppe himſelfe, when he ſeeeth his fleſhe willing to drawe him to forgetfulneſſe: Let vs not thinke it ſtraunge, though it be ſome greefe to vs at the firſt to thinke vppon our ſinnes. For why? wee be inclined to the fayde hypocriſie: but yet muſt we fight againſt it, and beware that wee feede it not. And ſo lette vs practiſe the thing that Moſes telleth vs here: which is, not to forget. As howe? nor that we can alwayes minde it, as reaſon woulde wee ſhoulde: but that the deceiuer foade vs not in our owne vaine flatteries, ſo that although hee ſtoppe our eyes for a time, yet God doe take away the towell, and make vs to ſee our owne diſhoneſtie in open light, ſo as wee be aſhamed of it. And therefore, when wee bethinke vs of our ſinnes and offences, let vs looke into our 2. Cor. 11. 31 ſelues, and quicke our ſelues vp: for we muſt play the iudges towards our ſelues, if we will obtaine mercie before GOD. Yea and if we will yeelde Iosua 7. 19. him the dewe prayſe of his grace: wee muſt come to the acknowledgement of our ſinnes. And that muſt not be done for once onely, but euerie of vs muſt giue himſelfe to examination both euening and morning, and vpon the knowledge of one faulte, wee muſt goe to the fiſting out of an other. Trewe it is that in this caſe there is no meaſure, neither can we be too circumſpect. But yet muſt men miſlike of themſelues ſo farre, as to learne to glorifie GOD accordingly: that is to ſay, to reſerue no prayſe, at all to themſelues, no not one graines waight, but to yeelde all goodneſſe vnto him alone, and to acknowledge that there is nothing but euill in themſelues. Thus yee ſee whereunto the knowledge of our ſinnes ought to leade vs. And we muſt neuer ceaſe, vntil we be come thither: and when we be come thither, we muſt continue in it ſtill. For at euerie turne we ſhall ſtumble into this blindneſſe againe, ſo as wee ſhall be prouder than we were afore, according as wee ſee that ſuch as haue liued in humilitie, doe in the ende become greateſt truſters to their owne witte, when they haue once forgotten themſelues. So then lette vs alwayes beare this leſſon in minde vnto our liues ende, for humilitie is ſo perfecte a vertue, as wee ſhall neuer finde it ſo ſubſtantially in vs as we woulde wiſhe. And therefore muſt we continue in the fayde endeuour, vntill wee be quite ridde of all the preſumptuouſneſſe of our fleſhe. For pryde is the ſinne that will bee laſt corrected, and it is the roote of all other offences. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to remember vpon this text where Moſes ſayth, Remember thy ſelfe, and forgette not the faultes which thou haſt committed. Pſal. 95. 10.

Nowe he addeth, Howe thou diddeſt anger thy God in the wilderneſſe. I haue tolde yee brefly alreadie, that the people were ſo muche the leſſe to be excuſed, for that they hauing knowen the wonders which GOD had wrought at their comming out of Ægypt, ceaſſed not to bee ſo malitious and frowarde, as to ſpitte out their poyſon againſt GOD. If they hadde done it afore, truely yet they hadde beene worthie of blame: but yet had their ſinne beene more tollerable. But nowe hadde God vttered his mightie arme in deliuering thoſe wretches out of the cruell bondage wherein they were: and yet notwithſtanding, euen after Gods working in that wiſe, and after they had ſeene the apparaunt ſignes of his maieſtie, they ceaſe not to ſtriue againſt him ſtill: and muſt it not needes be that the deuill poſſeſſeth them, and that they bee as good as bewitched with their owne malice? So then it is not without cauſe that Moſes noteth here the place of the wilderneſſe, to the ende that the people might bee the more humbled, and feele the greateneſſe and hougeneſſe of the offences which they had committed, foraſmuch as they were al at one poynt as if GOD had not vttered himſelfe vnto them at all. For it may fall out that fillie ſoules which neuer taſted of Gods trueth nor of his workes, ſhall ouerſhoote themſelues and be caried away. But ſeeing that GOD came ſo neere vnto the Iewes and tolde them, I am your Sauiour, I take you into my protection, I will make you to feele my power as though I came downe from heauen in mine owne perſon, and dwelt visibly among you: I say when God speaketh after that fashion, and bindeth himselfe by his deedes, and yet for all that there is nothing in them but rebellion: must it not needes bee a desperate frowardenesse? Yes verily. And it is as a warning to make vs look to our selues. For seeing that GOD sheweth himselfe familiarly to vs for our welfare: hee bindeth vs so much the more vnto him, as hath beene declared heretofore. Therefore lette vs looke that we prouoke him not when hee hath made vs to feele his goodnesse: but let vs bee the more obedient vnto him, knowing that his intent in vouchsafing to succour vs, is that wee shoulde be moued thereby to honour him and serue him the better. And on the other side we shall be the more blameworthie, when GOD shall haue visited vs by his grace. As for example when he giueth vs his worde, he sheweth thereby that he hath a care of our saluation: so that if we benefite not our selues thereby in seruing him, surely wee deserue the grecuouser vengeance.

And Moses alleageth not heere the sinnes of one day: but hee telleth the people that they wente on still from euill to worse, euen since their comming out of Egypt, knowe ye (sayeth he) that ye haue euer beene disobedient to your God, euen vnto this day. There had passed at that time the space of fourtie yeares, and Psal.95.10. that was a tiall long ynough, as is sayde in the fourescorce and fifteenth Psalme. For there GOD sheweth his inestimable patientnesse, which he vsed in bearing with the wilfull and intollerable malitiousnesse of that people, by the space of fourtie yeares together. But Moses reckeneth not the yeares heere: for that was a thing well ynough knowen to those whome he spake vnto. It was ynough for him to say, reckon you howe long it is agoe since your GOD brought you out of the bondage of Egypt: hee hath ledde you through the wilderneſſe, hee hath shewed himselfe alwayes present with you: & yet haue you not knowen him of al the while. Had yee missed but once onely, yet hadde ye well deserued to be chastised. But what? Seeing yee haue had so many warninges, so manie threatninges, so manie rebukes, and so many punishmentes; yea and so manie benefites also at Gods hande: and yet notwithstanding yee holde on still, and growe worse and worse in steede of amending: must it not needes bee sayde that ye be vtterly past recoueric? Yes: for our Lorde hath not lefte anie thing vndoone, that might bring yee backe into the right way: and yet for all that, yee haue continued stubbourne still, and withstoode him to the vttermost. Nowe therefore lette vs marke well this text where our Lorde vpbrayeth men, not with some one faulte, but with a continuall stubbornesse against him, in holding on still in their wilfulnesse, insomuch that though hee correct them both by deedes and wordes, yet are they still imbrewed with their sinnes, and delight and welter themselues in them. For wee see what is in vs. Trueth it is that wee woulde at the first sight condemne the thinges that are reported here of the Iewes: but we must also apply all those thinges to our instruction, according as it is sayde that that people must serue vs as a lookingglasse to beholde our selues in. Therefore lette vs beare in minde the thinges that Moses noteth heere. For whereas hee sayeth, euer sithe the day: hee comprehendeth all their rebellions that are rehearsed as well in the booke of Exodus, as in the booke of Numbers. There it is shewed, that as soone as the people were passed the wilderneſſe, by and by they fell to murmuring. Howe nowe, sayde they? was there not roome ynough to burie vs in Egypt? So that whereas they shoulde haue sayde, Alas Lorde, in deede thou haste beene singularly gratious vnto vs in deliuering vs from so painefull and miserable a life as wee were in: for we were taken but as wretched beastes; we were vtterly oppressed vnder the cruelties of the wicked and of thine enemies: and soothly Lorde this goodnesse of thine deserueth well to bee magnified: but yet thou bestowest thy selfe vppon vs after an other fashion: for in the wilderneſſe, we were destitute of all foode, so as wee shoulde haue beene fayne to dye for hunger, if thou haddest not pitied vs: and not onely so, but thou hast helde on still in succouring vs as we resorted to thee: therefore lette it please thee to beare with our weakeneſſe, and to feede vs as if wee were sillie birdes: for it is thou that feedest the Rauens and other foules, and wee be creatures formed after thine owne image: nay moreouer we be the people whome thou hast chosen: nowe therefore seeing thou haste vouchsafed to adopt vs for thy children, shewe vs at leastwise as much fauour as thou doest to other nations that are not so neere thee as wee are: whereas the people shoulde haue come with all lowelinesse to acknowledge the former good turnes that GOD had doone them, and thereby haue assured themselues with certainetie of fayth, that he woulde holde on still for the time to come: in steede of doing so, they sayde: Was there not roome enough in Egypt to burie vs in? They did quite and cleane forgette the fauour which they had receiued at Gods hande. And againe, when they were in necessitie, they came not to him with intreataunce, but with murmuring, rayling and accusing. Likewise when Manna had beene giuen them from heauen, and they had eaten of it: yet they demaunded drinke after an other fashion. They aske their almes with the sworde in their fist. Like as the theefe that woulde cutte the throte of a trauciler: so these leaude loselles fel to spyting of GOD the seconde time, saying: Yea in deede wee haue Manna to feed on, but we must haue drinke too. Yea and when GOD had giuen them drinke, and made a streame to gushe out of the rockes y would not suffice them neither. For the Manna was soo vnsauorie a food for them, they would needs haue varietie. They had stil Mãna & Manna, & they were glutted with it: & yet notwithstanding it was a good & sauorly nourishment.

Besides

Beſides this, they were not driuen to till the grounde, they were not faine to trouble themſelues much with the earning of their liuing: for God gaue them both meate and drinke: and yet notwithſtanding they cryed out vpon him ſtill, Giue, giue: Their luſts were ſo inordinate, that they prouoked Gods vengeance againſt themſelues, by murmuring againſt him for wante of fleſhe. Loe heare a marueilous thankeleſneſſe. Well then, they had fleſh: but that was to choke them euen with their delicate morſelles, inſomuch that while the meate was yet in their throtes, Gods wrath was ſo kindled vpon them, that they payed very deere for their ſhotte, becauſe they were not contented with the ineſtimable good that God had done them. For the Manna was a heauenly foode, yea and a Pſal. 78. 25. foode of Angelles as it is layde in the Pſalme. But although they felt Gods puniſhmentes, and both ſawe and felt the vengeance that ouerwhelmed them: yet notwithſtading they ceaſed not to prouoke him to angernewe againe, after other faſhions, ſomtimes by committing whordome, ſometimes by banding againſt Moſes and Aaron, ſometime by murmuring, and ſometime by rayling. To be ſhort, there was neither ende nor meaſure of their doinges. And therefore not without cauſe doeth Moſes ſay vnto them heere, Bethinke you of the great number of faultes which you haue committed euer ſince the day that you came out of the lande of Egypt, euen vnto this preſent time that God hath brought you into this Lande.

Whereas he ſayeth, God hath brought you: it ſerueth to quicken them vppe the better. As if hee ſhoulde ſay, Who hath beene your leader? Leaude folke as ye be, your GOD hath well mainteyned, guided, and ledde you: hee hath vpholde you and helped you in all your neceſſities: and yet will you needes come and ſette vp your briſtles thus againſt him? Nowe ſith wee heare this of the Iewes: lette it not make vs to blame them: but lette it make vs behoulde our ſelues in their perſons, and conſider howe neere this example toucheth vs, that euerie of vs may looke into himſelfe, and all of vs acknowledge generally that wee bee no better than they. And for proofe thereof, we be not in a wilderneſſe, neither is there a time of fortie yeares ſette a forehande vnto vs: but lette euerie of vs take his whole life, euen from the time that GOD did put vs into this worlde, vnto our buryingday. Howe liue wee? God for his part powreth out ſo many benefites vpon vs, as wee haue good cauſe to ſerue and honour him, yea though there were no more than that which he hath done alreadie. But ſeeing hee continueth in doing vs good ſtill: is it not ynough to ſoften our heartes, though they were of yron or ſteele? Yes verily: and yet wee ceaſe not to ſpite him by going on ſtill from euil to worſe. Nowe then like as Moſes vpbrayded the Iewes with their continuaunce in euill dooing: ſo lette euerie of vs conſider, that our prouoking of our GOD hath not beene for once onelie: but that whereas wee ſhould haue beene drawen vnto him, wee haue ſtrunke away from him and rebelled againſt him. And whereas wee ſhoulde haue offered our ſelues readily to beare his yooke: wee haue beene ſo ſtubborne as hee coulde not wealde vs: and one naughtineſſe hath ſo drawen on another, that our ſinnes are come to a horrible confuſed heape. Thus then muſt we compare our ſelues with thoſe to whome Moſes ſpeaketh here.

Here it might be demaunded, howe Moſes can ſay that they which liued at that time, had rebelled againſt GOD euer ſince the time that they came out of Ægypt. For at that time the moſt parte of them were babes, or at leaſtwiſe not of full yeares of diſcretion. For we haue ſeene expreſſely in the firſt Chapter, that GOD was minded to haue deſtroyed all that companie, euen young children and all. For they that were come to mans eſtate, had made themſelues vnworthie to enioye the inheritaunce that was promiſed them, and they were baniſhed and ſhutte out from it. Howe then doeth Moſes vpbrayde them that they had not ceaſed to prouoke Gods wrath continually? For they might haue replyed: Howe ſo? Though our fathers miſſe behaued themſelues, ſo as they were vnthankefull, diſobedient, rebellious, and full of murmuring and wicked luſtes: ſhoulde thoſe thinges bee layde vpon vs? No: for wee coulde not doe withall. But let vs marke that heere the whole bodie of the people is ſo blamed, that the children are rightly condemned in the perſons of their fathers. For it was ſtill one bodie: and whereas the fathers behaued themſelues naughtily and wickedly: the children amended not, but continued in the ſame euill, as is to bee ſeene. And therefore foraſmuch as the children linked in with their fathers: it is meete that they ſhould be knit vp as it were all in one bundle, and that GOD ſhould condemne them all in generall. And after the ſame maner are they ſpoken of in the foureſcore & ninth, and alſo in the twoſcore and eighteenth Pſalmes. For there the Lorde ſayth, Remember your ſelues howe you were diſobedient to me in the wilderneſſe. And afterwarde the prophete rehearſeth their faultes againe, howe oftentimes they had misbehaued themſelues: and thereupon concludeth, that they had alwaies perſiſted in euill, euen frō their firſt entering into the lande of Chanaan. Inſomuch that if the fathers liued naughtily in the wilderneſſe, their children followed the ſame trade, yea and became much worſe. For when they were once in poſſeſſion of the heritage which was Gods reſting place: they ſhould haue giuen themſelues to the ſeruing and honoring of him to the vttermoſt of their power. But all their indeuour was to defile the lande which God had hallowed to himſelfe, by filling it full of ſuperſtition and ydolatrie. God gaue them the inheritaunce freely, as if he ſhould haue ſayde, I aske no more of you but that ye ſerue me, acknowledging that I haue beene a good louing father to you, and that I haue alwayes maintayned and kept you. But in ſteede of doing homage to God for these things, the people fel to setting vp of idols, borowing all the corruptions of the heathen, and bringing in false and counterfet Religions. Ye see then that they deserued well to be estraunged and quite cut of from God. Also wee see that the prophetes did continually vpbraide the children of Israell with their vnthankfulnes, yea euen generally, according also as euery man was giltie thereof. And S. Steuen hath declared my sayd reason yet better. For he sayth, ye haue euer resisted the holy Ghost, like as your fathers did afore you. If the Iewes of that time had quietly submitted themselues to the Gospell, and receaued Iesus Christ as their sauiour, so as they had honored and imbraced him with fayth and repentance: S. Steuen would not haue gone about to rip vp the shame of their forefathers. For that was hidden. But for as much as they turned all thinges vpside downe, and beleeued not the Gospell, but forsooke the grace of God, and trampled it vnder their feete, aduauncing themselues with diueliſh pride and furie, to abolish the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and to deface the goodnesse that GOD had shewed them: it was requisite that the sinnes of their fathers should be put into their account, and that God should set himselfe against them, to condemne the malicious wilfulnesse of that people, and the faultes that had beene committed by the space of two or three thousand yeeres afore. And therefore let vs learne, that although God pardon the offences of our fathers that haue doone amisse: yet shall they not fayle to remayne still of record in his regists, if we hold on and continue like vnto them. Will we then haue the sinnes of our forefathers buried, and ỹ God should forget thē and not call vs to accoumpt for them? Let vs looke that we be the carefuller to keepe our selues from being like to them. And so ye see how it is expedient for vs to thinke vpon the sinnes that haue bin cōmitted before we were borne. Let vs consider thus: Alas I was yet vnborne at that time: but howe shall I do, if my forefathers haue done amisse, and that I for my part bee put in among them? For it is saide that God gathereth together the sins of the fathers vnto the third & fourth generation, to let them fall vpon their children. Then doe we deserue to be destroyed and to perish, if God listed to vse rigour towardes vs. For the saide threat of the law is rightful, and might iustly be executed vpon our heads: and if he spare vs, it is of his owne mere goodnesse. For to what purpose should we put ouer the fault to our fathers, of prouoking Gods wrath both against themselues and vs: when we our selues continue in their wickednes? Ought not the vengeance to be dubble, when we on our part haue cleaued to their sinnes as well as they? Thus ye see what we haue to remember vppon this place, where Moses doeth not onely blame them that liued in his time for the things then presently committed: but also moreouer charge them with all the transgressions that their fathers had committed, from their comming out of Egypt, vnto that day. Nowe then the thing that we haue to marke heere in effect, is that men doe not onely marre themselues, by bearing themselues on hande that they bee righteous, for want of considering their sinnes throughly: but also that they puffe vp themselues with pride, so as they will needes make God beleeue that blacke is white. And therfore let it prouoke vs to condemn our selues willingly according to this doctrine of Moses. So then, let vs acknowledge our sinnes truly and vnfeynedly, ỹ we may so mislike of thē, as there may not one drop of fond presumptuousnesse remain in vs, but that we may be vtterly cast downe, and acknoweledge that there is nothing but vtter wretchednesse in vs, and that we be beholden to God for all goodnesse, so as we haue it of his free gift, and not as in recompence of any reward for any merit or desert of ours, but onely of his own free mercy which he hath vsed towardes vs. So farre then must we come of necessitie. And for performance hereof, let vs euening & morning inforce and indeuour our selues to call to minde the faults that we haue committed. And that we may enter into this triall and examination of our selues: let vs bethinke vs both of our owne sinnes and of the sinnes of our forefathers, and let vs assure our selues that if God woulde play the Iudge with vs, wee shoulde not onely bee vtterly rooted out, for our owne faultes which are yet freshe in our remembrance, but also all the euill that hath beene committed before we were borne, might iustly be called backe againe vpon our heades, seeing wee be wrapped in the same offences that our auncetors were. Therefore let vs thinke well vpon these things: that wee may magnifie the goodnesse of our God in bearing with vs. And to the intent wee play not the hypocrites: let vs marke well how it is sayde, that it is ynough to haue prouoked GOD alreadie. For when they haue fought against God and his worde, and haue behaued themselues lewdly all the time of their lyfe: yet at their death they make no conscience to say, I thought I did as wel in fighting against God, as if I had fought against the Pope and the Masse. [What a thing is it] to vse such speech? Is it not apparant that such folke are vtterly past recouerie, as haue their consciences so dulled, and that the diuell carieth them away, so as they can no more be sorie for their sinnes, (which, as sayeth S. Paule, is the full measure of all confusion:) when such graceleſse creatures will needes iustifie themselues after that sort with so vaine coūterfures? Let vs marke well then, that wee must not alleage, I thought so: but it is ynough that we haue prouoked our God. And if moreouer our owne conscience accuse vs thereof: what will become of vs? Will God in the meane while become as a dead idoll which seeth not our offences at all? A man thinketh his owne wayes to bee good, sayeth Salomon: but our Lorde holdeth the balance in his hand and weyeth our woorkes. And Saint Iohn telleth vs, that if wee feele any heartbyting in our conscience: the same iudgeth vs alreadie: and what will become of vs then, when wee come before God? Doeth not he see clearer than our owne consciences?

God

Yes: and therefore let vs marke wel that we shal win nothing by flattering of our selues: but God must be faine to woorke so in vs, as we may bee ouermaistred and vtterly cast downe to say, Alas if GOD should not spare vs wee were vndoone. And moreouer let vs knowe, that our true righteousnesse, (I meane not to glory of it, but to seeke it to our benefite): is to beare Gods yoke, so as wee liue not after our owne lustes and lykinges, but that if it please GOD to exercise vs with afflictions, wee shewe by all maner of patience, that wee haue a necke plyable vnder him. Finally for as much as his lawe ought to serue vs for a brydle: let vs suffer our selues to bee ruled and gouerned by his hand, so as we be not giuen to our owne foolishe deuotions, ne come replying to him with this and that, but be contented to let our GOD try our obedience, seeing hee hath giuen vs his lawe. Then let vs see that our life bee framed according to his will, which is the onely rule of well dooing: and let vs submit our selues wholy thereunto, as we see we be warned heereby Moses.

Nowe let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good GOD with acknowledgment of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe to touche vs with them to the quicke and to take from vs all blynde foldinges of hypocrisie, that nothing may keepe vs from being ashamed and cast downe in our selues vntill wee bee raysed agayne by fayth and hope of his goodnesse and mercie: praying him also that when hee hath once made vs to feele our diseases, it may please him to salue with the grace of his holy spirite, so as wee may liue according to his good will. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

The Lxiij Sermon which is the third vppon the ninth Chapter.

8 Also ye prouoked the Lord to anger in Horeb: for the which, the Lord was wroth with you to destroy you.

9 When I went vp into the Mount to fetch the two tables of stone, euen the tables of the Couenant which the Lord had made with you, and had taryed in the Mount fortie dayes and fortie nightes, without eating of bread or drinking of water:

10 Then the Lord gaue mee the two tables of stone, written with the finger of God, wherein were contentes according to all the woordes which the Lorde had spoken to you on the Mountaine, from the middes of the fire, in the day of your assembling togither.

11 And it came to passe that in the ende of fortie dayes and fortie nightes, the Lord gaue mee the two tables of stone, euen the tables of the Couenant.

12 Then said the Lord vnto mee, vp and get thee downe quickly from hence: for thy people whome thou broughtest out of Egypt haue marred all. They bee suddainly turned aside from the way that I commaunded them, and haue made them a molten image.

WE sawe yesterday howe Moses did cast the people in the teeth with their malicious stubbornnesse, in that they had not ceassed from dooing of euill, euen since GOD had deliuered them from the thraldome of Egypt. And surely it was an ill acknowledging of such a benefite, to spyte him so wilfully, which had beene their Redeemer and Father. But nowe he alleageth a greater faulte of theirs, and farre more outrageous: that the remembraunce thereof myght leade them yet further, namely to bethinke themselues of all their former offences, and to confesse that they had beene a fo-wfrowarde and in maner desperate people in all respectes. And hee putteth them in minde, that euen while Gods lawe was a giuing to them in Mount Horeb or Sinay, they prouoked Gods vengeance by making of a molten image: This is not set downe without cause. For if euer God shewed himselfe to holde men in his obedience: it was then. For the lawe was not giuen after an ordinarie maner: but Gods maiestie appeared so visiblie in the doing thereof, that the people was sore abashed at it. Beholde, the Mountayne was full of fire, lightninges, and smoke: the ayre was heard to rore: the Trumpets sounded: and to be short, there were such a number of tokens of Gods presence, that the people was constrained to say, Let not the Lord speake vnto vs, for then are we but dead. After this, Moses was on the Mount as one separated from the companie of men, and as an Angel of God, exempted from mortall state, so as hee needed neither meate nor drink, which was such a mytacle as ought well to haue rauished y people to the seruing of God. And yet for all this, they reiected all that had bin taught them, and not tarying so much as the end of one yeere, but euen before fortie dayes were expired, they said they wist not what was become of Moses, terming him scornfully the fellow that had brought them out of Egypt. What can wee tell what is become of this fellowe, sayde they? And therefore let vs haue some God to goe before vs. Yet had they beene taught familiarly ynough: For God shewed himselfe to them both euening and morning, he led them a nightes by a signe of fire, and a days he stretched out a cloud ouer them: and yet woulde they needes haue a God that shold be present with thē. And what maner of God? forsooth a puppet. Beholde, God had shewed the people his wonderfull power, he had made them to feele it, they knewe themselues to bee safe ynough vnder his protection, and yet all this was nothing with them: they will needes haue a calfe, a dead thing, a corruptible thing, to make it their God. Was it not a hellishe furiousnesse when they became so brutishe? Seeing they had so lately euen with in freshe remembraunce hearde the lawe vttered vnto them, and that Moses was but gone aside: it was as if God had separated them all from this earthly life in the person of that one man. Hee ment to communicate himselfe familiarly vnto them, as it were by taking them vp into heauen: and in the meane while they become so vnthankefull and rebellious, that when hee manifested himselfe to them, they stopped their eyes and would not see, but defaced his maiestie and infinite power. Whereby? Euen by a dead thing which was an ydoll. Surely such contempt, such vnthankfulnesse, such beastlynesse should haue made the Iewes ashamed. And that is the cause why Moses speaketh expresly of that horrible crime which they had committed, in that they would needes haue an ydoll to go before them, that is to say, some visible signe whereby it might be said that God was among them. Thus see wee now the meaning of this text.

But wee must marke diligently all the circumstances which are set downe here. Remember (sayeth he) howe ye prouoked Gods wrath in Mount Horeb. That mountaine ought to haue bin sanctified, bicause God had chosen it to giue his Lawe there, in respect whereof it is a place that is innobled to the worlds end. For sith it pleased God to vtter his will there, which is the rule of al righteousnesse, and there to make his couenant with the children of Abraham: ought not that place to haue beene acknowledged as holy? Not vppon any superstition: but by putting the people the better in minde to honour their God as ofte as they speake of Mount Sinay. It is a mountaine in the wildernes, which aforetimes bare no renowne: & now it became as an earthly Paradise, so as God shewed his Maiestie there. Seeing that God had saide vnto Moses, The place where thou standest is holy, put off thy shooes: so as he required a speciall reuerence bicause he was minded to shewe himselfe there: and ought not the selfe same reason to preuaile in respect of Mount Sinay? But so farre off were the people from being allured to honour God a hundred or a thousande yeeres after, by acknowledging the singular benefite which hee had bestowed vpon them there: that they started away from him and fell to spyting of him, euen while the lawe was a giuing, & whyle Moses was yet vpon the Mount. So then Moses ment here to make their sinne more heauie by shewing them that it was like as if a mā should come and as it were dispitefully rushe into a Church, where folke were assembled togither to pray vnto God and to heare his word and to receiue his sacraments: and there commit some villanie or leaudnesse that might breede offence. And were not such a sinne so much the heinouser? Yes: and so was it with them. Therefore when we reade it, the very haire ought to stand vp vppon our heades. Neuertheless we must vnderstand, that this is set downe as a lookingglasse for vs, to see that we should be no better than they if wee were not withheld by the holy Ghost. Let vs consider what men are. These were a people whome God had chosen from among all others: he had giuen them his doctrine: he had shewed them his lawe: and yet for all that, they giue ouer themselues to so cursed a thing. Although then that God come vnto vs, yet is it certayne that we may start way, if hee hold vs not backe, not onely by his teaching of vs, but also by the power of his holy spirite. Now the law had bin published to this people, so as they sinned not through ignoraunce, neither could they say, We wote not how to serue God, we are to bee borne withall though wee deuise wayes on our owne head: for beholde, GOD had vttered his will plainely vnto them, and therefore they shoulde haue stayed thereuppon, and obeyed it simply without adding any thing vnto it. But notwithstanding all this teaching, they cast away his whole doctrine, and ceasse not to ouershoote themselues, as much as if they had neuer knowen any thing. Seeing it is so: let vs learne that men may well preach vnto vs: but when we haue had our eares neuer so much beare with Gods truth, yet shall we not faile to turn the clean contrarie way, except he print the things in our hearts, which men shall haue vttered vnto vs with their mouthes: I say, imprinted them in our hearts, & made vs to vnderstand ỳ that is the thing which wee must sticke vnto. That is the thing which we haue to remember vppon that text.

And whereas Moses rehearseth how hee was vppon the Mount by the space of fortie dayes and forties nights together without eating or drinking: let vs note that that was doone for the better authorising of the lawe, that it might be receiued with the greater reuerence, and that men might knowe it was not a worldely thing. And hereby we see that the communicating of Gods word vnto vs is a matter of great importance, so as we neede not to doubt but it commeth of him, and that we ought to submit our selues vnto it. If we haue not that: there will bee no religion among vs. Indeede wee may well ynough surmise our selues to haue it: but the cheefe groundworke of religion, that is to say of faith and of the seruice of God, is to be sure of our doctrine. For if wee go but by weening: as ỳ paynims, Turks, & al Idolaters doe: and as the Papists doe in dreaming vppon their good intentes: it is but a toye, it is but a building in the aire and vpon imagination. Therefore let vs marke well, that the first enterance to serue God, and to be allowed of him, is to bee throughly sure of our rule, so as we say not I thought this had beene good, it seemed so to me, it was tolde me so: but that wee haue Gods woord for our guide, and then let vs go on hardly, wee cannot go amisse as long as we followe that way: for our leader will neuer deceaue vs, wee shall not be beguiled in obeying him. That then is the thing which wee haue to beare in minde, for as much as we see that God hath so auowed and authorised his woord, as he sheweth plainly that men ought no more to call it in question or to doubt of it. But although we see that this is verye needefull for vs: yet doe wee see that the worlde makes none account of it. Whereof comes it that the Papistes are so wilfull at this day: but byeause they shut their eyes at the thinges that I haue nowe touched? For if a man examine throughly all that euer they haue, surely hee shall synde that they can alledge none other reason than their owne imagination. They can not maintaine the thinges which they terme Gods sertice and the articles of their faith, otherwise thā by their owne reason, onely bicause other men haue saide it, and they beleeue it without further inquirie. Therfore are they alwayes in a mamering, without any stay or stedines: And yet ye see they be so wilfull, ỳ they raile against God & his word, & worke it all the spite they can, & if a mā go about to shew them their faults & ouersights, they be so stubborne as he can nothing preuaile with them. Wherefore let vs be ỳ circumspecter in marking the things ỳ are set heere before our eyes: which is, ỳ we knowe not what Religion or Christianitie is, or whether our faith be substāti-all or no: vnlesse we be sure ỳ we haue the rule of Gods seruice from God himself, & that our religion is grounded vpon the same. Marke that for one point.

But wo worth vs if we despise the law and make no account of it, seeing it hath bin published with such warrantise as Moses reporteth in this text. Behold, the law is auowed by God himselfe: and what surer warrant shoulde men require than ỳ? Could God deuise to warrant his law more than he hath done? no: and yet notwithstanding after the hearing of ỳ doctrine & contents therof, we do but nod our heads at it, or rather we be not moued nor touched at al w it: may we see there is nothing but coldnesse in vs, & a great number of vs do euen spite it and gnash our teeth at it. Now then if wee rebell against God after hee hath so warranted the truth of his lawe: what excuse shall wee haue? Is it not a fighting against the maiestie of GOD? Yes verily. And therefore all the despisers of GOD, may well pretende what excuse they list: but yet are they conuicted of open warre making against GOD, and against his eternall maiestie, and against his diuine and heauenly power. Why so? For God in publishing his law, came as neere men as he could, and as neere as they could away with. In deede God shewed not himselfe as hee is: for wee bee not of capacitie to receiue such knowledge of him: but it is certaine that he shewed himselfe according to the small ability and slendernesse of men, specially at the publishing of his lawe. And I meane not only the Lawe, but also the prophets, which were added as an appurtenance thereunto, bicause they be the expounders thereof. Against what proue is there of the Gospell? God did not only shake the earth at that tyme: but also (as saith the prophet Aggeus, and as is alleaged by the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes) hee did shake both heauen and earth, so as there was a greater maiesty vttered at the preaching of the Gospell, than at the publishing of the lawe. Nowe then, sith it is so (sayth the Apostle) ỳ the Lawe which bringeth nothing but terror vnto men, was so magnified: what ought the Gospell to bee? For the law was but a shadow & figure of the things which we haue nowe shewed vs perfectly in the Gospell. In the Gospell God sheweth himselfe face to face, to ỳ intent ỳ we should be transformed to his glory. Sith it is so, what a curse pul we vpon our heads, in ỳ we do not hearke vnto God with all reuerence, & shew that it is he whom we worship, & to whom we be willing to dedicate al our senses, all our affections, & all our thoughts? If we be not brought so lowe as to heare and receiue the doctrine of the lawe and the Gospell with all humilitie and reuerence: we fight openly against the whole power and glory of God.

And herewithall we haue to marke also, after what maner it is that God warranteth his lawe, to the intent it may bee of authoritie among men, and that they may submit themselues to it. It is by fathering of it vppon himselfe: and that is one point more, well worth the marking. For God sheweth vs thereby, ỳ he will not haue vs to leane vnto men, but to looke singly vnto him, that wee may haue a true and assured faith. So long then as our mindes runne vppon creatures: wee shall alwayes bee in a mamering. Albeit that wee may conceiue some wilfull opinion in our head: yet shall it vanish quite away at length, vntill wee bee come to this poynt, that wee bee sure it is GOD that hath taught vs it, and that it is hee of whome wee holde all that wee haue. When wee bee so assured: then haue wee a right faith: but wee see howe the world forgetteth that. For is there any question of the hearing of GOD in the Popedome? Nay verily, they woorke all the abhominations that are against Gods woorde, and their dooyng thereof is matched with foule shamelesse-nesse, as it were euen in vtter despyte of God. For they will needes haue the Gospell set aside, and that men should bee the sticklers in that behalfe, to intermingle whatsoeuer they themselues thinke good. Wee see then that this hath beene ill put in vre. And therefore let vs for our part remember, that when God meant to magnifie his Lawe, he saide not, Here is a wise man that shall tell you good things: but he tooke vp Moses to him, and he gaue tokens from heauen as if he should haue protested thus: It is I my self, I will haue ye to take all things that shal be vttered by Moses, as things that come from me. For I am not hidden in this case. Although I speake to you by the mouth of a mortal man: yet ye see he hath all of mee, and he hath not deuised any thing of himselfe or of his owne braine. And to what ende was Moses so exempted from the state of all other men? It is not possible ỳ a man which is accustomed to eate & drink, should fast by the space of fortie dayes and fortie nights together. Then must it needes bee concluded, that God intended to shew in effect, how he himselfe was the author of the Law, and the giuer thereof by Moses. And although Moses was so excellent a person: yet was hee but a seruant, he was not the maister of the house, neyther did he challendge any thing to himselfe, but deliuered the thinges faithfully from hand to hande, which he had receiued.

Nowe seeing that GOD reserued to himselfe the gouerning of his Church, and the giuing of the rule whereunto he woulde haue all men to holde themselues, so as euen Moses should not passe the boundes thereof: what shal other men doe nowe adayes? Wee shall see at length that God neuer raised vp a greater Prophet, no nor the like among his people. There was neuer any [that matched him or went beyond him,] but onely Iesus Christ the head of all Prophets. And good reason it is ỳ he should bee aboue Moses, which hath the soueraintie of all, considering that he is aboue the Angels, and euen the euerlasting GOD manifested in the flesh, and our Mediatour, exalted to the right hand of God his father, to sit as his Lieuetenant, of purpose that all knees shoulde bow before him. So then, wee see how shameleſſe the Pope and all his rable haue beene, in vsurping such libertie to forge articles of fayth, to make lawes for mens soules, and to bring the Churche in such bondage, as to burie all pure doctrine, that their owne dreames and dotages which they had deuised contrarie to Gods woorde, myght bee followed. And therefore let vs beare well in minde, that when wee studye to honour men, wee robbe God of his honour: and when wee adde any thing at all to his woorde, wee become backslyders. That is a poynt which wee must bee fully resolued of, or else wee shall haue no certaintie in our Religion and fayth. In deede the Papistes haue some showe of humilitie, in that they say, and why shoulde not men obserue the commaundementes of our holy mother the Church? For although it bee more than needeth, yet notwithstanding, will not GOD accept it? There is nothing more commendable than humilitie: but yet for all their humbling of themselues before men, they rush with their hornes against God. But if they ment to doe GOD his due honour: they shoulde not giue men the thing, which belongeth alonely vnto him. For if they fall to mingling of the leauen and corruption of their own imaginations, with the puerneſſe of Gods woord: it is more than if they medled heauen and earth together. For it is easie to discerne Gods creatures one from another: and although there bee neuer so much oddes betwixt them, yet is there more agreement betweene them, than there is betweene mennes inuentions and Gods woorde. And therefore when they fall to mingling of their owne fansies with it, and take leaue to make Lawes at their owne pleasure: all is out of fashion, all is out of order, there is not any more pureneſſe. Now then, whereas the Papistes alleage their humbleneſſe in obseruing the commaundementes of their Church, or rather hellish synagogue: it is but a diueliſh ouerweening, where through they aduaunce themselues openly against GOD, in commending their own follie and beastlineſſe as highly, as though their owne inuentions were farre greater and exquisiter perfection, than the wisedome of God. Thus yee see what we haue to remember concerning this poinct, where Moses reporteth ỳ he neither ate bread nor dranke water, of all the while that he was vpon the mount.

Wee see heere to what end he forbare meate and drink. It was not to set vp some fast, neither indeede was there any euer ordeined, he did it not to make a rule of it: but rather it was Gods intent to woorke such a miracle as might not be drawen to a common example, of purpose to authorise his Lawe, as hath beene sayde afore. And herein it appeareth what a fondneſſe it was to make the lenton fast, and to binde men to fast fortie dayes after the example of Iesus Christe, vnder colour that hee had forborne meate and drinke so long together. Surely the fasting of our Lorde Iesus Christ, was to shewe that the Gospell ought not to bee lesse esteemed than the Lawe: and wee see that the lyke befell to Helias, who was betweene them both. Wherefore did Moses and Helias appeare at the transfiguring of Iesus Christ vppon the Mount, but to shew the agreement that was betweene the Lawe and the Gospell? And wee see hereby, that Helias was as it were betweene both, that is to say, betweene Moses and Christ. For hee restored the Lawe and the pure Religion that had beene corrupted afore. And so ye see that Moses and Helias agree in such sorte with Iesus Christ, that they not onely come to humble themselues to him, but also declare that he onely is the ende and perfection of the Lawe, and that hee is the partie to whome all must bee referred. Againe, when our Lorde Iesus Christ fasted, that is to say, when he abstained from meate and drinke by the space of fortie dayes together: he did it not yerely, but onely once in all his lyfe, at such tyme as hee was to enter vppon the execution of his office, which was committed vnto him by GOD his father: yea and hee did it by way of myracle. Nowe then is it not a turning of all thinges topsiturvie, when men will drawe it to an ordinarie, and make a common rule of it? Is it not an open mocking of Iesus Christ? Is it not a defacing of Gods myracle, as though they woulde spitte at his power? Yes surely. Wee see then what a blindnesse it was. And although this superstition be very auncient, in so much ỳ Satan had brought in ỳ diuelish errour, euen before there was any Pope: yet ought wee to mislike it and abhorre it. For it is not a simple abuse, it is not a fond deuotion, such as men are woont to haue: but it is a blasphemie against Iesus Christe, it is a policie of Satan to deface the honour of the Gospell, and to make vs forget the thing ỳ the holy ghost amed at, which is that we might know how the lawe & the Gospel are no earthly doctrines, nor of mans inuention, but altogether heauenly and of God, to the end that we should stoope vnto them.

Yet for all this, it is not meant that fasting is not good and holy. For though wee make no Lentfast, yet are there other fastes which are commaunded vs in the holy Scripture: that is to wit, first of all stayednesse and sobrietie all our life long, so as wee glut not our selues one day to forbeare another for it, but vse the benefites measurably which God hath bestowed vppon vs: that they which haue abundance abuse it not in superfluitie. And ouf fasting must bee to restraine and brydle our selues willingly aswell from meate and drinke, as from all other thinges wherein wee may commit excesse or disorder, so as wee forbeare them willingly, as I sayde afore. As for these that haue not verie well wherewith to finde themselues, let them be contented with their pouertie, and take it patiently with thankesgiuing vnto God. Againe if our Lorde afflict vs, or ỳ we bee in any distresse: let vs resort to fasting, of purpose to dispose our selues to prayer and supplication, and to lifte vppe our heartes the better vnto GOD, humbling our selues and acknowledging our faults vnto him. Let our fastings be as spurres to drive vs to god, to present ourselues before him as wretched offenders, to craue mercie and forgiuenes at his hand. These are the fastings which ỳ holy scripture alloweth, notwithstanding the said superstition inuéted by ỳ diuell to deface Gods word, & the diuine power ỳ was shewed in Moses, but more fully in our Lord Iesus Christ. For he fasted not as compelled by others: but of his owne free will, to shewe that although he was like vs in all things sauing only sinne: yet could he well haue beene exempted from fasting, as in deede hee was not a hungred nor a thirst of all the whyle he fasted. And why? For hee had laide aside the state that he tooke vppon him. Although hee was vnder the shape of a seruaunt: yet notwithstanding, that seruauntship bare no sway in him by the space of those fortie dayes. Now let vs proceede further.

Moses addeth that at the same tyme he received two tables, euen two tables of stone, the two tables that were written with the finger of GOD, the tables of the commaundements which God had made with sayth hee. This serued to make the Iewes the more ashamed, of their exceeding great vnfaithfulnesse towardes GOD. For if I and another were to make a bargayne, and in the meane tyme while the partie were causing the couenaunte and conueyaunce to bee ingrosed, I on the other side should practise some deuise to betray him while hee trusted mee: what a villanie were that? Shoulde I not bee a double false catife? Yes: for if a man conclude a bargayne, and afterward breake it or teare the writinges in peeces, hee shalbe punished. But if the one partie goe through with good and faithfull meaning, and the other partie marre all with crafte and treacherie, vnder pretence of quietnesse and friendly dealing: what is to bee sayd of that? Euen after the same maner dealt the Iewes. For God taketh Moses aside. And to what purpose, but to woorke the welfare of his people, and to assure them that their religion was a true warrant of their saluation, and that they walked not at all aduenture as all other nations of the earth did? Thereuppon he maketh an autenticall instrument of the lawe that he had giuen them, that the remembraunce thereof might continue for euer, and not bee such a doctrine as should bee forgotten. Now while God was thus working the welfare of his people: they recompensed him so euill, that they fell to vtter defying of him, and would needes haue a newe God. Wee see then howe Moses ment to inhaunce their euill dealing, that they might bee the more ashamed, by knowing the horriblenesse of the crime which they had committed. And the same belongeth to vs also at this day. For we see that God ceaseth not to renewe the remembraunce of his couenaunt. True it is that hee published his lawe once for all, and likewise his Gospell. But yet for all that, wee haue both his lawe and his Gospell in wryting also, and moreouer it is dayly preached vnto vs. Now then, if wee prouoke Gods wrath and anger, by falsifying our faith which we gaue and promised in baptisme: doeth it not make vs the more vnexcusable? Yes surely.

And

And therefore to holde our ſelues the better in awe & feare of God: let vs vnderſtand that gods ordeyning of the miniſters of his worde, and his gracious dealing with vs in cauſing the ſame to be preached and expounded vnto vs afterward, is to put vs in minde of his couenant, that wee ſhoulde put it in practiſe: [and therefore] let vs pray him that nothing may turne vs from it. Let vs vnderſtande that: and then ſhall we haue the more conſtancie and ſtedfaſtneſſe to obey him. Thus ye ſee what we haue to remember vppon that text.

Furthermore, let vs marke that God thought it not ynough to proclaime his Lawe, but he did alſo put it in writing. And why? becauſe men are ſhorte witted in bearing away the trueth. Therefore is our Lorde faine to prouide for it, & to warne vs to looke well to all thinges, becauſe we be ſo feeble. Had the Iewes done their duetie, Gods ſpeaking to them had beene ynough: for he had giuen his lawe in ſo ſmall roome, as euerie man might count it vpon his fingers ends, Theſe are the ten commaundementes, in theſe hath God comprehended his whole wil, which is the rule of good life, All this doctrine (ſay I) is comprehended in ten verſes. Ye ſee then that the people had beene taught familiarly ynough. Now if they that heard Gods voyce vpon the mount had done their duetie: they ſhould haue taught their children, ſo as the doctrine might haue beene kept in mind from the father to the childe. For God had taught them familiarly ynough, as I ſaide afore. Inſomuch that he had willed them to make their ornaments of ſentences of the lawe, ſo as in ſteed of bracelets and other pretie toyes, which foolkes do weare to make themſelues gay: all the deckings of his people ſhoulde be to haue the ſentences of the lawe written & ingraued about them, that which way ſoeuer they turned their eyes, they might ſtill haue ſome marke to put them in minde of Gods lawe. Howbeit, to the ende they ſhoulde haue a more certaine remembrance therof like as men haue bin wont to ingraue their leages in ſome tables of braſſe or ſtone: ſo God took ſtone to write and ingraue his lawe in. It was not his pleaſure to vſe paper or parchment: but to haue his law written in ſtone, [and that was done] not by handicraft, (for hee borowed no workemanſhip of man in that behalfe,) but with his owne finger. Not that God hath anie handes: but that the holy ſcripture ſpeaketh ſo by a reſemblance as if it were ſaide, the lawe was not written or ingrauen by mans hand: but God approoued and ratified it by way of myracle. Now then ſith it is ſo: let vs learne that God hath prouided well for the aſſuring of our faith, to the intente we ſhould not be put to any great paine or hardneſſe to knowe what wee ought to follow. True it is that the worlde will runne into al lewdenes, as we ſee it doeth, and the examples thereof are no tyfe. It is pitie to ſee howe oft the Iewes ſwarued aſide vnto idolatrie: it ſemed that gods name ſhould haue beene aboliſhed among thē: all was out of order: they had ſo groſſe ſuperſtitions, as a man coulde not diſcerne betweene them and the heathen: they had ſo imbaced theſelues, as there remained not any more certaintie among them. But yet for al that ſuch as were diſpoſed to ſerue God helde alwayes this point ſtill, that they ſticked to the certaine doctrine. And why? For Gods will was ſet downe in writing. When ſuperſtitions were to bee corrected: the meane to doe it was not harde. For why? The lawe was written. That is the thing which wee muſt ſticke vnto if wee will obey our God: and if wee forſake that doctrine, God will alſo forſake vs. VVe ſee then that God hath prouided ſufficiently for the ſuretie of his people, that their faith might not be doutfull, but firme and conſtant. As for vs nowe adayes, wee haue more than the fathers had in the time of the lawe. For wee haue both the lawe and the prophetes, and alſo the goſpell. What is to bee done then? They that alleadge in theſe dayes, I wote not which way to turne mee, I ſee diſputinges, debates, and contrarietie of opinions, & therefore I will let all alone in ſuſpence: [muſt conſider alſo with themſelues,] Yea? hath God loſt his labour in ſetting downe his lawe in writing, and in adding the expoſition thereof by his prophetes, to the ende that wee might the better knowe that the goſpel is the true and full laccompliſhment thereof? Shall wee accuſe God as though hee had left vs at randome, ſo as wee ſhoulde not knowe what wee haue to doe, when he hath giuen vs his infallible trueth, and tolde vs that we can neuer be deceiued in obeying the things that proceede out of his mouth? So then let vs vnderſtande, that whereas the worlde goes aſtray, and is ill inſtructed: the onely cauſe therof is mens own vnthankfulnes. For why? there is inough prouided to make vs walk in the broade daylight, ſo as wee may defile the ſuperſtitions of the faithles, and not ſuffer things to hang any longer in ſuſpence, if we haue God reigning ouer vs. Whereby wee ſee that Gods ſpeaking was not for one day onely: but of purpoſe that the ſame ſhoulde continue ſtill euen to the worldes ende. Therefore let vs go on boldly, ſeeing we haue the doctrine of the holy ſcripture: and let vs aſſure our ſelues that that is the thing which wee muſt holde vs to, ſo as we muſt not any more ſay, whither ſhoulde we go? That is the way, let vs walke therein, as Moſes proteſteth hereafter. Trueth it is that in thoſe two tables are not conteyned all the things that are written in Exodus, Leuiticus, and the booke which we doe nowe expounde: thoſe tables are but an abridgement of them, and they conteyne but ten verſes. Neuertheleſſe, our Lord meant to ſhewe by thoſe two tables, that all the things which Moſes left in writing, were of him.

Deut. 13. 5. & Eſa. 30. 21.

So then, here are two thinges: That is to wit, that Gods will was there ſhoulde bee ſcripture, like as when couenants are ſet downe in writing, or leages are ingrauen in tables of braſſe, & euen ſo was it his will that there ſhoulde be a perpetuall memoriall of his lawe, that men might take no occaſion to turne away from it. And he made thoſe two tables, not to ſhewe any cunning of man therin: but to ingraue his law in the without mans hande, that it might bee knowen that the same came of him. As touching Gods writting twice in the two stones: we wil treate thereof hereafter: For it is meete that things shoulde be set downe in order, and therefore I will not medle with them nowe.

Nowe remayneth howe Moses addeth, that after the tearme of fortie dayes, God saide vnto him, Vp and get thee downe apace: for this people haue soone marred themselues, by forgetting mee, and the fauour that I haue shewed them. Here Moses goeth on still with his matter, shewing the people that their reuolting and starting away so soone from GOD was too too shamefull and detestable. True it is that although they had holde out foure hundred yea or a thousande yeares, yet had they not beene to be excused. But now when as they fell to making of an idol, and did set vp a Puppet within fortie dayes space, euen whyle God was about the furtherance of their benefite and welfare, (as I saide afore) when Moses was taken vp as it were into the companie of Angels, by reason whereof they shoulde rather haue thought thus, Goe too, in the person of that one man wee bee after a sorte separated from the rest of mankinde, and God sanctifieth vs to himselfe, and therewithall bringeth vs into his kingdome, to the intent wee should not haue any earthlinesse in our religion: What a lewde dealing was that? For this cause Moses saith, that God commanded him to get him downe in hast, because the people were marred out of hande, so as they were falne to making of a newe God, euen while the lawe was a writing, and whyle God was confirming of his couenaunt with them. And it is plainely saide that they were marred: Beholde (saith God) they haue marred. For the worde which hee vseth, betokeneth no more, but they haue marred, without other addition. And indeed it was a right marring of them, that is to say of the Iewes, who became lewde backesliders and periured kaytifes, vtterly turning away from the trueth and rule of God, and finally from all order both heauenly and earthly. For wherein consisteth our pureness, but in obeying GOD? 2.Cor.11.2. According to this similitude of Saint Paules, that like as a woman is a lawfull and faithfull wife as long as shee keepeth herselfe chast to her husbande: so all the chastitie which God requireth of vs, is that wee shoulde sticke alonely to his worde. Then if wee fall to making of idols: it is a vilanous marring of our selues, wee become like common harlotes that giue ouer their bodies to all commers, leauing their owne husbandes, and yeelding themselues to euerie whoremaister and ruffian. Euen so is it with vs. And after the same maner was this people marred out of hande. Yea and wee marre the maiestie of God also, as much as in vs lieth, when wee followe our owne foolishe inuentions. True it is that wee cannot touch his maiestie to doe it any harme: but yet are wee guiltie thereof (as sayth Saint Paul,) because we turne the truth into a lie, and make all thinges false: and moreouer turne the order of nature vpside downe, by forsaking Gods pure doctrine, so as wee bereaue him of his soueraigne right that hee cannot reigne ouer vs, when wee fall to setting vp idols and deade thinges in his roome, and doe the thinges which we our selues haue inuented. So then it is not for nought that our Lord saith not in plaine wordes, This people haue made them an Idoll: but hee saith, This people haue marred, that is to say, they haue turned all vpside downe.

Wherefore let vs marke well, that whensoeuer we steppe aside from the pureness of Gods worde, wee make a shamefull marring, we practise our owne destruction, wee leaue nothing whole and sounde, and to bee short, we bee guiltie of mingling heauen and earth together, and of the vtter defacing of Gods maiestie. So much the more therefore doeth it standc vs on hande to submitte our selues to Gods pure worde, and to see that wee inuent nothing of our owne heads, nor bring vp anie new religion: but hold our selues to the thinges which our Lorde hath tolde vs, forasmuch as hee alloweth not anie thing but that. Afterwards hee addeth the residue, which I cannot expound as nowe: but it shall suffice (as I haue saide alreadie) that we haue this bonde of our God, that we dare not so farre as to reiect his trueth: but that we abide in obedience to his worde, as hee hath giuen it vs in writing, and as it is his will to haue it dayly preached vnto vs.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue doone, that we may be drawen to such repentance, as our whole desire may be to be quite rid of our fleshly affections and lustes, to giue our selues vnto him, and to holde vs in vnder his awe, as wee may bring nothing of our owne deuising, but that when our owne conscience findeth fault with vs, wee may so much the more yeelde our selues guiltie, and neuer away from his obedience: and that forasmuch as wee can not fullie satisfie and performe his Lawe in this worlde, it may please him of his infinite goodnesse to beare with vs, vntil hee haue throughly corrected the euill which he knoweth to bee yet still remayning in vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people & nations of the earth, &c.

On

On Friday the xxx. of Auguſt. 1555.

The Lxv. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the ninth Chapter.

13 Wherefore the Lord ſpake vnto mee, ſaying: I haue ſeene this people, and beholde, it is a ſtiffenecked people.

14 Let mee alone, I will deſtroy them, and put out the name of them from vnder heauen, and I will make thee to growe into a mightier and greater Nation than they bee.

I Began to ſhewe you yeſterday, howe foule and curſed the fauke was which Moſes vpbraideth the people withal in this place: and that the cauſe why hee did ſet it before the, was to the end they ſhould be ſ better humbled therby. And here he addeth a recorde of the greatneſſe of that fauk, in that it prouoked Gods wrath ſo ſore, that hee would haue deſtroyed and rooted out that people, and put out the remembrance of them for euer. Nowe if God doe meaſure his anger; and can skill to puniſhe mens offences according to the greatneſſe of them: it muſt needes bee concluded that this offence was verie horrible, ſeeing that God hauing deliuered his people, and hauing wrought ſo many miracles for them, woulde neuertheleſſe ſo wipe them out as they ſhoulde neuer bee ſpoken of more. That then was the meaning of Moſes: verily as if hee ſhoulde ſaye, yee wretched foolke, conſider what yee bee and what yee haue beene. For whereas yee were redeemed by the hande of GOD, you by reuolting from him after yee hadde receiued ſuch fauour, deſerued to haue beene ſo rooted out, as no remembraunce of you might haue remayned in the worlde, and ſentence thereof was giuen alſo. Hadde not I intreated for you, GOD hadde determined to haue deſtroyed you. Nowe goe make your bragges, imagine I wote not what of your ſelues, impute your obteyning of this lande to your owne righteouſneſſe, to your owne power, or to ſome other thing elſe. Nay contrariwiſe, yee ſee what yee haue done: yee haue (to the vttermoſt of your power) vndoone the deliueraunce of your ſelues whiche GOD hadde wrought, yee haue forſaken the ſaluation that was promiſed you, and the inheritaunce that was prepared for you: and to be ſhort it was meet that God ſhould haue powred out his horrible vengeaunce vppon you. Therefore learne to magnifie his mercie, conſidering that yee haue prouoked him ſo ſore: Thus yee ſee in effect whereto this ſaying of Moſes is to be referred.

But by the way wee muſt marke the words that hee vſeth. I haue ſeene this people (ſaith he) and lo it is a ſtiffenecked people. Heere GOD ſheweth that he hath iuſt cauſe to make cleane riddance of this people, foraſmuchas they were paſt amendement. True it is that GOD might well thunder downe vppon all menne, without ſhewing them why or wherefore, and all mouthes ought to bee ſhutte. For wee winne nothing by replying againſt him, and in murmuring at his chaſtiſementes. For hee ſhall euer bee founde to bee righteous as is ſayde in the one and fiftith Pſalme, and whoſoeuer blaſphemeth him ſhall bee put to ſhame. Yet notwithſtanding, heere God ſheweth why hee had determined to puniſhe the Iewes ſo roughly, to the intent that Moſes ſhoulde bee the better contented. I haue ſeene (ſayth hee) that this people is a ſtiffenecked people. Heereby hee doeth vs to vnderſtande, that when wee once fall to malicious wilfulneſſe, it is all one as if wee were rotten in our ſinnes, and that there is none other remedie, but that GOD muſt put to his hande to deſtroy vs vtterly. Pſal, 51. 6.

In deede the leaſt fauke that wee committe doeth well deſerue that GOD ſhoulde vſe extreeme rigour: but yet doeth hee moderate himſelfe, according to this ſaying of the holy Scripture, that hee is ſlowe to wrath and longſuffering. GOD then ſpareth vs, and vſeth not rigour againſt vs at the firſte daſhe. But when hee ſeeth vs ſo harde hearted that hee canne not winne vs by patience, and that wee bee ſo ſtubborne as hee can not amende vs, nor make vs ſtoope vnder his hande: then is hee fayne to worke after another faſhion, and to ſtriue no lōger with thē, according to this ſaying Pſal, 103. 8.

Gen.6.3. in the sixth Chapter of Genesis, Why should my spirit striue any longer with men? For I see there is nothing but corruption in them: and therefore I will no more goe to law with them: I must be faine to condemne them and to execute my iudgement vppon them: for it is to no purpose to indite them any more, they be too much conuicted alreadie. Sith it is so, let vs be well ware, that although wee bee fraile, yet at leastwise we bee not wilfull in persisting in our sinnes, to delight in them, and to feede them: but let vs returne againe vnto God out of hande, beeing sorie that we haue offended him. And if he threaten vs, or shewe vs any signe of his wrath: let vs by and by stoope and not suffer anie stubbornes to take place in vs. For if we deale stubbornly & wilfully with him, we shal be driuen to abide the condemnation that is sette downe here, spyte of our teethe: [namely] I haue seene this people, it is a stiffenecked people, and therefore I must needes roote them out. Marke this for one poynt, that here men are warned to examine themselues, and vppon acknowledgement of their faults, to humble them selues before God, and to lay downe all pride and sturdinesse, so as God may not finde them stiffenecked, but pliable.

1.Pet.5.6. And that is it which Saint Peter meaneth where hee saieth, Humble your selues vnder the mightie hande of your God, that yee bee not handled roughly in the day of your visitation. In speaking of the mightie hande of GOD, hee sheweth vs that if wee fight against it, wee shall finde it too harde for vs. True it is that at the firste men thinke they winne much by chafing vppon the bit, and by standing stubbornely against God: but in the ende they shall finde that Saint Peter did not without cause tearme his hand a mighrie hand, to confounde all such as set themselues against it. Then is there none other shift, but to stoope vnder it, and to receiue the strokes obediently, when it striketh vs, assuring vs that it striketh vs iustly. And if it touch vs not, let vs not tarie till God shewe himselfe our enemie, but rather let vs preuent his wrath: Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon this text.

Also there is one other poynt. I haue seene this people (saith God,) and is a stiffenecked people. Hereby hee meaneth that hee knewe well enough by experience, that the leawdenesse of that people was vtterly vnrecouerable. True it is that God needeth not to make long inquisition after the manner of men: for all thinges are present vnto him, and length of time can tel him no more than hee knoweth alreadie. But the scripture vseth such speech, to doe vs to vnderstand that God goeth not to worke at aduenture as men commonly doe, who fall to punishing oftentimes before they knowe the trueth or haue inquired of it. God then sheweth here, that hee neuer lifteth vp his hande to chastice vs, but vpon good deliberation, knowing what is in vs, and hauing well considered whether there bee any meane to reclaime vs or no. Seeing hee taketh so great paine, needes must wee come to our last condemnation, if we bee wilful stubborne. Thus yee see what Moses meant by these wordes, See and Beholde. And it is all one as if God woulde prooue his saying by such experience thereof as were throughly knowen, and shewe as it were with his finger, that that people was not to bee delte withall, and that the verie creatures might well iudge of their naughtinesse, that it was vtterly vnexcusable. In deede wee doe not alwayes perceyue that God hath made inquisition of our sinnes: but yet shall wee finde it so in the end. And for the same cause, when hee minded to destroye Sodome and Gomorre, he said expressely, that hee came downe to weete howe thinges were: Gen.18.21. and that although the crie came vp to his eares into heauen, and that their sinne was so great, that euen the verie heauens roong of it: yet vouchsafed hee to examine their doinges neerlier: not that hee needed so to doe, as in respect of himselfe: but to shewe vs that his iudge was rightfull and blamelesse. As oft therefore as God punisheth vs, let vs learne to knowe that wee haue lyen too long asleepe, and that he in the meane while watched, and that wee make nowe pay ỹ arrearages because we amended not in due time. And if GOD seeme ouerhastie in punishing vs: let vs consider that wee tooke not the time when it was offered vs, and when hee gaue vs space of repentance to turne vnto him, Ioh.3.22. 5.14. but rather were blinded without owne hypocrisie, and that is the cause why God layeth his hand so roughly vpon vs.

Nowe let vs come to that which Moses addeth. Hee saith that God beeing in minde to destroy the people, saide vnto him: Let me alone that I may destroy this people, & that their name may bee put out from vnder heauen, so as it may neuer be spoken of more. It shoulde seeme that God was letted here by Moses, when hee saith: Let mee alone. Nowe it were vnbeseeming his power that hee coulde not execute the thing that hee had determined with himselfe, but that a man shoulde withstande him and restraine his libertie in doeing the thing that hee had purposed. Howe may this bee vnderstoode? True it is that Moses was not of authoritie to restraine Gods iudgement: but here wee see the infinite goodnesse of him, who though he owe not any thing to men, vouchsafeth notwithstanding to doe it for their sakes. And let vs marke especially, that God doeth so binde himselfe to our prayers and supplications, that they bee as it were restraintes of his wrath: so that whereas diuerse times hee woulde destroye all: hee is as it were chaunged, if wee come and humble our selues before him. Not that hee altereth his purpose: wee must not surmise any repentaunce in God, that hee shoulde turne backe agayne and bee better aduised, or bethinke himselfe better what hee had to doe, as wee doe, who bee subiect to diuerse passions, and also to alteration: there is no such thing in God, there is no altering of the thing which hee hath once determined. But this is taken after the manner of men, and much that to make vs vnderstande what is for our profite, God is faine to bowe downe from his his high maiestie where vnto wee bee not able to attaine, and to vse similitudes meete for our rawnesse and infirmitie. Therefore hee sayeth that when we pray, it is all one as if wee did cast a barre in his way, to stoppe his wrath that it shoulde not vtterly consume vs. And why? Because that hee of his owne accorde hath wilingly and without constraint made couenaunt with vs, that whensoeuer wee pray vnto him, hee will performe all our requestes, so as wee shall not bee disappointed in calling vppon him, but shall alwayes perceiue that hee was willing to graunt our will and desire, according as it is said in the hundred and fiue and fortith psalme, The Lorde performeth the willes of them that feare him. Surely it is a worde that ought to pearce our heartes, when it is saide that GOD doeth the will of men. Nowe who is hee? and what are wee? Wee bewretched creatures, such as ought to bee ashamed to shewe themselues before GOD. And as for to bring either will or desire of our owne thither: it ought to dismay vs, and to make vs say, Alas Lorde, doe what pleaseth thee, for it is not meete for vs to put foorth anie desire or affection of ours: for what are wee but wretched creatures? But surelie Gods will is that wee shoulde craue of him so it bee obediently, for according to Saint Iohns saying in his Canonicall Epistle, we must not pray to him at aladuenture, nor alleadge our owne fancies to restrayne GOD to our desires, wee muste not vse such boldenesse: but when we haue submitted our heartes obedient-he to our God: then if wee pray to him for anything that is to our welfare, hee liketh well of it, and hee will pleasure vs in graunting it, as though there were such a couenaunt and league betweene him and vs, as might not bee broken. Seeing that God stoopeth so lowe as to graunt vs our requestes: what woulde wee more? But he doeth it, and that doeth he well shewe in this text. Let mee alone sayth hee to Moses. Hee seemeth here to speake as it were to some companion or fellow of his. And why doeth hee not destroy Moses too, as hee might well doe if hee listed. Is Moses then able to slay him, or to abridge him of his libertie? No: but as I saide afore, GOD doth so binde himselfe, that the prayers which are made vnto him, doe stay the execution of his vengeance. And that is the cause why that in the rehearsing of this storie in the Psalme, it is sayde there expresselie, that if Moses had not set himselfe in the breache, all hadde beene marde. There the Prophete vseth a similitude: like as when a Towne is battered with the Cannon, there is such a breach made as the enemies may enter, to sacke the towne and to put all to the sworde. Euen so is it in this case: when Gods wrath was once kindled against his people, hee had battered them by & by with his said threate, and had made a breach vppon them so as there remayned no more but to enter. But beholde, Moses setteth himselfe in the breach, that is to say he standeth vp against God and maketh intercessiō to him for the people, so as he stoppeth the breach againe, and stayeth Gods wrath from going anie further. And this is not reported for Moses onely: But our Lorde declareth thereby what strength our prayers & supplicatiōs haue, when they be well ordered, so as wee come to him with such zeale as becommeth vs, and with such faith and humilitie as hee requireth. And we must remember what Saint Iames saith of Helias: namelie that he made it to raine, and also did shut vp the heauens and caused drought, alonely by his prayers. Loe here an incredible thing, y when the Prophet openeth his mouth to pray vnto God, he hath power to shut vp the heauens, and to bring a generall famine euerywhere, to punishe the Idolatrous king & al those that tooke part with him in his wickednesse: and that afterwarde when he came to God againe, & desired raine, he opened the heauens againe and all the streames thereof, so as the earth was then plentifully watered. Neuertheless the intent of S. Iames is not, that our knowing hereof should be to magnifie the power of Helias, or to say that hee had that graunted vnto him as a speciall priuiledge, but to giue vs a rule whereby to perceiue howe auailable the prayer of a righteous man is, and so to incourage vs to pray vnto God. For seeing that the Prophet Helias could both shut the heauens and open them againe by his prayers: let vs not doubte but that wee shall be hearde, when wee call vppon the name of God: And that when the bottomlesse gulfes are opened, we shall shutte them againe: insomuch that euen when the wicked shall seme to haue the worlde at will, then wil GOD roote them out at our request. Therefore let vs pray boldely, vppon trust of the promises that God hath giuen vs, and our prayers shall bee of such force, that they shall euen chaunge the order of nature if neede bee. As for example we see that at the saying of Iosua, the sunne stayed, and stood still a day and a night together, without any night betwixte the one day and the other.

Iosua.10.12 13.

Sith wee see these thinges: let vs not say: That was but for once, or such a holy man or Saint had such power: but let vs vnderstande that it was our Lordes intent to shewe vs that although heauen and earth were mingled together, and all thinges as confused as might bee: yet if we resort to him, putting our whole truste in him, hee can well remedie the thinges that seeme to vs to be furtheste out of order, and then shall we see the fruit which our prayers yeeld vs. Thus ye see what we haue to marke vppon this text where GOD willeth Moses to let him alone.

Yet notwithstanding wee must marke herewithall that it is a thing to bee wished, to haue such fooles among vs as maye make intercession and supplications to GOD: For wee see what coldnesse is in most of vs. Sometimes in a whole nation and in euery great multitude of people, ye shall not find twentie or ten persōs that haue a right zeale to pray vnto God and are disposed thereto as is requisite. And how shoulde we do if they stoode not in the breach?

Sure-

Surely wee shoulde be left bare, accordingly al-
Exod. 32.25 so as the same similitude is alleadged in Exodus, that the people had made themselues bare of his protection, by making the golden calfe. For they had no more any God to maintaine them. And euen so would it befall vs also that we shold make our selues bare euery day, by putting our selues out of the protection of our God: were it not that some do set themselues in the breach. And therefore let vs learne that oftentimes God spareth vs, because there are some y make intercession for vs, euen whome wee knowe not of. And let vs thinke vppon it the more, for asmuch as euerie of vs feeleth himselfe colde in praying, and that wee goe not to it with such corage and earnestnesse as God commaundeth. [Let euery of vs bethinke our selues thus:] Alas, if I were alone, and all the worlde were like mee: what woulde become of it? We might perishe for wee are not worthie that GOD shoulde regarde vs. But wee must vnderstande, that it is not our Lordes will that wee shoulde perishe, when hee ordeyneth men to come before him after that maner. And therefore howsoeuer wee fare, after wee haue rebuked our selues, let vs proceede to this zeale of praying both for our selues and for other men, and let vs not doubt but God will haue pitie vppon vs, yea and euen forgiue our neighbours also at our request. Trueth it is that in this case wee must not bring any ouerweening with vs, to ausaunce our selues as though we coulde further the saluation of other men: but we must take it as God sheweth it. Beholde I am not worthie that God should heare me my selfe: and yet notwithstanding hee vouchsafeth to heare mee, not onely for my selfe, or for three or foure moe: but also for a whole nation. Let euerie of vs doe this, and let vs consider howe mercifull our God is to vs, seeing hee not onely vouchsafeth to regarde vs our selues, vs wretched sinners, vs that haue turned our backes vpon him, vs that haue not ceased to prouoke his wrath against vs: but also vouchsafeth for our sakes, to accepte our prayers and supplications not onely for our priuate friendes, but also for his whole Church. For it behoueth vs to pray generally for all the faithful, yea and for them who we know not, yea
2. Tim. 2. 1. and moreouer euen for the vnbeleeuers if there bee anie meane to conuert them. Seeing that God heareth vs after that fashion, euen for the furtheste straungers in the worlde, for those that are vnknowen to vs, yea and euen for such as are not yet of his house, nor of his flocke, but are as stray sheepe: is it not a meane to make vs to trust in him, and to pray vnto him with such
Iam. 1. 6. certeintie, as wee come not to him like wauering reedes, (as saith Saint Iames) but with assuredneesse that hee wil heare vs, and that our prayers shall not bee vnauailable, because wee resort vnto him and haue recourse vnto him vpon trust of his promise?

And hereby wee see howe greatly the wretched worlde hath beene abused by making intercession to Saincts. When men read that Moses was hearde, and likewise Helias: they concluded thereupon, O then must we resort to the Heesaincts and sheesaincts, and they must be our aduocates and Patrons to God. Yea but the meaning of the holy scripture is cleane contrarie, as I haue declared alreadie, according to the saying of Saint Iames. For when God sayth so: it is not to make vs to runne vnto Moses: but it is to the ende that by his example we shoulde not doubt to pray also: for the promises belong to vs as well as to him. Like as Moses trusted not in his owne goodnesse, ne preased before God as more worthie than the rest of the people: but only as knowing that God called & allured him thereunto: so also let vs nowe grounde our selues vppon the promises whereby God incourageth vs to come vnto him, yea and to come without doubting that hee will reach vs his hande, euen without regarding whether there bee any worthinesse in vs or no. For wee shall finde none in vs: but it is enough for vs that our Lorde biddeth vs come, and our obeying of him liketh him better than all the vertues that wee coulde bring with vs, if there were any in vs. Therefore it is too grosse an ouersight, that whereas God incourageth vs to come vnto him with prayer and supplication after the example of the holy Prophetes: we thereupon shoulde contrariwise make them our Patrons and Aduocates to shift our selues from repayring vnto him. Againe on the otherside, although Moses prayed for the people while he was in this worlde: Doeth it followe that the same charge is committed to him nowe still in heauen? Doeth the scripture tell vs that Moses maketh intercession for vs still? So then, it is as it were a dragging of the holy scripture by the haire of the heade, (as men say,) and a racking of it to falsehoode, when the thinges that are spoken of men aliue, are wrested to them dead. Therefore let vs holde vs contented with this common doctrine, that is to wit that euerie of vs must take heart to pray vnto God, because his promises are made to all men without exception. For our petitions are not grounded vppon our owne worthinesse: but vppon Gods goodnesse, in that he sheweth himselfe so free hearted as to reach out his hande to receyue vs. Heerewithall let vs praye for another, and let vs not doubt but wee shall bee hearde. And although wee bee colde, and slouthfull: yet let vs vnderstande that GOD heareth his Church, so that although we come not to him so freely, and with so earnest and wel disposed minde as we should doe: yet doth he pitie vs, because hee not onely hath eare to our seuerall requestes: but also accepteth the generall prayers that are made by the whole Church, in our behalfe and fauour: and therefore let vs occupie our selues therein as long as wee liue. As for those whome God hath taken out of this worlde, for asmuch as the holie scripture telleth vs not anie thing of them let not vs fall to thrusting in of our owne imaginations and dotages in that behalfe: for either wee muste pray in faith, or else wee shall neuer bee hearde. And what is meant by faith? That wee shoulde bee taught by Gods worde. Saint Paul settes it downe for an vnchaungeable order, that wee canne not call vppon God, vnlesse wee knowe his trueth, and that the Gospell haue beene preached vnto vs, as is saide in the tenth to the Romanes. And let vs assure our selues, that as manie as steppe aside from this rule, are as stray beastes, and their prayers shall neuer boote them, for they doe but vnhallow the name of GOD, because they haue not the warrantes of his promises in their heartes.

Now let vs passe further: It is said, I will make of thee a mightier and greater people than this. Here GOD sheweth Moses, that there is no cause why hee shoulde bee afraide, that the good will which hee hadde shewed towardes that people shoulde bee lost, or that hee was raised vppe to vaine to be a worker of their redemption, and of the welfare that was promised them. I will make of thee another people, saith he. But Moses is not contented with that: for hee maketh intercession still vnto GOD. And this is not added without cause: but rather to make vs to knowe that Moses regarded not himselfe, but that forgetting himselfe hee sought the welfare of those that were cõmitted to his charge. That is the thing in effecte which wee haue to beare in minde vppon this place.

Neuertheleſſe it might bee demaunded heere, whether it were enough for GOD to raise vppe a newe people or no, seeing the promise was made to Abraham and his offspring. Howe then? Coulde hee destroye this people, without vnsaying his owne worde, and without calling back of his owne promise? No, but hereby we be done to vnderstand, that we must not bee ouerinquisitiue of Gods iudgementes, but deale soberly, and modestlie with them. For if wee enter into too deepe ransaking of them, wee shall finde them such a bottomlesse pitte, as wee shall neuer gette out of them. Therefore let it suffice vs that if GOD had listed to haue dispatched that people, hee coulde haue founde meanes to haue performed his promise, so as it shoulde not haue beene in vaine. For (as it is saide) had hee not beene able to haue rayſed vppe children to Abraham euen out of stones? Then must not wee binde GOD to our meanes, nor to the common order of nature, seeing hee is to vs incomprehensible: but wee must consider that hee is able to worke after such a sorte, as will vtterly abashe vs, and wee shall not knowe which way hee went to worke.

Thus ye see that the thing which wee haue to marke in this text, is that when Gods iudgementes passe our capacitie, we must not fall to ransaking of them by peecemeale out of measure: for (as saith Salomon in the fiue and twentith Chapter of the Prouerbes) it is his glorie to keepe thinges hidden, so that although he shewe vs not why hee doeth this or that, yet is not his glorie thereby diminished, but rather increased. For it sheweth men their own weakenesse, to the ende they shoulde learne to liue in lowlinesse, and not thinke too well of their owne wisedome. Marke that for a speciall point.

But here are yet other thinges which deserue to be looked vnto more neerely. And first of all, whereas it is saide that Moses ceased not to make intercession: that may seeme strange. For I haue tolde you alreadie that our prayers are faultie, if they be not directed by faith: & faith importeth that wee bee sure of Gods will, according to Saint Iohns exhortation, where hee saith that if wee intende to pray aright, we must followe Gods ordinaunce, and not our owne likinges. Sith it is so: howe durst Moses in this text sue vnto God contrarie to his expresse forbidding, so as although GOD say, Let mee alone, I will not heare thee speake of it anie more, this people must needes perishe: yet doth Moses make intreatance still? Wherein he may peraduenture seeme vnportunate, yea and that hee is minded euen to spite him, or at least wise to shewe some kinde of disobedience? Nay we must note, that Moses neuer shewed himselfe more obedient than in this, forasmuch as y trust of the promise that God had made could not be wrested from him by so forcible a temptation, needes must it bee that hee was throughly setled in faith, when God speaketh to him after such a sorte, and telleth him, I am determined to destroy this people: and yet Moses maketh intercession stil, as though he woulde let him of his purpose. And why? Is it for that hee discrediteth God, or for that hee beleeueth not his threatning as the vnbeleeuers doe, who commonly make but a mocke of it when God speaketh to them of his wrath? No: Moses dealeth not so: but this is his leaningstocke: behold, God hath made his couenaunt with Abraham, and that couenaunt must needes bee vnchaungeable. For it dependeth not vppon the desertes of men, but is grounded vppon Gods owne free goodnesse. Moses knewe this: and therefore when hee hearde GOD speake of the destroying of that people: he fell as it were to setting of himselfe against it, vppon assuraunce of the promise that had beene made. True it is that he saith nothing of it: but yet was it a thing throughly knowen to the people, that at the ende of foure hundreth yeares, they shoulde be put in possession of the inheritaunce which God had promised them. Moses then helde himselfe to Gods couenaunt, which was vnchaungeable and to stande in force for euer. Though men bee neuer so wicked: yet will God of his goodnesse surmount all their sinnes, so as his worde must needes come to effect. But nowe had GOD raunsomed his people, and the tearme was fully come wherein they shoulde inioye his promise: therefore was it of necessitie that all these thinges shoulde bee doone, and Moses doeth God the honour, to keepe him to that which hee had sayde. Nowe that hee is assaulted with greeuous temptation, euen as though it were cannon shot, hee persisteth neuertheleſſe in the same faith, and it is not a faith that flickereth as a shaddowe, but a faith conconceyued of the worde and couenaunt of God, a faith that shoulde stande fast setled and vnmouable. We see howe that Moses neuer obeyed GOD better, than when hee withstoode the threatening which God made. But yet doeth not this resolue the whole question. For a man might replie: Howe so? Beholde, God speaketh continually: why then doeth Moses beleeue one of his sayinges more than other? Againe there is an other doubte. Seeing that God is vnuariable and hath but one single will: why speaketh he otherwise than hee had determined in himselfe? For in so doing hee shoulde deale double, which thing wee knowe can in no wise agree with his nature. As touching the first question, let vs marke that forasmuch as Moses was gouerned by the holy Ghost, and was fullie perswaded that it behooued him to sticke to the promise which was made to Abraham, and therefore gaue credite to the same: hee considered also therewithall, that Gods threatening was iust, and that he might iustly execute it: for else his praying had beene but a mockerie. Hee sawe the daunger that hung ouer the people, and was readie to fall vppon them. But forasmuch as he thought there was a remedy, though GOD had saide, Let me alone: hee falleth to intreataunce againe. And that serueth to shew the heynousnesse of the offence, and of the fault that had beene committed. For such an enormitie as that was, deserued well ỹ vtter destruction of the people. Moses then is so gouerned by the holy Ghoste, that although his will seeme contrarie to Gods will: yet neuertheless hee knoweth what wee ought to followe. But it seemeth that Abraham did the cleane contrarie. For God had promised him to blesse Isaac, and to raise vp a people of his seed, whom he woulde take to himselfe. And yet notwithstanding he commaundeth Abraham to slea Isaac with his owne handes. Nowe it seemeth that after the example which is set vs downe here, he shoulde rather haue saide, Lorde thou hast promised mee that my sonne Isaac shall beget a seede whereby salution shall be sent vnto the worlde: therefore he must needes liue. But Abraham is gouerned by the holy Ghoste, and knoweth that hee ought to obey GOD simplie without gayneſaying: for hee coulde well haue stirred vp seede from out of the ashes of Isaac when he had beene deade. So then let vs marke that when such temptations as these doe incounter the faithfull, so as God seemeth to bee contrarie to himselfe: he sayeth not to gouerne them by his holy spirite, and to giue them such wisedome and discretion, as they holde themselues alwayes to the thing that is good and belonging to their duetie, and neuer doubt at al of Gods worde. And therefore let vs beseech God to teach vs his will, and let vs doe our indeuour in seeking his worde: and surely hee will neuer suffer vs to goe astray, nor to doe amisse, but forasmuchas he knoweth vs to be vnskilfull and easie to be led away to and fro, he will hold vs backe by his holie spirit, and giue vs discretion to discerne what hee commaundeth. For like as he fayled neither Moses, nor Abraham, no more also will he faile vs.

As touching the seconde question, where it was demaunded howe it may be that GOD shoulde say one thing and meane an other: (for that is contrarie to his nature, in somuch as hee nameth himselfe the trueth, and therefore must needes shewe himselfe to bee so indeede) we must marke that in saying so, hee speaketh not peremptorilie, but with condition, though the condition be not expressed. Therefore we must haue an eye to the ende whereunto thes wordes are referred: and then shall wee finde that there is no contrarietie in them. God had saide to Abraham, thy seede shall bee holde in bondage: but about a foure hundred yeres hence I will performe the promise that I haue made thee.

Needes nowe muste this free promise of God be performed: for it dependeth not vppon men: it is not saide, conditionally that their offspring behaue themselues well: but Gods intent is to bee vnchaungeable in his determination. And therefore whereas he saith here to Moses, Let me alone, I will make cleane riddance of this people: it is as if he shoulde say, This people hath deserued to be vtterly destroyed: for seeing they be past amendement, what shall I doe more? I haue tried them a number of wayes, I haue experience of them, I haue borne gentlie with them, I haue chastised them, and yet will they not bee reclaimed, neither by faire meanes nor by foule. Seeing then that they be past recouerie, they must needs be vtterly rooted out and perish. Yea, but yet is there this, Let mee alone. His vsing of that speech includeth a condition: as if he shoulde say, Here am I redie to doe the office of a iudge: what remaineth nowe to doe, but to thunder downe vppon this people, and to make cleane dispatche of them? Onely make thou no intercession for them.

Iebuk. 7.

Nowe wee see yet better the thing which I touched afore: that is to wit, that God was farre off from cutting off of Moses, or from casting him out that he shoulde not pray: but hee did rather sharpen him thereunto. As if hee shoulde say: But for thee this people shoulde be destroyed. For if I shoulde handle them according to their desertes: I shoulde confounde them. And forasmuch as they be so wilfull that they be past amendement. It is time nowe to execute my sentence. It is too muche I will make no moe wordes: But I will graunt thus much at thy request, that if thou make intercession to me, I will be restrayned by it. Now then wee see these two questions well resolued and the profite that redoundeth of this text. Namely firste that the force of our prayers is shewed vs here, when we pray vnto God faithfullie.

And secondly we see that daungers ought to prouoke vs the more. The more that Gods wrath is vttered vnto vs, the more ought we to be moued to pray vnto God: because it is not he draue vs thereto by force. And wee must not pray alonly for our selues, nor haue a care of our saluation onely, nor onely feare the daungers that hang ouer our heades: but wee must also take care for our neighbors, and when we heare Gods threateninges, they must waken vs, and make vs to come before him, saying, Alas Lord, heere is a sorte of wretched creatures which must needes perish, if thou be so disposed. Therfore let vs bee prouoked to feare, the more for Gods shewing of his wrath vnto vs, and for the hearing of his threates: For hee vttereth his iudgementes vnto vs to the ende that we should preuent them. For when GOD giueth sentence vppon our sinnes, it is alwayes with this condition, that hee doeth it not with out giuing of vs some respit to remedie the mischeefe, so wee seeke the remedie by such meanes as he commaundeth in his worde. And so yee see what we haue to remember vppon the example of Moses.

To bee shorte, wee see that it is not lawfull for men to put forth themselues to make prayer and supplication: except they haue the promise and be sure that it is Gods good will that they shoulde doe so. But GOD will giue them such a zeale, as the temptations which shall crosse them shall not stay them from going on forwarde, though it seeme to themselues that GOD is not minded to heare them, but rather to put them backe and to shake them quite off. Therefore let vs not cease to resorte vnto him as it were importunately. For the importunateneſse whereof our Lorde Iesus Christe speaketh, in reporting the similitude concerning a widow ỹ had to do with a wicked iudge: made ỹ iudge ashamed though he were a naughtie and frowarde man. But surely when wee come to GOD, we neede not to bee importunate: for Iesus Christ telleth vs, that if wee finde mercie in men that are lewde and ill minded towardes vs: we shall much more obtayne fauour at Gods hande, who tarieth not till we come vnto him, but calleth and allureth vs to him. Seeing then that he is so friendlie, let vs not be afraide that we shall not obteyne our requestes. But yet for all that, let vs not giue ouer with once praying vnto him as it were for fashions sake: but let vs holde out to the ende, yea and euen be importunate vppon him, Although he seeme vnwilling to heare vs, and let vs alone in our distresses, yea and that to our seeming our miserie doeth still increase: yet notwithstanding let not vs fayle to holde on still, resting vppon his promise which he hath giuen vs, which is certayne and vnfallible: that is to wit, that hee will neuer faile those which come vnto him and call vpon him in trueth.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue done heretofore, and that forasmuch as wee knowe what neede wee haue to pray, (insomuch that euerie minute of an houre wee runne in daunger of endlesse death and are like to perishe both bodie and soule:) it may please him to inflame vs so by his holie spirite, as we may call vppon him vnfaynedlie, and be more carefull to doe it and to exercise our selues in it at all times, as prouoked thereto by the great neede which wee haue thereof, considering the miseries where through wee shoulde perishe, if wee were not succoured by him and by his grace: and that in the meane whyle it may please him to beare with vs in our infirmities, and not suffer vs to be rent off from ỹ bodie of his Church, but make vs to perceiue by experience, that the prayers which are made through the whole worlde are auailable to his chosen, and ỹ their prayers also do auaile vs, so as the same may stablishe vs continuallie more & more, in the holie vnion which he hath made with vs in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, reducing all poore ignorant people, into the right way of saluation, out of the bondage of errour and darkenesse: and that for this purpose it woulde please him, to rayse vp true and faithfull ministers of his worde, which may not seeke their owne profite and ambition, but the glorifying of his holy name, and the saluation of his poore flocke. On the other side, &c.

15 Then turned I mee, and went downe the Hill, and the hill burned with fire, and I had the two tables of the Couenant in my two hands.
16 Then looked I, and behold yee had sinned against the Lord your God: and had made a molten Calfe, and were turned out of hand from the way which the Lord your God had commaunded you.

17 Then tooke I the two tables and caſt them out of my two handes, and brake them before your eies:

18 And I fell downe flat before the Lorde fortie dayes and fortie nightes as afore, without eating breade or drinking water, for all your ſinnes which you had committed in dooing euill in the ſight of the Lord, by prouoking him to wrath.

19 For I was afrayde of the anger and wrath wherewith the Lord was diſpleſſed againſt you to deſtroy you. And the Lorde hearde mee that time alſo.

20 Likewiſe the Lord was ſore angrie with Aaron to deſtroy him: but I prayed alſo for Aaron the ſame time.

21 Then tooke I your ſinne which you had made, that is to wit the Calfe, and burnt it with fire, and ſtomped it and grounde it throughlie euen vntill it was ſmall as duſt, and caſt the duſt thereof in the brooke that came downe from the hill.

HEre Moſes declareth the great good zeale that hee had, at ſuche time as he ſawe God ſo ſore offended with the Iewes for making the golden calfe, and for their forſaking of their Redeemer to giue themſelues ouer to a deade thing, rather than to him of whoſe power they had had experience ſo manie wayes. Nowe he ſaith that hee had the two tables in his handes, and that when hee ſawe the people ſo faine away to Idolatrie, hee brake them in peeces. Heere it might bee asked, whether Moſes were not caried with ouerhaſtie moode. For we haue ſeene that thoſe two tables were written with Gods owne hande, ſo as there was not anie workemanſhippe of man in them, but that the ingrauing of the tenne commaundementes in them, was of Gods owne doing. Nowe then, that Moſes threwe downe Gods handie worke after that faſhion, notwithſtanding that the people had ſinned: it ſeemeth not to proceede of any modeſtie, but rather of too vnaduiſed zeale and oueruiolent headineſſe. We muſt not preſume to iudge of ſuch odde things: for wee ſee that God gouerneth his ſeruauntes by his holie ſpirit, and we knowe that ſometimes hee ſtirreth vp his faithfull ones to doe his pleaſure by extraordinarie meanes. And although wee may not make a certain rule of it: yet is not the deed it ſelfe to bee blamed. Numb. 25.6. Wee ſee what happened vnto Phinees. For although he was not ordeined to be a iudge, but onely to bee a prieſt: yet did he execute Iuſtice vpon the adulterer, & the adulteſſe which had defiled the Sanctuarie. God allowed his doing, and there is recorde of it in the holie ſcripture, and yet notwithſtanding it was a peculiar deede which wee may not follow, without a ſpecial mouing of the holy Ghoſt. Pſal. 106.30. 31. As much is to be ſaide of the thing which wee reade of in this texte, where Moſes brake the two tables, which thing hee did not through haſtie moode, but as ledde therto by a zeale to Godwarde, and GOD ſhewed himſelfe therein, of purpoſe to doe the people to vnderſtande, how heynous their tranſgreſſion was. It is ſaide that Moſes was ſent of God to bring downe his couenaunt, and to bee as in his ſteede, whom hee ſerued. And therefore his deede was as it were a declaring to the people, that his couenant was broken and torne in peeces. Beholde (ſaith God) It is true I haue choſen you, I haue couenaunted with you, I haue ſhewed my ſelfe to be your God, and the couenantes were ingrauen in two ſtones, that they might remaine in perpetuall remembrance. But now haue you broken your faith to me, and therefore muſt I for my part forſake you, and diſanull the couenant that was made betwixt vs. Thus we ſee that Moſes did not anie thing at aduenture, nor was driuen by fleſhly affection but that God ſheweth the people by him, that he gaue them ouer and tooke them not for his, for vtterly diſclaimed them. For the verie bonde of the vnion, was the obedience of the people in ſubmitting themſelues vnto his lawe, and their acknowledging of him to be their god, and their worſhipping of him, notwithſtanding that there were infirmities in them. But they make them a calfe of golde, and vtterly forſake the religion that was appointed them. And foraſmuch as they did ſo: it was good reaſon that God ſhould ſhake them off, and make as it were an vtter diuorce between himſelfe & them for euer. Marke that for one point.

But nowe by the way, this ſeemeth to diſagree with that which Moſes addeth: that is to wit, that he ſhoulde breake the two tables with his owne handes, as it were of purpoſe to ſeparate God and the people aſunder: & yet notwithſtanding make interceſſion for them, yea & after ſuch a ſort (as it is ſaid in Exodus) as he was not cõtented to intreate God only w prayers & ſupplications: but alſo was inflamed with ſuch zeale, Exod. 32. 32.

as hee beſought God (if it were poſſible) to take him out of this life, yea and euen to wipe him out of the booke of life, ſo as hee might bee accurſed, conditionallie that the people might eſcape. Here are two thinges which ſeeme verie diſagreeable at the firſt ſight: namely, that hee ſhoulde bee ſo angrie, and that hee ſhoulde on Gods behalfe breake and diſanul the couenant, as who ſhoulde ſay he meant to baniſh the people from the kingdome of heauen, and from all hope of ſaluation, yea and euen from the inheritaunce that was promiſed them: and that yet notwithſtanding, he ſhould go and offer himſelfe to GOD, to bee puniſhed for the peoples ſakes, and to beare their curſe both in his bodie and in his ſoule. But herein we ſee, that Gods ſeruauntes may well haue a burning zeale to execute their charge: and yet for all that, not ceaſe to haue pitie & compaſſion on ſuch as periſhe, and whome they be inforced to hate, and againſt whome they bee driuen to bee ſharpe and rough. And Moſeſes zeale ſhewed it ſelfe, not onely in breaking both the Tables, but alſo in his doing of the execution that we reade of in Exodus. For he did not onely rebuke the people ſharpely: but alſo commaunded the Leuites to halowe their handes. And howe? By killing all that euer they mette with. Dedicate your ſelues this day vnto the Lorde ſayth hee. So was that tribe choſen to doe that execution. And although they were ordeyned to the ſeruice of the ſanctuarie: yet is it tolde them that they muſt conſecrate their handes vnto GOD. And after what manner? By ſleaing their brethren, ſo as they ſpared not any man for kinreds ſake. Indeede yee bee all of Abrahams houſe (ſaith he): but yet muſt you execute vengeaunce this day, for the offence that hath beene commmitted againſt GOD, in making the calfe. Loe here another token, that Moſes was ſo out of patience with the people, as he had no kindenceſſe in him, ne meant to forgiue the tranſgreſſion that had beene cõmitted againſt GOD: and yet for all this, he is contented to yeelde his owne perſon to aunſwere for them, not onely by ſuſteyning ſome bodilie puniſhment: but alſo by beeing euen damned for them, if it were poſſible. But wee muſt alwayes come backe to that which I haue touched alreadie: that is to wit, that Gods ſeruauntes haue alwayes ſuch a care of the welfare of them that are cõmitted to their charge: that they had leauer to periſh themſelues, than to ſee thoſe goe to deſtruction, of whoſe ſaluation there was ſome hope. And yet notwithſtanding they ceaſe not for all that, to be ſharpe and rough when God commaundeth them to doe their duetie, not vppon crueltie, that they haue not compaſſion ſtill vppon the wretched ſinners: but becauſe it is not in their owne libertie and choyce to ſhewe mercie, but they muſt haue reſpecte to their office, and vnto Gods will, that they followe the ſame. Both theſe thinges are ſhewed vs here in Moſes: and we ſee that all the Prophetes haue vſed the like manner of dealing. It may well ſeeme that they haue no regarde to ſpare the people. For they threaten Gods wrathe, they curſe, they condemne, and to bee ſhorte, they ſeeme to bring nothing with them but thunder clappes: and yet notwithſtanding wee ſee they were led with ſuch pitie and carefulneſſe, that they beſought God to ſhewe fauour to ſuch as were vnworthie of it. Who will giue teares vnto mine eyes, ſaith the Prophete Ieremie: I could well finde in mine hearte to melt into water, to bewaile the ſinnes of my countriefolke. And yet in the meane ſeaſon howe ſpeaketh hee? Vſeth he mild tearmes to rebuke the people with gentleneſſe? Nay, hee cryeth out againſt them as though hee had forgotten all naturall affection. So then we ſee that theſe two things agree verie well: that is to wit, that thoſe whome GOD chooſeth to ſet foorth his worde, may well regarde the welfare and benefite of the wretched ſinners that are committed to their charge, and bee euen ſorie and exceedingly greeued at the heart to ſee them goe to deſtruction: and yet for all that, not forbeare to ſhewe ſignes of rigour, ſo farre foorth as their office requireth, and as they needes muſt for the ſeruing of God.

Exod. 32, 27 & 29.

Furthermore as touching the requeſt of Moſes: it is a ſtraunge caſe that hee ſhoulde deſire to be wiped out of the booke that God had written: for he knewe well it was vnpoſſible. He was not ſo ignoraunt but that hee knewe Gods determination to bee vnchaungeable, and that his chooſing of thoſe that are his can not by anie meanes be altered. And therefore this requeſt ſeemeth to be vnordinate, yea and vtterly diſagreeing to faith. But we muſt marke that in this zeale Moſes reſpected not preciſely what was poſſible to bee doone: but onely meant to pray God that he being but one man might periſhe rather than the whole people ſhoulde periſhe, ſo as hee himſelfe might aunſwere for all the euill that had beene doone if it were poſſible. And beſides that, wee haue to marke here, that Moſes matched Gods glorie with the welfare of the people to whome the promiſes were giuen. For he perſwadeth himſelfe that it was not poſſible that that people ſhoulde bee vtterly rooted out, but that Gods trueth muſt bee aboliſhed therewithall, becauſe God had bound himſelfe to the offspring of Abraham: and therfore that if that people had beene cut off, God ſhoulde haue ſeemed to be variable. He couldе well haue found out ſome meane incomprehenſible to man: but Moſes coulde iudge no further than he was able to conceiue. Now then forasmuch as he was at his wittes ende in this caſe, and God was to be found faithfull and ſoothfaſt by performing of his couenant: therefore doth he forget himſelfe, and is caried away rather to offer himſelfe as it were in a ſacrifice of curſing, than that Gods name ſhould be blaſphemed, or that it might be ſaid that hee had not kept promiſe, or that he had changed his purpoſe. Hereby we ſee that Moſes might pray faithfully: and yet notwithſtanding not looke ſimplie & alonely to the right of the caſe. How might ỹ be done? He was moued thereto by a paſſion, howe beeit not by a cholerike and fleshlie passion, but by such a zealous passion to Godward, as caried him aboue all state of man. Neuerthelater (as I haue saide afore), these things must not bee drawen to a generall rule, (for we haue not the spirite of Moses): but yet must we goe so farre with him, as we had leauer that the whole world shoulde goe to destruction, than Gods glorie shouldbe defaced, or ỹ he should not be worshipped, or that the honour of his iustice, wisedome, goodnesse, and power shoulde not bee reserued vnto him. To be short, we ought to prefer Gods glorie, not onely before all bodilie goods, but also euen before the saluation of our soules. And although that that bee harde for vs to doe: yet must wee inforce our selues vnto it. We see how Saint Paul did the like for the Iewes, and he was lead by the same reason which led Moses. I could finde in my heart (saith he) to bee accursed for my kinsefolkes sake. It was not humane pitie that mooued him thereunto: but his eye was alwayes vppon the promise that had beene made to the ofspring of Abraham, in respect whereof it behoued God to keepe still some remnant of that peoples seede, or else the infidels and vnbeleeuers would haue reported him to haue bin a lyer, and they would haue skorned the law & al the promises. Wherefore to the ende that Gods name shoulde not come to such reproch: Saint Paul offereth himself to be accursed, if need be, and yet was hee well assured, that God woulde neuer suffer him to scape out of the hande of his Leader, who had taken him into his keeping. But it is not for vs to enter into such disputatiõs. For as I saide, Moses is contented to be rauished with such zeale, as hee had leauer that both himselfe and all the worlde beside shoulde perishe, than to see Gods name skorned, or that the vnbeleeuers should haue their mouthes opened to blaspheme him. That is the thing which wee haue to marke vppon the prayer of Moses.

Rom. 9. 3.

But yet therewithall let vs come backe againe to that which is rehearsed here, concerning his breaking of the two tables. Herein we see that how pitifull soeuer Gods seruantes are towardes the wretched creatures which perish, yet must they not vse anie such mercie as may nourishe the euill, but be careful to doe the thing that God cõmaundeth them, without swaruing one way or other. Sometimes men are so moued with foolishe pitie, that they offende God: and vpon opinion to doe good to those whome they beare with, they increase the euil still in them, and are a cause of their greater decay. To be short, men stand so much in their owne conceits, that they wil needes exceede and go beyond God in mercie. And this is seene in all cases. Howbeit, if a man examine their affections narrowly: he shall find that their so doing procedeth not of louing kindnes: for one while they be sharpe & rough, and there is nothing with them but destroying: and anon after in ỹ turning of a hand, ye shal see them in another moode, so as they wil needs be verie pitiful. But after what maner? In going beyond their dutie, without regard what God hath ordeined: and (which worse is) they will not be alwais shewing of mercy where there is no repentance, whereby they cast wood into the fire to make gods wrath burn ỹ whotter against vs. And therefore when they whome God hath put in office do see offences committed: they will not in any wise leaue them vnpunished. For why? If they suffer the mischeefe to settle & to take: it will grow worse and worse till it become vncurable. For ye see howe diseases become incurable, when the parties be not purged in due time and place. We must remember how the Apostle saith, ỹ we must beware we suffer not euil weeds to grow, but we must pluck them vp betimes: for if we doe not, they will so ouergrow vs as we shall not be able to destroy them when we would, but they will stoppe our eyes, and so keepe downe good seede, as it can neuer thriue. After that manner will God punish our negligence, when we be not diligent in doing our duetie to take away euill from among vs. Thus ye see what we haue to marke. But let vs also applie this lesson to our instruction.

Let such as haue the charge of teaching, learneerely to themselues and thinke well vpon it, and beare in minde what God commaunded them, that they may discharge themselues thereof: or else they may well make couerings, but God will ask them an accoũt of ỹ things that he had inioyned them. Againe on the otherside, when we heare our vices and sinnes sharpely rebuked by Gods worde, and rough threateninges spoken vs, so as it may seeme that our teachers intend to deliuer vs into Gods hande to bee punished by him according to our desertes, let vs not thinke it straunge, as a number do, who would haue vs but onely to grease and annoynt their scabs, in steed of handling them as they should be, & cannot abide to be rebuked roughlie. But what? They would be flattered to the end they might perishe without feeling of it. Contrariwise we see ỹ to be taught aright, we must be rebuked and threatened, yea and that with such sharpenesse and vehemencie, as wee may be driuen to bethinke vs of our offences, and to humble our selues before God as becommeth vs. That is the thing which wee haue to remember in that wee see that Moses was so chafed at the peoples transgression, that hee brake the two Tables immediately, and afterwards drewe out the swoorde, to punishe such as had so violated Gods seruice, and incouraged his tribe to doe the like. Let vs not thinke but that Moses was wounded to the quicke with griefe and compassion, when hee was faine to doe execution with his owne hands. For wee know he was a meeke and kinde hearted man, and inclined to good and holie pitie aboue all others. But yet doth it behoue him to discharge his duetie, or else hee had beene vnfaithfull towards God.

Moreouer whereas he saith, I looked, & behold you had offended your God, by making your selues a calfe of mettall, and yee were turned out of the way which he had appointed you: this looking of his was because God had certified him thereof: but yet so-behoued it him to beare witnesse of their deede [with his owne eyes]. And whereas Iosua sayde it seemed to bee some battell: Moses answered that it was not so, for as much as some of them made not signes of mirth, and othersome signes of feare and sorrowe: but all the whole multitude was merrie and ioyfull: and therefore (quoth hee) there must needes bee some other matter in it. At his comming downe hee sawe them daunsing as it were vppon fond deuotion, according to the maner of Idolaters, who think themselues to serue their Gods very well by such foolish and wanton toyes. And so the Israelites tooke this dancing of theirs to be a peece of Gods seruice: wherfore Moses executed the punishment afore mentioned. But as touching this text, the onely thing that we haue to marke, is the thing which we spake of euen now, and which we haue spoken of afore: namely that hee vpbraydeth the Iewes with their suddeine starting aside from the way which GOD had shewed them. For the welspring of the mischeefe was, that they held not themselues to the rule that is conteyned in the Lawe. Wee see then that the cause of all ruine and destruction, is our fickleneesse in turning away from Gods woorde. For as soone as wee passe those boundes and swarue neuer so little aside: by and by wee runne astray into vtter destruction. And therefore it standeth vs so much the more on hande to holde our selues warily in obedience to our GOD, specially when hee hath beene so gracious vnto vs, as to set vs in the righte way. For hee vouchsafeth not so to guide all men. Trueth it is that all men, yea euen those which neuer hearde one woorde of teaching, haue inough to make them vnexcusable. But as for vs, wee ought to make singular account of this priuiledge, that GOD calleth vs to him, that hee taketh vs into his gouernment, and that hee sheweth vs the way of saluation. Sith wee haue that, wee cannot goe astray, so wee hearken to the doctrine that is set foorth to vs in Gods name. But if wee despise such a benefite: then are we worthy of too too much blame. And therefore let vs learne to submit our selues simply to Gods word, or else wee shall open the gate to all wickednesse, accordingly as it is sayd that men marre all and turne all vpside downe, when they start aside from the said way. Then is there but one way to walke well and rightly in: which is to obey our GOD, and not to giue any credite to our owne wit and imagination, nor to giue heade to our owne inuentions: but to abide as it were fast linked to the thinges that GOD commaundeth and appoynteth vs. Those are the thinges which wee must sticke by: and if wee doe not, wee bee vnhappie and forlorne creatures. For we shall go on from euill to euil, and there will bee no ende nor measure of our disorderednes, as we see it be fell to this people, who hauing once let go Gods woorde, fell into so grosse and beastly superstition, as to woorship a Calfe of their owne making: and they became so madde that they spared not any thing so fouly to defile themselues in offending GOD after that fashion. For when Aaron willed them to bring him al their ornaments and Iewels: it was to the ende to haue made them loth to haue had an Idoll of that price. But there was neither man nor woman which brought not their ornamentes and all the costly Iewelles which they had. Those graceleesse wretches were so caryed away, and the diuell possessed them with such furie, that they passed not to spoile themselues of all their substance, nor cared what cost they were at, so they might haue an ydoll. And by this example are wee warned to raine our selues short and not to let our selues loose, least we happen to start neuer so little aside from Gods pure doctrine, & from the Religion which he sheweth vs in his woord.

There is yet another thing to bee noted in y breaking of these Tables: which is, that GOD intended to shewe by way of a figure, that his once writing of his Lawe was not ynough for vs, but that it behoued vs to haue it double ingrosed. Trueth it is that Moseses rehearsing of it in this text, is to another end: but yet is there no inconuenience in this also. Likewyse when Moses tooke a veyle or scarfe to put before his face, bycause the people coulde not abyde the glorie and great brightnesse that shone therein, it was to magnifye the Lawe, according as Saint Paule declareth: and the verie storie it selfe sheweth sufficiently, that it behoued Moses to be knowen thereby to bee as an Angell, and not to bee taken any more to be within the common state of a mortall man, in somuch that his countenaunce shone as bright as the sunne, which the people could not abide, & that was to put them in minde of their owne weakeneesse and frayltie. That was the cheefe cause why Moses wore a veile to hide his face withall. But yet herewithall Saint Paule sticketh not to say, that God shewed euen then aforehand by way of figure, that there should befall such a dimneesse and blindneesse vppon the Iewes, that whensoeuer they red the Lawe or heard it preached, they should haue as it were a veile before their eyes, so as they should not see a whitte. And Saint Paule sayth that this thing was accomplished euen in his time among the Iewes. Forthey red Moses continually in their Synagogues: and yet they continued as starke beastes as the heathen, so as they became brutish through their owne foolish fancies, and could not perceiue Gods trueth at all. For Saint Paule telleth them, that all the Lawe is nothing without Iesus Christ: it is but as a dead thing, bycause Iesus Christ is as the soule and perfection thereof. So then, as touching the breaking of the Tables: it was the foresayd cause that moued Moses to doe it: that is to wit, to shewe the people that God disclaimed them, as if hee had sayd, your God giueth you ouer, and hath diuorced himselfe from you. For in as much as your wickednesse hath separated you from him: it is good reason that hee also should stand discharged of his promise, and be no more bound to so malicious & froward a people as you be, who haue vsed such vnfaithfulnes towards him. That then is the first reason.

But there is also another cause: which is, that wee haue as it were a figure or image, that Gods once writing of his Lawe is not ynough for vs: but that wee haue neede of a second wryting of it, to the intent it may auaile vs, and the doctrine thereof benefite vs by shewing it selfe to bee liuely and of effectuall force and power. And that is the thing which the Prophetes
Ier. 31.32, 33. meane in saying, that GOD will make a new Couenaunt with his faythfull ones, not as hee did with their fathers in Egype, but by writing his Lawe in their heartes, and by ingrauing it in their bowels. And therefore let vs marke well that GOD meant to doe vs to vnderstand, that his wryting of his Lawe in the two tables of stone, was by and by voyd and of none effect. And why? Bycause that, if God doe but write his Lawe, or cause it to bee preached to vs onely by woorde of mouth: there will neuer bee any holde or tacke in it: and hee sheweth that the blame thereof is in our selues, bycause wee bee not stedfast in keeping the promise that wee haue made vnto GOD, but become variable, and starte aside out of hand. God for his part, doth well performe whatsoeuer hee promiseth vs: but wee breake off all acquaintance and vnion with him, so as we be cut off and banished from him, and wee bereaue our selues of all the promises that he offered vs: and therefore after he hath once written his law, he must be faine to turne againe and write it the second tyme. As how? For figures doe not alwaies represent the full truth, but there is oftentimes some difference. Then let vs marke that the figure varieth from the truth which God sheweth vs and maketh vs to perceiue. For hee writeth not his Law the second time in stones: but rather whereas our hartes were hard before, he chaungeth them and maketh them softe: and in stead of Ezec. 11.19. & 36.26. stony heartes (as sayeth Ezechiell,) he giueth vs hearts of flesh: that is to say, hee softeneth our heartes and maketh them pliable, to the intent wee shoulde receaue his Lawe, and haue it ingrauen in vs, and be able to doe and to follow whatsoeuer he commaundeth vs. Therefore let vs beare this figure well in mynde, for as much as it is for our benefite. In deede as concerning the first reason, it behooueth vs to bethinke our selues well when GOD hath called vs. For if we corrupt his seruice, or alter religion at our owne pleasure: although there be no Moses to breake the tables of stone: yet hath God shewed once for all, that he is alyenated from vs, and that hee will haue vs to bee as straungers to his house. Trueth it is that his election is without repentaunce: yet notwithExod 33.19. standing (as it is sayd in Exodus,) hee will saue whom hee listeth. Howbeit, if wee sticke not purely to his woorde: it is all one as if wee fell out with him, and playd the fugitiue and vnruly children: and hee will not suffer vs to despise his couenaunt after that maner, without auenging of himselfe of such vnthankfulnesse. And hee hath shewed vs at that tyme in the person of Moses, that hee giueth ouer and forsaketh all those, which turne away from the truth and holde not themselues to it, so that for his part hee will haue no more to doe with them, nor any more acquaintance with them. Wherefore let vs beware that this horrible sentence bee not cast vppon vs, and whensoeuer our Lorde shall haue called vs, let it serue to hold vs in awe and feare. But yet let vs know also, that it is not ynough for vs to haue our eares beaten with Gods commaundements, and to haue them set before vs, and to be incouraged to keepe them: for God must bee fayne to worke within our hartes, or else all the teaching in the world wil stand vs in no stead: it wil bee a sound ringing in the ayre, whereof no profite will redownd. Nowe then, come wee to haue Gods woorde? In deede wee ought to make account of the fauour that hee sheweth vs in causing it to bee preached vnto vs: but yet let vs assure our selues that that would but turne to our greater condemnation, if he ingraued it not in our heartes. What is to bee done then? We must discharge our selues of all selftrust, offering our selues that wee shall be but euill scholers, vntill GOD haue taught vs by his holy spirite. Notwithstanding that hee shall haue vsed men as his instrumentes, to bring vs to the knowledge of his trueth: yet must hee himselfe bore our eares, that we may hearken to him, and hee must touch our hearts and soften them, that we may receiue ye doctrine which is vttered vnto vs. Wherefore let vs learne to mislike our selues, by acknowledging our owne sinne and wretchednesse: and therewithall let vs pray him to woorke in such sort, as the things which we shall haue heard and vnderstoode, bee not a witnesse against vs of our rebellioustesse, and that wee haue beene foolke past amendment. And so, as ofte as wee come to any sermon, or read the holy Scripture: let vs pray God to touche vs inwardly, and to make the doctrine vsaylable which wee shall haue heard, so as it may not bee spoken to the stones, but to such as haue beene foretaught by his holy spirite. Thus ye see what wee haue to marke vppon that place.

Now for the attainement of this second writing, wee must not goe to Moses, but to our Lord Iesus Christ. For it is he that hath brought vs the holy Ghost, and the renewment whereby our heartes are refourmed to the obeying of GOD, and whereby they bee circumcised that they may be dedicated to his seruice. Thus if Moses be compared to our Lord Iesus Christ, hee is but a minister of the letter. And why? Bycause hee coulde goe no further than he had commission, which was, to set foorth Gods doctrine. But it belonged to Iesus Christ to giue light to that which Moses had vttered, and to giue strength thereunto. And how was that? By his holy spirit. True it is that Saint Paule nameth himselfe a minister of the spirite. Howbeit, that is not to deface his Master: it is not to drawe to himselfe the thing that belongeth geth to the sonne of GOD: but it is to shewe that our Lorde Iesus Christ vttereth his grace now adayes by the preaching of his Gospell. As howe? Let vs marke first of all, that the renewing of vs and the writing of Gods Lawe in our heartes, thereby to fashion vs according to the righteousnes contayned in ỹ same: is referred alonely to the sonne of God, and that it is he which giueth vs the will to followe God his Father and to obey him. For he hath the spirit of the feare of God, hee hath the spirite of all righteousnesse, hee hath the spirite of trueth, as is sayde in the eleuenth Chapter of the Prophet Esay. So then let vs marke, that wee must resort to our Lorde Iesus Christ when wee bee put in minde of our duetie. When it is tolde vs what GOD requireth of vs, wee must thinke thus: Alas Lorde Iesus, it is true in deede that heere wee haue knowledge of the thing that is good and ryghtfull: but what? Wee haue another Lawe cleane contrarie to it in our selues: which is, that wee doe but chafe and fret at GOD when wee bee taught: and when his Lawe is alleaged vnto vs, wee doo the cleane contrarie to that which is contayned there: and therefore thou must bee fayne to chaunge vs, and to make vs new creatures: for to that ende is the spirite giuen vs, which thou communicatest vnto vs, by bearing vs recorde that wee bee members of thy body. And againe, hath Iesus Christ once giuen vs this will? Hee giueth vs also abilitie to perfourme the same desire, and strengtheneth vs so against all temptations, as wee shall neuer bee ouercome by them. Yee see then that wee must hye vs to our Lorde Iesus Christ, assuring our selues that that prerogatiue and honour belongeth to none but onely him. Yet notwithstanding this saying of S. Paules is true also, that all such as preach the Gospell are spirituall ministers, [that is to say] they set not foorth a dead letter and vnprofitable doctrine, but withall they bring Gods spirit. And howe is that? Is it by their owne breathing? No: For our Lorde Iesus Christ did well shewe by his breathing vppon his disciples, that the holy Ghost proceedeth from none but himselfe alone. But Saint Paules meaning is, that Iesus Christ worketh continually, to the ende wee shoulde beleeue in him. True it is that we shall not see him heere personally present: how then shall wee bee sure, that hee wryteth Gods Lawe in our heartes? Let vs not alleage any of those thinges. For seeing that Iesus Christ is the ende and perfection of the lawe, yea and the very life of it (as I sayde afore:) let vs not thinke but that hee printeth Gods Lawe in our heartes by the preaching of the Gospell. So then let vs not doubt but GOD will perfourme that grace in vs. And although the partie that preacheth vnto vs bee but a mortall man, and the wordes which hee vttereth vnto vs with his mouth, doe vanish anon after away in the ayre: yet let not vs doubt but Iesus Christ will for all that doe his dewtie, as Sainte Paule declareth in the same place. And in deede, the faithfull haue experience thereof: For wee shoulde neuer haue so much as any thought at all of comming vnto GOD, or of doing any good: vnlesse wee were fully resolued of this grounde, namely that it behoueth vs to bee throughly setled and constant: all the which proceedeth of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Therefore whensoeuer wee feele that GOD draweth vs vnto him, let vs vnderstande that hee sheweth vs howe wee bee members of the body of his sonne, bycause wee haue the holy Ghost, by whome wee bee altered and reformed, and by whome also his Lawe is written newe againe in our heartes. Thus yee see what wee haue to beare in minde.

Eph.4.7.

Rom.8.26. 1.Cor.6.15. 19.

Moreouer, let vs marke that whereas Moses telleth the people that God heard him for that time: it is to the ende they shoulde not abuse Gods goodnesse, but vnderstand their offence to haue beene so horrible, that if they did so any more and tempted GOD agayne afterwarde: they shoulde finde no mercye. The intent then of Moses in this place, was to holde the people in awe. Truely wee ought to bee fully perswaded of this, that if GOD finde vs repentaunt for our sinnes, hee will euer bee ready to forgiue all that wee haue committed. Let vs but onely make towardes him, and hee will reache vs his hande. Yet is it not ment that we should take leaue to doe euill vnder colour that GOD is so mercifull to wretched sinners, that as soone as they returne vnto him, hee preuenteth them and is ready to receaue them and imbrace them aforehand. This (say I) must not make vs the more inclined to doe euill, but wee must vnderstand that when God hath forgiuen vs once, we must no more fall backe againe. For then do we tempt him and abuse his patience, which is the next way to shutte vs out of the gate of saluation, and to disappoint our selues vtterly of all the mercy which hee was minded to haue vsed towardes vs. True it is that although we shall haue offended twentie or thirtie times, yet doth God tell vs that he will haue pittie vpon vs. But I speake as nowe of those that take libertie to offend, and say, seeing I haue found God so gentle and pittifull, I shall surely bee receiued of him at all tymes. Surely when men stande so vppon Gods mercie, and vnder pretence thereof, doe eyther become negligent, or else giue ouer themselues to all naughtinesse: it is all one as if they renounced all the promises of their saluation. Therefore let vs marke well the saying that is set downe heere. God (sayth Moses) heard mee. And howe? for that tyme: to the ende that the people shoulde thinke thus with themselues. Alas, it is a wonder that euer we obteined pardon, and it must needes astonish vs still, that God woulde rid vs out of such danger as wee were fallen into, considering howe deadly and ouer deadly the fall was. Now then seeing that God hath shewed himself so friendly towardes vs: let vs beware that wee prouoke not his wrath any more. For if wee fall backe agayne,

wee cannot tell what may befall vs: After that maner muſt wretched ſinners, (when they bee tempted to doe amiſſe,) brydle and reſtraine themſelues by ſetting Gods promiſes before their eyes, howbeit in ſuch ſorte as they become not the boulder to doe euill, but as they may haue recourſe to Gods mercy when they haue doone amiſſe, and liue in the greater awe euer after. Thus ye ſee whereof wee be put in mind in this text.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgment of our faultes, praying him to make vs ſo to feele them, as wee may learne to ſigh and grone for them all out life time, and finde mercie at his hand when we ſeeke it with faith: and to refourme vs in ſuch wiſe, as we may not peruert his woorde and the pureneſſe of his ſeruice: but that ſeeing hee hath ſhewed vs the way of ſaluation, it may pleaſe him to grant vs the grace to perſeuer therein all the tyme of our life, ſo as wee forſaking all our wicked luſtes and affections, may walke on in his obedience: and moreouer to beare with vs in all our infirmities, vntill hee haue ridde vs quite and cleane of them all, and clothed vs againe with his owne righteouſneſſe, that wee may bee partakers of his glory, which he hath promiſed vs for our Lord Ieſus Chriſtes ſake. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but alſo to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Wednesday the iiij. of September. 1555.

The Lxvii. Sermon, which is the ſixth vpon the ninth Chapter.

20 Likewiſe the Lorde was ſore angry with Aaron, to haue deſtroyed him: but at the ſame tyme I prayed alſo for Aaron.

21 Then tooke I the ſinne which you had made, that is to wit the Calfe and burnt it in the fire, and brake it and brayed it throughly, vntill it was as ſmall as duſt: and I caſt the duſt thereof in the brooke that came downe from the hill.

22 Alſo yee prouoked him to wrath in Thaberah, and in Maſa, and in Cibrothhathauah.

23 When the Lorde ſent you from Cades barne, ſaying, go vp and poſſeſſe the Lande which I haue giuen you: Then rebelled you againſt the commaundement of the Lorde your GOD, and beleeued him not, neither obeyed you his voyce.

24 Yee haue beene diſobedient to the Lorde, euer ſince the tyme that I haue knowne you.

AFter that Moſes had ſpoken of the faulte which the people had committed in making the golden Calfe to worſhip it: now hee ſheweth that Aaron was to bee blamed for that cryme, for as much as hee being then the gouernour of the people, had not indeuored to withſtand them with ſuch ſtourneſſe as he ought to haue doone. For ſuch as bee magiſtrates ſhall haue a harder account to make, than ſuch as are priuate perſons. Nowe then, Aaron ought to haue taught the people, and to haue withſtoode their euill dealinges euen to the death. True it is that when Aaron ſawe that the people would needes haue an Idoll to worſhip, hee told them ſ it was wickednesſe ſo to doe: and when he could by no meanes wey with them, he deuiſed another ſhift, and laboured to driue them from their deſire, by requiring their Iewelles and ornaments and the things which they did ſet moſt ſtore by. For hee thought that by that meanes, that fancie would bee put out of their head. Yee ſee then that Aaron conſented not to their euil, but would faine haue letted it, howbeit that was not with ſuch ſtoutneſſe as hee ought to haue doone. For hee ſhoulde rather haue hazarded his life, than to haue conſented to Idolatrie, whereby GODS honour and true ſeruice was corrupted, by conueying of it ouer ſo leaudly to a puppit that was but a dead and ſenſleſſe thing. Ought not Aaron to haue beene ſo zealous, as rather to haue hazarded his owne perſon for it? ſpecially ſeeing that GOD had put him in ſo honorable a charge? For hee was the highe prieſt. And although he was not yet conſecrated into his office: yet knewe hee well ynough whereunto he was ordeined. And therefore there was no excuſe at all for him.

Nowe vppon this text wee haue to gather, that thoſe to whome GOD hath giuen charge to gouerne his people, are not diſcharged by not consenting vnto euill, or by not beeing the authors thereof: but they must withstand it to the vttermost, and bee of such inuincible stoutnesse, as not to swarue aside for any importunatenesse. Although they see great trubbles and hurlyburlies, yet must not their courages be abated therfore, but they must stil stand in the mayntenaunce of that which is good. And although they see themselues in daunger, so as there is none other remedie but only by praying GOD to take them into his protection: yet must they not swarue a side from theire office to eschewe the daunger. And therfore had not Aaron escaped vnpunished at Gods hande, if his brother Moses had not interated for him. Let not vs thinke nowadayes that God hath altered his mind: but let vs mark, that as many as haue not withstoode euill to the vttermoste, shalbe wrapped all in one condemnation with the offenders, and Gods vengeance must consume them all together. For hee that letteth euill slip, or preuenteth it not if he can, doth giue libertie to doe euill. It is a saying euen of the heathen, who to rebuke the negligence and coldnesse of magistrates and officers of iustice, haue alledged this prouerbe, That if hee which ought to hinder euill doe wink at it, it is all one as if hee proclamed leaue and liberty to doe euill by the soundo of a trumpet, and hee shall beare the blame of it before God. And in deede that prouerbe was commonly vsed, to do vs to vnderstand that God will not hold them excused, which haue beene so colde in executing their office. Now if the worlde condemne them: what will become of them, when they come before the heauenly Iudge? So then, Magistrates are heere warned of their duety, namely that when they see any euill, they must withstand it. Although they bee not armed with worldly force: yet must they rather forgoe their liues, than yeelde in such sorte as the mischiefe may get the maysterie and the vpper hande through their cowardlyneſſe. Let Lordes of theirs looke well to themselues: for although men acquite them; yet shall they not bee quitte before GOD if they playe the blinkardes, and let naughtinesse slippe when they see God offended. If they see the right peruerted, and doe not manfully withstand it: they must yeelde account for it. And moreouer, God will bring them to shame before the world, that they may feele the condemnation aforehand, which is prepared for them before him: and therefore let euery man looke neerely to himselfe.

And let vs marke generally, that as many as withdrawe not themselues from the companie of the wicked, are taken as accessaries before God, though they confederate not themselues with them, if they make no countenance to withstand them when they see them go about any euill. Wee heare howe S. Paule sayeth to all the faithfull both great and small, Haue no fellowship with wicked workes, but rebuke them. Then doeth it stande vs on hande to beware that wee bee not partakers in euill, and to protest openly that wee like not of it. But yet is not that ynough: for wee must shewe our selues to bee enemyes of the wicked, and take parte against them. And they that doe not so, are too cowardly: and that dissimulation of theirs shalbe esteemed as treason before God. But what? Men see howe the world goeth. For nowadayes there can no friendship bee mainteyned, except men bolster their neighbours in their euill doinges. Folke doe mocke GOD openly to his face, and yet are they readie to beare open defyaunce, if men reache them not their handes to take parte with them in all offences agaynst GOD. But yet shall not this rule bee chaunged for all that: wee may well inharden our selues in our wicked customes: but yet will not GOD fayle to iudge vs, yea euen according to this rule. And therefore let vs not thinke that he should transforme himselfe, when wee take inordinate leaue to doe euill. And when wee bee come into possession, and haue taken couert vnder pretence that others did so as well as wee: let vs not thinke that wee shall scape for all that, but let vs forbeare that wee bee not wrapped in the vengeaunce which God pronounceth against sinners, for want of withstanding them to the vttermost of our power. All men without exception ought so doe so, as I sayde afore: but yet they that are in authoritie ought to take good heede that they shewe the way vnto others.

After that Moses hath spoken of this offence: hee addeth yet other examples, to shewe that the people coulde not boast of any righteousnesse of their owne, nor alleage that GOD had chosen them for their vertues sakes, or for any worthinesse or deserte that was in them. Therefore hee sayeth, Remember, what yee did in Thaberah, that is to say, in the Burning. It was a place so named, bicause that there, GOD sent downe fyre from heauen to consume a part of the Campe. And afterwarde in Masa, which signifieth temptation, and was another place, so named bycause the people tempted GOD there. And againe in Meriba, that is to say Strife or Contention. Remember also what yee did at Kibroth Thaauh, that is to say, at the graues of lust. For GOD sent as it were a plague vpon all the people, so as a great multitude of them dyed for their wicked lust in that they longed for flesshe, and woulde not bee contented with the Manna. This foode is too lothsome (quoth they,) wee can not away with it, it goeth against our stomackes, for wee see nothing else but alwayes Manna Manna, wee will haue some flesshmeate. Ye see then ỹ the wicked lust of ỹ people was ỹ cause of their ruine & destruction. Finally Moses rehearseth here ỹ thing that he had said afore, concerning the rebellion which the people committed when they should haue entred into ỹ land. For they distrusted gods promise, & would needs send spies to learne how things went. They trusted more to their own policie & eyesight, than to Gods worde. By reason whereof Gods wrath was so kindled against thẽ, that that he gaue flatte sentence that none of them shoulde enter into the promised heritage, saue onely Iosua, and Caleb the sonne of Iephuneh, bicause those two had behaued thēselues faithfully. But as for the people, they should be led about by the space of fortie yeeres, vntill their carkesses were rooted in the wildernesse, according to the threat which God had vttered with his owne mouth. That is the content of this part of the text.

Now let vs marke first of all, that to make the Iewes vnderstand the meaning of Moses, or rather of the holy ghost: it behoued them to bee warned to set their former faultes before their eyes, that they might not bee so fond as to presume any thing at all vppon their owne worthynesse, or vppon their owne power: but to abase themselues vtterly, acknowledging that GOD found not any thing in them why hee shoulde chose them, but that all came of his owne free goodnesse. Now if Moses were faine to vse such exhortation to the Iewes: let vs vnderstand that we also haue as much neede of it nowadayes as they. The end therefore which we must begin at, is this: that wee must cast downe ourselues, and not be lifted vp with any presumption, nor vaunt our selues through any foolish ouerweening: but acknowledge our selues to be voyd of all deseruing, and that there is not any grace or righteousnesse in vs, for the which we might obtaine loue at Gods hand. And therefore must he needes preuent vs with his free goodnesse. Marke that for a speciall poynt. But howe may men abase themselues after that fashion? Wee will neuer doe it of our owne accord. In deede if euery of vs looke well vppon himselfe, it must needes bee that wee bee as it were bewitched, if wee bee not induced to mislike of our selues, and to be ashamed and vtterly at our wits end. For what is man? Let him search throughly what is in him, both in bodie and in soule: and surely wee shall finde euen from the most to the least of vs, that there is nothing in vs but vtter shame and confusion, as I sayd afore. Neuertheles, euery of vs abuseth himselfe through this follie, so as we beare our selues on hand that our vices are vertues. And although our life be as leaude as may be, and our sinnes most outrageous and horrible: Yet to our owne seeming there is nothing in vs but perfect righteousnesse and soundenesse. See see then that men beguile themselues. And therefore it is requisite that we shoulde bee held shorte, and haue our faultes layde afore vs, not onely some one or two faultes, but also all the faultes of our whole life: so as we may know that we haue offended our GOD so grieuously, that it behoueth vs to bee ouerwhelmed with shame and reproche: and that if wee shoulde goe about to lift vp our heades, it were meete that wee should bee thrust backe, and that GOD should knock vs harde vppon the pates with a cudgell, to shew vs that our pride is diuelishe against him. Then let vs marke that Moses spake not onely to the Iewes: but that the same lesson is toulde vnto vs at this day: in so much that if wee will yeeld glory vnto GOD, we must be bereft of all prayse, and not presume any whit at all of our owne vertues, but assure our selues that there is not aught in vs but vtter vanitie.

Furthermore for as much as wee come not to such myldenesse of our one accorde: let vs haue an eye to our sinnes, and not tary till God open his bookes of account as he will doe at the last day, for then it will be too late for vs to yeeld our selues guilty. But let vs bethinke vs of our sinnes now while he summoneth vs by his word, and whyle hee warneth vs aforehande. Let euery of vs submit himselfe as a wretched offender before his Iudge, and let vs acknowledge our selues to bee iustly accused, yea conuicted of infinite faults, before God. And when we haue bethought vs of one offence, let the same minister occasion to vs to bethinke vs of another. And to bee shorte, let vs both generally and particularly practise this lesson of considering what wee bee, yea euen without flattering of our selues, that all the good which wee receyue at Gods hand may bee fastned vpon him, and the honour which he reserueth to himselfe remaine whole and vnmaimed vnto him. Let vs not couet to inriche our selues with the thinges which wee haue borrowed of him: let vs not seeke to attyre and decke our selues with his feathers: but let vs acknowledge that it is of his owne free goodnesse that he vouchsafeth to shew himself so liberall, though he be not bound thereto. And for our parte, seeing we cannot bring any deserts vnto him, but are guiltie in all cases and all respectes, the infinitie of his inestimable mercy must be faine to beare with vs, or else wee would be deadly enimies to him, & he should be driuen to thunder downe vpon vs. Thus yee see what wee haue to marke generally vpon this text.

But nowe let vs come to the storie which Moses toucheth heere. Hee speaketh full of Thaberah, which betokeneth burning, as I sayde afore. For there the people were chastised with burning, bycause they murmured at their trauelling through the wildernesse. O (quoth they,) shall wee neuer come to an ende? Wee doo but runne vp and downe heere, wee bee fayne to remooue our tentes from place to place, wee bee driuen to carie our stuffe vppon our shoulders, and why bee wee not rather in some place of rest, discharged of such trauell? But alas, these wretches considered not that GODS displeasure was to bee accomplished, according to his othe, which was that none of them should enter into the promised lande. They should haue thought, Alas, wee deserue to bee drowned in the bottome of hell, and GOD is contented to send vs a temporall correction. Although he bee not minded to bring vs into his earthly resting place: yet notwithstanding hee giueth vs respit to bethinke vs of our sinnes, and to sue to him for pardon. For albeit that he make vs to feele some rigour, and it behoueth vs to beare the markes of his displeasure all our life long by being depriued of the inheryinheritance which he had promised vs: yet notwithstanding we ought therewithall to acknowledge his goodnesse, in that he will not haue vs to perishe euerlastingly as we wel deserue. But they considered none of all this, neither considered they that they were in as happy plight as they could wish. They had the Manna downe from heauen, they tooke no paine to make prouision for themselues, they needed no more but to guther it vp & to take euery man his measure of it, they were all fed, yea and that with a good & sauory foode. Yet considered they none of all this, but grudged at their ouerlong iourney. And what cause had they so to doe? First they were priuiledged from the curse that was layd vppon all mankinde. We be set in this world to leade a painefull lyfe: & man was ordeyned to labor euen before he had sinned: for it is vnkindly that we should be idle & vnprofitable. Moreouer the trauell that God inioyneth vs now, serueth not onely to keepe vs occupyed, but also to hold vs, so as we may be inforced to shrink vnder our burthē, & to grone for our sins sake. Now thē this people had good cause to submit themselues quietly, when God led them so through the wildernesse. And therefore it is no maruell though fyre came from heauen to burne vp part of their tents, and though Gods wrath appeared after that fashion to make thē abashed. Yet notwithstanding, so little did this amend them, that they fell to murmuring by and by again, because they had none other foode but Manna. God had warned thē enough that they shoulde no more prouoke him, & they should at leastwise haue learned it by experience, seeing they felt the blowes. But they hardened themselues againe against God: and although he had made them to feele his hand so roughly: yet say they, what shall become of vs? our soule withereth, and wee pine away to the death. For here is nothing for vs but Manna, we would faine haue some fleshmeate. Well: They haue their desire: but that is to their cost. For while the meate was yet in their mouthes, Gods wrath fell vppon them, so as they were driuen at length to know ỳ they ought to haue bin contented with so good and happie a state as God had giuē them. In remembrance whereof the same place was named the Graues of Lust. Also there was another murmuring for water, insomuch that whereas they should haue craued water of God, they fell to storming against Moses, & would haue stoned him. For these causes it was Gods will that the markes of their disobedience should be printed vpon them that they might remēber their naughtinesse as long as they liued vppon the earth, & therefore he named those two places, the one Massa, and the other Meriba. As if he should say, yee haue striued with me, and are entered into contention against me, as though yee would bid me battell. Ye haue tempted me because ye knowe not yet my power, which hath shewed it selfe so many wayes vnto you. Thus much concerning the stories which Moses reheārseth here. In deede they deserue to bee layd forth more at length. Howbeit forasmuch as we haue here but a rehearsall of them as it were at a glaunce: we must deale so as we may profite by them, and take so much of them as may serue for our instruction.

Now then, seeing that God was so sore greeued with the murmuring of that people, in that they abode not the trauell patiently which he had layde vppon them: let vs note that there will be neuer the more excuse for vs nowadayes if we bow not downe our shoulders to beare the burthen meekely, without striuing against God. First there is this earthly wayfaring, whereunto God hath made vs subiect in this worlde. Although God gaue many men rest, so as they neuer goe frō home nor (as ye would say) out of their nests: yet are we misaduised if we passe not through this world as birdes vpon a bough, & be not as straungers in it. For else God disclaymeth vs & giueth vs ouer. Sith it is so: they that setle themselues in this world as though they should neuer goe out of it, doe banish themselues from Gods kingdome: and shewe ỳ the kingdome of heauen belongeth not vnto them. And let them not beguile thēselues by protesting that their intent is not so: for God hath auowed it to bee so, and the Apostle sayth expresly, ỳ forasmuch as ỳ fathers were as poore straungers here beneath: therefore did God also vouchsafe to call them his children. Now then as for them that are ashamed to be called straungers in this world: they must goe seeke their inheritance with the diuell: for they haue neither part nor portiō with God. And now must we apply ỳ thinges to our benefit which it pleaseth God to send vs. Wee see what miseries doe cōmonly hem vs in, insomuch that euen ỳ tenderest sort & such as seeme to haue ỳ world at will, are most feeble & weake, and are troubled wᵗ a nūber of griefes & vexations. Howbeit let euery man looke vpon himselfe, and according as God dealeth with vs, so let vs patiētly receiue ỳ afflictions ỳ he sendeth vs. If our state be hard and combersom, let vs not thinke ỳ if we murmure at it, our murmuring shall vanish away into the aire, but ỳ we must come to a reckoning for it before God. For if God send not down fyre from heauen after the same maner ỳ he did visibly punishe the Iewes for their murmuring: it is so much the woorse for vs. For if he winke at it, & punish vs not out of hand: his vengeance must needes be ỳ sorer & more terrible. And therefore let vs learne to liue vnder obedience to our God. Although wee be not handled as we would be in this earthly and slightful lyfe, but are faine to be trotting vp and downe: so as when wee woulde liue in rest, God driueth vs from place to place, and when we would faine be discharged of care, then are we most vexed: let vs receiue all that euer God sendeth vs, and let vs make our reckoning to passe through this worlde, after the same maner that this people were conueied through the wildernes. And let vs learne to practise this saying of our Lord Iesus Christ, that we must beare our crosse after him. Lyke as when a man goeth into the countrie, hee takes vp his trusse vpon his necke, and caryeth such thinges with him as he shall haue neede of: so must we bee loden with such fardell as God listeth to lay vppon vs. And let vs not looke one at another: for God intendeth not to handle vs all alike. Let such as haue most vexation of al, vnderstand that God doth it not without cause. And let such as haue lesse, thanke God for his bearing with their frailtie. But yet for all that, howsoeuer we fare, let vs beware that wee stand not in contention with God, by grudging that hee letteth vs not alone in such quietnesse as our flesshe woulde wishe and desire: for we wote not what is for our owne profite. Marke that for a speciall point.

But on the contrarie part, we see how men are giuen, not onely to their ease and commoditie: but also to superfluitie and wantonnesse, so as it should seeme that they wil needes be merie & driue away all care, whether God will or no. Whereas by the aduersities which God sendeth vs, he putteth vs in minde of our sinnes, and laboreth to withdraw vs from this world, as though he spurred vs forward to make the more hast vnto him: we not only cānot abide it, but also seeke meanes to rush forth into all inordinate pleasure, euen with open rebellion against him. If God spare vs: thē are we the more vnruly, whereas we should call our selues home vnto goodnes, and liue in the greater awe. And therefore let vs be aduised to benefite our selues by the example that is contained here.

As concerning the Temptation or Swife: let vs vnderstand that if necessitie pinch vs, so as we be driuen to any streite and know not where to become: we must resorte to our God with all lowlinesse, beseeching him to prouide a remedie for our neede: but yet in the meane while wee must be contented with his good will. If it please him to haue vs to languishe: let vs hold downe our neckes, and let vs not haue the stifnecked-nesse which Moses cōdemned heretofore in the people of old time. Also let vs vnderstand that it is Gods owne working, when he vouchsafeth to vphold vs in such sort as wee doe not vtterly quaile. For although wee doe hardly drag our limbes after vs, & we seeme euen to be at the last cast: yet doe we still feele some taste of the goodnesse of our God. Howsoeuer the world go with vs, let vs learne that wee must not tempt him, that is to say, wee must not giue our selues the bridle to aske this or that, but referre our selues wholy to his good will, and be so gouerned by him, as we may alwayes yeelde him his due obedience, and not raunge after our owne lustes lyke wilde beastes, as though wee would push at him with our hornes, but that if wee wishe the thing which seemeth expedient for vs, we doe it alwayes with this condition that God shall haue the maisterie of vs, and ouerrule all our passions and desires. If our minde moue vs to wishe or to say, I would faine haue this or that: Let vs looke that God haue the ouerruling of vs, and that we submit our selues so vnto him, as al our thoughts affections and lykinges be framed vnto his will, though it seeme neuer so hard vnto vs. Thus ye see what wee haue to note concerning the temptation that Moses speaketh of here, and concerning the strife at such time as the people were in a chafe and murmured against GOD.

And let vs knowe moreouer that wee bee no competent Iudges in owne case, least wee seeke fond excuses as wee be wont to doe. We will not be acknowen that we accuse God, though it bee so in deede: We will say wee intend not to aduance our selues against him to defy him: but yet is it so in deede. Yea and whereas the people were driuen to name the places of Meriba & Masa: they did it not of their owne good will, but it was Gods will that those names should remaine as presidentes of their rebellioustesse. Therefore let vs learne, that if wee bee not wholy obedient vnto God, so as we doe not any thing but by his good wil and leasure: our tempting of him is a prouoking of his wrath, as though we made a kinde of defiance to him. Afterwards followed the offence which the people committed in requiring flesh to eat. They held not themselues contented with Manna, but they would needes haue such vittels as they themselues liked: and they were not contented simply with flesh neither, but they would needes haue sauce, yea and daintie sauce to it. For they longed for the Garlike and Onyons and other like thinges which they had had in Egypt, and they would needes haue GOD to feede them with the same geere in the wildernesse. But it was a diuelish longing, which made them so refuse the sustenāce that God had giuen thē. Besides, what more? They had Manna daily from heauen, to feed vpō as much as they would: so as they might wel perceiue that God maintayned them by his power, but that seemed vnsauery to them. And why? Because it came of God. They would needes haue whatsoeuer they themselues liked, as it were in spite of him: insomuch that they fretted and chafed at his bringing of them out of Egypt, as who shoulde say they held skorne of the deliuerance which he had wrought for them. Sith wee see this, let vs looke to our selues, and let vs know that this fault is set forth vnto vs, to make vs beware that wee bee not guiltie of the lyke.

For wee must vnderstand that GOD maketh vs Iudges of the people of old time, to the ende that euery of vs shoulde condemne our selues in our owne cases. For why? If wee bee Iudges of suche as haue done amisse: thinke wee that GOD seeth not much clearelyer than wee? Now he is so gracious as to put ouer his office vnto vs, to the ende that euery of vs shoulde haue an eye to himselfe, and hauing pleaded guiltie, bee cast downe and humbled before him. Therefore let vs marke that the rehearsall of this storie, ought to leade vs to the condemning of our owne wicked affections, and make vs to consider what our lustes are, wherethrough wee cease not to prouoke the wrath of our God. And let vs marke first of all, that looke how many lustes are in our flesh: so many armed folkes haue we, which aduaunce themselues against God. And for the same cause doth Saint Paul say, that all the imaginations, conceites, and affections of our nature, serue to prouoke vs to fight against the righteousnesse of our God. And therefore whensoeuer we chance to lust after any thing, let not our flesshe ouermaister vs. And why? For all our senses are so corrupted: that although (to our seeming) the end of our wishes be good: yet notwithstanding, some excesse will euer be mingled with them, and God shall haue somewhat in them whereat to finde fault. And how faire and beautifull soeuer our desires are to the outward showe, there is alwayes some vice in them: and what shall wee then say of the sinfull lustes, which wee be driuen to condemne euen by our owne naturall iudgement? When a man desireth to haue wherewith to find his household, and trauelleth to get it: truely that desire is good of it selfe. But yet the same is matched with impatience, or with vnstayednesse, or with ouergreat care, or with vnbeliefe: and to be short God shall alwayes finde somewhat amisse in our desires, which of their owne nature are not euil. Howbeit, if a man rush out into pilling, and polling, and scratching, to beguile and deceiue his neighbor: is it not much worse than to haue a desire that might seeme good of it selfe? Though a man purpose to liue neuer so quietly with his wife, yet shall it alwayes be mingled with some worldly affections, so as our corruptiō wil needes bewray it selfe still, euen in the best thinges: and what will become of vs then, if wee giue our selues the bridle to whoredome? As much is to be sayd of all other thinges. And therefore let vs beare in minde, that although our desires appeare not to bee euill: yet are they euer matched with some vice & vnrighteousnesse before God. Beſides this,] wee haue also our fleshly lusts which make vs to shake off Gods yoke, so as wee cast our selues (as aduenture) some into blasphemie, some into gluttonie, some into vnruliness, some into wantonnesse, some into lecherie, some into extortion, some into crueltie, some into robberie, and other some into al maner of wickednesse. Now then, deserue not our lustes that God should rise vp to destroy vs for them, when wee be come to that poynt? Yes: for if the people of Israell had graues of luste: what shall become of vs? And therefore let vs learne that when we read these stories, God giueth vs warning to enter into ỹ examination of our faults, that vppon the knowing of them, wee shoulde craue forgiuenesse of them, and fall to such repentance, as may wholy tame vs and make vs flee vnto him, and not be giuen any more to our vices. But that is vnpossible for vs to doe, vntill wee haue so ouermastered our selues, as to mislyke our owne affections with full purpose to renounce them. Vntill a man bee subdued after that fashion, it is vnpossible for him to yeeld obedience vnto God, how faire apparance of vertue soeuer he haue. But what? So farre off are wee from minding these thinges, that by all lykelyhoode wee doe nothing else but blindfolde our eyes, that wee might not see our sinnes to seeke conuenient remedie for them. See here how the Iewes were condemned for requiring of water, and yet were they ready to dy for thirst. Yea, but the cause why they were not to bee excused, was for that they required it with murmuring. Whereas they should haue sayd, Lord thou knoweſt what is expedient for vs better thā wee our selues doe, and therefore wee referre our selues to thee, prouide thou for vs: in steade of vsing such humilitie, they fall to repining and storming. Now wee must not doe so: but wee must patiently tary Gods leasure, when hee giueth vs not thinges so soone as wee aske them: for hee can well skill to prouide for all our needes. In deed if it pleased him, hee could well content vs and giue vs all our wishes: but his will is not to maintaine vs here in such abundance, as wee might take occasion to holde skorne of the good that hee doth vs, and to despise it by treading it vnder our feete. Hee will haue vs to be meeke and lowly, that wee may learne to resorte vnto him. When a man is in poore estate, he beareth himselfe on hand that if God would giue him wherewith to maintaine himselfe plenteously, he would be wholy giuen to be thankefull towardes him for his pitying of him. But let him once come to wealth, and let God deale bountifully with him: and what will he doe? He wil lift vp himselfe against God, and forget him in such sorte, as if hee were not the same man that he was before. And this vice is tootoo common: insomuch that the more our Lord increaseth his benefites towardes vs, the more doe we seeme wilfull in despising him, and his so doing sharpneth our vnthankfulnesse and malice. And therefore let vs consider, that the thinges which are tolde vs concerning ỹ Iewes, belong vnto vs, forasmuch as we haue the lyke or greater vices in vs, than were in them: & we must vnderstand that Gods intent is to teach vs by them.

And specially whereas mention is made of their wilfull stubbornesse at Cades Barne, where they refused to goe foreward to enter into the inheritance that was promised them: let vs vnderstand that we be no lesse worthie of blame at this day before God, for that he cannot hold vs in, to make vs goe through with our course. To what purpose hath GOD called vs into his Church? It is (as I sayd afore) to the end that in passing through this world, wee shoulde not be wedded to it, but vse it altogether as a wayfaring, and as a straunge countrie, trauelling still through it towardes heauen. For beholde, our Lord cryeth to vs both early and late, that wee should goe on still to come vnto him. But we on the contrary part, voutsafe not to remoue one foote to goe to him: but in stead of setting forward we retire back, or else sit snugging still in our owne slothfulnesse. We see it is so. Now then, forasmuch as our Lord findeth vs so lazie and stubborne, that in stead of plucking vp a chearefull courage to goe foreward, and to hold on our course vntill wee bee come to the ende of it, wee resist him and are loth to passe any further: Let vs vnderstand ỳ this story is told vs, to cast vs vtterly down in our selues, so as we should not seeke any worthinesse in our owne persons, (as in deede there is none in vs:) But yelde God the whole prayse of his benefites, knowing that he is not bound at all on his side, but that hee doth all thinges of his own meere free goodnes and infinite mercie: and therefore that wee on our side ought to sigh, beseeching him to correct vs and reforme vs according to his will. And for the better perceiuing hereof, I pray you after what sort goe we forward when God calleth vs? Wee partly limp, and partely make many a false step. Let euery man examine himselfe, and see how foreward hee hath bin since the time that God hath reached him his hand. True it is that euen before wee knew the Gospell, wee were already without excuse of our rebelling against our God: but now seeing hee hath inlightened vs by his word, and shewed vs the way of saluation, and setteth his will before vs, saying, come, and reacheth vs his hand to guide vs: if of all this while wee haue not vouchsafed to come vnto him, how shall wee excuse our selues? Let euery of vs consider how hee dischargeth himselfe: and afterward let vs haue an eye to the common state. Wee can well speake of Gospellyke reformation, and it is a maruell to heare how wee will talke: but yet for all that, our filthinesse is so stinking, as is lothsome to beholde: and GOD needeth not to goe vp into his iudgement seate to giue sentence of it, for the very infidels and ignoraunt sorte can bee our Iudges. And of a trueth they may bee a great shame to vs, seeing our lyfe is so leawde and wicked, that euen the silie blinde sorte of Papistes may laugh vs to skorne. And surely if vtter confusion shoulde fall vppon our heades: wee haue well deserued it. For by our meanes Gods name is blasphemed: and yet notwithstanding wee regarde it not. Howbeit, the more that wee beforte our selues after that fashion in our vaine selfeflatterie: the more will GOD make vs feele in the end, that hee will not suffer his chastisements to bee lost.

Rom. 1. 20.

To bee shorte, let vs remember how Moses sayth heere, Euer sines the time that I haue known you, you haue alwayes bin rebellious against God. And this Rebelliousnesse whereof he speaketh is expressed lykewise in this saying that they resisted the mouth of God distrusting him and in crossing his will. Now then, if we wil know what it is to be rebellious: let vs first of all looke what God hath spoken. For the thing wherein hee intendeth to trye vs, is whether wee be willing to submit our selues simply in all respectes to his worde, after hee hath beene so gratious vnto vs as to teach vs. What else is the holy scripture, but an vttering or declaring of Gods will? And therefore all that euer is conteined there, is as though GOD opened his holy mouth, to tell vs what he requireth at our hand. Then if our lyfe bee not fully correspondent to Gods worde, whereof wee make profession: beholde, God complayneth of vs, and accuseth vs of rebelling against his mouth. And there are two partes of this rebelliousnesse. The one is when we distrust Gods promises, and the other is when wee disobey his commandement: & those two be the summe of all that is to bee learned in Gods word. When wee haue tossed and turned ouer the leaues of all the holy scripture neuer so much, there are but these two pointes contained in it: that is to wit, ỳ for as much as God being desirous to bee our father and Sauiour, openeth vs the infinite treasures of his mercie, calling vs to him, and setting his free goodnesse and free loue before vs: wee should beleeue his promises and rest wholly vppon them, saying, Lorde seeing thou art so freehearted as to offer thy selfe thus vnto vs: behold, wee cast all our care vpon thee, and hope for all welfare through thy bountifulnesse. The first thing then which we haue to doe, is to settle our selues vppon Gods promises, when he offereth them vnto vs. Secondly there is the obedience which God requireth, as if he should say vnto vs: Go to, I will haue ye to liue in such wise, as ye obey me and yeeld me such seruice, as your cõming to me be of your own accord. And here Moses saith ỳ the people were alwayes rebellious against Gods mouth, forasmuch as they obeyed not his commandements, nor trusted in his promises. Nowe let vs looke into our selues where is the faith ỳ we boast of? In deede we do wel vnough say ỳ we beleeue the Gospel: but if gods promises touched vs effectually, there would be another maner of stedfastnesse in vs, and we would not bow with euery winde like waueryng reedes, as we do. Our vnbeliefe bewrayes it self & we be too much conuicted of it: insomuch as we cannot trust God euen in worldly things. And if we cannot trust to him for small things, how is it possible that we should trust to him, for the euerlasting life? We haue dayly experience of his succour and helpe: & yet do we doubt thereof still. And how shall we then trust in him who the case concerneth inuisible things, as the lyfe to come which is hidden from vs till God discouer it vnto vs? Againe, doeth not this rebelliousnesse of ours in resisting him, shew it self in al our whole life? In deede wee will make signes of willingnesse to serue God: but yet is all but counterfetting. For let vs see if any of vs doo liue so faithfully and vprightly as wee ought to doo? Where is the louing kindnesse and charitie that ought to bee among the faithfull, and among Gods children? Nay, we bee rather like Cattes and dogges. And when the case requireth that wee should agree togither in well doeing, the worlde sees howe wee goe to worke. It may seeme that wee haue conspyred to goe the cleane contrarie way to that which God willeth and ordaineth. And this is not to be greatly wondered at. For if in things that are small and light, we shewe our selues to haue no great Christianitie in vs: we wil shew no lesse lewdnesse, when wee come to the thinges that are greater and more excellent. I cal them small things in comparison of the feare of God and the loue of his worde, which men may say they

ſee not in vs. For as concerning thoſe ſmall thinges, if we intend to make any countenance of deuocion to Godward: we can well abide that men ſhould condemne both extortion, deceit, cruelty, periurie, and ſuch other vices. When we come to Sermons, we can welinough pretend ỳ there is ſome agreement among vs, and ſpecially when we receiue the Lords ſupper: & yet notwithſtanding euē in that behalf there appeareth ſuch contempt of God, as we ought to be aſhamed of it. For I know that vpon the laſt Lordes day while we were miniſtring of the cōmunion, and while we ſhould haue aſſembled altogither, to make a general proteſtatiō of our faith, and to offer vp our praiers vnto God: about two hūdred people were occupied in gaming. In their going by before the Sermon began, a man would haue thought they had bin prepared to the Communion: but their mindes are ſo vppon their playing, that they ſpend euery Sabboth day in ſuch vnthriftineſſe. And it is meete that this ſhould bee tolde them openly, ſeeing it is apparant; & that euen little children perceiue the ſhamefulneſſe of it. Now then, let vs marke in feawe wordes, that Moſes ſpake not for his owne time onely, but for vs alſo in theſe dayes, who bee warned in the perſon of the Iewes to be aſhamed of our ſelues, and therewithall to ſeeke ỳ meanes that our God may receiue vs to pitie and mercie: which is, that after we haue acknowledged how guiltie wee bee before God: euerie of vs may learne, not onely to condemne our ſelues, but alſo to bow downe our neckes to craue forgiueneſſe of our former faultes at Gods hand, to the ende that being acquit by him, wee may alſo be guided and gouerned by his holy ſpirit: & that whereas wee haue bin ſtubborne againſt him heretofore, ſo as he could by no meanes weeld vs, wee may learne to yeeld our ſelues ſo obediently to him, that in ſtead of being as woode beaſtes, we may become meeke and mylde vnto him as ſheepe and lambes, and giue eare vnto his voyce, giuing it ſuch ſuperioritie ouer vs, as we may vtterly forſake all things that may hinder our honoring and ſeruing of him.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue done, ſo as wee may yeelde our ſelues to him with true repentance, & continue therein not for one day onely, but all our life long: and ỳ therewithal it may pleaſe him to beare with vs in all our infirmities, euen vntill he haue rid vs quite and cleane of them. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almightie GOD heauenly Father, &c.

On Munday the ix. of September. 1555.

The Lxviij. Sermon which is the ſeuenth vpon the ninth Chapter.

15 Then humbled I my ſelfe before the Lord fortie dayes and fortie nightes, for I humbled my ſelfe becauſe the Lord had ſaid that he would deſtroy you.

16 And I prayed to the Lord & ſaid: Lord God, deſtroy not thy people and thine heritage, which thou haſt gotten by thy mightie power, and whom thou haſt brought out of Egypt by ſtrong hand.

17 Bethinke thee of thy ſeruants Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob. Haue not an eye to the ſtubbornneſſe of this people, nor to their misbeleefe, nor to their ſinne:

18 Leaſt the inhabiters of the land from whence thou haſt brought vs, do ſay: bycauſe the Lorde could not bring them into the land wherof he had ſpoken to them, or becauſe he hated them: therefore hath he brought them forth to kill them in the wilderneſſe.

19 Moreouer, they be thy people, and thine heritage, whom thou haſt brought out with thy great power, and with thine arme ſtretched out.

MOſes goeth foreward here with the matter that he had begunne afore: which was, to make the people vnderſtand howe great the faulte was which they had committed. For wheras he boaſteth of Gods hearing of him, he doeth not to the intent the people ſhould thinke themſelues ſo much the more beholden to him therefore: that is not the thing which he looketh at: but that the people ſhould thenceforth liue in awe and humilitie, and beare in minde the faulte that they had committed, and conſider howe they had well deſerued to haue beene vtterly rooted out if God had not shewed them mercie. And he sayth that after he had lyen vpon the ground fortie dayes and fortie nightes, he was heard: and this is to the end that by such circumstance, the people may the better learne, that if GOD had not hearkened to that vehement and earnest prayer of his, they had beene vtterly vndone. It is an extraordinarie thing, that a man should continue sighing and weeping before God, fortie dayes and fortie nightes together: and no doubt but this power was giuen to Moses by miracle, lyke as was his fasting of fortie dayes and fortie nightes before. And to what purpose? To the end that the Lawe might bee the better authorized thereby. For it might well seeme that the couenant which God had made with the people, was quite broken and vtterly disanulled: and therefore it was expedient that Moses should once againe be separated from the company of men fortie dayes and fortie nightes, that by that meanes, new authoritie might be purchased. But yet for all that, we must marke well, that whereas Moses forbare meate and drinke fortie dayes and fortie nightes together, it was not done by humaine power, neither was it (to speake properly) a fast of sobrietie: (for hee was exempted from hunger and thirst:) but it was done to the end that the Lawe should be receiued with the greater reuerence, forasmuch as it came not of men, but Moses came downe from the mountaine as if an Angel had come downe from heauen. And his praying was for the sinnes of the people, that God would not looke vppon the idolatrie that had bin committed, but hold on still in his owne purpose. For although Moses had broken the tables, and that he had done it through the impulsion of Gods spirit: yet notwithstanding, (as hath bin said already,) he ceased not to haue compassion vppon the people which was worthie to haue bin rooted out. That is the effect of the matter which wee must looke vnto here.

And thereby we be put in minde, that if God forgiue vs any fall or offence, wee must not so forget it, but we must bethinke our selues to liue in the greater awe, and consider all our lyfe long how greatly we be bound vnto God for vttering so great goodnesse vnto vs. There are a number to bee seene, which doe but wring their mouthes when they woulde haue their faultes forgiuen them, and they neuer passe to thinke any more vppon them, to yeelde God his deserued prayse. Contrariwise it is shewed vs here by the example of the Iewes, that although God bee mercifull to vs, and list not to call our faultes to account: yet must not wee therefore thrust them vnder foote, but rather cal them to minde euery day, that it may first of all prouoke vs to repentance, assuring our selues that wee may fall eftsoone, if God preserue vs not: and secondly [make vs to consider] that we stand not but through his free mercie: and finally incourage vs to magnify his name for drawing vs out of y dungeon whereinto we were fallen. Seeing then that we be so much bound vnto him, let vs bee the willinger to serue and honor him. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to remember vppon this place.

Besides this, let vs marke well by the example of Moses, that it is not enough to pray vnto God in two or three wordes and as it were in poste: but that wee must continue in praying without being weary. And that is a poynt right necessarie to bee marked. For whereas there are many faults in vs, this is one of the greatest, that we cannot settle our selues vnto prayer, but wee bee fleeting, so as our mouthes are no sooner opened, but our wittes are by and by wandering elsewhere. And besides that, if we haue prayed vnto God once, wee thinke it enough and too much. Contrariwise we see that Moses was fortie dayes together, in continuall mourning for the offence of the people. Therefore in our praying vnto God, let vs learne to haue the perseuerance whereunto our Lorde Iesus exhorteth vs, saying that we must be importunate, and that it is not enough for vs to haue vttered our griefe vnto GOD lightly and once for all: but that we must resorte to him still, vntill he haue heard our requestes. Now then, here is a second lesson which we haue to gather vppon this place: which is, that in praying vnto God, we must haue a setlednesse of holding out to the end.

Also this praying of Moseses, sheweth vs what their duetie is, which haue the charge of other folke: namely, to pray to God to pitie such as shall haue offended. For it is not enough for such as haue publique charge to discharge their duetie to the worldewarde: but they must also turne vnto God. Wee see how the Apostles say that they must not onely preach the Gospell, but also giue themselues to prayer and supplication. Now, this belongeth to all the faithfull. For to pray vnto God is the chiefe duetie of our faith. And forasmuch as the Apostles had the chiefe charge of the Church it behoued this calling vpon God, to belong chiefly vnto them. And that is the cause why Saint Paul sayth, that hee humbleth himselfe for the Corinthians: as who should say hee ought to beare the chastisement of their sins in his owne person. For inasmuch as God had set him ouer that Church, it behooued him to beare the chiefe burden vppon his shoulders. Therefore such as haue the charge of preaching Gods word and of teaching in the Church, must not onely imploy themselues that way, but also to prayer. And chiefly when they see things go amisse, and disorders among the people: then ought they most specially to resorte vnto GOD, that he may prouide a remedie for it. This is the thing that is shewed vs by the example of Moses, in that it is sayd that hee taryed not till the people resorted to God for mercie, but sweed them the way, as he whom God had appointed to beare the burthen of the people, and to procure their welfare.

Now let vs come to the forme of the prayer that Moses maketh. Lord God (saith he) destroy not the people of thine heritage who thou hast redeemed by thy mighty power & strong hand, out of the land land of Egypt. Bethinke thy selfe of thy seruauntes Abraham, Isaac, and Iacobe and haue not an eye to the stubbornesse of this people, nor to their wickednesse, nor to their offence. Here we see what it is that Moses alledgeth vnto God: namely, his gracious fauour wherethrough he had chosen the ofspring of Abraham. And so we see here a good rule for vs to keepe in praying vnto God: which is, that if we intende to obtain our requests at his hand, we must not presume vppon any thing that is in our selues, but rather alledge his own goodnesse which hee hath made vs to feele. As if wee should say, Lord, go forward with thy work, thou hast begunne to call vs to thee, wee bee as much beholden to thy goodnesse as is possible: therefore holde thou on stil, finish the thing that thou hast begun, and let not thy worke stay vnperfected, as it is saide in the hundreth and eight and thirtith Psalme. And it is such a doctrine as wee may gather, vppon all the prayers that are conteined in the holy scripture.

Nowe wheras Moses saith thy people, and thine inheritance: he meaneth not that the people had purchased that dignitie themselues. It was a great honour that any one people of all mankinde shoulde be called Gods inheritance. Deserued they to bee in that estimation? Moses addeth immediatly, that there was nothing but stubbornesse, wickednesse, and sinne in them. It followeth then that all is to be referred to the free adoption, wherethrough God had chosen that people, as if hee shoulde say, I will haue the house of Abraham to reigne ouer it, there will I dwell, that Psal. 132.14. shalbe my Church, there wil I rest. God in so saying, had not respect whether the people were worthy of it or no: and it appeared by the effect, that they were a spitefull people: but whatsoeuer they were, God had made the said promise, which was not grounded vppon any deserts of man. The thing then that Moses setteth vs downe here, is this: Lorde haue mercy vpon thy people, and vpon thine heritage. And so, when wee resort to God to craue forgiuenesse of our sinnes, let vs learne to make none other enterance to finde fauour and to be hearde, than by alledging the benefites that we haue erst receiued at his hande. That (say I) is the gate that we must enter at in praying vnto God. Albeit we haue offended him and be neuer so wretched sinners: yet notwithstanding inasmuch as hee hath chosen vs for his flocke, and vouchsafed to vtter himselfe to vs, and to giue vs assurance that hee is our father and sauiour: wee may presse familiarly vnto him, hauing so sure a pledge of his goodnesse. But yet let vs beware of presumption, that wee seeke not any thing in our selues wherewith to binde God vnto vs, for we bee vtterly voide of any such thing: but let vs be contēted to offer vnto him y things which we hold of him: and in doing him homage for his benefites, let vs take corage to call vpon him, assuring our selues that he will continue thē still, & that as he hath shewed himself liberall towards vs heretofore, so he wil giue vs assurance y he wil not faile vs hereafter. This in effect is the thing which we haue to remember in this saying of Moses, where he calleth the Iewes Gods people and heritage.

Now he addeth, that God had brought them out of the land of Egypt by his mightie power and with a strong hand, cuē to make it knowen that they were his inheritance, by a vysible token, and by the apparant effect of it. True it is that the people shold haue grounded themselues vpon the promise: and Moses hath followed the same order here. For he saith not first, Lorde y haste brought vs out of Egypt, and afterward vpheld vs by thy power when thou madest vs to passe through y wilderneste: but he saith expresly, we be thy people and thine inheritance. And wherupon rested he? Vpon the promise, because God had spoken the word, saying, I will bee the Sauiour of thy lynage. But yet therewithall hee letteth not to alledge the saide deliuerance also, to proue that God counted that people for his heritage. For when God deliuered the Iewes out of Egypt, & reached them his hand to bring them out: wher of came it? It was as a sealing of the couenant that had beene made by worde of mouth. God (say I) did shewe as then, that the former promising vnto Abraham, that he would be the God of his linage, was not in vaine. And for the same cause doth Moses set down both twaine of them here. He beginneth with the promise, and afterward addeth what insued thereof: that is to wit the deliuerance, which was a sure warrant that he ment not to beguile his seruaunt Abraham, when he tolde him as I haue tolde you before. Wherfore let vs briefly beare in mind that if we intend to haue accesse vnto god to rest vpon his goodnes, we must beginne at his worde: and afterward we must also acknowledge the benefites that wee haue felt at his hande. And if we haue founde that hee hath not beguiled vs by his promises, it is as a former warrant whereby hee intendeth to confirme and assure vs the better. Loe heere a goodly matching, namely that wee yeelde such honour vnto Gods worde, as to trust assuredly thereunto: and therewithall that we be not thankelesse for the goodnesse which he hath shewed vs indeede; but make the same to serue vs as a president to ratifie our faith, to the ende that his worde haue the greater shewe and power in vs, and wee bee the more proueked to call vppon him, not doubting at all but that wee shall finde him the same that hee hath shewed himselfe to be, euen to the ende. Thus yee see howe it behoueth vs to put the order in vre which Moses keepeth here, first in setting down Gods promise whereby he had adopted y people of Israel, & afterward in adding y he had delmered them out of the lande of Egypt, thereby ratifying the thing that he had spoken to his seruaunt Abraham.

Gen. 17.7.

Now he addeth that God should not haue an eye to the peoples stubbornesse, wickednesse, or offence. This is not added without cause. For when we come to pray God to performe his promise, and to bring the grace of his adoption to his ende: in the meane whyle our owne consciences vpbraid vs, so as wee see well that we be guilty before him: it is ynough to foreclose y way to our prayers. For when wee offende God, wee breake his couenant as much as in vs lyes, and we stop him from performing of his promise. To be short, we deserue to be giuen ouer of the Lord, when wee keepe not faith and troth towardes him. For this cause doth Moses say here, Lorde haue not an eye to the stubbornesse of this people. So then, it is not ynough for vs to pray God to goe through with the thing that he shall haue begun in vs, and to bring his grace to perfection: but wee must expressly pray him, that although hee finde faultes and offences in vs, (as indeede the number of them is infinite): yet that he forbeare not to take vs still for his people: and that although we deserue to be forsaken of him for our sinnes inasmuch as wee haue broken his couenant, yet notwithstanding he cease not to keepe promise with vs still, and to make vs feele ỹ fruit thereof, and to forgiue our sinnes in such wise, as we may neuer cease to continue in his adoption: & that although our straying away was ynough to bereaue vs of the inheriting of our saluation, yet notwithstanding hee cease not to take vs for his children still. To bee short, whensoeuer wee resort vnto God, wee must acknowledge our sins with all humilitie. For it will be to no purpose for vs to say, Lorde thou hast promised vs, thou hast tolde vs that thou of thy goodnesse wilt bee merciful to vs, thou hast declared that thou wilt bee our father, wee haue thy promise: it will not boote vs to say all these thinges: for all shall bee ouerthrowen with one worde, because wee haue done amisse, and haue not kept the course whervnto God called vs, but haue drawen cleane backe. Therfore we be warned, that whensoeuer we pray vnto God, wee must acknowledge our faultes, and confesse them freely, that God may not cease to haue pitie vppon vs, specially when wee shall haue committed any grosse fault, as this people had done in committing abhominable ydolatrie. The greater then that our sinnes bee, the more let vs cast downe and humble our selues, to craue pardon of our God by confessing wherin we haue offended him. After that manner must we deale. And it is certaine, that if euerie of vs consider well his owne life without flatterie, he shall finde himself exceedingly indaungered vnto God, and we shall always haue good cause to be ashamed of our selues. And therefore when we pray, let vs beare these two things in remembrance: namely, that although we be neuer so wretched, yet notwithstanding forasmuch as God hath chosen vs for his people, wee must come to him familiarly and without doubting, for he guideth vs thither and openeth vs ỹ gate by his promise, & that must be our grounde to stande vpon. Againe, we must bethinke vs of our sinnes, so as we may feele them & be deadly wounded by them, to the ende we may bee sorie for them before God, & beseech him (notwithstanding our vnworthines) to applie his promises to our saluation, when it shall haue pleased him to bury our sinnes & to receiue vs to mercy. Yea & let vs mark well ỹ wordes ỹ are set downe here, the stubbornes of the people, their wickednes, and their sin. For Moses here maketh not a ceremonious confession as these shameless fort doe, that is to say, in manner the greater part, when they haue done amisse, do beare themselues in hand that it is ynough to haue saide in one woorde, I grant it is a fault: but ye must cõsider I am a man, I am not as a timberlog. It is ynough for them (say I) that they excuse not thẽselues altogether. But we must come after another fashion, as we see by example here. For first of all Moses setteth downe Stubbornes: shewing thereby that there was a horrible rebeliousnes in that people. Now he addeth wickednes: wherin he betokeneth ỹ the people were starke naught: for ỹ word that he vseth, importeth such a leawdnes, that they which are so termed are disordered in their whole life. And lastly he addeth Sinne, that is to say ỹ particular fault which they had committed, namely their offence in making themselues an ydol. And so we see that he acknowledgeth the peoples offences in good earnest, to condemne them.

Nowe like as Moses speaketh here of the people: so do we see that Daniel speaketh of himself for in his report howe he confessed his own sin and the sinnes of the people, he saieth, Lord we haue sinned, wee haue offended thee, wee haue done wickedly, we bee transgressors, our sinnes are outragious, and our iniquities are exceeding great. Daniel goeth not to worke by halues in confessing that himselfe and the rest of the people had done amisse and deserued to bee chastised at Gods hande: but he saith flatly, we be wicked and we haue behaued our selues leawdly, we haue beene disobedient and vntrue to our God, we haue prouoked his wrath too much, and we be cursed and damned, vnlesse God powre out ỹ infinite treasures of his mercy vppon vs. Ye see then how the true confession which God requireth at our handes, is not to come to him and to say in one worde, I haue done amisse: but to be so abashed as to acknowledge our selues blameworthy in all respects, and to be dismayed at the remembrance of our offences, like wretched offenders not looking to haue our indictements read vnto vs, not to haue articles alledged against vs, but accusing our selues aforehand in such sort as God may accept our submission when we shall haue examined our faults throughly, not only in generall but also in particular. And in verie deede, after that Moses had spoken of Stubbornesse and wickednes: he addeth the Offence that ỹ people had committed. Whereby hee meaneth that it is not ynough to say, we were conceiued in sinne, it is horrible to see howe all things are out of order in our whole life: but when we haue offended God any maner of way, we must vnderstand it, as we see how Dauid cõfesseth generally ỹ there was nothing in him but vtter corrupcõ, and ỹ he brought nothing w̃ him from his mothers wombe but ỹ inheriting of death, & therwithall faileth not to confesse ỹ sin particularlie which he had committed, not wrapping it vp amõg ỹ other to make as though he wist not of it: but setting down both twaine of thẽ, as we see ỹ Moses doth in this text. Wherefore when we shall haue committed any offence, let vs learne to feele it, & to confesse it freely before God. And let the same lead vs yet further: that is to wit, to haue an eye to the offences of our whole life, and to acknowledge our selues altogether indangered vnto God, except hee receiue vs to mercie. And aboue all thinges, let vs acknowledge the hardnesse of our hearts, in that wee cannot submit our selues to God because wee be stubborne against him, and all the affections of our flesh are at enmitie with him. After that manner (say I) must we confesse our faults, if we minde to obtaine forgiuenesse of them. For as for them ỹ come to God ceremoniously, cõfessing thẽselues to haue done amisse, and not being touched to the quicke with their lewdnesse, nor minding to acknowledge it in their hearts: they doe but play mockeholyday, and they shall feele with whom they haue to do, and that God is not an earthly iudge that can be deceiued when men craue pardon feynedly. And therefore when we pray vnto God, let euerie of vs quicken vp himselfe in acknowledging our faults better than we haue bin wont to do: & let the same so pull vs downe, as wee may not wote what to say, but thus, Alas Lord what should become of vs if it were not for thine inestimable mercie? For beholde, wee be euen as it were vterly ouerwhelmed: and though we knewe but the hundreth part of the offences that wee haue committed, surely it were ynough to sinke vs downe to the bottomlesse pit, vnlesse thou remedy it. And as for thee that iudgest after a farre other fashion: howe shoulde we be able to stand in thy presence, if thou wouldest vse thy rigour towards vs? Loe here the right lowlinesse which God commaundeth: which is, that when wee be so ashamed of our sinnes as we wote not what to say, wee flee for refuge to Gods mercy hoping ỹ howsoeuer the case stand, he of his great goodnesse wil not refuse to take vs to mercie.

Nowe to the ende that Moses may obtaine his requeſt, hee beseecheth God expreſly to bee mindfull of his seruaunts Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob: and that was by reason of the couenant that he had made with them, for in the same couenant there was this article, I will be thy God and the God of thy seede after thee. Yee see here howe God took the children of Abraham before they were borne, adopting them to bee his Church, and to be inheriters not onely of the Lande of Chanaan, but also of the kingdome of heauen. But how doe the children of Abraham behaue themselues? Leawdly. They falsifie their faith vnto God and become backesliders, so as they deserue to be cut off from his house. Lorde (saith Moses) haue not an eye to their faultes and offences, but bee mindfull of thy couenant which thou madest with thy seruaunts Abraham Isaac, and Iacob. Nowe wee see to what purpose Moses alledgeth here the holy Patriarks. It is not to make them Aduocates and Patrons before God as the Papistes doe, who alledge these textes to proue their owne forgeries of hauing the saints to bee their intercessors. What, say they? Is it not written that God should bee mindfull of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, and yet they were deade long afore? Seeing that the fathers vsed such speech, why shoulde not the saincts alreadie deceased bee made patrons and aduocates, to make intercession for them that are aliue? Surely this commeth of too grosse beastlinesse. For they consider not in what manner Moses alledgeth these persons. I haue tolde you it afore: for God had promised them that hee woulde bee the sauiour of their linage, and had giuen them his promise as a pledge, not only on their owne behalfe, but also for all their successours. And that is ỹ cause why Iacob at his death or a little before, said, let my name be called vpõ ouer Ephraim and Manasses, for his meaning was to make two tribes of them, notwithstanding that they had both but one heade, that is to wit Ioseph first of al, & he intended that he shold haue a double portion. Why so? Iacob was in Egypt, not onely as a poore straunger like to haue starued for hunger if he had not come thither: but also as a man shaken off in scorne & disdain. It is manifest that the Egyptians shunned the Iewes, and accounted them as vncleane people. Neuertheless although Iacob had not any house of his owne, but was there as a slaue & banished thither as into an odde nooke of ỹ realm: yet notwithstanding hee assigneth a double portion to Ephraim and Manasses. But [in so doing] hee had an eye to the promise that God had made to him; That is the cause why hee saieth, Let my name bee called vppon ouer them, and let them bee taken and esteemed as two of mine owne children. According hereunto it is saide, that God shoulde remember Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, as we see in Exodus, where God intending to acquaint himselfe with his people, alledgeth the same for a preface: as if he should say, I haue bounde my selfe in the hande of Abraham. And therby he sendeth them back to the promise as it was made and set downe in Genesis, where God saide, that in the ende of fourehundred yeares, after they had beene oppressed with grieuous tyranny, he woulde deliuer them. Nowe then, it is not to be doubted, but that Moseses alledging of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, is to ỹ end that God should performe his couenant in deede, and not cease to be constant in his purpose and in discharging of his promise, notwithstanding the wickednes of mẽ. And so we see how the Papistes haue falsly abused the holy scripture, yea & shewed themselues so shameleſse and fond, that euen little children may perceiue their beastlinesse. Wherefore we ought so little to be moued with these texts: that they do rather make wholly against them. And so ye see why Moses alledgeth Abraham, Isaac, & Iacob. He groundeth himselfe vpon Gods word.

Likewise when wee pray, before wee open our mouth wee must be taught of God, hee must direct vs by his worde, for wee cannot call vpon him rightly, except hee haue first preuented vs and called vs to him, so as wee bee sure that hee will heare vs. For as for the man that doubteth and floteth like the waues of the sea (saieth Sainct Iames), let him not looke to obtaine any thing. So then our prayers boote vs not at all, without certaintie of faith. Now let vs see whence wee may gette such certaintie

of faith. Surely euen by Gods worde, and that is it that Moſes hath followed. Hee knewe the promiſe that had proceeded out of Gods mouth, wherupon he reſteth, & therupon maketh mention of Abraham Iſaac & Iacob. And why? For it was they ỹ had receiued the promiſe, as well in their owne behalfe, as in the behalf of their ſucceſſors. But now do we ſee that we haue a Mediator to ratifie the new couenant that God hath made with vs. Before Ieſus Chriſt came into the worlde, Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob were as mediators after a ſort, becauſe they receiued ỹ promiſe in the name of ỹ whole Church. But nowe God ſendeth vs backe to his only ſonne, in whoſe perſon it is his will to ratifie all that euer he had promiſed. How then ſhall we haue any certainty, except we repaire to our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and pray to God his father to remember him, & not to looke at vs, as in verie deede the auncient fathers haue ſhewed vs the good way alreadie in the time of the ſhadows, although they had not the trueth ſo fully as wee haue it in the Goſpel? For ſince the time that the kingdome was ſetled in the houſe of Dauid, and this promiſe made, He ſhalbe my ſon: we ſee that ỹ fathers prayed after this manner: Lord looke vpon the countenance of thy Chriſt or thine anointed. But they ſpake of Dauids ſucceſſors. It is true: Howbeit foraſmuch as that temporall kingdome was a figure of the kingdome that is prepared for vs in the perſon of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt: ỹ auncient fathers looked thereat as it were to behold Ieſus Chriſt in a glaſſe. Now then ſeeing ỹ the ſonne of God is come, & hath tolde vs ỹ it is hee to whom we muſt repayre: what excuſe wil there be for vs, if we roue heere and there, and ſeeke other mediators to reſort vnto? Is it not a bereauing of Gods ſonne of his office? yes: for hee is not as was Abraham, or as was Dauid and al his linage: but hee is the true high prieſt which hath appeaſed Gods wrath towardes vs. And hee hath not onely receiued the couenaunt, ſo as he may ſay that God hath tolde him that hee will accept all ſuch as ſubmit themſelues vnto him: but he hath alſo ratified the ſame couenant with his owne bloud: that is the ſeale which he hath ſet vnto it. Then if men will not bee contented with ſuch confirmation of Gods promiſes as is made in the perſon of his ſonne: is it not a treading of his bloude vnder foote to the vttermoſt of their power, and a ſtriuing to make it of none effect? Yes: and ſo we ſee that this text is ſo little able to arme the Papiſts, that it doth rather condemne them of vnthankfulneſſe before God, in that they haue (to the vttermoſt of their power) diſabled the grace that was brought them by the ſonne of God, and not conſidered that Gods adopting of vs was in his hand and by his means, who hath accompliſhed Gods promiſes in ſuch wiſe by his bloude as we may aſſure our ſelues of them without any doubting. Therefore let vs mark wel that whenſoeuer we ſeeke any patrons and aduocats, it is an aboliſhing of the death & paſſion of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, and therwithall an vtter diſanulling of all Gods promiſes, which ought to bee ſprinkled with his bloud, according as wee ſee howe it was commaunded in the Lawe, that the booke ſhould be beſprinkled with the bloude of the ſolemne ſacrifice that was to be offered. When a ſacrifice was to be offred, the bloud of it was to be reſerued, & ſprinkled vppon the tabernacle, vppon the altar, and vpon the booke of the Law: to doe vs to wit, that there is none other meane to aſſure vs of Gods promiſes, than by the beſprinkling of them with the bloude of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. For as for ſuch as runne gadding after their owne imaginations, ſaying wee muſt haue ſuch a patrone and ſuch an aduocate: they (as much as in them lyeth) ſo drayne and drie vp the bloude of Gods ſonne, as it may giue no more force to the promiſes to aſſure vs of our ſaluation.

Pſal. 27. & 84. 10. & 132. 10.

Heb. 9. 11. 12 14.

Furthermore let vs marke that the Papiſts haue in all reſpects defaced ỹ office of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. For by their making of the ſaintes to be their patrons & aduocates, they haue alſo made thē as good as mediators, ſo as we ſhould obtaine fauour at Gods hand by their meanes. They ſay not onely Lorde heare the prayer of ſuch a one or ſuch a one: but alſo, for his prayers ſake or for his deſerts ſake. But both theſe things belong peculiarly to our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. For to ſeeke to the merits or deſertes of men, is to ſtay vpon a craſed or broken reede, and that is the next way to make vs tumble downe, yea and it is as the ſliuers of a reede that will alſo wound vs beſides our falling. Wherefore let vs vnderſtand, that in ſo doing wee forſake the ſonne of God and bereaue him of his office.

Againe, as touching prayer and ſupplication, it is true that we ought to pray one for another as long as wee liue vppon the earth: and we haue ſeene the example thereof in Moſes: yea and wee haue ſeene it in ſuch wiſe, as ſufficeth to ſhewe vs that our prayers are not vaine nor vnprofitable, but that God maketh them auailable and heareth them, when wee pray one for another: Howbeit, that is but while we liue aliue. Moreouer, if wee fall to ſeeking of patrones and aduocates vppon our owne heades, without any warrant of holy ſcripture: it is no great a deſpiſing of God. For wee follow not the manner of praying which God hath ordeyned, and therefore it is a diueliſh malapertneſſe for men to preſume to enter into the kingdome of heauen, there to appoint officers, as though God had made them Lord great maſters there. Nowe then let vs learne that wee muſt let our Lord Ieſus Chriſt alone with the office of aduocate, that hee may be our ſpokeſman for vs, & giue vs acceſſe & means to be accepted at Gods hand. Moreouer, we muſt not imagine any meriting or deſeruing in any mortall creature, no not euen in the Angels of heauē, but we receiue ỹ meriting of Ieſus Chriſt, which thing was not in ỹ holy Patriarks, nor in Dauid, nor in any of his ſucceſſors, for God adopted them freely. But it was his will that in Ieſus Chriſt our ſinnes ſhould bee wyped out, and our debts diſcharged, and ỹ by his obedience righteouſneſſe ſhoulde bee purchaſed vnto vs. That therefore is the thing that wee muſt reſorte vnto.

Wher-

Wherefore let vs learne, that if the fathers of olde time, when they minded to obtaine fauour at Gods hand, alledged Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, and consequently Dauid in his order, because he was ordeined to be a figure of our Lord Iesus Christ: if this were vsed in the time that things were yet darke: wee ought to take good heede that wee swarue not to the right hand nor to the left, now that God hath reuealed himselfe fully vnto vsbut that we direct our faith to Iesus Christ, assuring our selues that for his sake God his father hath adopted vs, and liketh well of vs by his meanes, and graunteth vs our requestes. Besides this, forasmuch as ỹ scripture saith that he is giuẽ vs to be our aduocate, that he maketh intercession for vs, and that for his sake we may rest vpon Gods mercie: Let vs not doubt but he will shewe himselfe fauourable vnto vs. Seeing that the scripture fathereth these thinges vppon Iesus Christ, let vs beware that wee rob him not of them, and that we play not the Papistes, who by their praying to their Hesaincts & Shesaints, doe well shewe that Iesus Christ sufficeth them not, and that because they pretende the name of God, they prouoke his vengeance more and more against them. We see also howe God hath blinded them & giuen them vp to a hellish rage, so as they thinke it not ynough to say, These are our patrons and aduocates: but also they make no difference betweene God, and a sainct that they haue forged of their owne braine. For they say, Our father which art in heauen, as wel kneeling before a puppet, as if they spake to GOD himselfe. But yet howe make they their prayers? I shall not neede to speake heere, neither of the Apostles not of the Prophetes: for they haue saincts which neuer were in the world. And although they take the prophets and Apostles, yet they pray to them as to God, and with the same speech and stile. We see then that they are vtterly brutish, and that God hath giuen them vp to a reprobate sense. And it is good reason, because they haue robbed Christ of his dignitie wherein God his father had set him, and are not contented with him as with their only aduocate and intercessor, but are run astray here & there. Therfore it is meete that God should withdraw himselfe from them and forsake them, that they might fall into such extremitie as wee see they be falne into. Wherefore let vs for our part beware that wee hold fast the simplicitie which the scripture sheweth vs: that is to wit, that in calling vpon God, we haue our eye vpon our Lorde Iesus Christ: and againe that in asmuch as God hath stablished his couenãt for euer in his name, we doubt not but that we be heard as oft as wee come vnto God by him, and that he is mercifull vnto vs.

1. Iohn 2. 1.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our sins, praying him to make vs feele them ỹ better, that we may acknowledge them rightly both with heart & mouth, and bee brought to true amendment, & be so humbled, ỹ by glorifying him as he is worthy, and by acknowledging what goodnes he vseth towards vs, we may be prouoked to serue him with the better corage: and he beare with vs in our infirmities as long as we be in this worlde, vntill we be come to him into his heauẽly kingdom, & he haue made vs partakers of his endlesse glorie. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, &c.

On Tewsday the x. of September. 1555.

The Lxix. Sermon, which is the first vpon the tenth Chapter.

THe same time the Lorde saide, cut thee two tables of stone like the first, and come vp to mee into the mountaine, and make thee an Arke of wood.

2 And I will write in those Tables, the wordes that were written in the former tables, which thou hast broken: and thou shalt put them in the Arke.

3 So I made an Arke of Setimwood, and hewed two tables like the first, and went vp into the mountaine, hauing the two tables in my hande:

4 Then wrate he in the Tables as he had written afore, euen the tenne sayings which the Lorde had spoken vpon the mountaine, from the middes of the fire in the day of your comming together. And afterwarde the Lorde gaue them to me,

5 And I turned me, and went downe from the hill, and put them into the Ark which I had made: and they were there as the Lord had commaunded me.

6 And the children of Israel departed from Beroth of the children of Iaacan towards Mosera, where Aaron died, and was buried there. And Eleazar his sonne executed the office of high priest in his stead.

7 From thence they went towarde Gadgad, and from Gadgad towards Gesbatha, in the Countrie where running riuers are.

8 The same time the Lord sorted out the tribe of Leuie, to beare the Arke of the Lords couenant, and to stande in the Lords presence, to minister vnto him, and to blesse in his name, euen to this day.

WE haue seen alredie here tofore the thing ỳ Moses rehearseth here, ỳ is to wit, ỳ God wrate new againe ỳ ten cõmãdements of his law in two Tables of stone: & that was done to the end ỳ the people should the better consider, that the couenant which God had made with them, was of his own onely mercy. For we see how God had giuen ouer ỳ people and it was all one as if he had thrust them into the comm6 aray of other men, which are vtterly accursed and estraunged from God. Truely Gods former choosing of ỳ people, was of his owne free goodnes. For (as we haue seen) none of them was yet borne, when he made his promise with his seruant Abraham: & therefore needes must they acknowledge ỳ his choosing of them, was not in respect of any desert of their owne. Howbeit forasmuch as men labour al that they can, to darken Gods free fauor, & seeke pretie fond deuises to chalenge to themselues some peece of their own saluation: it was expedient to haue it fully shewed, ỳ God receiued ỳ people to mercy againe the second time, without any respect whether they were worthie of it or no, but onely of his owne mere goodnesse. Men are of opinion, ỳ when God chose them, he foresawe what maner of ones they should be, accordingly as we see how this diuelish errour hath alwayes raigned, and ỳ there are yet still some fantastical persons, which wil needes haue Gods election to be grounded vpon his foreknowledge, ỳ is to say, when God chose whom he listed before the making of ỳ world, they fall to glosing thereupon, ỳ he foreknew who should be worthy of it, & therfore marked them out for the same purpose, and in the same respect preferred them before those whom he knew would become wicked. But ỳ is cleane contrarie to ỳ teaching of the holy scripture. For ỳ teacheth vs, ỳ the cause of Gods chosing of vs is taken from out of himself, ỳ is to say, of his owne only free goodnes: for he shal neuer finde any thing in vs, why he should be inclined to loue vs. Howbeit to the end ỳ this may be the better perceiued in the things which God hath shewed vs in the people of Israel: he chose ỳ offspring of Abraham. And wherefore? Abrahã was a fillie soule, he had neither nobilitie nor worship in him, he was not of any great reputation to the worldward: & yet notwithstanding God marked him out, & chose him alone & his houshold fro all others. And what maner of houshold was it? Was there yet any likelyhood in it? Nay. Abraham was yet childishe, hee was barrain, hee was vtterly past hope of euer hauing any issue. Now then Gods choosing of Abrahã, was when he was as a blocke alreadie dead aforehand: and therefore S. Paule saith, ỳ in the person of Abraham, God shewed ỳ he chose the thinges which are not, of purpose to giue them being. And for ỳ same cause it is said in the first Chapter of ỳ first Epistle to the Corinthians, ỳ we be of God, that is to say, ỳ he giueth vs being vnto saluation, because he hath vouchsafed to choose vs for we be nothing at all in our selues. Yet notwithstanding, this people made great account of themselues, & bare themselues in hand that they were better than al ỳ world. For the which cause, the couenant & adoption ỳ god had made with that linage was broken off: & so ye see that the people of Israel were reiected at God hands. Yet & wel worthy were they to bee abhorred, inasmuch ỳ this sentence of condemnation was alredy giuen vpon them, that they should bee rooted out of ỳ world, & the remembrance of them be vtterly destroyed. So little cause then had the children of Israel to make any boast of themselues, or to vaunt vpon them aboue the heathẽ: ỳ they were thus beneath them, and vtterly disclaimed and condemned at Gods hand, as whom hee shewed to haue nothing else but curse dnesse in them. Now therefore it behoueth them to know: ỳ whereas God giueth them his Law, & teacheth them, & performeth his promise towards them all this is done of so high & infinite fauor, as ought in maner to make them astonished. For what a thing was it, ỳ God after ỳ breaking of ỳ tables of the couenant, did yet still vouchsafe to haue pity vpon ỳ wretched people? Beholde, the two tables were not writtẽ by mans hand, but by gods hãd, ỳ is to say by his power: & ỳ was a myracle. And what shal a man say to it, ỳ Gods own workmanship should be defaced? Was it not meete that ỳ people which were the cause therof, should haue perished vtterly? If we make cõparison betwene Gods word, & mens saluation: surely Gods word is far ỳ preciouser. But behold, ỳ word of God ỳ is written, I meane ỳ writing ỳ was set down in ỳ two tables of stone, came as it were from heauen, & was not ỳ workmanship of man: God himselfe wrought it of his own power. What punishment then ought they to receiue, which committed so great and heinous a fault, as ỳ the thing which God had ingrauen with his own hand, was found to be broken & brought to nought for it? We see then ỳ God magnified his inestimable goodnes towards this people, in ỳ he vouchsafed ỳ the two tables should be made new againe, and that his law should be registred in them new againe, as a perpetuall monument that he was the protector of Abrahams linage, & intended to keepe them to himself for his own flock. Therefore it is not without cause, that Moses maketh mention here of his making of the two tables new againe, & of his offering of them vnto God, & of the writing of the ten cómandements in them. Surely, it was a thing worthie of remembrance, & wherein mé ought to exercise thémselues day & night, to know ỳ God hauing entred freely in league with ỳ one house, was not contented with that alone, but although their successours became a frowarde and crabbed nation, vtterly rebellious & as full of shameful churlishnes as might be: yet he ceassed not to continue his couenant, yea, & moreouer to renew it againe with them, & to set it in the former state.

And herein we see ỳ he had not an eye to mé, nor to their worthines, but wil haue thé to think themselues beholden to him for al things: insomuch that he ouercommeth al ỳ lewdnes & frowardnes of men by his goodnes, adopting euen those to be of his house & to be his heirs, which shew themselues vnworthie of the good that he had done for them. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in mind. And we must marke that Moses spake not for his own time onely; but that the same doctrine toucheth vs as much or more at this day, than euer it did them: specially if wee can consider the likenes ỳ is betweene vs & the people of old time. In deede we haue not nowadayes the law written in tables of stone; but wee haue Gods grace much largelier towardes vs, & which deserueth to be much more highly esteemed, because we be sure that he taketh vs for his church, & wil haue vs to be ruled by him. Now let vs see whence this proceedeth, & what is ỳ cause thereof. True it is ỳ if we haue an eye to ỳ things ỳ were giuen vs in our father Adam, we be creatures shaped after the image of God. But we (to ỳ vttermost of our power) haue defaced Gods image in vs, & wee be so marred & corrupted by original sin, that God disclaimeth vs, & we be not worthie to be counted his creatures: & yet for all that, he vouchsafeth to gather vs to himself. For in baptisme we haue gods couenant ingraued as it were in our bodies; whereby he doth vs to vnderstand, ỳ he vouchsafeth to take vs for his people & inheritance. Now haue we any worthines whereby to attaine to so great a benefit? Alas, no: for we be giltie aforehand of ỳ defacing of gods image. True it is ỳ that commeth of ỳ roote of ỳ first man: but yet are not we our selues faultles. Againe, how haue we withdrawen our selues fró God, euen after baptisme? for we haue not onely cómitted small faults, as befalleth to ỳ faithfull to do: but also in the time of our idolatrie & superstitiõ, we haue brought to nothing al ỳ grace that was promised vs in baptisme, wee haue renounced the saluation that was purchaced vs by our Lord Iesus Christ, we haue forsaken our god, & we haue broken the spirituall wedlocke which hee had contracted with vs, so as there hath bin nothing in vs but corruption, by gadding away after our own superstitions: & yet for al this, he hath not failed to returne vnto vs, & to bring vs back againe into the way of saluation. Sith we see this, ought it not to be a sufficient proofe of Gods infinit goodnes towards vs, to make vs lay away al fond imagination of deseruing, & to acknowledge our selues beholden to God for all things? Yes: & it is the same thing ỳ I alleaged cuẽ now out of S. Pauls sayings, where God sheweth vs, ỳ we be of him, not in respect that we be men, but in respect ỳ we be his workmãship, according as it is shewed in the second to the Ephesians, ỳ he hath shaped vs: for otherwise there is nothing but wickednes in vs, because our nature will alwayes be found to be vtterly frowarde & accursed. Thus ye see ỳ comparison which we ought to make betweene our selues & the people of olde time, to bring our selues low & to make our selues perceiue ỳ wee be the more bound vnto God for ỳ free mercie which he hath bestowed vppon vs, in vouchsafing to take vs to be of his Church, in which respect we be (say I) more bound vnto him than were the Iewes.

Eph.2.10.

Now it is true ỳ gods writing of his law in two tables of stone (as I haue declared already herebefore specially in the first place) was to ỳ intent ỳ his doctrine should abide sure. For he had an eye to ỳ cómon trade among men, who vpon the making of leags & alliances, are wont to haue thé ingrauen in stone or brasse. After ỳ same maner it was Gods wil ỳ his law should, for ỳ better continuance therof, be grauen in two stones. Ye see then how God doth as it were passe a solemn couenant. Neuertheless wee must therwithall also come to the figure: namely, ỳ the writing of the law after ỳ fashion in a cupple of stones, serued to shew ỳ it was not ynough for folke to haue ỳ law giuen thé, & to vnderstand it: vnlesse it were ingrauen in their hearts. For we must come to ỳ similitude ỳ is made by ỳ prophets. For although God shewed his law to be sufficiently authorised by vouchsafing to ingraue it so in these stones: yet did he giue an incling ỳ that would nothing boote, verily because ỳ true tables wherein it behoueth vs to write the doctrine of God, are our harts; howbeit not as they be by nature. For what maner of ones are they? Euẽ of stone as it is said of them in Ezechiel. So then, let vs marke that ỳ letter of ỳ law is nothing worth, vntil god worke in vs by his holy spirit. And that is the cause why he hath promised to make a newe couenant, not after the maner ỳ hee made it with the fathers: for, that continued not, saith he. And why? Hee sheweth ỳ the blame & fault therof is in men, because they turne away & runne at rouers as soon as God hath called them, & neuer follow him at all. Although they pretend to make great account of his grace: yet is there no stedinesse in them, but rather vtter lightnesse; for by and by they fling away after their own wicked affectiõs. The couenant of God then, yea though it were written in stones, could not hold them in. And why so? Not for that God abode not faithful on his part, or that hee persisted not to shewe that his choosing of Abrahãs linage was not in vaine: but for that they were bereft & disappointed of that great benefite, & dispossessed of Gods freebestowed blessing, through their owne vnfaithfulnesse. And therefore it is requisite that God should speake to vs after another fashion: that is to wit, that he should not only write his law with his owne hand in stones, but also write it in our hearts, by correcting the hardnesse that is in thé of nature, and also by making them fleshie harts, so as they may bee soft & supple to receiue ỹ ingraving which he shal put into them. Ye see then that the thing which we haue to beare in mind, if we intend to fare the better by this present storie, is that like as Moses acknowledged himselfe exceedingly bound vnto his God for the fauour which he had shewed to his people: so ought we also to bethink vs, how abundantly God hath vttered the treasures of his goodnes towardes vs. For not only we be accursed by nature: but also we haue forsaken him after his adopting of vs, & wee haue not made account of him as of our father. And yet for all this, he hath reached vs his hand, & set vs in our former state againe; & he hath not only taken vs into his fauour againe, & giuen vs his worde to teache vs thereby, nor only deliuered vs his law written in ỹ two stones: 2.Cor.3.3. but he hath also reformed & softened our harts, so that whereas erst there was nothing but hardnesse in them, he hath now drawen them to obedience, to receiue quietly ỹ things that are told vs in his name, at leastwise if wee be his. For all they to whome the Gospell is preached, are not of ỹ nomber. But let euery of vs examin himselfe, & we shal perceiue ỹ God in sending his Gospell to be preached vnto vs, is ready & forwarde to giue vs his grace, if we our selues bee not the let. True it is ỹ his Election doth always beare sway: but yet do not men faile to be in the fault, if the Gospel profit thé not, accordingly as S. Paul declareth, 2.Cor.4.3.4 ỹ the diuel must needs haue blinded our eyes, if we see not ỹ light that shineth there, seing ỹ the image of God sheweth it selfe there so euidently. Wherfore let vs marke, ỹ if Moses vpbraided the Iewes, (& that iustly) with the vnthankfulnes whereof they were giltie: much more ought we now to cast down our eyes, & to stand in awe, & to be vtterly abashed before God. And in ỹ same respect, we haue more cause to magnifie the grace of our God, than had the auncient fathers, which were in the time that the law was written but only in two tables of stone.

Furthermore we haue to marke the figure ỹ is comprehended vnder these words, Make thee two tables smooth & bring them to mee. For therby god sheweth the order & right maner of proceeding to be wel taught at his hand: namely ỹ wee must bring ỹ tables polished or made smooth for him to write his law in, & ỹ afterward he must write in them. True it is, that we cannot do this of our own selfmouing, but he must direct vs thereto by his holy spirite. Notwithstanding, it is to bee noted, that God bestoweth two distinct graces vpon vs. The one is in preuenting vs, to the intent wee shoulde be readie and forwarde to yeelde him obedience: and the other is in inlightening vs, and in giuing vs a present affection to serue him as soone as wee knowe his will. This woulde be darke, if it were not opened more at large: but I hope that anon it shalbe veric haste to vs.

Before men are brought to the faith, and before they be acquainted with the doctrine of the Gospel to be ridde of all ignorance: they may haue some good preparatiue aforehande to say, Alas I woulde faine giue eare to my God, let him but onely shewe mee his good pleasure, and lo I am readie to embrace it, so as hee shal leade mee whither he will. Let him but laye the bridle on my necke, or raine mee one way or other, & I will followe him and submit my selfe to him with all obedience. Such disposition is to bee seene in silie ignorant soules, before God haue throughly instructed them. They haue not faith, but an entrance vnto faith, in asmuch as they are prepared to submit themselues to whatsoeuer God shall commaund them. Now cometh this inmouing, of men, or of their owne nature? No, it is of Gods working in their hearts, who maketh ỹ preparation there by the grace of his holy spirit. For by nature we can no skill but to go clean contrarie to Gods wil. And although men haue some deuotion, & make profese thereof: yet is all but hypocrisie, there is no truth nor soundnes in them. Therfore whesoeuer we finde any good forwardnes to serue God: it is of his own working in vs, & it is he that giueth vs that grace. In deede it is said here, Bring mee do tables, & let them bee hewen smooth with thy hands. This charge was giuen to Moses. And what then? Can he do it of himselfe? No, but because God hath taught him aforehande, and prepared him to the doing thereof. Ye see then that that is one grace which God bestoweth: and yet nuertheless, God sheweth vs that it is our dutie to do it, though wee cannot do it of our owne abilitie, that is to saye, though wee bee not able to do it of our owne selfmouing, or power, for looke what is our duetie to doe, it is good right that God shoulde require it. Therefore let vs learne, that to profite well in Gods doctrine, wee must bring smoothe or plaine tables. For why? Wee see that moste men haue rough and rugged myndes, so as nothing can bee written vppon them.

True it is, that they will resort to Sermons. But what for that? They be forepossessed with their owne lewde lustes: they bee so bemyred in them, as is horrible to see: and againe, they bee full of thornes, there is nothing but vice and vncleanesse in them: all is so out of order, that a man cannot tell howe to write one lesson in them. Yee shall see othersome which haue had their eares sufficiently beaten, and the Gospel hath beene preached to them all their life long: and yet are they nothing the better for it, because they bring not smooth tables with them, that is to say, they bee not disposed to receiue Gods worde. Thus yee see what wee haue to gather, vpon Gods commaunding of Moses to make the two tables smooth.

Now if we intend to profite well in Gods doctrine, wee must not haue our hartes like roughhewen stones, where no writing can bee discerned, but all shalbe blurred doe ỹ writer what hee can can: but we muſt haue our harts ſmoothed, that is to ſay, quite & cleane rid from al impediments that may hinder our obedience towardes God. And for as much as we haue not that of nature: we muſt pray God to be ſo gracious vnto vs, as to make vs able to ſmooth our hearts ſo well, as we may rid them of all vices & corruptions, and meeken the ſturdines that is in vs, when wee ſee our ſelues drag cleane backe from the wil of our God; ſo as we may haue a deſire to ouercome & ſubdue the ſame. The hammers & chiſils which we muſt vſe to poliſh our harts withal, are theſe: namely, to miſlike of our ſinnes & to be grieued at them, & thereupon to condemne our ſelues, & to exerciſe our ſelues in ſo doing: for euery of vs muſt inforce & compel himſelfe by violence to ſtoop vnto God, & we muſt hold on in ſo doing, what hardnes & gaineſtriuing ſoeuer wee meete withal, ſo as al ỳ loftineſſe of our heartes muſt be pulled down, ỳ nothing may hinder gods ingrauing of his doctrin in them afterward. And when our Lord hath once begon after ỳ maner, he will go through with it, ſo as he will teach vs his wil, & we ſhal profit in it daily more & more. And ſo we ſee ỳ the beginning of our faith, is the ſaid obedientnes wherethrough men offer and yeld vp themſelues in ſacrifice, as if they ſhould ſay, Alas Lord, it is true that I am a ſilly ignorant ſoule, yea & a verie beaſt, for I knowe no reaſon nor wiſdom, but I flee vnto thee, that thou maiſt direct & gouerne mee by thy holy ſpirit. Lo here (ſay I) the ſigne ỳ we be wel diſpoſed aforehand, & this diſpoſednes is as a white vnwritten paper. For if a man bring a black & foule fullyed paper, or which is bedawbed & beſsoubered with myre, & ſay, I would faine be taught, I pray you write me a ſample vpon this paper: it is a flat mockery: for the paper is berayed, & a man cannot write any thing vpon it ỳ can be diſcerned. But if a mã bring cleane paper, & ſay, I ſubmit my ſelfe to you, I beſeech you ſhew me what I haue to do: ỳ is a good forwardneſſe. Or rather to come nerer the ſimilitude which we haue nowe preſently in hande, (that is to wit, the couenant which God hath made with vs) if a man intending to bargaine with another man, ſhould ſay, Go to, to the intent ye may vnderſtand ỳ I am willing to yeld to all reaſon; lo, here is a blanke, write what you will & I agree to it. If a man ſay ſo & ſpeake truly, he ſheweth ỳ his intent is to deale dutifully ỳ the partie with whome he hath to do. But if another being a peece of paper imbrewed with mire & ſay, write what you liſt, I admit it for good: doth he not giue to vnderſtande that he intendeth to breake the whole bargaine, & ỳ he is vnworthie to once open his lippes, as one that purpoſeth not to ſtand to any reaſon at all? So then let vs bring white paper to God, that is to ſay, obedientnes to ſubmit our ſelues vnto him. Although we vnderſtand not his will: yet is that ỳ entrance of our faith. For then doth God traine vs forward to write his worde in our hearts, ſo as we be throughly inſtructed afterward. Ye ſee thẽ that God vouchſafeth a double grace vpon vs: firſt, in that he prepareth our hearts to come vnto him to receiue his doctrin: & ſecondly in that he teacheth & enlighteneth our hearts by his holy ſpirite, framing our hearts & affections aright, to the end we ſhould be faſhioned like vnto his glorie, & ỳ his ſpeaking ſhoulde not bee to our eares only, but much rather to our hearts. Sõ haue we thereupon to conclude, (as I haue ſaide alreadie) ỳ we ſhal neuer attaine to faith, except we haue the ſaid obedientneſſe aforehand. And ỳ is the cauſe why ſo fewe beleeue nowadayes, for they be full of pride, they thruſt God away from them, ſo as he can by no meanes come at them: they take pritch againſt his worde, & reſiſt his trueth, holding ſcorne of their owne profite & welfare. Therefore we muſt vnderſtande, that to be true ſcholers vnto God, the end that wee muſt begin at, muſt be teachablenes. And when we be once in that mind, wee muſt ſuffer him to teache vs, ſo as he may ingraue his learning in our hearts. 2. Cor. 3. 18

By the way wee haue to marke alſo, that it is not for vs to make or frame lawes to ſerue God withall, but that we muſt ſimply bring our tables & let him write in them what he thinkes good. Moſes was a great & excellent Prophet: and yet did not God giue him leaue or liberrie to write any thing in his tables, or to put any thing vnto them, but reſtrained him altogither to ỳ thinges that were written there. And ỳ appeared well in this, in ỳ both the tables were written, not on the one ſide only, but on both, euen to the full, to the intent that no man liuing ſhould ad any thing to them. Seeing then ỳ God wrote his commandements in thoſe two tables himſelfe, & commicted not that charge vnto Moſes: is it lawfull for any mortall creature to ad any inuention of his owne to Gods law? Ye ſee then ỳ the way for vs to put this doctrine in vre, is to beare in minde that if Moſes being ſo excellent a man, and as an Angel of God, might not write or ad any thing to Gods law: much leſſe may we. Wherefore to ſerue God aright, let vs learne ỳ we muſt not take vpon vs to inuent any thing at all, nor to preſume vpon our own deuotions, as we term them: for all ſuch geere wilbe miſliked, but that we muſt bring our tables, that is to ſay, our owne ſelues in ſacrifice, ſo as there bee not any thing written in vs, vntil God ſpeak, & that we receiue ſimply without any gainſaying, whatſoeuer proceedeth out of his mouth. Deut. 12. 32. Exod. 32. 15.

But now that we haue ſo much, let vs marke that which is added: namely howe God cõmanded Moſes & told him, How his will was that the cheſt or cheſt which he had made, (that is to ſay, the Arke, cõmonly called the Arke of the couenant) ſhould be borne or caried by the children of Leui. And that is the cauſe why he told the people, that the childrẽ of Iſrael ſhould fleet from place to place, vntill they came to Beroth where Aaron died, and that then God would ſhoote out the Leuites by themſelues. Surely at the firſt bluſh the ſtorie ſeemeth diſordered. for he ſaith, the children of Iſrael departed from Beroth belonging to the children of Iaacan in Moſera, that is to ſay in ỳ place of mount Hor where Aaron dyed. And it ſeemeth here ỳ Moſes ment to ſay, that Aaron dyed byandby after ỳ God had cauſed the two tables to be made new againe? But there were fourtie yeares betweene the one and the other. For Aaron dyed at such time as the people had outworne their terme of fourtie yeares, during which time god had forfended them the lande of promise. Now in the ende of that terme, Aaron was depriued of the dignitie of the priesthood, and Eleazer his son was made highpriest in his stead. But here Moses comprehendeth all that had bin done by the space of fourtie yeares, from the publishing of the lawe, vnto the verie same day that he exhorted the people to put themselues in better readinesse to enter into their inheritance, than they had beene in at the beginning. He telleth them that although there had happened many changes in the meane time, yet had God in effect prouided, that his lawe was to bee had alwayes in estimation, & to be honored, and that the world might perceiue that his maiestie was therein, & that all men ought to submit thémselues thereunto. And for that cause doth Moses say, that hee had chosen the children of Leuye, notwithstanding that Aaron had sinned. For to what ende doeth Moses speake here of his brothers death? Euen to make it knowen, that God had shewed fauour towardes the trybe of Leuye, as well as towards all the rest of the people. The trybe of Leuye was chosen to offer sacrifice: it was a prerogatiue which God had giuen them. And were they worthie of it? Could they boast themselues to haue beene more worthie than their brethren? It is true that they executed véngeance vpon the ydolaters, but yet was Moses faine to call them to him, and to command them to sanctifie their handes. Yee must hallowe your hands to the Lord, sayth he: & howe? In slaying those that haue so grieuously offended, and been an occasion of turning all thinges vpside downe. This day therfore it behoueth you to vtter what zeale ye haue towards the maintenance of gods honour, and to sanctifie his name without sparing of your own brethré, or your neerest neighbours, forasmuch as they haue so defaced Gods glorie to the vttermost of their power, & therefore they must be vtterly rooted out. The Leuites did well execute the thing that Moses cõmaunded them: but yet did the high priest Aaron make the golden calfe. True it is that hee withstoode it, or at leastwise consented not to it: but yet did he swarue at length by graunting the peoples importunate request, and therefore was he faine to beare the punishment which GOD tolde him of, saying, thou shalt not come within the land which I will giue vnto my people. Albeit that he represented the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and was a figure of him: although he was a mediatour betweene God and men, so as he made intercession for the sinnes of the people, & offered sacrifices for the reconciling of them to the maiesty of God: yet was he banished out of that lande to his shame, hee dyed, hee was stripped out of his robes before his death, hee was as a man disgraded, and God left him as a dishonoured person, and as a man defaced with perpetuall reproche. Now if God extended such punishment vpon the person of Aaron: what had they deserued which were inferiors to him? So then, Moses telleth them, that Gods choosing of the trybe of Leuye to carrie the Arke, and to be occupyed about his seruice, was not for that they were worthie of it, but because hee was minded to shewe the same thing to the successours of Leuye, which he had spoken of the rest of the whole bodie of Abrahams offspring: namely that they had all things of his only free goodnesse. That is the cause why the death of Aaron is rehearsed here.

But by the way, we see that Moses spared not his own brother. For here he repeteth the sentence ỳ God had giuen & also executed against him, & ỳ was not for ỳ honor of his own house. But what? His meaning was ỳ God should be glorified, & men condemned. Yea & we see that his intent was not to conceale his owne fault, but to shew that God had punished him for it, though there were great cause of excuse in him, & all the blame was to haue bin layd vpon the people, because his ouershooting of himselfe, was but in ỳ one case, & that not through malice, but only through griefe of mind. Yet notwithstanding he accuseth himselfe thereof, he acknowledgeth it openly, & maketh a chronicle of it to continue of record to the worldes end. Sith wee see this, let vs learne, not to be ashamed to confesse our sinnes, & to shew that God is righteous in punishing of vs. Let vs not go about to burie ỳ chastisements that God shall haue sent vpon vs, as wee see a number doe, who when God sendeth neuer so notable punishmentes, couldle finde in their heartes that they shoulde neuer be spoken of. And why? Forsooth because it is not for their honour, worship, or honestie. Verily, as who should say, yee will needes be honorable in spyte of God and his righteousnesse. Is it meete that you shoulde be regarded than the glory of his name? Nowe then, let vs vnderstand that if wee haue committed any fault, and God hath reached out his hande to punishe vs: the same must be rehearsed among vs, and we must think vppon it, and wee must alwayes confesse that God is righteous, and that wee haue well deserued that hee should vse correction towardes vs, sith wee see that Moses beareth not with his owne brother. That is the thing which we haue to beare in mynd.

Howbeit on the other side, let vs vnderstand, that if Aaron was faine to passe through Gods hande, because he did but consent vnto euill, & was punished although he clane not to it: (for to speake properly, his consenting was no consent at all: for he said vnto them, what meane how you ye wretched people? and in scorne of their idolatrie: Lo here thy Gods O Israel (quod he) which brought thee out of the lande of Egypt: as if hee shoulde say, is a calfe become thy redeemer? Aaron then did after a sort withstande them, and yet notwithstanding I call it a consenting, inasmuch as hee swarued and suffered himselfe to be caryed away with their importunateneſse:) Nowe if God (say I) did punish his high priest Aaron after he had aduanced him to so great & so high dignitie: what wil he do to vs

Then.

Exod. 32. 29

Exo. 32. 2. 4.

Hebr. 5. 1. 2

Therefore let vs learne to withold our ſelues frō euil, & by no meanes to conſent thereto: vnleſſe wee intend to wrap our ſelues in condemnation with the wicked, as wee ſee did partly befall vnto Aaron. I ſay but partly, for God vſed mercie towards him, becauſe the puniſhment was but temporall, becauſe it was vpon his body onely, and concerned onely this preſent life. And ſurely God is exceeding gracious & fauourable to vs when he puniſheth vs in our bodies, at ſuch time as we deſerue to be vtterly rooted out, and when he vouchſafeth to be contented with ſome chaſticemēt of this tranſitorie life, he ſheweth therin that he is minded to vſe great gentleneſſe towardes vs. And yet for all that though wee deſerue to periſh with the wicked, when wee reſiſt them not, ne forſake their compānies and confederacies: yet it pleaſeth God to ſpare vs, and to ſhewe himſelfe mercifull towardes vs, though at the leſt, wee doe in our owne bodies ſuffer ſomewhat in reſpect of this preſent life.

Nowe remaineth the reaſon that I haue touched afore: namely, that here is expreſſe mention made of the Tribe of Leuy, which was ſorted out to vse the Arke of the Couenant. And Moſes plainly rehearſeth that point, to do vs to vnderſtande, that God authoriſed his law by that meanes, in ỹ it was his wil to haue it caryed after that faſhiō, that it might bee as a ſtandard for the people to reſort vnto. We haue ſeene in the fourth Chapter how God ſayde, thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any likeneſſe or reſemblance: for thou hardeſt the voice of thy God in Horeb, but thou ſaweſt not any ſhape of man, or of beaſt, or of any other creature. The only image of thy God, are ỹ things that he hath writtē w̄ his own hand, ỹ is to ſay ỹ ten cōmandements. Thoſe (ſay I) are the liuely image wherin he wilbe ſeene. And therefore I ſaid it was a ſtandard carried aloft for the people to reſort vnto, as ſoldiers reſort to a ſtandard in a field, to fight the better. So then, it behoued the people to haue their eyes vppon the Arke of the Couenant. And ſpecially foraſmuch as men are not verie forward of themſelues to obey God: it was meete that ỹ Arke of the couenant ſhould be handled with reuerence, & for ỹ ſame purpoſe had God ordeined the prieſtes & Leuites. For al of them were prieſtes; Howbeit, they ỹ caried the Arke were of inferior degree in the dignitie of prieſthod. Neuertheleſſe god had appointed the Leuites to beare ỹ Ark, to ỹ intent it might thereby the better be knowen, ỹ it was a matter of excellent prerogatiue, & that it was no dalying in the caſe: For we ſee ỹ God woulde not ſuffer the Arke to be ſo much as touched, by any other than by the Leuyts: inſomuch ỹ when Dauid remoued the arke, the partie that did but touch it of good zeale, dyed out of hande for ſo doing. When he ſawe the Arke at the point to tumble down, he did but put forth his hand euē of good wil to ſtay it vp from falling, & yet notwithſtanding he was puniſhed grieuouſly for his labor. This may ſeeme to haue bin ouerrigorous. But it ſerueth to ſhew, ỹ it is not in any wiſe lawful to breake the order that God hath ſet. The end is ỹ thing which he hath an eye at. For if we looke no further than to the thing it ſelfe; why might not the Ark haue been handled & caryed of al ỹ people? They were al ſanctified to God, they were all circumciſed, they did all carye about them the marke of the couenant. And why then ſhould ỹ one man dye out of hand for only touching the Arke vpon good will? Verily God had an eye to the ende of the lawe: which was ỹ men ſhoulde wholly obey his worde. For if his worde be deſpiſed: there wilbe nothing but rebelliouſnes againſt him. In deede men will pretend a willingneſſe to honor & ſerue him, but yet is it but counterfeting for all that. Will we then doe true ſeruice vnto God, & ſuch as he accepteth? Al of vs both gret & ſmal muſt ſubmit our ſelues to his worde, & followe the ſinglenes thereof, & therewithall beare in mynd that it is ſo precious a thing, as men muſt not mingle aught of their owne with it: for that were nothing elſe but a corrupting of it. Now foraſmuch as men are not eaſie to be taught this: it was Gods will to ſhewe by a viſible ſigne, howe highly he eſteemeth his own word. That is the cauſe why he ſorted out that tribe from the reſt, to beare the Ark of the couenant. It was Gods will ỹ the Prieſtes which were ſpecially appointed to offer ſacrifice, & to make attonement betwene God & men, & to repreſent the perſon of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, Hebr. 5. 2. ſhould beare abroad his word, & that they ſhold preaſe vnto him to bee as mediators betweene him & men. Ye ſee then how it was Gods will, to teache his people humilitie by viſible ſignes and outward ceremonies, to the ende that his worde ſhould be embraced with all reuerence, & continue euermore in good ſtate. But as for vs, wee haue not nowadayes the ceremonie any more, but we haue the trueth, which ought to continue to the worlds end. Therfore whenſoeuer Gods word is preached vnto vs, let vs learne to ſtoope Col. 2. 17. to it, & to know ỹ it is a heauenly doctrine, wherunto it becommeth vs to encline, & that it is not for vs to bring our own fond imaginations in ỹ caſe, for then wo be vnto vs. Neuertheleſſe God granteth vs a ſpecial fauor, in that he inableth vs to beare abroad his word, & maketh it to dwel in vs, whereby he ſheweth that he hath performed Eſa. 66. 21. the thing which he promiſed by his Prophets, ỹ is to wit, that he hath choſen vs for his Leuytes, as ſhalbe declared more at length to morrowe.

Now let vs fall downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them better, yea, euen in ſuch wiſe as it may lead vs to ſuch repentance, that we may be ſorie for them all our life long, & be aſhamed that we haue bin ſo wretched ſinners: And that therwithall wee may be quickened vp to glorifie him the more for the great goodnes which he hath ſhewed vpon vs, & proceede continually more & more in obeying him, to the intent that his law may be the better ingraued in vs by his writing of it in our hartes, & we become the readier to follow the things ỹ he ſhal haue ſhewed vs, ſo as we may be forward to obey him all our life long, & our life be wholy dedicated vnto him. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, &c.

new againe: But there were fourtie yeares betweene the one and the other. For Aaron dyed at such time as the people had outworne their terme of fourtie yeares, during which time god had forfended them the lande of promise. Now in the ende of that terme, Aaron was depriued of the dignitie of the priesthood, and Eleazer his son was made highpriest in his stead. But here Moses comprehendeth all that had bin done by the space of fourtie yeares, from the publishing of the lawe, vnto the verie same day that he exhorted the people to put themselues in better readinesse to enter into their inheritance, than they had beene in at the beginning. He telleth them that although there had happened many changes in the meane time, yet had God in effect prouided, that his lawe was to bee had alwayes in estimation, & to be honored, and that the world might perceiue that his maiestie was therein, & that all men ought to submit théselues thereunto. And for that cause doth Moses say, that hee had chosen the children of Leuye, notwithstanding that Aaron had sinned. For to what ende doeth Moses speake here of his brothers death? Euen to make it knowen, that God had shewed fauour towardes the trybe of Leuye, as well as towards all the rest of the people. The trybe of Leuye was chosen to offer sacrifice: it was a prerogatiue which God had giuen them. And were they worthie of it? Could they boast themselues to haue beene more worthie than their brethren? It is true that they executed vengeance vpon the ydolaters, but yet was Moses faine to call them to him, and to command them Exod. 32.29 to sanctifie their handes. Yee must hallowe your hands to the Lord, sayth he: & howe? In slaying those that haue so grieuously offended, and been an occasion of turning all thinges vpside downe. This day therfore it behoueth you to vtter what zeale ye haue towards the maintenance of gods honour, and to sanctifie his name without sparing of your own brethré, or your neerest neighbours, forasmuch as they haue so defaced Gods glorie to the vttermost of their power, & therefore they must be vtterly rooted out. The Leuites did well execute the thing that Moses cõ-
Exo. 32.2.4. maunded them: but yet did the high priest Aaron make the golden calfe. True it is that hee withstoode it, or at leastwise consented not to it: but yet did he swarue at length by graunting the peoples importunate request, and therefore was he faine to beare the punishment which GOD tolde him of, saying, thou shalt not come within the land which I will giue vnto my people. Albeit that he represented the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and was a figure of him: although he Hebr. 5.1. 2 was a mediatour betweene God and men, so as he made intercession for the sinnes of the people, & offered sacrifices for the reconciling of them to the maiesty of God: yet was he banished out of that lande to his shame, hee dyed, hee was stripped out of his robes before his death, hee was as a man disgraded, and God left him as a dishonoured person, and as a man defaced with perpetuall reproche. Now if God extended such punishment vppon the person of Aaron: what had they deserued which were inferiors to him? So then, Moses telleth them, that Gods choosing of the trybe of Leuye to carrie the Arke, and to be occupyed about his seruice, was not for that they were worthie of it, but because hee was minded to shewe the same thing to the successours of Leuye, which he had spoken of the rest of the whole bodie of Abrahams offspring, namely that they had all things of his only free goodnesse. That is the cause why the death of Aaron is rehearsed here.

But by the way, we see that Moses spared not his own brother. For here he repeteth the sentence ỹ God had giuen & also executed against him, & ỹ was not for ỹ honor of his own house. But what? His meaning was ỹ God should be glorified, & men condemned. Yea & we see that his intent was not to conceale his owne fault, but to shew that God had punished him for it, though there were great cause of excuse in him, & all the blame was to haue bin layd vpon the people, because his ouershooting of himselfe, was but in one case, & that not through malice, but only through griefe of mind. Yet notwithstanding he accuseth himselfe thereof, he acknowledgeth it openly, & maketh a chronicle of it to continue of record to the worldes end. Sith wee see this, let vs learne, not to be ashamed to confesse our sinnes, & to shew that God is righteous in punishing of vs. Let vs not go about to burie ỹ chasticements that God shall haue sent vppon vs, as Deut. 4.35 & 6.4 wee see a number doe, who when God sendeth neuer so notable punishmentes, coulde finde in their hearres that they shoulde neuer be spoken of. And why? Forsooth because it is not for their honour, worship, or honestie. Verily, a who should say, yee will needes be honorable in spyte of God and his righteousnesse. Is it meete that you shoulde be regarded than the glorie of his name? Nowe then, let vs vnderstand that if wee haue commirted any fault, and God haue reached out his hande to punishe vs: the same must be rehearsed among vs, and we must think vppon it, and wee must alwayes confesse that God is righteous, and that wee haue well deserued that hee should vse correction towardes vs, sith wee see that Moses beareth not with his owne brother. That is the thing which we haue to beare in mynd.

Howbeit on the other side, let vs vnderstand, that if Aaron was faine to passe through Gods hande, because he did but consent vnto euill, & was punished although he claue not to it: (for to speake properly, his consenting was no consent at all: for he said vnto them, what meane ye you ye wretched people? and in scorne of their idolatrie: Lo here thy Gods O Israel (quod he) which brought thee out of the lande of Egypt: as if hee shoulde say, is a calfe become thy redeemer? Aaron then did after a sort withstande them, and yet notwithstanding I call it a consenting, inasmuch as hee swarued and suffered himselfe to be caryed away with their impetuositie:) Nowe if God (say I) did punish his high priest Aaron after he had aduanced him to so great & so high dignitie: what will he do vn-

Then

Therefore let vs learne to withold our ſelues frō euil, & by no meanes to conſent thereto: vnleſſe wee intend to wrap our ſelues in condemnation with the wicked, as wee ſee did partly befall vnto Aaron. I ſay but partly, for God vſed mercie towards him, becauſe the puniſhment was but temporall, becauſe it was vpon his body onely, and concerned onely this preſent life. And ſurely God is exceeding gracious & fauourable to vs when he puniſheth vs in our bodies, at ſuch time as we deſerue to be vtterly rooted out, and when he vouchſafeth to be contented with ſome chaſticemēt of this tranſitorie life, he ſheweth therin that he is minded to vſe great gentleneſſe towardes vs. And yet for all that though wee deſerue to periſh with the wicked, when wee reſiſt them not, ne forſake their companies and confederacies: yet it pleaſeth God to ſpare vs, and to ſhewe himſelfe merciſull towardes vs, though at the leſt, wee doe in our owne bodies ſuffer ſomewhat in reſpect of this preſent life.

Nowe remaineth the reaſon that I haue touched afore: namely, that here is expreſſe mention made of the Tribe of Leuy, which was ſorted out to vnto the Arke of the Couenant. And Moſes plainly rehearſeth that point, to do vs to vnderſtande, that God authoriſed his law by that meanes, in ỹ it was his wil to haue it caryed after that faſhiō, that it might bee as a ſtandard for the people to reſort vnto. We haue ſeene in the fourth Chapter how God ſayde, thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any likeneſſe or reſemblance: for thou heardeſt the voice of thy God in Horeb, but thou ſaweſt not any ſhape of man, or of beaſt, or of any other creature. The only image of thy God, are ỹ things that he hath writtē w̄ his own hand, ỹ is to ſay ỹ ten cōmandements. Thoſe (ſay I) are the liuely image wherin he wilbe ſeene. And therefore I ſaid it was a ſtandard carried aloft for the people to reſort vnto, as ſoldiers reſort to a ſtandard in a field, to fight the better. So then, it behoued the people to haue their eyes vppon the Arke of the Couenant. And ſpecially foraſmuch as men are not verie forward of themſelues to obey God: it was meete that ỹ Arke of the couenant ſhould be handled with reuerence, & for ỹ ſame purpoſe had God ordeined the prieſtes & Leuites. For al of them were prieſtes: Howbeit, they ỹ caried the Arke were of inferior degree in the dignitie of prieſthod. Neuertheleſſe god had appointed the Leuites to beare ỹ Ark, to ỹ intent it might thereby the better be knowen, ỹ it was a matter of excellent prerogatiue, & that it was no dalying in the caſe: For we ſee ỹ God woulde not ſuffer the Arke to be ſo much as touched, by any other than by the Leuyts: inſomuch ỹ when Dauid remoued the arke, the partie that did but touch it of good zeale, dyed out of hande for ſo doing. When he ſawe the Arke at the point to tumble down, he did but put forth his hand eue of good wil to ſtay it vp from falling, & yet notwithſtanding he was puniſhed gricuouſly for his labor. This may ſeeme to haue bin ouerrigorous. But it ſerueth to ſhew, ỹ it is not in any wiſe lawful to breake the order that God hath ſet. The end is ỹ thing which he hath an eye at. For if we looke no further than to the thing it ſelfe; why might not the Ark haue been handled & caryed of al ỹ people? They were al ſanctified to God, they were all circumciſed, they did all caryt about them the marke of the couenant. And why then ſhould ỹ one man dye out of hand for only touching the Arke vpon good will? Verily God had an eye to the ende of the lawe: which was ỹ men ſhoulde wholly obey his worde. For if his word be deſpiſed: there wilbe nothing but rebelliouſnes againſt him. In deede men will pretend a willingneſſe to honor & ſerue him, but yet is it but counterfeting for all that. Will we then doe true ſeruice vnto God, & ſuch as he accepteth? Al of vs both gret & ſmal muſt ſubmit our ſelues to his worde, & followe the ſinglenes thereof, & therewithall beare in mynd that it is ſo precious a thing, as men muſt not mingle aught of their owne with it: for that were nothing elſe but a corrupting of it. Now foraſmuch as men are not eaſie to be taught this: it was Gods will to ſhewe by a viſible ſigne, howe highly he eſteemeth his own word. That is the cauſe why he ſorted out that trybe from the reſt, to beare the Ark of the couenant. It was Gods will ỹ the Prieſtes which were ſpecially appointed to offer ſacrifice, & to make attonement betwene God & men, & to repreſent the perſon of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, Hebr. 5. 1. ſhould beare abroad his word, & that they ſhold preaſe vnto him to bee as mediators betweene him & men. Ye ſee then how it was Gods will, to teache his people humilitie by viſible ſignes and outward ceremonies, to the ende that his worde ſhould be embraced with all reuerence, & continue euermore in good ſtate. But as for vs, wee haue not nowadayes the ceremonie any more, but we haue the trueth, which ought to continue to the worlds end. Therfore whenſoeuer Gods word is preached vnto vs, let vs learne to ſtoope Col. 2. 17. to it, & to know ỹ it is a heauenly doctrine, whervnto it becommeth vs to encline, & that it is not for vs to bring our own fond imaginations in ỹ caſe, for then wo be vnto vs. Neuertheleſſe God granteth vs a ſpecial fauor, in that he inableth vs to beare abroad his word, & maketh it to dwel in vs, whereby he ſheweth that he hath performed Eſa. 66. 21. the thing which he promiſed by his Prophets, ỹ is to wit, that he hath choſen vs for his Leuytes, as ſhalbe declared more at length to morrowe.

The Lxx. Sermon which is the ſeconde vpon the tenth Chapter.

8 The ſame time the Lord &c.

9 Therefore Leuie had no portion nor inheritaunce with his brethren: but the Lord is his inheritaunce, as the Lord thy God ſayd vnto him.

10 And I taried on the mountaine as I had doone afore, fortie dayes and fortie nightes. And the Lord heard mee that time alſo, ſo as the Lord would not deſtroy thee.

11 But the Lord ſayde vnto mee, vp, get thee hence, and goe before the people, that they may goe and poſſeſſe the Land which I ſware to their fathers to giue them.

WE ſawe yeſterday, how Moſes in this text did magnifie Gods mercie, as well towardes the Leuites, as towardes the whole people. For in ſheweing that Aaron was puniſhed for his fault, it appeareth plainly that all his whole linage deſerued to haue ben diſgraded. Yet notwithſtanding, God of his goodnes vouchſafed ỹ there ſhould bee a certaine number of men appointed to his ſeruice: and them he choſe, not for any worthines that was in them, but only for his owne mercies ſake. For if wee be not worthie of ſo much, as that God ſhould crowde vs into a litle corner of his houſe: how ſhould he aduaunce vs to farre higher degree? That then is the meaning of Moſes. Neuertheleſſe wee muſt marke herewithall the three charges which he ſetteth downe here, & which he reporteth to haue been aſſigned to the Leuites. The firſt is, To beare the Arke of Gods couenant, & the veſſels of the ſanctuary: The ſeconde is, To be at hand to ſerue God: & the third is, To bleſſe in the name of God. Theſe are the three things that were incident to the prieſthod of old time. For as concerning the Sanctuarie with al the appurtenances therof, it was but a figure, which we muſt referre to the ſpiritual temple, that is to wit to Gods church, & to the ſacrifices which are offered vnto him by the faithful, when they dedicate themſelues to him both in bodie & ſoule, by yelding vp their ownſelues, ỹ he may be glorified in them. Marke that for one point. The ſecond is the ſeruice wherof he ſpeaketh: which conſiſteth likewiſe in figure: but the trueth therof is performed toward vs, when ſuch as nowadayes are called to the gouerning of Gods church, do their dutie in offering vp mens ſoules in ſacrifice vnto God, by preaching ỹ goſpell, & in maintaining the order & ſtate of the church, in ſuch wiſe as God be glorified, and the church be cleanſed from all ſtumbling blockes. The third is to bleſſe in Gods name: & that is to yeeld a teſtimonie of Gods goodnes and grace to his people.

Hebr. 8, 5. Rom. 12. 1.

Rom. 15, 6.

Now muſt we applie theſe things to ỹ trueth of them, ỹ we may be edified by them. Let vs (ſay I) haue a regarde to apply theſe three things to their trueth & ſubſtance, which our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt hath brought vs by his comming. It is ſaid here, that the Leuites muſt beare the veſſels of God. And this belongeth, not only to the miniſters of the worde, or to ſuch as beare publike office in the church: but alſo to all the faithful in generall. And that is the cauſe why it is ſaid by ỹ prophet Malachie, ỹ the Leuits were made prieſts, which thing I ſay was accompliſhed at the comming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, at which time the church was aduanced to greater perfection than it was vnder ỹ law. Likewiſe Eſay telleth vs that all men ſhalbe Leuites vnto ỹ Lord. Al the children of Iſrael (ſaith he) ſhal execute the office of prieſthod vnto God. And in the ſame reſpect doth S. Peter ſay, ỹ we be a royal prieſthod. S. Peter ſpeaks not there of any peculiar ſort of people after ỹ maner of ỹ Pope, who hath villanouſly corrupted ỹ ſaid ſentence of his, in attributing it to his owne clergie as he termeth them, ỹ is to wit to ỹ ſtinking rable of his powlſhorn greaſlings: but he attributeth ỹ honorable title to all the faithfull, & to as many as are of the church of God. Moſes could wel ſay euen in his time, Yee be a prieſtly kingdome, ỹ is to ſay a nation holy aboue all others. But S. Peter turning the ſame words, ſaith, ỹ now we be become a royal prieſthod, inaſmuch as our Lord Ieſus Chriſt hauing ſhewed himſelf to the world, is ordeined prieſt after the order of Melchizedech, to communicate the ſame grace to ỹ whole church. Therfore let vs marke wel, ỹ this gift of becoming Prieſtes & Leuites, is not a priuilege or prerogatiue grãted to three or four: but inaſmuch as al ỹ things which our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt hath receiued of God his father, are common to vs all, & we be made partakers of the ỹ by his meanes: we be of ỹ order & number of ỹ Leuites, that is to ſay, of them that are dedicated vnto god. Not as ỹ people [of Iſrael] were, which held themſelues alooſe in ỹ body of the temple, & worſhipped God afarre of: but we haue a means to preaſe neere him, wee haue familiar acceſſe, ỹ we haue his own ſonne entred afore vs into the Sanctuarie which is not made with mans hand, to bring vs in thither, in whoſe name al the faith-

ſtill haue libertie to come thither. Thus ye ſee that the thing which wee haue to marke in the firſt place, is that God ſhooled out one tribe of the children of Iſraell to ſerue him in the Sanctuarie: but nowe adayes he hath ſhedde out the ſame grace vpon all beleeuers, and there is no exception, but wee be all made holie to offer ſacrifice to God, and not onely to beare the veſſelles of the temple, but alſo to be the verie veſſelles themſelues. For although our bodies 1 Cor. 6. 19. bee but wretched carcaſſes: yet fayle they not to be the temples of the holy Ghoſt, and Gods will is to be worſhipped in them. Hadde there beene ſayde no more, but that our ſoules are the temples of God: it had beene a verie excellent honour. But ſeeing it is ſayde of our earthly and corruptible bodies, we ſee what goodnes God vttereth towardes vs. And therefore let vs learne that this doctrine belonges to vs, and that this figure which was vnder the lawe concerneth vs at this day, to the end that we ſhould adeauntage our ſelues thereby. And after what manner?

The firſt is that we ſhould magnifie the goodneſſe of our God, in that hee hath ſhewed himſelfe ſo gratious vnto vs, as to choſe vs to be his ſeruauntes, not onely to beare the veſſelles of his temple, but alſo to be the verie temples thémſelues and the altars whereat hee will be worſhipped, both in our bodies and our ſoules, to the intent we ſhould yeelde him, not onely the bodily ſeruice which conſiſteth in ſhadowes and figures, but alſo the true ſpirituall ſeruice by dedicating our ſelues all wholly vnto him. Yee ſee then howe the ende whereat we muſt beginne, is to knowe how greatly we by bounde vnto God for vſing ſuch gratious goodnes towardes vs. Moreoueraccording (as Saint Paul ſheweth vs in the ſecond to the Corinthians,) we muſt take warning to ſeparate our ſelues from all vncleanneſſe, as the prophet cryeth out vnto vs, ſaying: Iſa. 52. Separate your ſelues from all vncleanneſſe, you that carrie the Lordes veſſels. And Saint Paul alleadging the ſame text of Eſay, ſayth that according to the ſame promiſe, it is good reaſon that wee ſhoulde giue our ſelues to cleanneſſe both of bodie and ſoule. For in very deede, the prophet Eſaie, in ſaying: Be ye cleane you that beare the Lordes veſſelles, hath not an eye to the time of the figures: but extendeth his doctrine to the kingdome of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Nowe then this text muſt needes be performed in vs. But there are not nowe adayes any moe materiall veſſelles as there were in the time of the Lawe: and therefore it followeth that the doctrine thereof muſt bee performed in higher matters: that is to ſay, that inaſmuch as God hath called vs to be members of his ſonne, and by that meane to come ſo neere him as he may dwell in vs & we be his temples: the ſame ſhould prouoke vs to giue our ſelues to all cleanneſſe, which thing wee can not doe but by ſeparating of our ſelues from the corruptions of the world. For wee dwell here among ſuch filthineſſe, as it is not poſſible for vs to ſcape vninfected, vnleſſe we labour to withdrawe our ſelues from it. Yea and there needes no euill to come vpon vs from elſewhere, for euerie of vs ſhall finde ynough in himſelfe. Wherefore lette vs beware that wee turne away from all wicked luſtes, and that we cut off whatſoeuer is defiled in vs, and generally all that euer is of the world, ſo as we may preaſe vnto our God, and haning giuen ouer the world we may be ſo vnited vnto him, as he may auowe vs to be his prieſtes. For if we doe otherwiſe, we ſhalbe dubble accurſed, and we ſhall not be able to excuſe our ſelues but that God hath aduaunced vs high ynough. But what excuſe will there be for vs nowe when our Lorde hath brought vs ſo neere vnto him, and vouchſafed to make vs prieſtes to offer vppe our owne ſelues vnto him, and to make vs his temples, ſo as we ſhould haue a ſpirituall altar erected vnto him in our ſelues? Seeing that God hath brought vs to that point, is it not a horrible treacherie (ſay I) if wee fall to vnhallowe his temple? Nowe then, lette vs vnderſtande, that whenſoeuer this worlde turneth vs away vnto euill, wee offer God greate wrong, in making his temple a ſwynes ſtie, and in vnhallowing the thing that he had hallowed, by cauſing all the corruptions of Sathan and of this worlde to come into his temple. Surely it ought to holde vs in awe and to make vs walke in all ſoundeneſſe, ſo as we giue not ouer our bodies and ſoules to anie diſhoneſtie, ſeeing that God hath ſanctified them to himſelfe. This is the thing which we haue to beare away vpon the firſt part of this text.

Neuertheleſſe lette vs marke that although God haue extended the ſayde grace of making vs all Leuites or Prieſtes, to all the members of his Church: yet hath hee not vtterly aboliſhed the order of his Church, but his will is to haue ſome certaine men appointed to the preaching of his worde. And that is the thing which is ment here in the ſeconde place, where he ſaith, that they ſhall ſtande before the Lorde to ſerue him, and finally that they ſhall bleſſe in the Lordes name. The ſame muſt bee put in vre at this day by the miniſters of the worde. For although God haue called vs all in common, to bee ſerued and honoured at our handes: yet doeth he require a ſpeciall ſeruice at their handes whom he ſetteth ouer his Church to be the ſhepheardes thereof, that is to witte, that they ſhould ſhewe the way, and alwayes be in a readineſſe to ſerue God. And this ſeruice importeth that the Leuites ſhoulde maintaine the religion pure and vncorrupted among the people, and ſhewe the Iewes that they ought not to deale with the ſuperſtitions of the heathé, and what God it was which had deliuered them, and to be ſhort, that they ſhoulde alwayes holde the people in obedience to the true faith. And for the ſame cauſe GOD allotted them not any one certaine countrie or ſhire to dwell in, but diſperſed thé throughout the whole lande. We knowe there was not anie one tribe which had not Leuites among them. And why was that? For God could well ynough haue gathered thé together, ſo as they might haue bin all together in Ieruſalem where the temple was, and in the places neere aboutes, and haue had some portion assigned them as well as the rest of the tribes had. But hee did not so: but his will was that in euerie countrie, citie, shire, and region, there should alwaies be some Leuites, that the people might eueriewhere bee taught, and the seede of faith be eueriewhere spred abroad. For had there beene anie certain countrie assigned to the Leuites: it had beene ynough to haue abolished the remembrance of God, and to haue layde all teaching vnder foote. But forasmuch as God had appointed ỹ tribe of Leuie to preach his worde, and to beare abroade the message of saluation: he gaue them no certaine portion to dwell in, but his will was to haue them dispersed abroade euerywhere. And for proofe thereof, Mal.2.4-5. we knowe howe the prophete sayth that GOD made his couenant with the tribe of Leuie. And what manner of one was it? Euen the couenant of peace, insomuch as he sayde that the priestes are Gods Angels & messengers: men shall seeke the vnderstanding of the lawe at their mouth; & they shal teach them knowledge. We see then ỹ the seruice that is spoken of heere, comprehendeth instruction: insomuch that they whome God had so chosen, had charge to preache the Lawe, and to expound it to the people, that religion might continue vnappaired. And the same is to be obserued nowe adayes among vs. For although all of vs from the most to the least bee priestes: yet notwithstanding it is the duetie of the ministers of the worde, to teach and to shew men the way to GOD, and to bring backe the wretched soules that were in the way to destruction. And that is the cause why Saint Paul sayeth that he is a priest, not after the auncient maner that had beene vnder the Lawe, but to slea men with the sworde of the Gospell, as sacrifices ought to be slayne: after the which maner Saint Rom.15.16. Paul sayeth also, that he had the spirituall sword wherewith to offer vp mens soules vnto GOD. Thus ye see what we haue to remember. And therefore let such as are called to the charge of the preaching of Gods worde, vnderstande that they must streine themselues to the vttermoste, that God may be serued and honoured. And the manner is shewed vs in the text which I al. leadged out of the fifteenth to the Romanes: namely that wee must indeuour to sanctifie all that euer is corrupted in this worlde, and that men must become teachable and meeke, that God may renewe them & accept them for his children. And if we doe so, then is Gods seruice accomplished in vs, after the same manner as it was commaunded to the Leuites in olde time.

Nowe let vs come to the thirde point that is set downe here. It is sayde, That the Leuites must bleſſe the people in the name of God. True it is that in the Hebrewe tongue, the worde Bleſſe betokeneth to prayse and magnifie God. Howebeit forasmuch as the matter here, concerneth those whom God did specially ordaine to bleſſe in his name: we must fetch the meaning of this text, out of the sixth Chapter of the booke of Numbers, notwithstanding that this maner of speech Numb.6.24 be verie rife in Moses. But in that place there is more expressed: and for that cause haue I rested the text. It is sayde there, that the priestes of the house of Leuie shall bleſſe in the name of God and say: The Lorde bleſſe you and keepe you: the Lorde make his countenaunce to shine vpon you, and graunt you his mercie. The Lord turne his fauourable face towardes you, & bleſſe you. Nowe hereby wee perceiue, that it behoued the Leuites not onely to prayse GOD, as their duetie was to doe: but also to bleſſe the people in his name: For they were two diuerse thinges. So that To bleſſe the name of God, is as it were a doing of homage vnto him for all the benefites which hee bestoweth vpon vs, by protesting our selues to holde all thinges of his onely meere goodnesse, and that hee is the author of them, so as without him wee be miserable, and haue not one drop of goodnesse in vs, further forth than he alone maketh vs partakers of it. And so ye see that to bleſſe God and to magnifie his name, is to acknowledge him to be the fountaine of all goodnesse, and that all that euer we haue commeth of him, and of his onely meere free goodnesse. Nowe this belonged to the Leuites, as wee see it was their office to sing, and although that all the people were present there & the prayse of God ought to sounde in al their mouthes: yet notwithstanding the Leuites were to beginne the quire, and to leade the melodie. Neuertheleſſe, they did also bleſſe in the name of God. And how was that? They witnessed Gods grace vnto the people: and the same thing taketh place still at this day, in such as are ordeyned ministers of the worde. For to what ende serueth our dayly preaching of the Gospell, but to bleſſe the thinges in Gods name, which were accurſed before? For by nature we are all of vs accurſed and reprobate. And therefore is hee deth vs in hande to be deliuered out of the wretchednesse wherein we be: which to doe, there is none other meane but onely that God shewe himselfe louing and fauorable towardes vs, and that is the bleſſing which is spoken of here. For when the scripture sayth that God bleſſeth men, it is asmuch to say, as that hee sheweth them by effect that he loueth them, and maketh them to feele the fruite & operation of his grace and fatherly adoption. Now therefore when we come to heare the Gospel, let vs consider to what ende it is: that is to wit, to certifie vs that God looketh vpon vs with pittie, euen vpon vs wretched creatures, and that hee setteth vs free from the cursednesse that is in vs, insomuch that although we deserue to be cast off at his hand, yet neuertheleſſe hee sheweth himselfe gratious vnto vs, and that whereas he might with good right bee our enemie, he sheweth himselfe as a father towards vs. Let vs (say I) be well aduised that we make our profit of this doctrine, when it is preached vnto vs. For whereas we be assured by the scriptures, that God sheweth himselfe fauorable to vs, in laying aside all enmitie that was betwixt him and vs by reason of our sinnes: if the same were well printed in our hearts, we would haue an other manner of desire than wee haue, to set forth his prayse. What a treasure is it, that our

our Lord ſheweth himſelfe ſo to vs, as though we ſawe him in his owne perſon? & that he openeth the heauens to aſſure vs that he loueth vs, euen vs which make warre againſt him, inſomuch that wheras he ſhould vtterly miſlike of vs, he vouchſafeth neuertheleſſe to take vs into his fauor, & maketh vs to feele it in very dede. But what? We ſeeke in our own dung euen till we do as it were ſtinke in it, without any care or regard at all. And that is the cauſe of ſuch contépt of the goſpel, & of ſuch vnthankefulnes as is ſeene almoſt euery where. Yet notwithſtanding, it behoueth ỹ faithfull to conſider of how great value it is, ỹ God receiueth them to mercy, & ſheweth himſelfe to be a father to them, & that ſuch as are appointed to preach his word, are as witneſſes to certifie vs ỹ God beareth vs ſuch fatherly loue. Trueth it is ỹ this was accõpliſhed by our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, for he was the only prieſt: and ỹ that which wee do, is not to take his office vpon vs, but onely to approue & ratifie the thing ỹ he did. And therefore let vs marke well, that it belongeth onely to our Lord Ieſus Chriſt to aſſure vs of the loue of God his father: but yet doth he alſo witnes it vnto vs, by ỹ mouthes of ſuch as preach the Goſpel in his name. It hath bin told vs herewithall, that the things which were figured vnder ỹ Law, haue bin performed in his perſon. For the high prieſts (when they bleſſed the people) had a ſolemn ceremony of lifting vp of their handes, as though they made an offering vp of all the people vnto God. Likewiſe whẽ Ieſus Chriſt wẽt vp into heauen, he vſed ỹ ſame faſhiõ, by lifting vp his hands to bleſſe his diſciples, in whoſe perſons hee pronounced a general bleſſing vpon ỹ whole body of his Church. We ſee then ỹ the figures of ỹ Lawe belõg to vs at this day, howbeit, not as touching the outward vſe of them, but as in reſpect of the ſubſtance & truth of thẽ. Wherby we be warned to get vs to our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, who bringeth vs ỹ full accompliſhment of all thinges. And we muſt vnderſtand, ỹ although he be not now conuerſant in ỹ world to bleſſe vs: yet will he haue vs to bee made partakers of the ſame bleſſing by meanes of ỹ goſpel, when it is preached among vs. This is the effect of the thinges which we haue to gather vpon that place.

Now Moſes addeth, That God hath giuen the Leuites no portion among their brethren, but that he himſelfe would be their portion and heritage. Yea, but yet for all that, he appointed them ỹ tenthes & firſtfruits, as is ſhewed in the fourth booke of Moſes. Now then, Gods aſſigning of a portion vnto thẽ was in ſuch ſort as they poſſeſſed not any Lande or inheritance, more thã their townes & ſuburbs for their cattell. But yet tooke they the tenthes, firſtfruits, & all other ſuch things of all ỹ people. Herein God had a cõſideration, ỹ ſuch as he mẽt to dedicate to ỹ ſeruing of himſelfe, ſhould be withdrawen frõ all worldly affaires, ỹ they might intend to ỹ ſeruing of God. Gods intent then was, ỹ the Leuits & their children ſhold not giue thẽſelues to husbãdry & ſuch other things. And why? For they had ynough to do to diſcharg thẽſelues of their dutie otherwiſe: ỹ is to wit, in calling vpõ the people to folow Gods cõmandementes, & to keepe his couenant, ſo as religion might continue vnapaired, & faith might haue his full force, & ſo conſequently ỹ God might be honored. Alſo they had the Sacrifices, which ſerued them inſteed of Sacraments, & at ỹ time they were many in nũber, becauſe the people could not otherwiſe be held in order: they would eaſily haue bin marde, if they had not bin reſtreined w many bridles. That therfore was ynough to keep ỹ Leuits occupied. And for the ſame cauſe God gaue thẽ a portion beſide the tithes that they might haue wherwith to finde & mainteine thẽſelues, while they were a doing of their duties.

But th is hath bin corrupted & falſified by the papiſtes. For they haue borne men in hand, that tithes belong to thẽ by Gods Law. And why? becauſe (as they ſay) they belonged to ỹ Leuits. But they conſider not, ỹ the Leuites were inheritors of the land of Chanaan, as well as thoſe ỹ were of the tribes of Iuda, Beniamin, Ephraim, Manaſſes and all ỹ reſidue. In reſpect whereof it was meete they ſhold haue had their portiõ with their brethren. & they ought not to haue bin excluded or baniſhed frõ it: for ỹ inheritance of the land was cõmon to them all: therfore was it meete ỹ they ſhould haue had their part of it. Yea, but God recompenſed them after an other faſhion. It were meete then ỹ the Pope & al his rable, ſhold ſhew how ỹ inheritances of all landes belong to thẽ, & then might they therepon demand their tithes. Thus ye ſee how this text hath bin miſwreſted. But yet for all this, let vs beare in minde howe S. Paul ſaith, ỹ euen at this day it is Gods will ỹ they which preach ỹ goſpel ſhould be nouriſhed and mainteined, as well as the Prieſtes had their liuinges appointed thẽ in old time. S. Paul demãdeth in way of cõpariſon, whether ỹ ſpiritual ſeruice ỹ is yelded to God nowadaies, ought not at the leaſt to be aſmuch eſteemed, as the ſeruice ỹ was vnder the figures of ỹ law? Now it was Gods will, ỹ ſuch as ſerued at the altar, ſhould be mainteined by the altar, therefore it is good reaſon, ỹ ſuch as at this day doe ſerue Gods Church in bringing thẽ his word, ſhould alſo be nouriſhed and mainteined. Thus ye ſee ỹ the way to vnderſtãd this text a right, is to take S. Paul for our expounder thereof. But to conclude peremptorily ỹ tithes belong to the preachers of ỹ goſpel, is to groſſe an abuſe & fondnes. Neuertheles we muſt mark alſo, ỹ it is not our Lords meaning, ỹ ydols or idle bellies, & much leſſe ỹ ſuch as peruert all order & turne vs away from ỹ ſeruing & obeying of God, ſhould be nouriſhed in his Church. Now then if the Shepherdes will needes claime to be found at ỹ common charges of the Church: they muſt looke that they occupie themſelues in the ſeruice of God. As how? It is no title of idlenes, it is no fantaſtie all dignitie, to be called the Shepherde of a Church: but it is a kinde of bondage, howbeit ỹ it be honorable. And therfore ỹ party ỹ is appointed to be a ſhepherd or miniſter muſt looke ỹ he obey God and ſerue his people. For we can not ſerue him ỹ hath put vs in office, but by ſeruing of his Church. Yee ſee then how the Pope & al his hangers on, are diſappointed of the things which they prerend to perrain to them of right. And if they deuour ỹ goods ỹ were apoſted to ſuch as ſerue Gods Church: they muſt be fain to yeelde an account of them in the ende. For the world sees they be but idle bellies and idols, and not onely that, but also deadly enemies to Gods honor, laboring to ouerthrow it to the vttermost of their power. Now then, all this geere must be cut off: for ỹ nourishing & mainteining of thé, is all one as if men were minded to marre all the good seede that is in Gods Church. True it is that where they vsurpe such tyrannie, men may well hope that they shall yeeld a reckening for it before God, and such as are held down in ỹ bondage may well sigh & grone: And although they knowe it to be an intollerable trecherie and extortion, ỹ such exactions should be layde vpon them: yet neuertheleſſe they must bee faine to beare with thé. But whensoeuer ỹ Church shall happen to bee well reformed and well ordered, doutlesse those Cormorantes shall no longer deuour the substance of Gods people after that fashion, but the things ỹ haue bin misused, shalbe brought home to their good & holy vse again, so as they shall serue to the nourishing & mainteining of such as haue ỹ charge of the preaching of Gods word, & also to the releiuing and mainteining of the poore, after ỹ maner of the priestes in the old law, who (as we know) were bound ther vnto, insomuch that their hauing of such portiõ as I haue told you of before, was for ỹ releeuing of the poore, & of such as were in penury. And so ye see how we may profit ourselues by this text.

But by the way, let vs come backe againe to ỹ things ỹ I haue alledged as wel out of ỹ prophet Esay, as out of Zachary, ỹ is to wit, ỹ we in these daies are succeeded in the roome of the Leuites. And sith it is so, let vs marke ỹ although wee possesse inheritances of landes, medowes, and vineyardes in this world, yet we must make light account of thé, without being tied to them, & must put the thing in vre which Saint Paul speaketh of in the seuenth Chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians, ỹ is to wit, that he which is rich be as if he possessed nothing. And why? For if wee haue not God for our heritage & portion, wo be to vs. And how may ỹ be, but onely by being discharged of all earthly affections and cares? Although God giue a man riches, yet must he be as a sheepe, meeke & lowely to offer himselfe vnto God, so as nothing may let or hinder him from following his vocation, or from going on still towardes the heauenly life whereunto he is called. Ye see then ỹ the thing which we haue to consider generally in our knowing ỹ God will haue ỹ ministers of his word and the shepherdes of his Church to be nourished and mainteined: is ỹ we must likewise know, ỹ all of vs are a royall priesthood, in respect whereof he wil not haue vs to be so intangled with ỹ goods of this world, that wee should not look vp to him, but ỹ we should run apace through the world, assuring our selues ỹ wee cannot be children of the kingdome of heauen, vnlesse we be strangers here beneath.

2. Cor. 7. 30

2. Cor. 5. 6. & Hebr. 11. 16.

Now after ỹ Moses hath told the sayd things, he addeth yet one word more, which is Euen vnto this day. Wherby he meaneth ỹ Gods will was to haue those things obserued. True it is that these things had not at ỹ time indured aboue fourtie yeares: but yet doth Moses put ỹ people in mind of thé, telling them ỹ that order must not be broken, but continued still euen till the cõming of ỹ redeemer. In deede the priestes thémselues were greatly out of order & had marred all, so as they had well deserued ỹ God should vndoe his couenant with thé, & bereaue them of ỹ prerogatiue that he had giuen vnto their father Leuie, according to this text of the prophet Malachie, which saith ỹ God made his couenant with Leuie, but yet forasmuch as the Leuits had shrunk away, & not regarded the promise ỹ they had made vnto God, they deserued to be cut off, and God would curse all their blessings, as if he should say, whé ye thinke ye haue made a great hand, thé will God but blow vpon you, & by & by it wil appeare ỹ all was but shame. Yet notwithstanding ỹ priesthod was to cõtinue still, euen to the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ, & so it did. Likwise let vs mark well nowadaies, ỹ when things be out of frame in the Church, so as all goes to hauoche, ỹ mischief is in deed to be corrected, but yet must not gods ordinãce be therfore disanulled, so as we should let it alone, & not put it in execution, vpõ misliking of the vices & offences that haue set all in a broile: but we must alwaies resort backe to Gods pure rule. We see there haue bin no such deuils incarnate, as those ỹ haue bosted thémselues to be Prelats, Bishops, & shepherdes. Now if vpon misliking of such corruptions, a mã would abolish all order in ỹ Church, so as there should be no ministers, nor any mo folke appointed to teach ỹ people: what elſe were it thã a horrible cõfusion, and a setting open of hell, ỹ all things in the world might goe to hauocke? But let vs keepe still this principle, ỹ mens vices must bee corrected, and gods cõmandemẽt therwithal obserued. Thus ye see what Moses ment, in saying ỹ Gods choosing of ỹ Leuits was not for a day or twain, but to stinue still, that by that meane the Church might be mainteined.

On the otherside, we know ỹ the death of our Lorde Iesus Christ shoulde not come vnto vs in these daies, without ỹ preaching of the Gospel. Therfore if we intend to feele ỹ redemption and soul health ỹ hath bin purchased for vs, the same order must be mainteined still. And howe great store of vices soeuer ther be, let Gods Church be clensed of thé, let all stũblingblocks be remoued out of it, & let not men for all that, cease to haue preachers of Gods worde, & ministers of his sacraments stil: for otherwise it were the next way to cut ỹ Churches throte, & to bring all to vtter desolation. For we know how S. Paul layth ỹ Iesus Christ was giuen to be our peace, and ỹ at his comming he preached it to them ỹ were neere hande, and to them that were farre off. Saint Paul sheweth there, how our Lord Iesus maketh the vertue of his death & passiõ auailable: namely by cõmanding the Gospel to be preached vnto vs, wherby we be don to vnderstand, ỹ God hauing once offered himselfe vnto vs in the person of his son, will continually still hold out to take and accept vs for his children, and confirme the adoption which he hath made of vs, euen vntil we come to the present inioying of the hea-

uge which he hath promised vs.

Moses hauing spoken so, addeth for a finall conclusion, that God had heard him, and sayde vnto him, Go thy way and leade this people into the Lande that I promised to their fathers, yea euen with an othe: let them goe in and take possession of it. Here againe Moses sheweth the people that when they be come into the Lande of promise, they must vnderstande ỳ that befalleth not thé for their owne deseruings, but through Gods great mercy, yea and such mercy as ought to rauishe their wittes to wonder at it: for they had refused all ỳ promises that had beene made vnto them. So then it stoode this people in hand, to be new reared & set vp againe in their former state, through a singular grace. That is the intent of Moses, whereof I haue treated more fully already, and therfore it is ynough as now to touch it. But yet let vs not forget to apply it to our vse, which is, ỳ it behoueth vs to vnderstande, ỳ although God haue called vs to the beleefe of his Gospell, yet so ỳ in respect of this present life, we cease not to shrink away frō him, wherby we were worthy to haue ỳ dore shut against vs, & to be taken as folk vtterly reiected, vnlesse he receiue vs to mercie, and ỳ not for once only, but also in that he must double & treble his mercy vpon vs, in so many sins as we cōmit against him. Now thē, before we can come to the inheritance of the kingdom of heauen, God must bee faine to shewe vs many a time and often, that we haue it not for any worthinesse of our owne, nor for any purchase that we can make of it by our seruice, to say that wee haue earned it: but ỳ his making of vs to be his heires, is of his own meere and freebestowed liberalitie, for none other cause, but that he hath vouchsafed to choose vs, and to beare with vs, and to pardon the infinite offences, whereby we cease not to prouoke him in such wise, as he shold needes roote vs out, if hee ment to vse rigor towards vs. Thus ye see how we should apply this lesson of Moses to our behoofe.

Moreouer it ought also to serue vs for a comfort, that we be not discouraged when we haue offended our God, euen after we haue knowen him and are fallen in traine of walking according to his worde. For though we step a side for a time: yet must not our so doing make vs to despaire, but wee must come backe againe, assuring ourselues that if God herd Moses in the time of the figures of the Lawe, he wil certainely heare him that maketh intercession for vs nowe, that is to wit, his owne onely sonne. For our Lorde Iesus Christ was a priest, not only to die once to purchase saluation for vs, but also to inioy the same office euerlastingly, as in respect of appearing in the sight of God his father, to obtaine forgiuenesse for the sinnes which we commit daily. Let vs marke (I say) that if this grace was granted to the fathers vnder the Lawe, surely wee shall not be disappointed of it as now. Yet notwithstanding it is not ment hereby, ỳ that should make vs the readier or bolder to offend: but we must vnderstande, that when we come before God, wee must acknowledge the faultes ỳ we haue cōmitted, we must be sorie for our misdeeds, & we must beseeche God to bring vs home againe to him. For as for those that hate not their sins, they be so far of from obteining of fauour at Gods hand, ỳ they do the more prouoke his wrath. Contrariwise, when we hate our sins, God looketh no more vpon them, but turneth them out of sight. And this warneth vs, ỳ when God cōtinueth his mercie towardes vs, & reneweth the same daily, and taketh vs into fauour againe after wee haue offended him: his so doing is not to make vs the bolder to do euil, as who wold say we haue made a good market at his hand: let vs beware of such blasphemy: but it must be applied wholly to the faultes ỳ are past. Therefore when there is speaking of Gods mercy & of ỳ forgiuenes of our sins in the holy scripture, we must vnderstand ỳ God sendeth vs backe to the sinnes ỳ are past: & therwithall putteth vs in minde to beware afterward of the danger that we were in afore: warning vs to pray him to gouerne vs with his holy spirit, so as he suffer vs not to be led out of the way, nor to fal to wilfull breaking of ỳ couenāt, which ought to be kept vnuiolated, as well on our part by our faithful obedience, as it is on his part, yea & that with such constancie, ỳ although we offend him daily, yet he ceaseth not to continue stedfast still in his purpose. And to be ỳ better assured of this doctrine, let vs alwais haue recourse to this saying, ỳ the Lande of Chanaan was as an earnest penny of the euerlasting inheritance to the fathers ỳ liued vnder the Law. And so the thinges that are set downe in the holy scripture, must be to vs as a looking glasse or picture, wherein to beholde the maner of Gods guiding of vs, til we be come to the euerlasting life. The people of Israell was chose before they were born, God shewed his fauour to them by the law, & moreouer he chastised them, insomuch ỳ he listed not to put thē in possession of their promised heritage out of hande, as in deede they were not wortie of it, but yet for all ỳ they came into it at the last. And so we perceiue, that our Lord hath not delayed his receiuing of vs till we come vnto him: but ỳ he hath prelented vs, with his infinite goodnes, insomuch ỳ he hath chosen vs before ỳ making of the world, & hath offered vs his grace & confirmed it by the preaching of the Gospel, as well as the Law was published by the hand of Moses. For our Lord Iesus Christ hath vouchsafed to be a faithful witnes of God his father, & of the loue ỳ he bringeth vs. And because he is not abiding any more here below with vs in his own person, he hath appointed his ministers to whō he hath giuen authoritie to preach in his name, & therwithall hath giuen commaundement to all people to receiue them, saying, he that heareth you, heareth me. And he hath giuen them expresse charge to preach the forgiuenes of sins, as if they should drawe the wretched captiue soules out of the bondage of hell. Ye see then how our Lorde Iesus Christ hath vttered the grace that was vnknowen vnto vs before: but wee take small profite by it. For alchough wee were baptised from our infancie, yet when wee come to yeares of discretion, whereby begin we to shew our selues to haue some witte, but by choosing the euill, as though wee ment to spite God wittingly? And againe beside this, when our Lord teacheth vs, and reformeth vs by his worde, so as he ceaseth not to shewe vs our faultes, to the intent to tame vs and to daunt vs, and to drawe vs to repentaunce: howe dull are we vppon the spurre? After whatefashion deale we? Are wee not so spytefull and stubborne, as a man can not by any meanes win vs? yes, and therefore he is faine to sende vs many chastisements & to make this present life to be as a wildernes to vs to wander vp and downe in, with ỹ feeling of his wrath. For all the miseries wherewith wee be hemmed in, are remembrancers to make vs hang downe our heades, and to make vs perceiue that we be wretched sinners, & that we be worthy, not onely of temporall correction, but also to be sunke downe into hell. Yet notwithstanding, this serueth not to driue vs to dispaire, for we may well assure our selues ỹ God will receiue vs to mercy so we flee to our Lord Iesus Christ. For if Moses were heard who was a wretched sinner: what shall he be, who hath all righteousnesse perfectly in him? and to whō authoritie is giuen to make full attonement betweene God and man? Nowe thē seeing that our Lord Iesus Christ is appointed to be our mediator: let vs not doubt but that although God holde vs in this worlde as poore banished wretches, and withdrawe himselfe from vs, and shrinke aside to outwarde appearaunce: yet we be not bereft of the inheritaunce which he hath promised vs, and purchased for vs by our Lorde Iesus Christ. But howsoeuer wee fare, let vs not tempte him, nor abuse his goodnesse but let vs wey wel this speech, where Moses saith that he was heard for that time also. For it serueth to holde vs in awe, that wee flatter not our selues when God beareth with vs, but that we submit our selues about vs to amende our faultes, and mortifie our wicked lustes, that we giue not ouerthrowe ouer vnto euill, but haue it and abhorre it, so that God may goe on with the thing that he hath begunne in vs, vntill he haue ridde vs quite and cleane of all worldly leuen, and put vs in possession of the euerlasting life. If we doe so, we may boldely protest that we haue prayed God and that we haue giuen him such glorie as he deserueth, and wee haue cause to reioyce in that we were able to ouercome all the temptations and distrustes that coulde happen vnto vs, and therefore wee shall not needs to doubt but that our good God is and will be merciful vnto vs, though we be not worthy of it.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe to make vs to feele them, as it may serue to mortifie vs daily more & more, that when we perceiue his pleasure, we may flee to his goodnesse and mercy, to obtaine fauour at his hande, that being rid quite and cleane of our vices and corruptions, we may bee so gouerned by the power of his holy spirite, as we may bee one true sacrifice vnto him, by dedicating our selues wholly vnto him through newnesse of life. And so let vs say, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Thursday the xij of September. 1555.

The Lxxj. Sermon, which is the third vpon the tenth Chapter.

12 And nowe O Israell, what doth the Lord thy GOD require of thee, but that thou shouldest feare the Lord thy GOD, and walke in all his wayes, and that thou shouldest loue him, and serue the Lord thy God with all thy heart and all thy soule:

13 And that thou shouldest keepe the commaundementes of the Lorde, and his ordinaunces, which I commaunde thee this day, to the ende it may goe well with thee?

14 Beholde, the heauens, and the heauens of heauens are the Lord thy God, and likewise the earth and all that is therein.

HEre Moses proceedeth with the matter that we haue had these dayes past, that is to witte, that God had vsed marueilous fauor towards his people, in forgiuing them so many and so greeuous offences. It was verie much that they were receiued to mercy, so as they were not dispossessed of ỹ heritage that God had promised them. Now Moses addeth here an other respect, which serueth to make Gods great and infinite goodnes yet better knowen, & to giue it the greater beauty; which is, that he not onely forgaue the people the faults that they had done, but also renued them againe with so gentle and friendly conditions, as might set al men in a wonder to looke vpon it. If a Citie or a countrie haue reuolted against their prince, so as they haue broken their allegeance, although he lift not to vse extreme rigor by putting all to fire and sworde, but be contented to graunt them their liues: yet will he reaue them of all their priuileges, he will lay fines and exactions vpon them, & he will peraduenture deprise them of their ancient liberties, & the poore wretched soules shall grone vnder the burden. I haue cause to remember their offences

yeres after. But Moses sheweth here, that God dealt not so with the Iewes. For when he had once pardoned their offence, he delt with them as if they had neuer done amisse, & their state was as pleasant & amiable, as if they had obeied him in all points as became them. And so ye see the intent of Moses in this place.

He had reported heretofore, how he had bin heard: & nowe he addeth here, What is it elles the Lord requireth of thee? He chargeth thee not with any amerciaments, he layeth no punishment vpon thee, he layeth no burden vpō thee to beare thee down ẅ: his only desire is, ẏ thou shouldest loue him, that thou shouldest honor him, ẏ thou shouldest keepe his commandements. And is this any profit to himselfe? No. Euerywhit of it redoundeth to thine own benefite. Was it not ynough to make this peoples heart to melt, though they had bin the wickeddest in ẏ world, when they might say, wheras we had forsaken ẏ Lord, & broken the couenant that he had made with vs, & chosē an ydol in stead of him; he hath not only forgiuen ẏ so hainous cryme, & bin cōtented to take vs stil for his children, & to leaue vs the inheritance ẏ he had promised vs: but also he gouerneth vs after such a fashion, as it might seeme we had deserued al ẏ benefites in ẏ world. Could he deale more kindly with vs, if wee had honored him & giuen our selues wholy to him? Such consideratiō then ought wel to haue meekened the harts of that people; & al though they were hard & stubborne, yet ought they to haue bowed, seeing they knewe that God sought nothing but their benefite & welfare. Thus we see now the intent of Moses, & to what circumstances his sayings are to be referred. Which is, that the people should knowe that God had not only pardoned their fault aforepast, but also was minded to forget it vtterly for euer after: & that in the mean while they should think thus deutifully with thēselues, our God behaueth himselfe towards vs, as if we had neuer offended him, our fault is not a whit appaired, he vseth nothing but gentlenes towardes vs. Marke that for one point.

But now haue we a general sentence to gather vpon the thing ẏ Moses tolde vnto ẏ people. For the doctrine ẏ is contained in ẏ Lawe, belongeth as well to vs, as to thē. Now then o Israell, what requireth thy God of thee? After ẏ same maner doth God speake vnto vs at this day: he sheweth vs his will as a rule to direct our liues by. And what meaneth he in so doing? Let vs marke what he cōmandeth, & see what profit cā redound vnto himselfe by it. Certaine it is ẏ God requireth no more at our handes, but that wee should loue him; & is not that a condition which we shoulde rather chose, than all ẏ kingdoms of the worlde? Yes; for if our God should make vs princes; surely the greatest honour ẏ hee should do vs therin, were but that he should make vs his seruants. We see that such as liue at ease, yea euen men of worshippe & of good reuenue, had leuer to trot to the Court, & to be in seruice with the prince, and to take much toyle, yea and to spende their goods to get estimation; than to play ẏ snudges at home in their own houses, & to liue at rest vpon their owne reuenewes. Behold our God entertaineth vs & keepeth vs in his house, & ẏ not in degree of slauerie, but as his children; insomuch ẏ he calleth vs his inheritance. In deede, were there no further than this, that hee accepteth ẏ seruice of vs, of vs I say which are altogether vnprofitable, & haue nothing but al maner of corruption in vs: wheras notwithstanding hee vouchsafeth to imploy vs to good purpose, & to make vs vessels of honor, soas we shine like perles in his church, whenas of our selues we be but dūg & myre: seeing our God dealeth so gently ẅ vs, what an vnthankfulnes is it, ẏ wee come not to yeeld our selues to him with al obedience? And I pray you what profit shal he reape by vs, when we shal haue serued him neuer so wel? Shal he be ẏ better at ease? Hath he need of our help in any thing? No, but al redoundeth to our welfare, & he intendeth nothing but to our profit. Wo worth vs therefore, yea & dubble wo worth vs, if such goodnes ouercome vs not, & ẏ our harts be not inflamed ẅ a right affection of giuing our selues wholy to our God, to be gouerned by him, so as we suffer him to ouerrule vs, & ẏ we be prest and readie to yeeld to his hand, & to turn euery way as he wil haue vs. That is ẏ thing which we haue to mark vpō this text. So then, whensoeuer the law seemeth ouer rough & sharpe vnto vs, & our wicked lusts tickle vs to spurne against God, so as it is hard for vs to do as he cōmandeth vs: let vs bethink our selues thus: Thou wretched wight, is ẏ law of thy god burdensom & grieuous to thee? what demandeth he of thee? wherat shooteth he? His demand is ẏ thou shouldest loue him, honor him, & serue him: & wilt thou in this case become an vnnatural monster? Shal ẏ life which thy god hath giuen thee, serue to make thee kick against him? wilt thou grieue thy maker who hath created thee & shaped thee, & doeth also maintaine thee? Were it not better ẏ heauen & earth were mingled togither, & ẏ al things were cōfounded, than ẏ it might be said that thou makest no reckening of thy god? nay rather, ẏ thou spitest him of set purpose, insomuch ẏ there is neither lawe nor scripture ẏ can bring thee to such obedience, as to make thee yeeld glory to thy God? Is it not reason ẏ we should serue God, when he vttereth such goodnes towards vs, as to tel vs ẏ he wilbe our father, specially by planting ẏ beleefe of his Gospell in vs? Now then, as the earth when it is lusthe & in good plight doth alwayes bring forth some thing or other, to shewe that it hath heart in it, so, seeing ẏ God hath giuen vs vnderstanding & reason aboue the brute beasts, it becommeth vs to consider ẏ his doing thereof is to the ende that we should knowe him that made vs, of purpose that we should serue & honour him, and stoop to him with al humility, assuring our selues that he ought to haue soueraigne dominiō ouer all creatures. Therfore let vs marke wel, ẏ when soeuer we be tempeed to striue against God, and his lawe seemeth ouer heauie to vs, and our affections fight against it, or go the cleane contrary way from it; then to ouermaister such frowardnesse of our nature, we must bethinke vs as it is told vs here, What is it that thy God requireth of thee? And then is it certain that we shalbe too too much ashamed of our selues. For what shal we answere before the Angels of heauen, when this saying shalbe laide afore vs? For it shalbee well layd to the charge of all such as haue made none account of obeying God, & of all such as haue despised him and his worde. Yea and although the Angels were not to iudge of it, verily euen the Oxen, the Asses, the dogges & the very stones & trees might be our iudges: for all those creatures retaine a naturall inclination of obeying God. Therfore how shal we do, when we shal be vpbraided with this saying vttered by Gods own holy mouth, What haue I required at your hands? no more but that you should loue mee & honor me. That is the very summe, & effect of al ỹ my law conteineth. I haue loued you, & my desire hath beene to be loued of you. Were you worthie to be receiued & loued of me, when yee drew cleane contrarie to my wil? Lo here wherwith to hold vs in awe, as oft as we cannot finde in our harts to yeld to the obeying of our God, & ỹ his commandements seeme hard & sharp vnto vs. What? Surely our God could not vse greater curtesie towardes vs, than to allure vs to him by louing of vs, to the intent ỹ wee shoulde loue him againe. His meaning is ỹ we should followe him the same way that he hath led vs afore. But now it is certaine, ỹ although God require nothing of vs but to haue the reuerence ỹ hee deserueth: yet can we not serue him & honour him, vntil he haue reformed our harts. And therby it appeareth what frowardnesse there is in all men by originall sinne. Behold God commandeth vs but to loue him & to yeeld him honor: that is all ỹ is conteined in his lawe. And yet we come all of vs so farre short of the perfect performãce of the thing ỹ is commanded, that we cannot so much as thinke a good thought, but we indeuer by all meanes possible to withstande whatsoeuer God commandeth. Therefore let vs learne to be abashed & ashamed of the crabbednes of our nature, seeing we be so wayward as to striue against our God & his righteousnes, yea euen though ỹ things that he requireth be more than rightfull. And so ye see what we haue to marke, when wee feele such a law in our selues, contrary to ỹ lawe ỹ God hath giuen vs.

And hereby wee be warned that it is in vaine for men to make protestation, as a number doe, which go about to excuse themselues ỹ they can not giue themselues to God, because of ỹ weaknes & sinfulnes of their nature. Verily, as who would say, that the euil which is in vs should serue vs for our defence. Were not that a mocking of God? Shal a man be acquit at his iudges hand, by confessing himself to be giltie? But here it is shewed vs, that al ỹ hardnes that we haue in vs to obey God, yea euen though it be impossible for vs to moue forward to the performance of the least commandement of the lawe: will not serue to iustifie vs. Why so? Let a man looke well to it, & he shal find that the fault is not in the lawe: for it requireth no more but that wee shoulde serue our God, & therewithal loue him by yelding him his dew reuerence: and what is it to do that? let vs knowe therfore, that the whole fault is in our selues ỹ we obey not our God; & that although we haue no power at all to performe our duetie, yet doth not that discharge vs, seeing that God demãdeth nothing but ỹ which is right & reason.

By the way, we must call to minde what hath beene declared heretofore: namely that as concerning this text, where Moses sheweth ỹ meane how to fulfill the law aright: it is not meant that we must but onely haue our eyes, hands & feete well ruled; but that wee must begin at the reformation of our harts. Thou shalt loue thy God (sayeth he) & serue him. And howe? With all thy soule, & with all thy heart. Then let vs learne, ỹ if we do the things by compulsion which are commanded vs; it is nothing woorth: wee may not thinke that it shall passe in account. And in deed there are diuers that beare countenance fayre ynough afore men, so as they cannot be accused of theft, murther, or whoredome: but in ỹ meane while they be full of wicked lustes, so as they bee readie to burst with them, & it is a corse to them to obey God, neither finde they any taste in his commandements. And therfore al is but hypocrisie, all is but a faire pretence & shewe to the worldward, & (to be short) all is but vanitie and leazing till the heart be wonne vnto God, & vntill we be fully minded & bent to do as God demandeth vs. That (say I) is the ende that we must beginne at, if we will accomplish the lawe throughly. Wherefore let vs not beguile our selues any more as the hypocrites do, with desire that men only should be contented. Let vs vnderstand ỹ we haue to do w^th^ the heauenly Iudge who admitteth no eyeseruice, but looketh to the trueth of ỹ heart. Therfore let vs giue our selues to God with hartie affection, & not content our selues so with ỹ outward workes, ỹ the ende of doing wel should not also be grounded in our hart.

Psal. 51. 12.

Iam. 4. 8.

Besides this, Moses telleth vs ỹ God will not only be serued & honored, but also loued. And loue are three words; the one is Loue, the other is Reuerence, & the third is Seruice. Now as touching Reuerence or Feare, (for he vseth the same term of feare;) it is not a slauish fearefulnes, but it is ỹ seruiceablenes & honor which we yeld vnto God in submitting our selues vnto him, because we be throughly persuaded that forasmuch as he hath all soueraintie ouer vs, it is good reason that we should be subiect vnto him. First & formost therfore let vs consider, that although God had not spoken to vs to persuade vs to this reuerence, surely euen nature sheweth it vs sufficiently, and it is welynough proued vnto vs in our selues. For although it were neuer told vs that the lewdnes of men is such, as they seeke nothing els but to turne away from God, & to become beastlie by al meanes they can deuise, yea euen wittingly & wilfully: yet our heads & harts are stuffed to full of that lesson, as we cãnot be ignorant of it. And therfore it standeth vs greatly in hand to beare in mind what this word reuerẽce or feare importeth, that is to wit, that God ought to be honored of all his creatures, & that seeing we be his, we ought to offer our selues to be subiect to him.

Also it importeth, that when we thinke vpon God,

God, wee ſhould hallowe his name, that is to ſay, not imagine any thing of him to the derogation of his glorie, but yeeld honor to his righteouſnes, wiſdome & power. This is the firſt point which Moſes ſetteth downe here, cõcerning obedience and the right obſeruing of the Lawe.

Now this reuerence requireth alſo loue. For God wilbee honored with harty affection. If we reuerence his maieſtie, & yet ſtand in feare of it, ſo as it is a terror to vs: then would wee wiſh that there were no God at all, and wee coulde fynd in our heartes to plucke him out of his ſeate, if it were poſſible. As many as woorſhip God vppon no further grounde, but for that they are ſure they cannot ſcape his hãd, & becauſe they know him tobe their maker; thoſe (ſay I) being not touched with any free loue, wil ſhunne God; and when they heare any ſpeaking of him, it grieueth them inſomuch that if it were in their choyce & power, they woulde plucke him out of his ſeat if they could, as I ſaid afore. So then, it is not poſſible for vs to feare God, (I meane to yeelde him right reuerence, ſo as we beare a hartie god will to him, & haue a feeling of his goodnes towards vs, & ỹ he is the place where we muſt ſeeke al our welfare) vnleſſe we loue him. Therefore if wee haue not this loue, there wilbe no reuerence at all. Wherfore let vs learne, ỹ God requireth free-will offerings, that is to ſay, that our offering of our ſelues vnto him ſhould not be of force or cõſtraint, but with ſuch deuotion as wee ſhould bee Pſal.40.8. deſirous to ſerue him, & as we might proteſt with Dauid, not onely that wee ſet more ſtore by his law than by gold & ſiluer; but alſo that it is more ſweete & pleaſant to vs, than honie. Thus ye ſee what the ſecond worde Loue importeth.

The third worde is Seruice. For if wee make pretence to worſhip God with ceremonies and gewgawes as they ſay, & in ỹ mean while do him no true ſeruice in deede: is it not a mocking of him? If men beare folkes in hande ỹ their intent is to honor God, & that they loue him, & ſubmit themſelues to him; & in the meane ſeaſon make but a ſimſlam of it when God ſetteth forth his commandements vnto them: what a preſumptuouſnes were that? And likewiſe what a matter were it, if they ſhould ſhewe no proofe wherby a man might perceiue, ỹ his loue which he ſpeaketh of here is rooted in their heart? Then let vs learne, ỹ we muſt ſhewe by our deedes that wee loue & feare God. And what are the doings that muſt beare witneſſe therof? Euen our ſeruing of him, ỹ is to wit, when we play not the looſe colts by taking leaue to do euery man after his owne luſt & liking; but ſuffer God to ouerrule vs, ſo as our whole deſire be that he ſhould hold ỹ raines of the bridle, & we yeld euery way vnder his hãd to turne to & fro according to his good wil. And ſo we ſee ỹ the way whereby wee muſt ſhewe our ſelues to loue God, is by our ſeruing of him.

Howbeit, foraſmuch as men are giuen to deuiſe ſeruices of their own brain, & do make boaſt that they glorifie God when they haue followed their owne fooliſh inuentions: Moſes rebuketh this ouerboldneſſe of men, and this curioſitie of theirs, telling them that the ſeruice of God conſiſteth in keeping the commandements & ordinances which he deliuereth to them in the name of God. Now then we ſee here, that our Lorde hath cut off all our fond inuentions, ỹ we ſhould not imagine to ſerue him any more after our owne fancie. For why? He will haue obedience, & hee eſteemeth more of that than of al the ſacrifices in ỹ world. 1.Sa.15.22. Had this point beene wel obſerued, there would not be ſuch diſputing as is ſeene nowadayes, among ſuch as beare the name of Chriſtians. For the Papiſts may good cheape ſay, that a mã may fulfil the law of God. And why? Becauſe they neuer wiſt what end or what mark God aymed at. They think it ynough for a man to be able to diſcharge himſelf to ỹ worldward; & ſo they make God like a litle babe, by reaſon wherof they ſay it is a blaſphemie to ſaye that wee cannot perfourme the law. For they neuer came to the trial of it. The deſpiſers of God ſtepforth here & ſay, that the lawe is eaſie, when as notwithſtanding they neuer put ſo much as their little finger towards the doing of it. But when we haue well weyed the things that are conteyned here; wee ſhal finde that it is not ſo eaſie a matter. Againe if we compare the law with our own frowardnes, we ſhal find that the law were eaſie ynough of it ſelf, if we were as wel diſpoſed as we ought to be. But we come farre ſhort of being Angels; & wee had neede of an angelical nature to the obeying of Gods law. For it draweth vs from the world, and leadeth vs vp to heauen: and we go ỹ cleane contrarie way. Againe, when the ſeruing of god commeth in queſtion, it wil not ſuffice vs to play the hypocrites & to ſay, wel, this or that is to be done, & in the meane while to ouerhip ỹ chiefe point: but when it is ſaid that wee muſt loue our GOD with all our hearte; wee come to the wel head, and to the verie roote, which is that GOD requireth ſuch a ſoundeneſſe, as not onely wee ſhould doe whatſoeuer hee cõmandeth vs, but alſo haue a pleaſure in it, ſo as our chiefe delight ſhould be therin, and when we ſee an agreeablenes betwene God & our affections, we ſhould be gladder therof than if wee had obtained all our fleſhly deſires & likings. Againe, men ſhould not be doutfull of the meanes howe to ſerue God as wee ſee the worlde hath alwayes beene, by ſwaruing from the rule that is contained in Gods worde. What is it that is termed Gods ſeruice in the Popedome nowadayes, but fanſies that men haue deuiſed without any reaſon? And no maruel. For (to their ſeeming) Gods law was of no great importance, neither did they buſie their heads greatly about it. And therefore needs muſt they inuent a great number of other ſmall trifles. But they that giue themſelues to Gods lawe, doe ſee, there is cauſe for them to ſaye thus; Alas, although I take neuer ſo much paine, yet can I not compaſſe it, but alwayes I come ſhort of my wayes ende. Nay (which more is) all my inforcing of my ſelfe is in vaine: in ſo much that if my God were not mercifull to mee, to giue mee power & ſtrength, I ſhoulde goe cleane backewarde, and contrarie to his will.

As for the Papiſts, they had no regard of this,

but inuented a sorte of gewgawes to serue God withall; as setting vp of candles before puppets, gadding on pilgrimage, hearing of masses, taking of holy water, and all the rest of their pelting trash. But such as knowe what it is to keepe the lawe, do neuer set their myndes vppon such childish bawbles. But when men knowe not howe to serue God aright, then they rome wandring here and there. Therefore let vs beare in mynde, that here our Lord hath declared which is the true seruice that hee liketh and alloweth of; namely the following of his commaundementes, so as men deale not after their owne fansie and liking, but holde themselues to his worde; and as it were bridling and keeping themselues captiue, do attẽpt nothing but that which they knowe to bee the pleasure of their God. Thus you see in effect what wee haue to gather vppon this text.

Nowe for a conclusion, heere Moses setteth foorth commaundements for the welfare of the people. Whereas hee sayeth that he setteth them foorth, it is to take away all excuses of ignorance, and to quayle mennes fooliish curiositie, that woulde stye aboue the cloudes to knowe Gods will. Yee see then howe GOD maketh vs vnexcusable, when hee sendeth vs his worde, and commaundeth it to be preached vnto vs. Could he make him selfe more familiar vnto vs, than by sending mortall men as his messengers vnto vs, to speake vnto vs in his name, and to giue vs vnderstanding of his will by their meanes? Then if wee saye that wee knowe not Gods will, you see here is wherewith to disproove vs; for God hath giuen vs his worde in writing, so as wee neede not to seeke for it: and therefore it ought to be sufficiently knowen vnto vs. Nowe then let vs also learne to receiue it with reuerence & humilitie: and when we heare mortal men speaking vnto vs, let vs assure our selues, that wee must not measure the maiestie of Gods worde by their persons. But wee must haue an eye to him from whome it commeth, and which is the author of it, that wee may submit our selues wholly vnto it. Therefore let vs not haue these diuelish fansies with vs, as some dreamers haue, which say, O that God woulde speake to mee from heauen, I woulde faine haue some reuelation. Let it content vs that God cõmeth down vnto vs, to make vs priuie to his will: for that is it which Moses ment, in saying that hee did set foorth Gods commaundements: as if hee had saide, that men neede not to goe farre to seeke him. And in the ende hee sheweth, that all this tendeth to the welfare of the people, so as God seeketh not any benefite to himselfe, for he needeth not to borowe aught of vs, neither can wee do him any pleasure: wee can doe him neither good nor harme, all thinges are his: according to the eyght Psalme, and also the fiftith Psalme, where it is saide, that all the beastes in the feelde are in his possession, and that if hee be hungrie or want any thing he needeth not to seeke it at our handes. Why then requireth he to be serued of vs? It is for our benefit, for that there can not be a greater good turne vnto men, than to be the seruants of their maker. Then let vs vnderstand, that whereas our Lord layeth not the bridle loose vpon our necke, but gouerneth vs himselfe, and holdeth vs vnder his obedience, thereby to moue vs to serue him the more willingly: hee doeth it to our benefite and respecteth nothing but our welfare. Yet notwithstanding it is true that the lawe will finde vs all gilti, & that when God hath shewed vs all that is good and right: that doctrine doeth so litle benefite vs, that it rather bringeth vs death, and wee bee cursed by it. For it is a looking glasse wherein to see that wee bee Gods enemies: and it is a keye to open the gates of hell. And how then commeth it to passe that God shoulde procure our welfare, and yet notwithstanding wee shoulde receiue nothing but harme by it? That is not of it selfe; but it falleth out by another meane, that is to saye by our owne fault. Then let vs vnderstande, that Gods lawe (if wee consider it in it selfe) is vnto vs a doctrine of welfare, whereby God commeth neere vnto vs to bee our father and to make vs finde life in him, that by his calling of our life, wee might sticke vnto him, and thereby bee made partakers of his benefites, & in the ende attayne to the heritage of the heauenly life. But herewithal we be so froward and ful of corruption, that the law can serue vs to no other purpose, but to curse vs, & to make vs perceiue how lothsome we be vnto God, in as much as we be his deadly enemies, & so we haue double cause to be abashed & afraid, & ashamed of our selues, when we see ỹ the good is so conuerted to our harm: & it is more than if ỹ nature of ỹ same were changed by our infection. Woulde not make vs to loth our selues, if we should finde such foule & vyle smokes in vs, as shoulde darken and quench the light of the sunne? yes verily. Now we see that Gods law is the light of our life: and yet we not only dim it, but also turn it into ỹ darknes of death; & it is vnpossible ỹ it should guide vs in any other steed, vntil our Lord Iesus Christ haue wrought in vs, & reformed vs by his holy spirit, & by writing his lawe newe againe in our hearts. For asmuch then as we see ỹ men turne life into death, light into darknes, & benefite into bane: alas, ought we not to be exceedingly ashamed? yes, but yet must not ỹ put vs out of conceit of ỹ doctrin of ỹ law, so as we should not loue it, howbeit ỹ we cãnot performe it, vntil god haue chãged our harts to cause vs to submit our selues vnto him, and haue made vs newe creatures in our lord Iesus christ. True it is ỹ the setting forth of ỹ law vnto vs, is not for nought: but yet must we needes perceiue by experience, ỹ vntill God hath brought vs home again vnto him, ỹ doctrin of his law wil serue for nothing but to cõdemne vs. But when he hath once wrought in vs by his holy spirit: then shal wee perceiue that in setting forth his law vnto vs, he procureth our benefite & welfare, according as is saide of it here by Moses. And so you heare what we haue to gather vpõ this text. But Moses doth yet better confirme the matter that wee haue seene; which is, that God helde not his people downe like slaues, nor handled them roughly to be reuenged of thẽ, & so make to make them seele the offence they had committed, but that he handled them after a gentle and louing fashion. Now then (saith he) hath the euerlasting thy God any neede of thee? Behold (saith he) the heauens, yea, and the heauens of heauens are Gods. As if he should say, you think that God would fain haue a people, as though he could not forbeare to be without them. Hath not hee the skyes at commandement? hath not he his heauenly host? hath he not whole millions of Angels? hath hee not peaceable dominion in heauen? Yes, and therefore ye must not imagine any more, that his choosing of you was to better his owne estate by you. If hee shoulde destroy you, and make quite riddance of you, should his raigne ceasse? No, no, and for proofe therof, he hath no neede of men. Againe, besides that, is not the earth and all thinges in it, in his possession? Yes. What is the cause then that hee hath not taken and chosen other nations to him as wel as you? Is it for that you are nobler, or mightier, or worthier in any respect, than the rest, as it is mentioned in the seuenth Chapter? No. It is certaine that the Iewes were not better than the Gentiles: insomuch that if they should haue beene compared with them, they shoulde haue found themselues to haue bin neither nobler of linage, nor richer in substance, nor vertuouser in life, nor to haue excelled them in any thing. What is the cause then (saith Moses) that God hath vouchsafed to take you for his people, and that he hath let all others alone; & reached you his hand to gouern you? Sought he his own profite or aduantage? No. Seing then that you be so greatly bold vnto him, serue him w^t the better wil.

Psal. 8.7. & 50.10.

Here we see in effect two things. The one is, Moses his confirming of the Israelites still in the doctrine y^t we haue heard; which is, y^t all of them shoulde learne to glorifie God for their welfare, acknowledging themselues beholden to him for all good things, so as they haue not any worthines or deseruinges to vaunt themselues of, but must exalt their God & vtterly abase themselues. Marke y^t for the one point. And out of this proceedeth the other point; which is, that such as haue had such experience of Gods goodnes towards themselues, & are taught aforehand to glorifie god, must take courage to serue him y^t more frankly, & offer themselues to God with a more zelous will, to be quietly gouerned & ouerruled by him. Thus ye see y^t two pointes that are to be gathered vpon that text. Yea & let vs mark well, how it is not without cause y^t Moses standeth so much vpon y^t doctrine. For wee see how the vnthankfulnes of men is so great, y^t they labor continually to deface Gods goodnes, by reason of y^t cursed roote of pride & loftines which cannot be quite & cleane taken from vs. Men then do alwayes beare themselues in hand, y^t they be somwhat worth, & therupon they stand in their own conceits, yea euen as it were in despite of God. Although God lay on sure loade vpon our heads with beedes, yet ceasse wee not to set vp our brisles stil, & to grunt at him, & to think there is yet some vertue or power in vs. For this cause Moses thinks it not ynough to haue said once or twice, you must father all your welfare vpon the onely fauour of God: but he returneth eftsoone to the confirming of the same doctrine, to the intent that mens cackling might be y^t better stilled, and that such as deceiue themselues through their vaine imaginations, might learne to conclude in the end, y^t it is not for vs to looke for any valour or worthines in our selues, but that we must yeld God that which belongeth peculiarly vnto him, namely, that his calling of vs, his choosing of vs, & his maintaining of vs; & likewise our hauing of his word, & our reteining of some order in the Church, come altogither of him, so as we cannot say we haue gotten them by our owne skil, cunning or strength. Thus much concerning y^t first point.

Nowe for our better confirmation herein, let vs compare our selues with the Angels & with all the world besides, & let vs think thus: what are we? Truely, if we go no further than to our owne selues, we may haue our eies dazeled, & we know y^t naturaly men do so beset themselues, y^t they be as good as bewitched with the fond imaginatiō of their own worthines. Therefore if we should looke no further than to our selues, it would seem to vs y^t we be something worth: but if wee looke further of, & fall to considering with our selues, What are other men? Do they not set as much or more by themselues than we do? yes: & if there were a third partie to play y^t iudge, would he not make more account of them than of vs? Yes. For to outward showe there is much more greatnes, riches, worthines, & honor, there is much more discretion & wisedom in them than in vs. What is the cause then y^t God hath chosen vs, & let the others go? Haue we any thing wherof we may be proud? Alas, no, if we be not ouerfarre besotted in our own fond imaginations. But if we cannot yet be brought to this reason by cōparing ourselues with all the worlde beside: let vs mount vp a litle higher & come to y^t Angels of heauen. Could not God haue contented himselfe with his Angels, wout cōming vnto vs? We be but poore wormes, there is nothing but rottennesse in vs, & yet god vouchsafeth to seeke vs. His wil is to haue vs to be his children, not only to enioy his gifts & benefits here beneath, but also to aduance vs vp to his heauenly kingdom. And for what deserts of ours? [None at al.] Wherefore seeing we cannot be so beaten down at one blow, as to come humble our selues vnto God; let vs wey well these words of Moses, & bethink vs of the thing that is told vs here; namely that the heauēs of heauens are the lords. For Moses thinkes it not ynough to say simply the heauēs: but he inlargeth his speech yet further, & saith, the heauens of heauens. It had been ynough to haue saide the heauens, for seeing that y^t earth (how wide and houge so euer it be) is nothing in comparison of the vnmeasurable greatnes of the skyes: y^t only word heauens ought wel to haue sufficed. But Moses inteded to expresse it yet more in saying the heauens, yea euē the heauēs of heauēs. In respect wherof he repeteth those words three times: as if he should say, God can find a kingdō large & gret ynough, & of such widnes as he shal not need to com borow some litle

but inuented a sorte of gewgawes to serue God withall; as setting vp of candles before puppets, gadding on pilgrimage, hearing of masses, taking of holy water, and all the rest of their pelting trash. But such as knowe what it is to keepe the lawe, do neuer set their myndes vppon such childish bawbles. But when men knowe not howe to serue God aright, then they rome wandring here and there. Therefore let vs beare in mynde, that here our Lord hath declared which is the true seruice that hee liketh and alloweth of; namely the following of his commaundementes, so as men deale not after their owne fansie and liking, but holde themselues to his worde; and as it were bridling and keeping them selues captiue, do attẽpt nothing but that which they knowe to bee the pleasure of their God. Thus you see in effect what wee haue to gather vppon this text.

Nowe for a conclusion, heere Moses setteth foorth commaundements for the welfare of the people. Whereas hee sayeth that he setteth them foorth, it is to take away all excuses of ignorance, and to quayle mennes fooliish curiositie, that woulde stye aboue the cloudes to knowe Gods will. Yee see then howe GOD maketh vs vnexcusable, when hee sendeth vs his worde, and commaundeth it to be preached vnto vs. Could he make him selfe more familiar vnto vs, than by sending mortall men as his messengers vnto vs, to speake vnto vs in his name, and to giue vs vnderstanding of his will by their meanes? Then if wee saye that wee knowe not Gods will, you see here is wherewith to disproove vs; for God hath giuen vs his worde in writing, so as wee neede not to seeke for it: and therefore it ought to be sufficiently knowen vnto vs. Nowe then let vs also learne to receiue it with reuerence & humilitie: and when we heare mortal men speaking vnto vs, let vs assure our selues, that wee must not measure the maiestie of Gods worde by their persons. But wee must haue an eye to him from whome it commeth, and which is the author of it, that wee may submit our selues wholly vnto it. Therefore let vs not haue these diuelish fansies with vs, as some dreamers haue, which say, O that God woulde speake to mee from heauen, I woulde faine haue some reuelation. Let it content vs that God cõmeth down vnto vs, to make vs priuie to his will: for that is it which Moses ment, in saying that hee did set foorth Gods commaundements: as if hee had saide, that men neede not to goe farre to seeke him. And in the ende hee sheweth, that all this tendeth to the welfare of the people, so as God seeketh not any benefite to himselfe, for he needeth not to borowe aught of vs, neither can wee do him any pleasure: wee can doe him neither good nor harme, all thinges are his: according to the eyght Psalme, and also the fiftith Psalme, where it is saide, that all the beastes in the feelde are in his possession, and that if hee be hungrie or want any thing he needeth not to seeke it at our handes. Why then requireth he to be serued of vs? It is for our benefit, for that there can not be a greater good turne vnto men, than to be the seruants of their maker. Then let vs vnderstand, that whereas our Lord layeth not the bridle loose vpon our necke, but gouerneth vs himselfe, and holdeth vs vnder his obedience, thereby to moue vs to serue him the more willingly, hee doeth it to our benefite and respecteth nothing but our welfare. Yet notwithstanding it is true that the lawe will finde vs all giltie, & that when God hath shewed vs all that is good and right: that doctrine doeth so litle benefite vs, that it rather bringeth vs death, and wee bee cursed by it. For it is a looking glasse wherein to see that wee bee Gods enemies: and it is a keye to open the gates of hell. And how then commeth it to passe that God shoulde procure our welfare, and yet notwithstanding wee shoulde receiue nothing but harme by it? That is not of it selfe; but it falleth out by another meane, that is to saye by our owne fault. Then let vs vnderstande, that Gods lawe (if wee consider it in it selfe) is vnto vs a doctrine of welfare, whereby God commeth neere vnto vs to bee our father and to make vs finde life in him, that by his ruling of our life, wee might sticke vnto him, and thereby bee made partakers of his benefites, & in the ende attayne to the heritage of the heauenly life. But herewithal we be so froward and full of corruption, that the law can serue vs to no other purpose, but to curse vs, & to make vs perceiue how lothsome we be vnto God, in as much as we be his deadly enemies, & so we haue double cause to be abashed & afraid, & ashamed of our selues, when we see ỹ the good is so turned to our harm: & it is more than if ỹ nature of ỹ same were changed by our infection. Would it not make vs to loth our selues, if we should find such foule & vyle smokes in vs, as shoulde darken and quench the light of the sunne? yes verily. Now we see that Gods law is the light of our life: and yet we not only dim it, but also turn it into ỹ darknes of death; & it is vnpossible ỹ it should leade vs in any other steed, vntil our Lord Iesus Christ haue wrought in vs, & reformed vs by his holy spirit, & by writing his lawe newe againe in our hearts. For asmuch then as we see ỹ men turne life into death, light into darknes, & benefit into bane: alas, ought we not to be exceedingly abashed? yes, but yet must not ỹ put vs out of conceit of ỹ doctrin of ỹ law, so as we should not loue it, howbeit ỹ we cãnot performe it, vntil god haue chãged our harts to cause vs to submit our selues vnto him, and haue made vs newe creatures in our lord Iesus christ. True it is ỹ the setting forth of ỹ law vnto vs, is not for nought: but yet must we needes perceiue by experience, ỹ vntill God hath brought vs home again vnto him, ỹ doctrin of his law wil serue for nothing but to cõdemne vs. But when he hath once wrought in vs by his holy spirit, then shal wee perceiue that in setting forth his law vnto vs, he procureth our benefite & welfare, according as is saide of it here by Moses. And so you heare what we haue to gather vpõ this text. But Moses doth yet better confirme the matter that wee haue seene; which is, that God helde not his people downe like slaues, nor handled them roughly to be reuenged of thẽ, & to make to make them feele the offence they had committed, but that he handled them after a gentle and louing fashion. Now then (saith he) hath the euerlasting thy God any neede of thee? Behold (saith he) the heauens, yea, and the heauens of heauens are Gods. As if he should say, you think that God would fain haue a people, as though he could not forbeare to be without them. Hath not hee the skyes at commandement? hath not he his heauenly host? hath he not whole millions of Angels? hath hee not peaceable dominion in heauen? Yes, and therefore ye must not imagine any more, that his choosing of you was to better his owne estate by you. If hee shoulde destroy you, and make quite riddance of you, should his might ceasse? No, no, and for proofe therof, he hath no neede of men. Againe, besides that, is not the earth and all thinges in it, in his possession? Yes: What is the cause then that hee hath not taken and chosen other nations to him as wel as you? Is it for that you are nobler, or mightier, or worthier in any respect, than the rest, as it is mentioned in the seuenth Chapter? No. It is certaine that the Iewes were not better than the Gentiles: insomuch that if they should haue beene compared with them, they shoulde haue found themselues to haue bin neither nobler of linage, nor richer in substance, nor vertuouser in life, nor to haue excelled them in any thing. What is the cause then (saith Moses) that God hath vouchsafed to take you for his people, and that he hath let all others alone; & reached you his hand to gouern you? Sought he his own profite or aduantage? No. Seing then that you be so greatly bound vnto him, serue him w the better wil.

Psal.8.7.& 50.10.

Here we see in effect two things. The one is Moses his confirming of the Israelites still in the doctrine y we haue heard; which is, y all of them shoulde learne to glorifie God for their welfare, acknowledging themselues beholden to him for all good things, so as they haue not any worthines or deseruinges to vaunt themselues of, but rather rak their God & vtterly abase themselues. Marke y for the one point. And out of this proceedeth the other point; which is, that such as haue had such experience of Gods goodnes towards themselues, & are taught aforehand to glorifie god, must take courage to serue him y more frankly, & offer themselues to God with a more zelous will, to be quietly gouerned & ouerruled by him. Thus ye see y two pointes that are to be gathered vpon that text. Yea & let vs mark well, how it is not without cause y Moses standeth so much vpon y doctrine. For wee see how the vnthankfulnes of men is so great, y they labor continually to deface Gods goodnes, by reason of y enirled roote of pride & loftines which cannot be quite & cleane taken from vs. Men then do alwayes beare themselues in hand, y they be somwhat worth, & therupon they stand in their own conceits, yea euen as it were in despite of God. Although God lay on sure loade vpon our heads with beetles, yet ceasse wee not to set vp our brisse tils, & to grunt at him, & to think there is yet some vertue or power in vs. For this cause Moses thinks it not ynough to haue said once or twice, you must father all your welfare vpon the onely fauour of God: but he returneth eftsoone to the confirming of the same doctrine, to the intent that mens cackling might be y better stilled, and that such as deceiue themselues through their vaine imaginations, might learne to conclude in the end, y it is not for vs to looke for any valour or worthines in our selues, but that we must yeld God that which belongeth peculiarly vnto him, namely, that his calling of vs, his choosing of vs, & his maintaining of vs; & likewise our hauing of his word, & our reteining of some order in the Church, come altogither of him, so as we cannot say we haue gotten them by our owne skil, cunning or strength. Thus much concerning y first point.

Nowe for our better confirmation herein, let vs compare our selues with the Angels & with all the world besides, & let vs think thus: what are we? Truely, if we go no further than to our owne selues, we may haue our eies dazeled, & we know y naturaly men do so besot themselues, y they be as good as bewitched with the fond imaginatiõ of their own worthines. Therefore if we should looke no further than to our selues, it would seem to vs y we be something worth: but if wee looke further of, & fall to considering with our selues, What are other men? Do they not set as much or more by themselues than we do? yes: & if there were a third partie to play y iudge, would he not make more account of them than of vs? Yes. For to outward showe there is much more greatnes, riches, worthines, & honor; there is much more discretion & wisedom in them than in vs. What is the cause then y God hath chosen vs, & let the others go? Haue we any thing wherof we may be proud? Alas, no, if we be not ouerfarre besotted in our own fond imaginations. But if we cannot yet be brought to this reason by cõparing ourselues with all the worlde beside: let vs mount vp a litle higher & come to y Angels of heauen. Could not God haue contented himselfe with his Angels, wout cõming vnto vs? We be but poore wormes, there is nothing but rottennesse in vs, & yet god vouchsafeth to seeke vs. His wil is to haue vs to be his children, not only to enioy his gifts & benefits here beneath, but also to aduance vs vp to his heauenly kingdom. And for what deserts of ours? [None at al.] Wherefore seeing we cannot be so beaten down at one blow, as to come humble our selues vnto God; let vs wey well these words of Moses, & bethink vs of the thing that is told vs here; namely y the heauẽs of heauens are the lords. For Moses thinkes it not ynough to say simply the heauẽs: but he inlargeth his speech yet further, & saith, the heauens of heauens. It had been ynough to haue saide the heauens, for seeing that y earth (how wide and houge so euer it be) is nothing in comparison of the vnmeasurable greatnes of the skyes: y only word heauens ought wel to haue sufficed. But Moses intẽded to expresse it yet more in saying the heauens, yea euẽ the heauẽs of heauẽs. In respect wherof he repeteth those words three times: as if he should say, God can find a kingdõ large & great ynough, & of such widnes as he shal not need to com borow some litle corner in the world to lodge in: he needeth not to seeke in darke caues for any thing wherewith to set foorth his glorye. Men are but wormes; they be but like frogges in a puddle of myre; and shal God come downe here belowe, to make his glorie shine there? Hath he not his heauenly power, to shewe there aboue that he hath soueraine dominion ouer all creatures? Must he be faine to stande to our courtesie for the dooing of any thing? So then, we see that men must not onely become drunken & beastlike, but also starke diuels through pride, if this declaration of Moses make them not to stoope, & to acknowledge it to be good reasō that God should be glorified euery where, and that they ought not to reserue to themselues any whit of the praise of their owne saluation or welfare.

Now furthermore Moses addeth, that Gods affection towards that people, & his louing of them to choose their seede, proceeded onely of his own good will. Your God (saith he) hath dominion ouer heauen & earth; And yet notwithstanding he hath vouchsafed to be your Lord. What is the cause therof? Moses hath shewed it alreadie. But yet hee addeth (for greater confirmation) that God did cast an erneſt free good wil towards this people. The first word which he vseth, signifieth sometime to cleaue vnto, & sometime to take pleasure. But here the proper & natural meaning of it is, that God tooke pleasure in that people, so that he acquainted himself with them through a free loue: for he addeth the worde Loue thereunto. Ye see then, that willing pleasure went afore, & afterward loue ensued of it, and it serueth to shewe, that it is a fondnesse for men to imagine ỹ there is any cause why God should loue one more than another, saue onely that it is his pleasure so to do. Moses could not haue expressed this more plainly, than by saying that it was Gods good pleasure. That is the verie fountaine; and out of that fountaine springeth afterward the loue. Let vs learne then, that God must first loue vs, and that we must feele the same by effect in vs; and yet notwithstanding we must not stay stil at that loue. But to the ende wee may the better finde ỹ it is a free loue, we must proceede to Gods pleasure or will; that is to say, wee must knowe, that he respected neither one thing nor other, whereby to be persuaded and moued to that loue, but that he sought the cause of it in him self; and because it liked him, therefore he lifted it. That is the thing that Moses hath declared in this text. Howbeit for as much as we cannot as nowe proceede any farther, let vs beare away but this lesson, that as oft as there is any speaking of our saluation, wee must not seeke ỹ cause of it anywhere elſe, than in God; & that being vtterly naked of all goodnes, we must confesse our selues to be vtterly accursed, but that God pitying vs, and mynding to shewe vs mercie, draweth vs out of the cursednes wherein we were, in which respect, for as much as he calleth & allureth vs to the saluation which he hath purchased so dearly for vs, we must not dout but ỹ he wil bring vs thither, at leastwise if we abide stedfast in his couenant, & yet neuertheleſſe, that because wee cannot haue such stedfastnes of our selues, hee wil hold vs vp & strengthen vs by his holy spirit, to the end that feeling his power in vs, wee may be the more incouraged to serue him, and not be vnthankfull for so great goodnesse as he hath shewed vs.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we may continually mislike them more and more, and in so doing returne vnto him, as to ỹ onely partie that can remedie our diseases, and set vs vp againe by pardoning our offences, so as we may feele the sweetenes that is in him, and the bitternesse of our afflictions may not make vs to mislike of his seruice, but rather ỹ we may be the more affectioned vnto it, so as by ỹ meane we may be framed vnto his righteousnes, & vnto ỹ obeying of him, vntil we be gathered into the company of his Angels. That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people & nations of the earth, &c.

15 Yet notwithstanding the Lorde hath through loue acquainted himselfe with thy fathers, and loued them, and chosen their seede after them, that is to wit, euen you aboue all people, as appeareth this day.

16 Therefore cutte away the foreskin of your heartes, and harden not your neckes from henceforth.

We

WE haue to lay foorth more at large, the sentẽce that was begun yesterday, which is, that here Moses declareth vnto the Iewes, that all the goodnesse which they had, proceeded of Gods loue, yea euen of free loue. For his louing of them aboue all other people was not for that they were worthier, but because it so pleased him. Moreouer, he addeth that God tooke not Abraham onely, but also all his ofspring into his fauour, so as his choosing of the people, proceeded thereof. Wherof commeth it then, that the Iewes were so preferred before all the rest of the worlde? If we say it was because they were better than the rest, ỳ is a manifest gainsaying of God, who will haue vs to acknowledge his only fauour & goodnes in that behalfe. Then let vs conclude, ỳ God sought not the cause thereof elswhere than in himselfe: But ỳ his will was to lay forth the infinite treasures of his mercy, to shew that he was not indetted to any creature, but that his bearing of good will towardes them, is for ỳ he himselfe is good, and therfore all things are to be referred to his praise according as the scripture sheweth that his chosing of his church in all ages hath beene to that end. Nowe we see in effect what this doctrine meaneth.

Yesterday it was declared what was the vse of it, namely that men should be humbled in themselues, to exalt Gods goodnes, & thereupon take the better courage to serue him. For how greatly are we bound vnto him, seeing he hath vouchsafed to take vs for his heritage, & to adopt vs to be his children, whereas in the meane season he hath reiected others that were like vnto vs? For if it be demanded wherein we differ from other men: there wil no difference be found in respect of our selues. And therfore, seeing that God hath esteemed vs so highly, we are bound to serue him and to giue our selues wholly vnto him. But by the way let vs marke, that there is a generall election belonging to all this people, which election deserueth well to be had in estimation. But yet should not al auaile, except euery man were made partaker of it particularly in himselfe. This would be darkesum, if it were not declared more at large. But it wil become easie ynough, if we cal to minde, first what Moses teacheth here, and which wee haue seene already heretofore: namely that God chose Abrahams ofspring out of the whole worlde. And why? because it pleased him. All the world was his (as hath beene declared already) and al nations were alike neere vnto him, and in equall degree as that ofspring was that was to come of Abrahã. Nay: (which more is) he chose a people ỳ had no being, and of whõ there was no hope. For Abraham was like a drie timberlogge, and therefore was there no hope that euer he could haue any ofspring. Sara his wife was barrẽ & both of them drooped for age, and their bodies were withered, so as God chose the thing which was not, and his promise seemed as it were to hang in the ayre, without foundation to rest vpon. And yet notwithstãding, by vertue of the promise wherein God sayde that hee would blesse Abrahãs lynage, there must needes come a people, as shall be shewed in the next lecture. See here I pray you the election of God, wherby he putteth such difference betwene the lynage of Abraham and all the rest of the world, that he made the same linage his Church of purpose that the signes of his fauour and of his couenant should remaine there, and that his name should be called vpon there, so as he offered the promises of saluation to them that descended of the same race and lynage, & the redeemer ỳ was to be sent into the worlde, was set forth vnto thẽ that they might be gathered together vnder him. Loe here (I say) a general election that belonged to al the children of Abraham, and yet was that grace to be confirmed by faith but in a parte of them, & in some of them. For we see that many of them were cut off, not for that they were not Abrahams children, in respect of the flesh and the worlde: But for that they were not his children in spirite and before God, which was the chiefe point, as S. Paul declareth. As for those which were vnbeleeuers and vnthrifties, and imbraced not the promise that was made vnto Abraham with true faith, those were set beside the inheritance. In deede they were accounted for his children: howbeit, that was but as Ismael was who was not lawfully begotten. Now then Gods generall election which extended to the whole people, was not sufficient: But it behoued euerie man to be partaker of it in his own peculiar behalfe. And how was ỳ to be done? by faith. But let vs see from whence faith proceedeth, but only of Gods wil, in that he vouchsafeth to confirm his fauor towardes whõ he thought good. Therfore chose he whom he listed out of this people, and sealed his promise in their hearts by his holy spirite, so as they were made partakers of his trueth, & it tooke full and perfect effect in them. Lo here the double election of God. The one extendeth to the whole people, because circumcision was giuen indifferently to all, both smal and great, and the promises likewise were common. But yet for all that, God was faine to adde a seconde grace, by touching the hearts of his chosen, namely of such as he listed to reserue to himselfe, and those came vnto him, & he made them to receiue the benefit that was offered them. And in deede, we see that the greatest number of that people haue bin cast off, and as it were banished from Gods fauour, so as there remained but a small remnant of them, not onely at some one time, but also euen after the captiuity of Babilon, according to this foresaying of the prophet Esay: Although thou wart neuer so many in nũber, so as thy folke were as the sande of the sea, yet shall the reminant of you be very small ỳ God wil saue. For the hypocrites abused Gods promise falsly. And because it was sayd ỳ the people should be in multitude as the sande of the sea, they bragged at the sight of a great number, and in the meane while dispised God. But he telleth them that he coulde aswell diminish them, as he had multiplied them: so as there should remaine but a small portion of them. And so it came to passe, insomuch as the prophet sayth, ỳ if God had not reserued serued some seede, the countrie of Iuda had bin as Sodom & Gomorre, & God had vtterly rooted them out as they had well deserued.

Now is this very profitable for vs. For nowadayes, when it is tolde vs ỳ we haue the pure doctrine of ỳ Gospel preached vnto vs, & we haue the sacrament of baptism for the warrant of our saluation, ỳ is one choice that God maketh of vs. We be no better than other men, ỳ are drowned in ydolatrie & abhominations, on whō God hath not vouchsafed to looke w̄ such pity, as to make ỳ truth of his gospel to shine vpon thē: but hath let thē alone as destitute of all things, so as there is nothing but horrible cōfusion amongest them; & yet in the meane season, he taketh vs between his armes, and into his bosome, vouchsafing to cause his word to be preached vnto vs, whereby we see Iesus Christ who inlightneth vs as ỳ day-sun of righteousnes, & we haue the sacramentes whereof we knowe the vse. Lo here one choise ỳ God maketh of vs, which is well worthy to be esteemed, wherin it behoueth vs to cōsider Gods only infinite goodnes, for ỳ he espieth nothing in vs, for ỳ which he should preferre vs, before such as are nobler thā we, & haue much more thā we to outward appearance. But yet is it not ynough for vs to be so chosē of God as ỳ he taketh vs into his house, admitteth vs to bee of his flocke, & dwelleth among vs; euery of vs must haue an eie to himself, so as ỳ gospel be not preached in vain nor we beare the bare name of Christians, without shewing ỳ effect of it in our deedes. For vntil our adoptiō be sealed by ỳ holy Ghost, let vs not thinke ỳ it auaileth vs any whit to haue herd the word of God: but it shal turne to our double condemnation, because ỳ when God had chosen vs, we offended him; whē he had entered into a couenant with vs, wee brake our faithfull promise which wee had made & plighted vnto him; and therfore me must be punished ỳ more greuously. But whē we haue once a warrant in our hearts, ỳ his promises belong vnto vs, & are behighted vnto vs, by reason ỳ we receiue them w̄ true obedience, & sticke to our Lord Iesus Christ, suffring him to gouerne vs: ỳ is a sure seale of Gods chosing of vs, so as we not onely haue the outwarde apparance of it before men, but also the truth of it before our God. And like as Abrahā was made the father of all ỳ faithfull before God: so are we made his children in spirit & truth, and not only as in respect of adoption to ỳ world. Thus we see what we haue to gather vpō this text, & vpō this declaration ỳ Moses maketh here to the Iewes.

And for the same cause he addeth the exhortation which we haue read, in that he willeth the Iewes to circumcise their hearts, and to beware that they harden not their necks any more. Good reason it is that men should submit themselues to God after ỳ maner by forsaking thēselues, seeing that his seeking to win vs to him is not for any cōmoditie to himselfe, (as was shewed yesterday,) but because hee is desirous of our welfare, so as hee putteth vs not to the doing of any thing which redoundeth not to our own benefit & profit. Seeing then ỳ God respecteth nothing but vs in his alluring of vs to come vnto him: should we drag backe in that case? Or should wee haue proude and lofty heartes to aduaunce our selues against him? Nowe for the better vnderstanding of this doctrine, let vs note that Moses had an eye vnto outward signe that was giuen at that time to the Iewes, after the same maner that wee haue baptisme at this day. For circumcision serued to two endes. First, God thereby condemned all mankinde and all that is of mans owne nature, shewing them thereby, that all of it is euill. And secondely he gaue hope of saluation in ỳ seede of Abraham, accordingly as he had promised. To this purpose (say I) serued ỳ figure of circumcision, namely to put the Iewes in minde, ỳ frō their mothers wombe, they brought nothing with thē but condemnation, & that all ỳ euer was of man was cursed before God, because it had nothing in it but sinne & corruption. Secondarily again they were comforted, forasmuch as they saw that God promised them saluation, by the seede of man, and ỳ he receiued them into fauour, and iustified thē of purpose to haue them seperated frō all ỳ rest of the worlde. Seeing the Iewes had this prerogatiue, surely if they had not meant to deface Gods power as much as in thē lay, they should haue made their circumcision inuisible, by cutting off al ỳ euer was of their owne nature, assuring themselues ỳ men can not please God, vntill they haue giuen ouer the thinges ỳ were their owne. Hereunto had Moses an eye when he sayd, Circumcise your hearts this day. For their seruing of ỳ figure was nothing, except they considered to what end God ment to lead them by it. They beguiled themselues with ỳ visible signe, and ỳ was ynough to thē: for Satan hath alwaies this policie with him, to make men bide their wits about the thinges ỳ they see with their eyes as whereunto he seeth them inclined. For all our seeking is to content God with faire countrey, and though we neuer come nie him in verie deede, yet would we fain pay him with a sort of peking trifles. The Iewes then esteemed their circumcision ynough & too much, but yet in so doing they abused it, because they regarded not thing ỳ God ment to shew thē therby, but were tied altogether to ỳ visible signe. Therfore doth Moses rebuke them, saying: thinke not ỳ the hauing of circumcision in your bodies, is all ỳ you haue to doe: for Gods giuing of ỳ signe vnto you, was to help your infirmity, of purpose to leade you further therby, namely to bring you to true repentāce. For when ye once perceiue ỳ al ỳ euer is of your own nature bringeth nothing but curse, you shall see that all of it is to be done quite and cleane away. Therefore bethinke ye to mortifie your selues: as if he should say, Circumcision consisteth not in the outwarde paring away of the fleshe, but the trueth thereof is within: it is your heartes that must bee circumcised. Moses his meaning hereby, is not to condemne the outwarde signe: but to shewe the true vse of it, which folke had corrupted through superstition and hypocrisie. Accordingly whereunto Ioel sayth, Rend your heartes, & not your garments. Wherin his meaning is, not that men should no more shew any token of repentance by humbling them-

themselues before God, but to shew that all that euer men do by outwarde signes, (as by rending of the hayre from their heades and beardes, by much weeping, by knocking vpon their brests, and by al other maner of gestures that may shew them to be abashed, & in maner out of comfort before God) is nothing, except ỳ hart be broken afore. Euen so, circumcision is vtterly vnprofitable, vnles ỳ hart be circumcised as wel as ỳ body.

Now we see the meaning of Moses, but it will become the plainer & easier vnto vs, if we come to our baptisme. I haue already touched the likenesse that is betweene these two sacraments: and it is all one, as if a man should say vnto vs nowe adayes, if you would ỳ God should take you for his people and heritage, yee must be baptised in your soules. What? baptised in our soules? Yea for south. For the water that is cast vpon our bodies is nothing, if wee haue not the trueth of it, namely that we be so plunged vnder the water, as if we were in a graue: that is to say, ỳ it maketh vs to die in our selues, so as our owne affections, our owne thoughtes, our owne witte, our owne reason, and our owne wisedome beare not any more sway in vs; but ỳ we suffer our selues, to be gouerned by God, so as all our fleshly lustes bee subdued and held in captiuitie vnder him, and vnder his yoke. Therefore if a man would shew vs the true meaning of our baptisme, he shoulde say, looke that yee be baptised within. And for the same cause also doeth Saint Paule in the seconde to the Romans, sette downe a difference betweene the circumcision of the letter, and the circumcision of the spirite: And he sayeth that the one is inwarde, and the other outward. Whereas he termeth it the Circumcision of the letter, it is by a similitude, for he hath an eye to the worde. To what purpose serueth the reading of Gods Law, and of the Gospel, if it touch vs not inwardely? Verily if euery of vs haue his Bible in print, and yet let it alone, what doe we elle but make it vnholy by our not applying of so great a treasure to our vse, & by our not imploying of the same to our profite according to the intent of our God? Euen so standeth the case with the sacramentes sayeth Saint Paule. For they be but as a dead letter, so long as wee haue no more but the visible signes, it is but a gay appearance and shew before men: But the whole matter consisteth in hauing the trueth before God. Wil we haue the true Circumcision? then must it be inwardly, that is to say, in the Spirite. That is to say, God must worke there. So we see nowe that the meaning of Moses was, that folke shoulde not boast vainely of the bare name of God, nor of the wearing of his badge, without the trueth of it, so as they could shewe the power thereof: but that they should fare the better by the signe that is giuen them to warrant their adoption, to the entent it might appeare that God hath not without cause separated them from the heathen, which were as good as banished out of his church, & had no acquaintāce at al with him.

Againe we see that this doctrin toucheth and concerneth vs nowadayes, because we haue baptisme which serueth to the same vse ỳ circumcision did, namely to lead vs to repentance. Therfore must we apply it to our vse. And forasmuch as God hath vouchsafed to giue vs a seale of the fatherly loue which hee beareth vs, and that it pleased him to gather vs into his Church, and to shew ỳ he hath taken vs vnto himself to be heirs of his kingdome: Let not vs disappoint our selues of such a benefite through our owne lewdenesse and vnthankefulnesse; but lette vs endeuour to fare the better by it, by beeing washed in our soules, that is to say, by mortifying our owne imaginations, reasons, and lustes, and by offering vp of our selues in sacrifice vnto god, to the ende that he may renewe vs, and that nothing else but his spirite may reigne in vs, so as hee may beare the whole swaye. This exhortation is made vnto the Iewes, because it was their dutie to apply their sacramentes vnto such ende. Neuertheless let vs marke, that it is not in our power to performe the thing ỳ is required here. For although the Iewes ought to haue bin circūcised in their hearres; yet was it verie necessary that God should worke in ỳ behalfe. Likewise it standeth vs in hande nowadayes, to mortifie our selues, & we be cōmanded so to do; but yet must wee be faine to resort vnto God, who reserueth to himselfe ỳ office of renewing our soules. And that is the cause why it is sayd ỳ our Lorde Iesus Christ is only he which baptiseth with fire & the holy Ghost. For if a man ỳ ministreth baptisme, had power to regenerate, then had he in himself the power, maiestie, & glory, which is giuen to ỳ sonne of God. But our baptising is only with water, ỳ is to say, we haue but the signe of baptisme cōmitted vnto vs, yet notwithstanding, our doing is not in vaine: for we must needes be faithfull witnesses of God. And forasmuch as we doe it in his name; we must not thinke ỳ the thing is voide & vnprofitable. But yet for all that, it behoueth vs to resort to our Lord Iesus Christ, and to consider ỳ our ministring of baptisme in his Church, is by his authoritie, & therefore that it belongeth vnto him to make it auaileable & that it is only his spirit wherby we be regenerate. For if euerie man could wash his own soule: it might be sayde that the minister baptiseth with water, and ỳ euerie man baptiseth himselfe with truth; but it can not be sayd so: for that were as much as to robbe Gods sonne of the thing that is peculiar vnto him. He hath reserued that honour to himselfe, & neuer giuen it to any creature, no not vnto ỳ Angels of heauen. Therefore let vs vnderstand, that nowadayes when it is tolde vs, that we must make the outwarde signe auailable vnto vs, by being baptised in our soules: we must therewithall immediately submit our selues vnto God, praying him to performe the thing by the power of his holy spirit, which he representeth to vs outwardly by the figure thereof; and to mortifie and renewe vs in suchwise, as we may haue the trueth of baptisme sealed vppe and ingrauen in our soules. In like case was it with the people of olde time.

Rom. 4. Col. 2.12.

Rom. 2.28.

Iohn 1.33.

True it is that here Moses exhorteth ỳ Iewes to Circumcise their hearres: but yet we shall see hereafter, howe he will say, the Lorde our God Deut. 30.6.

will circumcise your hearts, it may well seeme at the first sight, ỳ these two thinges stande not wel together, but that there is some contrarietie in them: and yet they agree both together very well. For (as I haue touched afore) it is our dutie to be circumcised; that is to say, to cut off all that is of our owne nature, and to ridde it quite away, ỳ God may reigne in vs. But doe wee discharge our selues thereof? No: but God must be faine to supply our want: And therefore it is he that Circumciseth vs. Why then doeth he commaunde vs to doe it, seeing wee haue neither power nor abilitie to doe it? It is to the ende that we should be sorie at the sight of our owne wretchednes, and ỳ seeing wee faile, and are so blame worthy, we should on the other side resort vnto our God, condemning our selues, & on ỳ other side be ẽcoraged to desire him to do ỳ which wee our selues can not. There is yet one other reason, ỳ whereas God doth all in vs, yet he calleth his doing ours, and will haue euerie of vs to endeuour ourselues, though he be the worker of it. Thus it is he ỳ doth all, notwithstanding that we be not as blockes; For he hath giuen vs a will by nature. Neuertheleſſe that will is wicked, but he correcteth it and maketh it good; & his working is after such a sort, as he will haue vs to indeuour our selues lustily like good men of warre; in so much ỳ although we do nothing, & that that which we do cõmeth of him; yet will he haue vs to haue such feeling of his power, as to ouercom all tẽptations, & be circumcised in our hearts, by renewing of our minds, & by forsaking alour own affections, to fight against Satan, vntil wee haue gotten the vpper hande.

But yet by the way we must vnderstand, that this serueth not to magnifie our owne free wil as the Papists haue imagined. We haue shewed already, ỳ we be so litle able by nature to come vnto God, that we drawe cleane backe frõ him. Neuertheleſſe to the intent to shew vs plainly what our duetie is, he sayeth vnto vs, do it: & although we be not able to set hand to the worke, no, nor to put forth a finger towardes it: yet doth he cõmand vs to do our duty, notwithstanding ỳ we be vtterly vnable by any meanes to perform it. And that is to the end ỳ we seeing our defaulte, should be the more ashamed of it, & humble our selues before God, and againe ỳ we should be prouoked to pray him to worke in vs, seeing it is he ỳ doth all in vs, notwithstanding ỳ it be his will, that we should be ỳ instrumentes of the power of his holy spirit. For as he is so gracious vnto vs, as to impute his owne doings vnto vs & to make vs partakers of thẽ: so also it is his will, ỳ we should acknowledge and take them for our owne.

And now to go forward with the matter that I haue touched already, let vs beare wel in mind that if our hearts be not circumcised, we shalbe condemned of falshood, for breaking of the promise, ỳ we haue made to our God, as this people were, who therefore were oftentimes vpbrayded with the vncircumcisednes of their hearts. The Prophetes cried out oftentimes to the Iewes, come on your waies with your circumcision. You beare your selues in hand that God is greatly beholden vnto you, because you beare his marke. But you deale too leaudly w̃ him, & ye abuse his name with too wicked trecherie. That marke was giuen you to make you holy, & yet notwithstanding ye be defiled, insomuch ỳ ye ly welteringe in your owne dung, & (which worse is) ye make your circumcision a cloke of hypocrisie to couer your wickednes withall: So that if ye were stripped naked, ye would be ashamed to see your own filthinesse. But now because ye haue Circumcision, yee imagine ỳ that should hide all your vncleanneſſe; and thereupon yee fall to spyting of God, by your corrupting & falsifying of ỳ thing which he had ordeined for your welfare & profit. Away therefore ye vncircumcised, worse than the verie heathen themselues. Away ye people of Chanaan, your father was an Amorrhite and your mother an Hethite: that is to say, ye be worse than the veriestes naughtipackes in the worlde. Hence ye Harlottes birdes, come yee hither to boast that Abraham was your father? Go seeke your anceters somwhere elſe: for ye be bastards and vnworthie to be counted Abrahams childr̃ or seede. We see howe the prophetes did cutte the combes of the prating Iewes, to the intent they should not brag any more of their circumcision, yea and euen Saint Steuen vseth the same maner of speech in the seuenth of the Actes. Go to ye vncircumcised of heart & stiffenecked people (sayeth he) ye be like your fathers, who hath always rebelled against God, & you follow their footesteppes, or rather ye goe on from euill to worse. And think we that such vpbraidinges concerne not vs nowadayes? Yes: For if we be once baptised, wee shall pay deere for our defiling of the water which God had dedicated to so holy & sacred an vse. In deede the water of it selfe is nothing; but when it is once ioyned to the word, there is as it were an authenticall seale which God hath ingrauen in it. Nowe hee that counterfaiteth ỳ seale of a Prince, shal hee not be punished? Beholde, this is the seale of God, which serueth not to seale conueiances of earthly possessions; as Landes, Meadowes, Vineyardes, and Lordeshippes: but to assure vs that we be called to the heauenly life; it is such a seale as bringeth warrant with it, that we be washed cleane from our sinnes by the bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ, and regenerated againe by his holy spirite; and shal we breake all this, & scape vnpunished? Thus let vs looke well about vs and consider, that our Baptisme will cost vs very deare if we make it not auailable, so as it may take effect in vs by being truely baptised in our soules.

And he addeth immediatly, Harden not your necks any more. We haue expounded the like similitude heretofore: but yet must I tell ye briefly in this text, ỳ by this figuratiue speech which I am about to expound, Moses ment to expresse that the Iewes circumcising of their hearts, was their submitting of themselues vnto God by receiuing his yoke, so as they kicked no more against him like wilde colts. Ye see then ỳ the thing which God requireth at our hands in that he will haue vs to be renewed, is that we should be obedient vnto him. And hereby wee be warned, that as long long as men abide in their owne nature, they be rebelles against God, and doe nothing else but spite him by drawing the contrary way from his righteousnes, so as (to be short) they be enemies to all goodnesse. And for proofe thereof, God requireth no more but that we should bow down our neckes vnto him, and beare his yoke meekely. That is the whole perfection of our life; and the greatest holinesse that God commandeth, is that men shoulde mortifie all their wicked affections, according to the former saying, that they should bee circumcised to please God, that is to say, they must die to liue well, that is to wit, God must ridde them of all that is their owne, if he intend to haue any good of them. Then let vs beare in minde that there will bee nothing but stubbornesse in vs, to make vs to lift vp ourselues against God, and to play the wilde beastes, so long as we abide in our own nature. To be short as long as a man foloweth his owne inclination; hee must needes be at warre with God, and all goodnes: for there is not that veine in him, which tendeth not altogether to euill. Nowe let vs go bragge of our owne freewill, and say that men may well binde God to thē by their good works and deserues, as the papistes haue imagined. For when the Papists heare that God commandeth vs to doe any thing; they conclude thereupon by and by, that then it is in our power to doe it. Yes, but (as I sayde before) God respecteth not our abilitie or power, but our duetie. Neither passeth he for the gay appearance or outwarde showe, to accept the thinges that carrie a faire countenance to the worldwarde. But the thing Matt.11.30. that liketh me (sayth he) is ỹ ye receiue my yoke which I lay vpon you, not by tyranny or cruelty, but of fauour & good will, so as it shal be sweete and amiable to you, if you can inure yourselues to it with humilitie. Thinke not ỹ I come to bee pleased with your faire cōtenances. In deed ye can well ynough pretende outwardly, to be as lowly & meeke as sheepe in hearing the voice of your shepheard: but inwardly ye be as stallfedde bulls, ready to strike at him w your hornes; ye be wolues & foxes; there is nothing in you but pride & cruelnie; there is nothing but hypocrisie, guile, & spitefulnes; ye be of so sturdy nature, ỹ it is vnpossible to tame ye: & therfore it behoueth you to be quite & clean changed, or else ye can neuer away w my yoke, but ye wil be like wilde beasts, so as I shal not be neuer able to cōpasse you. Such then are we by nature, & such do we cōtinue still vntil god haue reformed vs by his grace, & we see the proof of it here before our eyes. And yet not withstanding we wil nedes stil magnifie our own reason & say we haue some seedes of goodnes in vs, so as we be inclined vnto goodnes, & can help to further Gods grace, so he aid vs, & so we make a hotchpotch of halfe figs & half reysons as they say. True it is ỹ God stirreth vs vp & putteth vs forward (say they;) but we go on of our own self mouing: & afterward as he increaseth his grace, so do we put to our collup; and finally our atteyning to ỹ accōplishment of our enterprises, commeth of our owne wisedom, strength & forwardnes. But Moses giueth no place to such follies; but contrariwise, he sheweth, that (spite of our teeth) this sentence of cōdemnation must nedes stande, namely that if we intende to be obedient vnto God, we must first & foremost be circumcised, so as all ỹ is of the world must be killed in vs. Let that serue for one point.

And herewithall we haue to marke, that (as hath bin tolde vs oftentimes) God maketh more account of obedience, than of all the precious things ỹ men imagine thēselues to haue. For in all ages men haue inuented fond deuotions, and they haue borne thēselues in hand ỹ they should please God well ynough, with deuising of apes toyes of their own brain. But cōtrariwise, ỹ thing ỹ God requireth of vs, is ỹ we should submit our selues to him & say; Lord reigne thou ouer vs, & be thou our only master, so as al our righteousnes & holines may be to frame our selues according to thy worde, & not to make long vagaries to inuent this or that; but to holde ourselues contented with thy single will, to yeeld to ỹ which thou cōmandest, & to beare thy yoke quietly; yea and to learn to stoop & to bow down our necks vnto it, though it seeme painefull to vs. That is ỹ subiectiō which God requireth at our hands. Whereas Moses saith: Harden not your neckes any more, he rebuketh the Iewes for their former life, as if he should say, It is enough & too much ỹ ye haue hitherto bin stubborn against your God: according to this former saying of his heretofore, Frō ỹ first day ỹ I was acquainted with you vnto this hour, Deut.9.7. I haue seene nothing but naughtines & frowardnes in you. He rehearseth ỹ same here, as a thing ỹ should make them ashamed. For we like not to haue our former faults laid in our dish. As soone as a man doth but touch them, because our eares are nice, it is a corsie vnto vs, & we thinke ỹ all such thinges should be buried in forgetfulnes, so as they should neuer be remēbred any more. In deed if we our selues did beare thē well in mind, it should not neede to tell vs of them any more; but we see how euery of vs falleth asleepe in thē; & it greeueth vs to come to any backereckening of the offences that we haue committed against God. We cast them a great way behinde vs, it is a matter of heauinesse to vs: and yet ought wee to bethinke our selues diligently both euen and morne of our former faultes. Howbeit not to be rechlesse of them, or to fall into despaire for thē; but to be sorie in such wise for them, as we may walke more warely than wee haue done, and be thankefull to God for his goodnes in ỹ hee hath vouchsafed to correct vs, as I haue declared often heretofore. Ye see then how men ought to haue good remembrance of their faults, though they were neuer warned thereof by others. But what doe we? Wee forget them, and can not abide that any man should tell vs of them: and that is a doubling of the fault. Therefore let vs assure ourselues, that it is needefull for vs to be tolde of our sins oftentimes, and to be put in remembraunce of them. And that is the cause why Moses sayth againe; Harden not your harts any more. He doth not alonely warne the Iewes but also therewithall accuse them, telling them that euen vnto that time they hadde behaued

themselues so ill; as it was verie requisite for thē to be done to vnderstand, that it was but a fondnesse for them to boast themselues to be Gods people.

Nowe to the intent we may learne to put this doctrine in practise as it ought to be; Let vs vnderstande, that such as will needes harden themselues in naughtinesse, shalbe destroyed by God who will make them to feele ỹ force of his power according to this saying of his, If ye fall to stubLeuit.26.23 bornes with me, I will deale stubbornly with you 24. againe. And it is all one with this saying of the Psal.18.27. xviij. Psalme, With the frowarde I wilbe froward, and I wil deale roughly with such as harden thēselues against me. Then let vs learne that Gods intent is to lay a yoke vppon our neckes by his worde, of purpose to bring vs in subiection to his righteousnesse: And all is for our benefite. Insomuch that although it bee so vnpossible for vs to fulfill the Lawe, that wee can not so much as put foorth one of our litle fingers to the furtheraunce of it, no nor once thinke a good thought: yet is that yoke gentle & amiable of it selfe, and all the harme of it commeth of our selues. For if wee will not bowe downe our neckes, but strout them out as hard as if they were steele or brasse; so as in steede of being as Oxen to labour, or as sheep to heare the voyce of our shepherd, we become sturdy buls and fall to striking with rage & furie to shake off the yoke, so as we not only followe not the worde, but also shake off all subiection, and inharden ourselues against God. what excuse will there be for vs, seeing wee yeelde not ourselues vnto him willingly to be taught at his hande? Yet for all that, we see how the world goeth. God therefore must be faine to ouermaster vs, & to tame vs by maine hande. And in verie deede, looke what afflictions soeuer light vpon vs, we ought to take thē as strokes of Gods hād, to make vs bowe our neckes vnder him, and to become tractable and obedient. But when we go awke and cleane contrary after that fashion, thē doth he threaten vs thus by Moses, I will deale stubbornely as well as you. He vseth that terme of purpose, to the intent ỹ men should not dally with him. For at the first blush the saying might seeme straunge which I alledged out of the xviij Psal.18.27. Psalme; namely, that hee will deale frowardely with such as are froward. For howe can that be? Can God be frowarde? No: But it is all one as if he shoulde say: yee shall finde in me a greater hardnesse than yours is: Let vs incounter togethe, and see which of vs is stoutest and best able to holde out. I tell you, it is you that are like to be confounded and go to wrecke. And therfore let vs leaue our naughtinesse, and repaire vnto God while he calleth vs; and when we be come to him, let vs suffer ourselues to be gouerned by his holy spirite, which is, the spirit of meekenesse, that we may submit our selues obediently vnto him. And for perfourmaunce thereof, lette vs marke the lesson that Moses addeth immediatly.

The euerlasting thy God (sayeth he) is the God of Gods, a great, a mighty, & a strong God: yea but let vs marke also, that he doth not accept (that is to say, regard) mens persons; but iudgeth according to the truth. Beware therefore ỹ ye trust not any more in your circūcision nor in such like thinges, but beare in mind that God wil haue your seruice to be such, as your hearts may be wholly dedicated vnto him: and that he wold haue you to submit your selues vnto him, so as he may haue you in his possession, and you enioy the inheritance which hee promised to your fathers, and which belongeth vnto you. Gods greatnesse which Moses speaketh of in this place, is the first foundation which wee must lay whereby to take courage to serue him. For if there be no certaintie in our religion, wee shall alwayes make but a colde worke of it, and if it bee mached with any wilfulnesse, it will make vs to stande in our owne conceites, yea and starke fooles: so as there shall be no trueth nor right in our doinges. Howe so euer the case stande, I say if men bee not sure who the GOD is whome they worshippe; they shall but runne a straye and at randonne, without anye zeale to serue him. For although the Papistes bee so greatly giuen to their idolatrie, that to their owne seeming they haue sure houlde of the things that they haue imagined: yet it is but a doubtfull opinion and surmise, which deceiueth them. In deede they doe their seruice with many ceremonies; but if a man come to the searching of their heartes, hee shall finde them alwayes doubting, and so snarled in their superstitions, that they knowe not where they be. And namely whensoeuer they be pinched with aduersitie, then doeth the venime breake out, so as they shewe that they wote not whether there is a GOD or no, but by blaspheming of him, by gnashing their teeth against him, by finding fault with him, and by accusing him of crueltie, for punishing them (as they suppose) without their deseruing. Loe in what taking all they be, which followe their owne fancies in case of religion. True it is that the Idolaters become so beastly in their superstitions, that they followe them with a burning affection, as the prophetes say; who vpbrayde the Iewes that they had were like stoned horses neying after mares, that is to witte, they were so dissolutely minded, that their doinges were not counted as an ordinarie kinde of whooredome, but as a villanie vsed against nature. Likewise in the Popedome is it not seene that such as are taken to bee the earnestest maintainers of their religion, are rather carried away with rage, than moued with any true zeale to Godwarde? Yes certainely, and thereby they doe the more bewraye their owne leawdenesse and shame. In deede they be bolde ynough to skorne vs, as though wee were turned away from the right religion: but lette it suffice vs, that wee may alwayes vpbrayde them that they knowe not what GOD they worshippe, whereas wee on our side haue good warrant of the doctrine ỹ we follow, and are sure that God accepteth the seruice which we yeelde vnto him according thereunto, and that in so doing we may boldly offer our selues vnto him.

Ye

Yee see then that vnlesse we bee sure of our religion, we shall neuer haue any right ordred zele, nor hearts disposed to serue God. And that is the cause why Moses sayeth heere, Go too, ye be not as the heathen that go at aduenture, weening that they doe well in seruing their Idolles, howbeit that it be but a weening, so as they know not what the Gods be whom they serue, for it is but a fancie of their owne deuising. But your God is the God that made heauen and earth, it is he that hath reueiled himselfe vnto you. Now then, if yee followe them that haue not the like assurance, and fall to disguising of Gods seruice: what excuse will there bee for you? Were it not meete that ye should rather giue ouer both your bodyes and soules to him, so as hee might bee honoured at your handes all your life long? And so we see here the intent of Moses as concerning this text.

Rom 12.1. 1.Cor.6. 20.

Now let vs learne heereby, that wee can neuer rule our liues to Gods lyking, vnlesse we first knowe him. For what a thing is it if wee thinke we liue vprightly, and in the meane while know not the God whom we ought to serue? For when is our life to bee counted good and holy? When it is spent in the honouring of God: that is the finall ende of it. For if wee knowe not what God it is, nor what his will is, well may we toyle our selues all our life long, and yet shall all of it bee but confusion. It is as if a man should runne gadding ouer the fieldes, he might well breake his shinnes, and tyre his whole body, and yet be neuer the further forewarde, but rather the swiftlyer hee runneth, the further is he off from his iourneyes ende. Wee see then that all thinges are out of order in the Popedome, because they bee blinde and ignoraunt, and wote not what God they serue, nor what Saint they should make their vowes vnto, as sayth their owne prouerbe. Insomuch that when they haue tyred themselues with trotting vp and downe, they wote not where they bee, but are newe to seeke in their imaginations, whereas to knowe God as hee hath shewed himselfe to vs in his worde, that they might yeeld him the reuerence which is dewe vnto him: they can no skill of it, neither is there any tydings of it among them. But as for vs, if wee intende to knowe the true seruice of GOD, and to obey him throughly, the first poynt that wee must come vnto, must be to knowe him. Indeede this lesson cannot be dispatched at this present, and therefore it shall suffice vs to knowe in one worde for a conclusion, that it is an inestimable treasure to vs, when it pleaseth GOD to shew himselfe vnto vs, so as wee bee sure that our religion is good, and that he alloweth it, and that we goe not by opinion or by weening, as these wretched beastes doe, which suffer themselues to bee lead by the nose, as not hauing any certaine rule whereby to guide and to gouerne themselues. Marke that for one poynt.

And for the second poynt let vs marke also, that for as much as our God is great and terrible, it behoueth vs to be humbled vnder his mightie hand, and to learne to walke in such wise in his feare, as wee not onely be abashed at his Maiestie, but also besides our honoring of him with feare and reuerence, wee repaire and resort vnto him without any doubting that he is our father.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgment of our sinnes, praying him to touche vs still more and more, so as wee may bee made to knowe that wee haue nothing but stubbornesse and naughtinesse in vs, and therefore may seeke to him for the spirit of meekenesse, lowelinesse, and feare, that being reformed by his grace, wee may seeke to amend our whole liues according to his righteousnesse, and fight continually against our wicked lustes, vntill we bee discharged of this mortall body, and be gathered vp into his kingdome: Beseeching him further to graunt vs such grace as wee may neuer ceasse to followe him whither soeuer hee calleth vs, and in the meane while to beare with our infirmities, till he haue rid vs quite and cleane of them: and that for as much as we haue now our Lord Iesus Christ, who is the end of the law, and the substance and truth of the Sacramentes that hee hath giuen vs, it may please him to graunt vs the grace to be so washed in our harres through the power of the holy Ghost, as all our filthinesse may be purged and cleansed, so as in the end we may be wholy transformed into his glory. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The Lxx. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the tenth Chapter.

17 For the Lord &c.

18 Who doth right to the fatherlesse and widowe, and loueth the straunger to giue him foode and rayment.

19 Therefore loue the straunger: for you your selues haue beene straungers in the land of Egypt.

20 Thou shalt feare the Lorde thy God, and serue him, and sticke to him, and sweare by his name.

themselues so ill; as it was verie requisite for thē to be done to vnderstand, that it was but a fondnesse for them to boast themselues to be Gods people.

Nowe to the intent we may learne to put this doctrine in practise as it ought to be; Let vs vnderstande, that such as will needes harden themselues in naughtinesse, shalbe destroyed by God who will make them to feele ỳ force of his power according to this saying of his, If ye fall to stubbornes with me, I will deale stubbornly with you againe. And it is all one with this saying of the xviij. Psalme, With the frowarde I wilbe froward, and I wil deale roughly with such as harden thēselues against me. Then let vs learne that Gods intent is to lay a yoke vppon our neckes by his worde, of purpose to bring vs in subiection to his righteousnesse: And all is for our benefite. Insomuch that although it bee so vnpossible for vs to fulfill the Lawe, that wee can not so much as put foorth one of our litle fingers to the furtherance of it, no nor once thinke a good thought: yet is that yoke gentle & amiable of it selfe, and all the harme of it commeth of our selues. For if wee will not bowe downe our neckes, but strout them out as hard as if they were steele or brasse; so as in steede of being as Oxen to labour, or as sheep to heare the voyce of our shepherd, we become sturdy buls and fall to striking with rage & furie to shake off the yoke, so as we not only followe not the worde, but also shake off all subiection, and inharden ourselues against God. what excuse will there be for vs, seeing wee yeelde not ourselues vnto him willingly to be taught at his hande? Yet for all that, we see how the world goeth. God therefore must be faine to ouermaster vs, & to tame vs by maine hande. And in verie deede, looke what afflictions soeuer light vpon vs, we ought to take thē as strokes of Gods hād, to make vs bowe our neckes vnder him, and to become tractable and obedient. But when we go awke and cleane contrary after that fashion, thē doth he threaten vs thus by Moses, I will deale stubbornely as well as you. He vseth that terme of purpose, to the intent ỳ men should not dally with him. For at the first blush the saying might seeme straunge which I alledged out of the xviij Psalme; namely, that hee will deale frowardely with such as are froward. For howe can that be? Can God be frowarde? No: But it is all one as if he shoulde say: yee shall finde in me a greater hardnesse than yours is: Let vs incounter together, and see which of vs is stoutest and best able to holde out. I tell you, it is you that are like to be confounded and go to wrecke. And therfore let vs leaue our naughtinesse, and repaire vnto God while he calleth vs; and when we be come to him, let vs suffer ourselues to be gouerned by his holy spirite, which is, the spirit of meekenesse, that we may submit our selues obediently vnto him. And for perfourmaunce thereof, lette vs marke the lesson that Moses addeth immediatly.

Psal. 18. 27.

Psal. 18. 27.

The euerlasting thy God (sayeth he) is the God of Gods, a great, a mightie, & a strong God: yea but let vs marke also, that he doth not accept (that is to say, regard) mens persons; but iudgeth according to the truth. Beware therefore ỳ ye trust not any more in your circūcision nor in such like thinges, but beare in mind that God wil haue your seruice to be such, as your hearts may be wholly dedicated vnto him: and that he wold haue you to submit your selues vnto him, so as he may haue you in his possession, and you enioy the inheritance which hee promised to your fathers, and which belongeth vnto you. Gods greatnesse which Moses speaketh of in this place, is the first foundation which wee must lay whereby to take courage to serue him. For if there be no certaintie in our religion, wee shall alwayes make but a colde worke of it, and if it bee macched with any wilfulnesse, it will make vs to stande in our owne conceites, yea and starke fooles; so as there shall be no trueth nor right in our doinges. Howe so euer the case stande, I say if men bee not sure who the GOD is whome they worshippe; they shall but runne a straye and at randonne, without anye zeale to serue him. For although the Papistes bee so greatly giuen to their idolatrie, that to their owne seeming they haue sure houlde of the things that they haue imagined: yet it is but a doubtfull opinion and surmise, which deceiueth them. In deede they doe their seruice with many ceremonies; but if a man come to the searching of their heartes, hee shall finde them alwayes doubting, and so snarled in their superstitions, that they knowe not where they be. And mooly whensoeuer they be pinched with aduersitie, then doeth the venime breake out, so as they shewe that they were not whether there is a GOD or no, but by blaspheming of him, by gnashing their teeth against him, by finding faulr with him, and by accusing him of cruelte, for punishing them (as they suppose) without their deseruing. Loe in what taking all they be, which followe their owne fancies in case of religion. True it is that the Idolsters become so beastly in their superstitions, that they followe them with a burning affection, as the prophetes say, who vpbrayde the Iewes that they were like stoned horses neying after mares, that is to witte, they were so diuelishly minded, that their doinges were not counted as an ordinarie kinde of whooredome, but as a villanous euen against nature. Likewise in the Popedome is it not seene that such as are taken to bee the earnestest maintainers of their religion, are rather carried away with rage, than moued with any true zeale to Godwarde? Yes certainely: and thereby they doe the more bewraye their owne leawdenesse and shame. In deede they be bolde ynough to skorne vs, as though wee were turned away from the right religion: but lette it suffice vs, that wee may alwayes vpbrayde them that they knowe not what GOD they worshippe, whereas wee on our side haue good warrant of the doctrine ỳ we follow, and are sure that God accepteth the seruice which we yeelde vnto him according thereunto, and that in so doing we may boldly offer our selues vnto him.

Ye

Ye see then that vnlesse we bee sure of our religion, we shall neuer haue any right ordred zele, nor hearts disposed to serue God. And that is the cause why Moses sayeth heere, Go too, ye be not as the heathen that go at al aduenture, weening that they doe well in seruing their Idolles, howbeit that it be but a weening, so as they know not what the Gods be whom they serue, for it is but a fancie of their owne deuising. But your God is the God that made heauen and earth, it is he that hath reueiled himselfe vnto you. Now then, if yee followe them that haue not the like assurance, and fall to disguising of Gods seruice: what excuse will there bee for you? Were it not meete that ye should rather giue ouer both your bodyes and soules to him, so as hee might bee honoured at your handes all your life long? And so we see here the intent of Moses as concerning this text.

1 Tim. 1. 2. 1. Cor. 6. 20.

Now let vs learne heereby, that wee can neuer rule our liues to Gods lyking, vnlesse we first knowe him. For what a thing is it if wee thinke we liue vprightly, and in the meane while know not the God whom we ought to serue? For when is our life to bee counted good and holy? When it is spent in the honouring of God: that is the finall ende of it. For if wee knowe not what God it is, nor what his will is, well may we toyle our selues all our life long, and yet shall all of it bee but confusion. It is as if a man should runne gadding ouer the feeldes, he might well breake his shinnes, and tyre his whole body, and yet be neuer the further forewarde, but rather the swiftlyer hee runneth, the further is he off from his iourneyes ende. Wee see then that all thinges are out of order in the Popedome, because they bee blinde and ignoraunt, and wote not what God they serue, nor what Saint they should make their vowes vnto, as sayth their owne prouerbe. Insomuch that when they haue tyred themselues with trotting vp and downe, they wote not where they bee, but are newe to seeke in their imaginations, whereas to knowe God as hee hath shewed himselfe to vs in his woord, that they might yeeld him the reuerence which is dewe vnto him: they can no skill of it, neither is there any tydings of it among them. But as for vs, if wee intende to knowe the true seruice of GOD, and to obey him throughly, the first poynt that wee must come vnto, must be to knowe him. Indeede this lesson cannot be dispatched at this present, and therefore it shall suffice vs to knowe in one worde for a conclusion, that it is an inestimable treasure to vs, when it pleaseth GOD to shew himselfe vnto vs, so as wee bee sure that our religion is good, and that he alloweth it, and that we goe not by opinion or by weening, as these wretched beastes doe, which suffer themselues to bee lead by the nose, as not hauing any certaine rule whereby to guide and to gouerne themselues. Marke that for one poynt.

And for the second poynt let vs marke also, that for as much as our God is great and terrible, it behoueth vs to be humbled vnder his mightie hand, and to learne to walke in such wise in his feare, as wee not onely be abashed at his Maiestie, but also besides our honoring of him with feare and reuerence, wee repaire and resort vnto him without any doubting that he is our father.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgment of our sinnes, praying him to touche vs still more and more, so as wee may bee made to knowe that wee haue nothing but stubbornnesse and naughtinesse in vs, and therefore may seeke to him for the spirit of meekenesse, lowelinesse, and feare, that being reformed by his grace, wee may seeke to amend our whole liues according to his righteousnesse, and fight continually against our wicked lustes, vntill we bee discharged of this mortall body, and be gathered vp into his kingdome: Beseeching him further to graunt vs such grace as wee may neuer ceasse to followe him whither soeuer hee calleth vs, and in the meane while to beare with our infirmities, till he haue rid vs quite and cleane of them: and that for as much as we haue now our Lord Iesus Christ, who is the end of the law, and the substance and truth of the Sacramentes that hee hath giuen vs, it may please him to graunt vs the grace to be so washed in our hartes through the power of the holy Ghost, as all our filthinesse may be purged and cleansed, so as in the end we may be wholy transformed into his glory. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The Lxx. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the tenth Chapter.

17 For the Lord &c.

18 Who doth right to the fatherlesse and widowe, and loueth the straunger to giue him foode and rayment.

19 Therefore loue the straunger: for you your selues haue beene straungers in the land of Egypt.

20 Thou shalt feare the Lorde thy God, and serue him, and sticke to him, and sweare by his name.

21 Hee is thy praise, hee is thy God, who hath doone those great and terrible thinges for thee, which thine eyes haue seene.

WE sawe yesterday, that to haue a right zele and affection in seruing GOD, wee must bee sure that the religion which wee holde of, is good and allowed of him. For so long as we stand in doubt, it is vnpossible for vs to goe on with a free courage: we shall alwayes goe limping and as constrained: and if there bee any earnest minde in vs, the same proceedeth of an insensibleness, and not for that wee bee giuen in good earnest to serue the GOD whom wee knowe not. And therefore wee must bee well and dewly instructed, eare wee can bee disposed to doe well. And that is the cause why Moses saith expresly heere, that the GOD which vttered himselfe by the Law, and shewed himselfe afore to the Patriarkes, is the God of Gods, and that there is not any other to bee sought: insomuch that although wee were very well disposed, and that wee were neuer so full of deuotion (as they say:) yet should all that euer wee Rom.14.23. were able to doe bee nothing woorth, without faith. Therefore wee must bee sure and knowe, that wee doe not any thing in vaine, nor at aladuenture: but that we followe Gods will, and that he liketh well of our dooinges.

Now Moses hauing tould the people, that this Lawe was the Lawe of the liuing God; addeth now further, that hee is great, strong, and terrible. For wee see how men take leaue to despise God, and ouersotte themselues so much in their pride and presumption, as they cannot bee brought to any subiection. To the ende therefore that men should not dally with such a Lord, he sayth expresly that the God which willed his Lawe to bee publshed vnto them at that tyme, is great, mighty, & dreadfull. His terming of him Great, is to shew what honour is dew to him. His terming of him strong or mightie, is to withhold men from standing against him. And his terming of him terrible or dreadfull, is to make vs knowe that if he doe but touch vs with his hand, wee must needes be vndone. Therefore let vs beware we despise him not: and when he calleth vs before his Maiestie, let vs tremble and quake for feare, that we may come with right humilitie. Thus do we now see Moseses meaning. And therefore let vs marke, that if we wil direct our liues aright, wee must haue pure doctrine, that our religion may be grounded vppon Gods truth, so as wee may be sure that the doctrine which we professe, is infallible, & therewithall we must beware that when we know God, we set not light by him, but ỳ our knowing of him doe bring a lowelines with it, so as we submit our selues wholly to the honoring of him ỳ is so high and incomprehensible, Iob.41.16. before whom the very Angels themselues doe tremble. Ye see then how the thing which wee haue to mark, is ỳ men shal neuer know God, vntill they haue gotten such feeling of the infinite glory that is in him, as maketh them to stoope, yea & to make none account at al of themselues, that they may giue ouer themselues wholly to the honoring & seruing of him. But this is very yll put in vre. For euen they that make greatest boast of their profiting in the Gospell, can skill to babble well ynough, & they beare themselues in hand ỳ they be iolly fellowes, when they can prattle at pleasure, though it be without any reuerence at all. And we see how the holy scripture is shamefully abused nowe adayes by a number of mens discourfing of it as it were but of a fable, or to shew the fineneſſe of their wit, by raunging into curious and vnprofitable questions. Thus ye see how Gods word is abused now adayes in mens pleasures, without any feare or reuerence, for want of cõsidering that which Moses telleth here, that is to wit, ỳ when we resort vnto God, wee must bethinke vs of the dreadfull Maiestie that is in him, that it may bridle vs and holde vs in subiection to him, and make vs to yeeld him such honour, as to be abashed at his speaking to vs, vntill we haue conceiued what he saith to vs & vpon the knowledge thereof, to be ready and forward in obeying the same, without any gainsaiyng. And so ye see what we haue to gather vpõ this text, where he saith ỳ the God which hath vttered himselfe by the Law, is great & terrible.

Certaine it is that GOD intendeth not to driue vs away from him, but rather to win vs to him by gentlenes. But yet must we bee fayne to bee tamed, bicause of the pride that is in vs, least wee growe bold to offend him, and cannot finde in our hearts to be inured to his yoke, than the which there is not any thing more hard for vs to doe. Wee must (I say) bee first subdued by the feare or terrour that Moses speaketh of here, before wee can conceiue Gods goodnesse. But yet must it be so tempered, as we shunne not his good instruction, ne bee so dismaied as to refuse Gods word out of hand; but as it may be as a preparatiue, to make vs good scholers, and to drawe our wittes to such a teachableneſſe, as all that euer we haue of nature may be done away, and nothing may hinder vs to receiue his doctrine without gainsaying, but ỳ his word (besides that wee loue it) may also bee reuerenced at our handes, and we follow it by submitting our selues to it alwayes and in all cases.

Now after that Moses hath said so, he addeth that God hath no respect of person, nor receiueth any rewards. Whereas he saieth ỳ he hath no respect of persons, his meaning is that there is no fauor to be had at his hand for the things that men are willingly mooued with. For this word Person betokeneth the outward appearance. It is not taken here nor in any other places of the scripture, for ỳ which we meane by the word person when we say, Lo here is one person, Lo here are two persons: but it is taken for riches, pouertie, birth, nobilitie, or honour. All things therefore ỳ carie an outward showe before men, to moue vs to fauor them or to hate them, to honour them or despyse them, all those things (I say) are comprehended vnder the word Person, for they be as vitors. And after that maner is it sayd that God accepteth no mans person. To what purpose now doeth Moses speake thereof? It is bicause that the great ones perceiuing themselues to bee borne out by the world, thinke they may doe as much before God, & thereupon become proude. If a man haue once won credit, so as mē dare not open their mouthes against his misbehauiour, but he dasheth thē out of countenance as many as stand against him: he beares himselfe in hand ỹ he may beare as great sway with God, & thereupon playes ỹ prince among them. That is the cause why a nūber ouershoote themselues, & cast away all feare of God. For when they see men feare them & stand in awe of them, or whē they see men commend them and fauour them: Then they thinke they haue won the gole, then they fal to triumphing, & they beare themselues in hand ỹ they should no more bee called to account. Now bicause men ouershoote themselues after ỹ fashion: Moses summoneth them to gods Ps.143. iudgement, which is done according to trueth, after which maner S. Paul speaketh of it where he expoundeth this same saying, ỹ God hath no respect of persons. He iudgeth truly (saith he) according to the deede & according to righteousnesse, so as men must not thinke they shall fare euer the better for their alleaging this or that.

Furthermore he signifieth therewithall, ỹ God is not contented with eyseruice, but hath respect to the trueneſſe of the heart, & not to ỹ outward seeming of things, as is said in the first booke of Samuel. And so we haue to marke, ỹ although a 1. Sam. 9. man be great to the worldward, yet he must not lift vp his head or his necke against God. For they shal gaine nothing by it, bicause all ỹ greatnes of the world, is but as smoke before him. And on the otherside they ỹ are vnderlings, must not thinke that God will beare with them the more for ỹ, as they now and then moue mortall men to compassion thereby. Therefore away with all these things that muster afore our eyes, & whereby we be moued to loue or hatred: for all this is neither heere nor there before God: When we come before him, the first thing ỹ he will loke vpon, is our harts: and although they be now wrapped vp, and (to our owne seeming) we haue lurking holes to hide vs in: yet shall all be laid open. Therefore let vs not beguile our selues in ỹ behalfe. Again, let vs consider, that God will iudge according to ỹ truth of the deede. We may well face out matters for a while, as we do bicause we be naturaly giuen to hipocrisie: but al ỹ paintings and all ỹ gay colours ỹ we pretend as now, shalbe wiped quite & cleane away when we come once before God. Therefore let vs walke vprightly & with a pure hart, & in especially let vs rule all our workes by his law, knowing ỹ he hath no respect of persons, & let ỹ bridle vs all. Let such as are in authority & of power to grieue ỹ inferior & weaker sorte, forbeare to do so. And on the otherside let the weaker beare in minde, that God will not faile to iudge them for all that, bicause he is not an accepter of persons: & therefore let vs bring nothing with vs but righteousnesse & soundnesse of conscience before him, for nothing will passe for payment but onely that.

It is not without cause, that Moses addeth yet further, that God taketh no rewards. If a man aske vs whether God be like mortal iudges that wil be corrupted with bribes & money: truely there is none of vs all but wil say no: yea and it is such a blasphemie to say otherwise, ỹ euen the wickedst persons ỹ are would abhorre it. For they woulde say, what hath God to do with gold and siluer? Is God corruptible? But yet for all that, wee ceasse not to deeme that thing of him which we know to be false. And how so? Bicause ỹ as we see that worldly iudges are corrupted, insomuch that if a mā grease them in ỹ hand, they wil suffer themselues to be caried away, and whereas they had done him wrong afore, they will nowe doe him right, & they be to be bound & chaunged euery way: we beare our selues in hand ỹ God will bee dealt with after ỹ same maner. We will not speak it with open mouth: but surely men would neuer be so bold to doe euill, if they did not transfigure God, & beare themselues in hand ỹ he is plyable, & such a one as wil be won by rewards. But let vs come to the ordinarie custome of al ages. What is the meanes wherewith men thinke to pacifie God in ỹ Popedome, but by setting vp of tapers, by burning of perfumes, & by doing such other pretie trifles? It seemeth to them ỹ he shold hold himselfe contented with such payments, as if a man brought a bribe to an earthly iudge to corrupt him & to win him wall. But this had not his first beginning in Poperie. The Iewes were deceiued therwith. Also ỹ heathen men had ỹ same superstitiō, notwithstanding ỹ some of them misliked it, I meane some of thē whose bookes wee haue, insomuch ỹ they haue cried out against it, saying: what intend ye to do ye wretched folke? When ye haue giuen your selues to deceit, theft, open wrong, cruelie, extortion, & all maner of wickednesse, ye come by & by to reconcile your selues vnto God. And howe? By bringing him some part of ỹ bootie. But forasmuch as ỹ guise of ỹ Popedome is best knowne vnto vs, let vs see what is done there. Whē a mā hath pilled & polled his fill, if he giue some Cope to ỹ Church, if he build some chappel, if he found some Masses, if he cause some puppets to be made, or if he doe some other such gewgawe: thats a fellow alone, God is well recompenced at his hand, he needes not to doubt of ỹ forgiuenes of all his sinnes before God: If he doe but offer him a peece of the bootie, he is wel ynough contented, his mouth is so stopt ỹ he cā demand no more. In deede men wil not say thus, but yet is it so neuertheleſſe. For whereof comes it ỹ the wicked surmise all their wicked deeds to be couered, but of ỹ they imagin themselues to haue compounded w God, so as he knowes not what to say any more, when they haue once as it were bribed him after that sort with some present? Now then bicause the world doth daly so with God, & beareth it self in hand that it can agree with him for rewards: Moses saith on the contrarie, that God is not like mortall men, nor will yeeld a whitte for all that: and therfore he wold not haue men to beguile themselues. For if we desire to be reconciled vnto him Persius Satyra 2.

when we haue offended him; there is none other way for vs, but to cast our selues downe, and to come to him with a sory heart for it. For as it is Psal. 51.19. said in the psalme, that is the sacrifice which hee accepteth aboue all: And when he receiueth vs into his fauor, let vs assure our selues that it is for ỹ paimentes sake, which was made in the person of our lord Iesus Christ. Wherfore let vs not presume to bring him any thing of our own, but let vs borrow ellewhere, that which we haue not in our selues. Yet for all this, it behoueth vs to hate sin, if we meane ỹ God should admit vs into his
1. Cor. 11. 31. fauour. Yea and we must condemne the euill ỹ we know to be in our selues, if we intend to be acquite of it. And therfore let vs not come any more with our owne vaine fancies, vpon hope to pacifie God with such pelting trash, or by likening him to a corrupted Iudge, that will haue his eyes blinded with rewardes: let vs not imagin any such thing in him, but let vs walke soundly.

Nowe then wee see howe Moses intent was to bridle vs, by shewing vs what the nature of God is: and he exhorteth vs to feare him bicause he is terrible. And again, for as much as he regardeth no mans person, let vs put away all pride & presumption. Let the great ones know ỹ they shall gain nothing by their stoutnes, but ỹ al creatures must stoope to him. Finally let vs not think that when we haue offended God, we shal please him again with this fond shift of offering him some amends for it. For he doth so greatly abhorre & loath sin, as he can by no meanes away with it, neither is there any payment in the world ỹ can make satisfactiō for it. What is to be done then, but to resort simply & plainely to out God, submitting our selues vnto him, & seeking nothing else at his hand but to be reformed by him, so as al ỹ euer he misliketh may be corrected & cast downe in vs? Furthermore when as it is saide ỹ God taketh no rewards, we bee done to vnderstand, ỹ (as much as in vs lieth) we defile ỹ blood of our Lord Iesus Christ, which is the only payment & satisfaction for our sinnes, when we bee bolder to sin vnder pretence of reconciling our selues vnto God. They (I say) ỹ take such libertie to doe euill, defile the blood of our Lorde Iesus Christ, as if they trampled it vnder foote. For to say ỹ when we haue done a fault, we may be discharged of it by bringing some raunsome or recompence for it, were a plaine declaration ỹ we loue not our gold & siluer at all. If a man shoulde breake all lawe bicause he is sure he hath to doe with corrupt iudges, whose fauour he shal win w his purse, and yet notwithstanding for all his offending after ỹ sort, had no care howe he wasted & consumed his money, men would say he were witles. But we haue not any other means wherby to be reconciled vnto God, than ỹ only blood of our Lord Iesus Christ. Now then if we fall to lashing of it out after ỹ fashion wout discretion, is it not a token of too villanous contempt? Yes. And therfore let vs learne to hold our selues to ỹ inestimable price ỹ was paide for our raunsome: let vs learn (I say) to hold our selues in the feare of God, so as we giue not our selues ouer vnto euil. And therewall let vs learne also, to behaue our selues in such wise towardes our neighbort, as ỹ mightie greeue not the weeke and feeble. For although we may scape in this world, yet when we come before the heauenly iudge, we shall be punished double for our abusing of our power & credite after ỹ fashion. According wherevnto S. Paule warneth maisters ỹ they should not mistreat their seruants: for God (saith he) iudgeth without respect of persons. Wherby he sheweth, that such as are set in high estate & authoritie, ought to abstaine vtterly from al crueltie & pride. For why? They may well be serued of the same sorte themselues. And it is not for the to think themselues to haue ỹ better hand bicause that as now they haue ỹ vauntage & are in better degree for al ỹ geere shalbe dasht, when it cōmeth before God. Thus ye see what we haue to beare in minde.

Now for a further declaration he addeth, that God doeth right to the fatherlesse, the widowe and the straunger: & that God hath a care of the straunger, in giue him clothing & foode. Yea & he telleth ỹ Israel that they had bin straungers in ỹ land of Egypt, & therefore they ought to be mindefull of ỹ state of theirs, that they might vse all maner of gentleneesse towards straungers. This serueth for the proofe of ỹ doctrine which I touched euen now, ỹ is to wit, ỹ god hath no respect of persons. And in ỹ respect doth Moses say, ỹ the widowes, fatherlesse, and straungers shal be vexed in this world, they shall haue none to beare them out, men shall suffer the widowes to be troubled, the fatherlesse shalbe made a pray, straungers shalbe laid open to all iniuries, & no mā shall withstand it. And why? For in as much as they beare no countenance in this world, nor haue any kinsfolke or friends to maintaine them: it seemeth ỹ they may be put to ỹ bearing of al things: ỹ is the custome of ỹ world. But contrariwise it is said here, ỹ God is a defender of the fatherlesse, a maintainer of the widowes, & a protector of straungers. This is vtterly against ỹ cōmon custome of men. For (as I haue said alreadie) men are giuen to pleasuring of such as may stād them in some stead again: Kinsfolk & friends will help one another, & in the meane while poore people are forlaid. But see here how God dealeth ỹ cleane contrarie way. When he sees men trust in their own staies, and in their own strength, he leaueth them alone, as if he should say to them, Very well, ply what ye can doe of your selues. For commonly when means are profered vs in this world whereby to helpe vs, we despise God, & we beare our selues in hand, that wee may well ynough forbeare him. Not that wee will so say; but for as much as fewe folke doe call vppon God when the world fauoureth them: therefore doth God also make no account of them. Behold, it is the widowe, the straunger, and the fatherlesse, that are constrained to make their mone vnto him, and when they haue looked about them, they finde no fauour nor helpe among men. They shalbe dalyed withall, and although some fayre promises be made them, all is but holywater of the court as they terme it: in so much that the poore soules wote not where to become. This kinde of intreatance driueth them to God, & he parhearkeneth to their sighes & complaints. And so we see, that by such examples, Moses hath well confirmed the lesson which he had set downe; namely that God respecteth no persons. For the things that are despised in the world, are precious in his sight: and whom men hold scorne to bestowe a looke vpon; them doth he giue good care vnto.

Sith it is so, let vs mark for the first point, that if wee vexe such as are without defence in the world, God will set himselfe as an aduersarie against vs. And surely, were wee well perswaded therof, we wold be more afraid to offend a poore fatherlesse child, a widow, or a straunger, than to offend those that are best friended, and are able to reuenge themselues to the worldwarde. But what? Our vnbeliefe bewrayes it selfe in that behalf: in so much that if there be a man that is riche, mightie and well propped vp, we dare not withstand him. And although he haue doone vs some wrong, yet we put it vp meekly, & dare not complaine of it, & much lesse dare we lift vp our hand against him. But as for a poore man, we will not rane till hee haue doone vs some wrong or outrage, we wil be at hoste with him aforehand. For why? Wee feare not that he will be euen with vs; he may not bee so bolde as once to murmur against vs. And if he doe, wee can put a barre in his way, with who are you sir? He shall obtayne no right in Law. And if he doe, yet shall he haue the worse end of ỹ staffe. Thus stand we in feare of men if they be armed with any power, but in ỹ meane while we feare not God, who declareth himselfe to be the defender of all poore folkes ỹ are destitute of help. If we beleeued ỹ holy scripture, surely this only one saying of Moses would more abash vs, than all the worldly consideratiõs that could befall vs. On the contrary part, when we be so bold in troubling poore folks; it is a toke that we believe not any whit of al that is conteined in the holy scripture, and that we bee worse than heathen folke: And yet for all that, it is the comon fashion of ỹ world. But herby it appereth, ỹ nowadays vnbeleef ouerflowcth ỹ whole earth, like a water flud. In deede it is a horrible thing: but yet is it so, & it cannot be denied. What is to be done then? Let vs loke into our selues. If the Armes of a common weale or of a prince bee set vpon a house, or vpon a peece of land, no man dareth presume into it, for it were a breaking of his alegance and not a priuate offence. Behold, God setteth his armes or badge vpon ỹ widowe, the fatherles, and the straunger, & he telleth vs that hee hath taken them into his protection. Now if a man fal to troubling of them, & deale outragiously with them: is it not an open despising of God, and a defying of him, as it were to bid him battaile? In deede we wil not take it so, but God wil not referre himselfe to our vaine opinion and fancie. Whatsoeuer come of it, let vs marke well, that although the widowes bee shaken off as to the worldward, though fatherles children bee put to the spoyle, though poore straungers be skorned and troden vnder foote: yet doth God set neuertheles store by them, but hath his eyes continually vpon them, and will surely maintayne them. And therefore vnles we purpose to haue God our aduersary, and that he should shew himselfe to bee our deadly enemy; let vs abstaine from all wrong dealing, extorsion outrage, deceite, and malice, towards those that are friendlesse in respect of the world, and vtterly destitute of all shiftes, and after a sorte set open to the spoyle, as I said afore. Let vs not oppresse them, least God set himselfe against vs, & shew himselfe to be their continuall shield. Mark well this first fruite which wee haue to gather of the said lesson that was giuen to the Iewes in old tyme, to the end that if we feare not the punishment of men, we may yet be afraid of the determinate sentence that God setteth downe: which is, that hee will not ouerslip the wrongfull trubling of poore folke, without shewing of himselfe to be on their side, and that he hath taken their quarell in hand, according to this saying, that he will doe them right.

He saies not, only that he loueth them, or that he pitieth them; but that he will doe them right. Now then, if we see that the Iudges on earth do but mocke poore folks when they come to them for succour, and ỹ in stead of helping them they do but skorne them, let vs vnderstand that those Iudges must come before the heauenly Iudge, who will surely punish both those whome he had put in commission to defend poore folke, and also those that haue abused the liberty which they had in this world, by dooing the more euill because they saw they might scape vnpunyshed. God therefore looketh vpon them, and yet maketh as though he saw them not, for a time; so as if men misintreat poore folkes, be they widowes, fatherlesse, or straungers, in deede he setteth not himselfe against their dooings at the first, but when hee hath let them take their pleasure a while, then layes he his hand vppon all such as haue passed their bounder in doing outrage to the feeble and little ones; and specially vppon such as haue not doone their office when they were in authoritie to doe Iustice, nor haue succoured poore soules when they were oppressed. For God must needes redresse such enormities, and shew such persons their negligence, by setting himselfe against them, as against the corrupters of the lawe when it was put into their hand. And so ye see what Moses ment, in saying ỹ God doth right to such as are wrongfully trode vnder foote, and are not regarded in the world.

By the way, wee haue also great comforte to receiue of this text: so that if wee be destitute of worldly helpes, our God here taketh vs into his tuition; yea and he taryeth not till we come vnto him, but telleth vs that he is our defence, and ỹ he will be our maintainer. Now then although poore folk be wronged, and haue neuer so much violence offered them, so as they be in maner troden vnder foote: haue they not wherewith to content thẽselues, sith they know ỹ God looketh vpon them with pitie, and will in ỹ end stretch foorth his mighty hand to succour them? True it is ỹ they must bee exercised with patience so lõg as pleaseth God: but yet if they be not too vnthankfull, they haue well wherwith to content themselues, in that they be sure ỹ God neuer forgetteth them, but succoureth them, & keepeth a register of all ỹ wrongs ỹ are done vnto them, to bring thē to account in time conuenient. Howbeit to the intent wee may inioy this comfort, let vs note also, ỹ it is not ynough for men to be fatherlesse or straungers, or for womē to be husbandlesse; but wee must also be truely distressed before God, so as we humble our selues & resort to him for rescue whē men afflict vs wrongfully. For if a straūger be prouder than he ỹ is at home in his owne countrey and among his friendes: it is in vaine for him to trust ỹ God wil be ỹ defender of his welfare. When a straunger is so lordly, ỹ he will take more vpon him than ỹ partie that hath wherewith to helpe himselfe: he may goe seeke his maintenaunce elswhere than at Gods hand; for he shal not finde it there. But if a straūger perceiuing himselfe destitute of all worldly helpe, & yet ỹ God is on his side, do call vpō him & put himself wholly into his hands; surely then shal he finde at length, ỹ Gods promising to doe right to ỹ straūger, is not in vaine. If a widow play the shee diuell, in troubling and vexing of other folks, and ỹ there is more to do with her than ẇ a dosen men: let her not thinke ỹ God will trouble himselfe for her. But if a widow be helplesse, & behaue her selfe meekely, & seeke no further than to liue peaceably with al men: such a one wil the heauenly Iudge receiue into his protection. In like case standeth it with the fatherlesse. If they giue themselues to naughtines, shaking off all yoke, & become vnthrifts in spite of God & the world; they beguile themselues if they think that God fauoreth them, vnder pretence of this doctrine. And therefore let vs marke well, ỹ this is set downe expressely for such as suffer afflictions patiently, & auenge not themselues, but put their case into Gods hands. Although then that such folke be scorned of the world, and poynted at with the finger, and triumphed at by such as treade them vnder foote: yet doeth God take their case in hand, and will surely shewe it how long so euer he delay. Wherefore let vs learne hereby, to comfort our selues in our afflictions: which is, by being tamed and made to stoope, so as we seeke to be pitied at Gods hand, & referre our whole case vnto him, casting all our cares & sorowes into his lap. And again, let vs be wel aduised, ỹ although the world giue vs leaue to doe euil, so as we may vex & trouble men at our pleasure; yet shal we not scape Gods wrath: wel may we wrangle with him, but it shall not boote vs at all. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon that text.

To be short, let vs marke, that here Moses intended to commend equitie and vprightnes vnto vs. I say he sheweth vs how our Lord will bee serued at our handes: namely by behauing our selues plainely with our neighbors, so as we offer no violence or wrong to any body, & specially to the weaker sort, and to such as haue no maintenance at mās hand. God then will not haue vs to serue him with Ceremonies, but wee must deale iustly and vprightly, so as we yeelde euery man his right. That is the true seruing of God, as is shewed vs oftentimes in the holy scripture. And frō thence also is it, ỹ the Prophets haue drawen these sayings, That God requireth mercie & not sacrifice; That God wil haue vs to liue amōg our neighbours without doing harme to any body; That he wil haue al violence to ceasse, & that he wil haue al crueltie & deceite to be farre frō vs. The Prophets haue good store of such exhortations: & the fountaine whereout of they haue fetched them, is this doctrine of Moses, ỹ God wil not be serued with I wote not what superstitions as men are wont to do, who vse much pompe & gloriousnes in seruing God with faire temples, goodly pictures, gay imagerie, sweete perfumes, ringing of bels, setting vp of tapers, & such other pelting trash. They beare themselues in hand ỹ God delighteth in such things: & that when they play vpō their Organs, they make him to daūce as if he were a little babe. But let not vs beate our heads about such small trifles; for God wil be serued ẇ truth, righteousnes, & soundnes of heart. Againe he will haue vs to indeuour to serue our neighbors: for we haue nothing else ỹ is worth the bringing vnto him: but he wil haue vs to communicate togither, so as euery of vs according to his abilitie, do straine his wits to succour them ỹ haue need of help, & in any wise to beware that we take not libertie to doe any hurt or harme to any body. Now then let vs marke wel the meane of seruing our God according to his wil, that we trāsforme him not by our vaine folly, by taking our selues in hand, ỹ he is wel honored when we bring in our own pelting trash, as it were to dāze his eyes withall, which thing is impossible.

Now after that Moses hath shewed that God is terrible, and that it is not for vs to dally with so great a Lorde, who can well ynough hamper vs if we rebel against him; and therefore that it behoueth vs to liue vprightly, & to pitie ỹ poore, & to succor them ỹ are oppressed, so as we offer no crueltie nor tyrannie to ỹ weaker sort, & to such as are destitute of friends to support them: moreouer all this he addeth, that God is the praise of his people. And it is to ỹ end to win their heartily gentlenes & friendly dealing. And herein we se ỹ God omitteth not any thing whereby to draw vs to him, but ỹ after he hath vsed threatnings & put vs in feare, to make vs to stoope & to stand in awe of him, he commeth like a father ỹ should flatter his childe, & vseth myld & gentle words rather than his fatherly authoritie. That ye se how our Lord laboreth by al meanes to win vs, & therfore so much ỹ more to blame are we, and ỹ lesse to be excused, if we cannot be bowed neither by faire meanes nor by foule, seeing that our Lord trieth al ỹ waies to the wood, to draw vs to him. Therefore doeth Moses purposely say, That God is the praise of his people, & that he had done great & terrible things for their sakes. For this cause he saith, first of all that God is their praise. And by that speech hee meaneth, that when wee once know God, and he hath shewed himself to vs by his word; his will is that wee should glorifie him. Marke that for one point.

going out of the land of Egypt. For they were as masks or tokens of Gods goodnes, so as ỳ people could not but be conuicted of vnthankfulnesse, forasmuch as God had vttered himselfe as familiarly as was possible, to shewe himselfe fauorable to Abrahams posteritie. To be short, we see how God not onely vseth his dominion & right of soueraintie, which hee hath ouer vs to make vs subiect to his lawe and commaundementes: but also commeth to vs as a father, and vttereth as mield and gracious louingnesse towardes vs, as can be; and all to the end to breake the hardnesse of our harts. Insomuch that if wee bee not moued at his maiestie, or if we yeelde him not such reuerence as we ought to doe in respect of his soueraintie ouer vs: at least wise yet ought we to be meekened, seeing he stoopeth to vs, & cõmeth downe frõ his seate vnto vs, as if he should say, Wel sirs, assure yourselues I am your father, and therefore I pray you consider well the good that I haue done you, and whereby I haue witnessed my fauour towardes you, and let it moue you at leastwise to loue and serue me. That is the very principall meaning of Moses.

But yet by the way, let vs marke also that God is neuer duely honored at our hands, vnles we lay all our glorie vpon him. For wheras he is termed our prayse, by ỳ word he bereaueth vs of al glorie, & sheweth vs ỳ there is not any thing in vs, whereof we ought to be proude. Therefore let a man set as much store by himselfe as he listeth, yet in the end he shal come to shame, so as he shall perceiue there is not one drop of goodnesse in himselfe. What is to be done then? Let vs resort right forth to our God, to seeke al goodnes in him, & let vs glorifie him for shewing himselfe so liberall towards vs, ỳ wee may also make our boast thereof, according as it is saide by Ieremie, that the rich man must forget his riches, and the strong man his strength, & the wise man his wisdome, and all that euer is of man must be beaten downe, that wee may fetch our glory at Gods hand, knowing that it is he that executeth righteousnes, iudgement, and mercie. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember in this worde, where Moses saith that God is the praise of his people. And if we be not moued by that which is tolde vs in the holy scripture, at least wise yet let vs open our eyes, and let the often experience of Gods benefits frame vs to such humility as wee may not presume to commend ourselues any more, but onely haue our mouthes open to praise and magnifie the thinges that wee shall haue receiued at Gods hand. For sith he sheweth vs so many waies, that all our welfare consisteth in him, and that it commeth only of him, if we wil shut our eyes at it like a sort of blockeheads, and vouchsafe not ne list not to hold our selues to the thing that is throughly knowen and apparãt: surely we shalbe conuicted of bereauing God of his praise, & of bringing him to nothing as much as in vs lieth, for his benefits are infinit towards vs. And therfore let vs learn by this lesson, to acknowledge the benefits throughly which God hath bestowed vpon vs: for they be a sufficient busines to keepe vs occupied. If we gather our wits about vs to consider Gods goodnes towards vs, we shal find that we ought to seeke our whole praise no where els than only in him. And for that cause doth Moses adde, Is it he that hath done the great and terrible things which your eyes haue seene. As if he shold say, God needeth not to seek here & there for record, or for iudges to arreigne you: for (spite of your teeth) it shalbe proued to your faces, that your God is great, mightie, and terrible. For you were ỳ miserablest creatures in the world, you were in bondage like bruit beasts; and your God loued you so deerely, that he hath stretched out his arme against the Realme of Egypt, that stately & excellent Realme, ỳ realme so renoumed, wherein all the wisedome of the world was inclosed, insomuch ỳ hee hath made more account of your welfare, than of ỳ Realme. Sith it is so, know ye that it is not for you to glory any more of your selues, but to glorie onely of him. Assure your selues ỳ looke howe manie benefits you haue receiued at his hand, so many records haue you to be wray your lewdnes and vnthankfulnes, if ye acknowledge them not vnto him. And so by the example that is set vs downe here, let vs learne to acknowledge gods gratious goodnes, & to lay it vp in minde, and to make a good memorial thereof, & to call it often to remembrance, that wee may be prouoked thereby to yeld al glory vnto God, & to confesse that for our parts we be fillie and wretched creatures, in whom there is nothing but condemnation, and therefore there belongeth nothing to vs but wrath, & it is only God to whom all the glory & praise of our welfare perteyneth. Wherefore let it suffice vs that he is ours, and that hauing giuen himself vnto vs, he vouchsafeth also to make his benefits common vnto vs. Rom. 8. 32.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs to perceiue them throughly, and that therwithal we may so know the greatnes of his maiestie, as it may moue vs to submit our selues to the obeying of him, and draw vs to such subiection, as we may frame our selues to his wil, and bee no more intangled and wrapped in worldly things; but that we may bee so rid of them, as all our seeking may be to dedicate our selues wholy vnto him, ỳ he may acknowledge & accept vs for his people, & haue his hãd alwayes stretched out to succor vs at our neede. And that in the meane while we may patiently beare al the aduersities that he shall sende vs for the tryal of our obedience, & so apply our selues thereunto, as wee may not fayle to take comfort in his goodnes, and to rest vppon the same, til he haue made vs to feele ỳ things perfectly, whereof hee hath giuen vs a tast alreadie in this transitorie life. That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely to vs, but also to al people & nations of the earth. &c.

On Wednesday the xviij of September. 1555.

The Lxxiiij. Sermon, in which the laſt verſe of the tenth Chapter is expounded, and this is the firſt Sermon vpon the eleuenth Chapter.

22 Thy fathers went downe into Egypt, in number threeſcore and ten ſoules: and now the Lord thy God hath made thee in multitude as the ſtars of the skie.

The eleuenth Chapter.

LOue the Lorde thy God therefore, and keepe his appointmentes, Ordinances, Lawes, and Commaundementes for euer.

2 And conſider you this day (for I ſpeake not to your children which haue neither knowen nor ſeene [them]) the inſtruction of the Lord your God, his greatneſſe, his mightie hande, and his ſtretched out arme,

3 And his wonders and workes which hee did in the middes of Egypt, vnto Pharao king of Egypt and all his Land:

4 And what he did to the hoſt of the Egyptians, vnto their horſes & Charets, when the Lord brought the waters of the read ſea vpon their faces when they purſued you, and how the Lord deſtroyed them vnto this day.

HAue alreadie ſhewed ỹ meaning of Moſes, how that by rehearſinge ỹ wonders ỹ GOD had wrought for the deliuering of his people out of captiuity he ſhewed the Iewes that they ought to haue bin the more conformable to him, in reſpect of the fauor and loue which he had ſhewed to them at al times. For he had alwayes ſhewed by his doings, that his promiſing to take Abraham & all his ofspring into his protection, was not in vain. Ye ſee then an euident proofe ỹ God hauing receiued Abrahams ofspring into his free fauour, hath alſo confirmed it by deedes & experience. And thereupon it is to be concluded, that if that people had not beene altogether froward, they ought of reaſon to haue ſerued God. And that is the point that Moſes ſhot at. Conſider with your ſelues (ſaith he) if ye be not bounde to giue your ſelues wholy to the obeying of your God. For he hath multiplied you as the ſtars of the skie. Through his gratious goodnes you are become ſo great a nũber, ỹ euen you your ſelues may be aſtoniſhed at it. To be ſhort, if ye look vpõ your body, ỹ is to ſay your ſtare; you cãnot but ſee ſuch a wõderful fauor of your God, as you could neuer haue once looked for or hoped. Sith it is ſo, there is now no excuſe for you if you cannot find in your hartes to glorifie his name, ſeeing he hath ſhewed him ſelfe ſo good & merciful towards you. That is ỹ ſũme of ỹ matter ỹ Moſes intended to ſet down.

Gen. 15. 5.

And he ſpeaketh expreſly of the ſtars of the skie, becauſe of the promiſe. For God ſpeaking to his ſeruãt Abrahã, ſhewed him in a viſion ỹ multitude of the ſtars, which is infinite. Euen as they be paſt reckening (ſaith god) ſo alſo ſhal thy ſeed be. Now then the meaning of Moſes in this text is, ỹ Gods ſaying ſo was not in vain, & that Abraham was not diſappointed of his hope in reſting altogether vpon ỹ promiſe: for we ſee the thing performed before our eies. And this is wel worth the noting. For if God haue done vs any good, we wil indeed for maners ſake ſay it was he ỹ did it: but to be throughly perſuaded of it in our hart, that is a very hard thing. Therefore is it neceſſarie in reſpect of ſuch rudenes, ỹ we ſhould be condemned by Gods word, to the end we may better conſider of his hand & power. As for example: if we had neuer read any whit of holy ſcripture, & yet notwithſtanding god ſhould haue deliuered vs frõ ſome aduerſitie: to ſay ỹ truth our own naturall wit would put vs in mind, to bind our ſelues indetted to God for ỹ ſame. But when we be exerciſed in the holy ſcriptures, and haue ſeene there ỹ God reſerueth to himſelf the ſtate of death, & that it is in him to ſuccor vs, yea euen after a ſtrange faſhion when al ſeemeth to be vtterly forlorne; ſo as if we call vpon him, he will heare our ſighes: the performance therefore maketh it the eaſier for vs to conceiue his goodnes, becauſe we be taught aforehand, the ſame thing which we come to find by experience. For why? The word ỹ went afore, is as a lampe to giue vs light. Of our owne nature we be as it were blind. True it is that God inlightneth vs by his holy ſpirit: but yet are we ſtill in darknes & cannot ſee two fingers bredth afore vs. But whẽ God teacheth vs by his word, ỹ is as a lampe to guide vs & ſhew vs our way. Therfore let vs marke wel ỹ profit our ſelues by the benefits ỹ God beſtoweth vpõ vs, it is good, yea & needful for vs to be put in mind of his promiſes, & to compare the time when God had promiſed it, & now he hath performed it: here we ſee a teſtimony ỹ he is alwaies faithful in his ſayings, & ỹ a man may ſafely reſt vpõ his truth. That is ỹ thing which Moſes ſheweth vs in this text, text, in that he speaketh not simply of the great multitude whereinto the people had bin increased, but also saith ỳ God had multiplied them as the starres of the skie, to the intent that euery mã should think vpon ỳ promise which was vniuersally knowen among them, & thereby confirme themselues, inasmuch as God had so kept touch with his seruãt Abraham: & euery mãn consider thus in himself, Indeed we ought to receiue gods simple & single word, although the effecte of it were not seene. But now that Gods hande & his mouth go ioinly together, so as he hath shewed a true proofe of his presẽce before our eyes, and that he meant not to disappoint the hope of his seruants; we know ỳ our God hath a care of vs, & forgat vs not at such time as we were in the land of Egypt. For ỳ time of the peoples abode there was as a kinde of buriall in their graues, so as it might haue seemed ỳ all Gods promises had bin quite dashed. Whẽ he drew Abraham out of the land ỳ he was borne in, he said vnto him, I giue thee al this land frõ one side to another, to thee & to thine ofspring for euer. And yet for al this, yee see howe Abraham did but soiourne there as a strãger: he was hunted & faine to fleet frõ place to place, & he trotted vp and downe like a poore man that had not a corner to hide him in. The like befel to his sonne Isaac, Iacob was banished thence during al the flower of his youth, & when he returned thither againe, hee was faine to remoue oftentimes in his old age, and in the ende God conueied him away into Egypt. Thus was ỳ house as it were broken vp & cleane banished out of the countrie. And where is the lande of Chanaan which was the heritage ỳ God had promised thẽ? They were bereft of it. Indeed Iacob caused his body to bee conueied thither againe when he was dead: but yet did the people abide still in Egypt, & god seemed to haue mocked thẽ in saying, ye shal inherit this land. But when god brought them again out of the captiuitie & cruell tyranny wherein they were, it was as a rising again frõ the dead, & as a taking of them againe out of their graues. So then, ỳ people are exhorted in this text, to vnderstand that they ought to impute this redemption of theirs to the promise that had beene made long time before.

And we on our side haue generally a very profitable lesson: which is this. As oft as we fal asleep and minde not Gods benefits so sufficiently as might make vs to perceiue his working & power: we must resort to his promises, ỳ they may be as a light vnto vs to shew vs the good way. Let that serue for one point. And now by the way, we see how God vttered his power in multiplying the people after ỳ fashion. For who would haue looked that of threescore & ten persõs there should haue issued seuenhundred thousand & aboue? It is incredible (if wee looke no further than to the course of nature) ỳ in three hũdred yeres, threescore & ten persons shold increase & multiply to so great a number. Had there come of them ten thousand or twentie thousand, it might wel haue bin imputed to the course of nature. But when it came to a hundred thousande, or a two or three hundred thousand, yea & to so huge a number as seuen hundred thousand; al men must needes be abashed at it, & it was not to be thought ỳ euer it could haue bin possible. But we must not mesure Gods power by our wit: for it was his wil to work after that strange & vnaccustomed fashion, that men might be driuen to think it to be his worke. For if God worke after an ordinary maner w vs, we be so vnthankful, ỳ we take the thing to happen by chance, or by our own policie, or by some mans fauor, or other meane which we haue fould in ỳ world: & we bereaue God continually of his honour. In deed we wil not say ỳ we purpose any such thing; nay, we protest the cleane contrarie: but yet for al ỳ, men are so wickedly giuen, ỳ they alwaies deface Gods power & goodnesse to the vttermost ỳ they can. God therfeore is faine to bring vs perforce to the acknowledging of his works, so as we must be compelled to confesse ỳ it is he which helpeth & succoureth vs. Let vs mark wel then, ỳ when he multiplied his people after ỳ sort, he meant to work a myracle that had neuer bin looked for, to the intent ỳ men should no more doubt that it was he that spake vnto Abraham, & that he had not in vain promised him to become ỳ defẽder of him & of al his ofspring. Nowadais there ar a sort of skoffers, who to make al things doubtful, wil caui] after this maner: Is it possible ỳ in so short a space of time, threescore & ten persons should grow to so huge a number as seauen hundred thousand? Is it possible? Yea, & if that people had bin increased but after an ordinarie maner, what would they say then? Came not this of other men? & should we then say that god gouerneth vs? Why? ỳ order of nature afordeth as much. After ỳ maner would the mockers prate. And therby we see the lewdnes ỳ is in mẽ. For if God goe not beyond the ordinarie course of nature, they haue no sight at al to discerne his hand, but (to their seeming) it is fortune or their own wisdom, or some inferior meane of ỳ world. And on the other side, if God lift vp his mighty hand, & do a thing beyond mans capacitie, and such as men would haue thought coulde neuer haue bin done: then wil they say, how coms this to passe? And they could find in their harts euen to deface gods power quite & clean, vnder color ỳ it surmounteth their reason & capacity. But for our part, let vs learne to do god so much honor, (for so hee well deserueth) as not to iudge of his workes after our own fansy, specially when they be miraculous.

And here wee haue as it were a looking glasse, wherein to see how God raiseth vp his Church, according also to this his speaking of it by his prophet Esay, Loke backe to the quarrie of stone (saith he) whereout of ye were hewen, haue an eye to the womb of your mother Sara. Loke vpõ Abraham your father: was not he alone? yes, & yet haue I now made you manie in number, as ỳ thing it selfe declareth. In that place God likeneth Saraes womb to a quarrie of stone. See here (saith he) from whence ye be come. Howe is it possible that such a multitude of people as you be nowe growen vnto, shoulde be drawen out of one quarrie of stone? And yet notwithstanding, from thence haue I fetched you, all of you are come come from out of that spring. For as for your father Abraham, what was hee? A fillie olde man forworne and broken with yeares. Who would haue looked for such a people from out of him? Nowe then, learne to knowe that it is I which haue so multiplied you, and that you bee beholden to me, for al that euer you haue. Thus ye see ỹ the thing which we haue to gather, is that whē God calleth his Church & giueth it a being, his working is after such a sort in that behalfe, that (as saith Saint Paul in the first chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians) it may well be saide that it is he of whom wee haue our being. And his meaning is not that wee were but created of him as mortall men onely: but that he hath gathered vs together to bee his people, and that he was inclined to the doing thereof, without anie likelihoode giuen on our behalfe. Therefore let vs first and foremost beare well in minde, to be as it were astonished at the power that God hath shewed, so as wee may reuerence the thing that passeth our small capacitie. And therewithal let vs vnderstand, that the maner of Gods raising vp of his Church, is, that where nothing was afore, but men reckened that all shoulde haue gone to wracke: there men are at their wits end to see howe thinges fall out cleane contrarie, as we finde by often experience. True it is that the people which receiue the doctrine of the Gospell, are but a handefull in comparison of them that refuse it: but yet was it not thought, that thinges shoulde euer haue spred so farre abroad as they haue doone. For when God stirred vp the poore Frier, yea euen out of a Cloyster or Cel: who woulde haue thought, that from thence the Gospell shoulde haue beene spredde farre and wide, and that so manie folke woulde haue submitted themselues vnto it? Againe we see that although the whole worlde haue conspired to oppresse this doctrine, and that the power of the enemies thereof bee such, as they be like enough to swallow it vp quite and cleane: yet doth not God cease to augment his Church stil continually. It is seene what crueltie is executed against al her children: & yet notwithstanding she holdeth on stil. Seeing then that in our time God hath gone beyonde all hope and all imagination of man: let vs vnderstand that hee hath renewed the remembrance of that which is spoken here by Moses: namely that out of nothing, it hath pleased him to raise vp a kingdom to himselfe in this worlde, insomuch that at this day there is as great a nūber of his, as euer there was at anie time. If a man compare the children of Abraham, with such as haue some knowledge of the Gospell nowadayes, it is certaine that the number of the present sort is farre the greater. And therefore let vs learne to magnifie ỹ goodnes & power of our God. And to the end ỹ Gods glory may be the greater, let vs vnderstand that we come vp of nothing, & let it be considered ỹ it is he which hath stretched out his hand, so as al must be fathered vpō him, and he must be acknowledged to be the author of all. Thus ye see what we haue to marke vpon that place.

Esa. 51. 1. 2.

1. Cor. 1. 28. & 2. 6.

Furthermore the people are warned, not to glorie of their owne greatnes, as if it were saide, whatsoeuer you possesse, you haue obteined it at Gods hand, and therefore doe him homage for it with al humilitie. Therefore whensoeuer our Lord increaseth vs, so as we haue greater prosperitie than we looked for: let it not blinde vs, nor shut vp our eyes, but let vs alwayes remember to haue our eyes vppon Gods hand, who had promised to haue pitie vpon vs, & hath also shewed vs it by experience. And so ye see in effect what we haue to marke, where Moses speaketh of the increase of ỹ church. For like as God raiseth vp a people where none was to be seene afore: so also is it his will to repaire his church again with his owne hande. And to be short, the holy scripture sheweth vs, ỹ forasmuch as the Church is ỹ spiritual kingdom of our Lord Iesus Christ: he wil also worke after a marueilous fashion, when ỹ case concerneth ỹ preseruation thereof. Therfore let vs trust in him by all meanes. Let vs not doubte but ỹ he which multiplyed ỹ offspring of Abrahā as the starres of the skie, is as wel able to do ỹ like with vs stil at this day: & therfore let vs not be afraid but that God can wel skil how to set vp his Church again, when it seemeth at ỹ point to be vtterly ouerthrowen. And this is accomplished cheefly in our Lord Iesus Christ, as the scripture sheweth vs. For al ỹ euer was before his cōming was but a shadow of ỹ things ỹ are nowadayes in their perfection. Therfore when ỹ whole world seemeth vnto vs to be vtterly voide of beleeuing & that al is forlorne & as a wast wilderne, let vs loke vp to ỹ starres of heauen, & both consider and hope ỹ our Lord which did once raise vp so huge a multitude out of threescore & ten persons, can likwise do asmuch for his church at this day. And when he hath done it, let it not be vnto vs as a dreame, but let vs be amased & astonished at it, forasmuch as it shal haue surmounted our natural wit and reason. But let vs come now to ỹ conclusion ỹ Moses maketh. Therefore loue the Lord your God, keepe his Lawes, his statutes, his commandements, his rights, & his ordinances, all for euer. Here ỹ we be done to vnderstand, ỹ when wee once knowe Gods grace, we must bee the more inflamed to giue our selues wholy to the seruing of him, accordingly as S. Paul found not a more vehement & effectual perswasiō, than ỹ same where he saith, Brethren I beseech ye & adiure ye by the pitie & mercie which God hath shewed towardes you. Because S. Paul saw men slow & negligent, yea & ỹ euen the faithfull, (for it is they to whō he directeth his doctrine) haue need to be quickened vp & pricked forward: therfore to giue the more liuelines to his exhortatiō, he taketh this for his ground, & saith: brethren, I beseech ye by ỹ mercifulnes of God. As if hee should say how hardharted soeuer you be, yet must ỹ great number of ỹ gratious good turnes which God hath done for you, haue some power to mone you, & to set your harts on fire. Were your harts as cold as ice, yet must you needs be moued, & you cannot but feele how gratious and liberall your God hath shewed himselfe towardes you. Nowe therefore whensoeuer we finde not our selues sufficiently disposed to serue God, but ỹ we be held back and hinhindred by the vanities of this world, and by our own fleshly lusts, let vs put this saying of S. Pauls in vre: & when we be intangled in our delightes, let vs come backe again & say: what? Shal God haue lost his labor in shewing himself so good towards vs? & shal we become vnprofitable people towards him? We be his Vineyarde, and he hath dressed vs, & we bring him forth no fruit but wild sower & bitter fruit, such as were able to choke one: & shal we by our naughtines defeat ỹ grace that God hath shewed towardes vs? After such manner ought euery of vs to rebuke himselfe, when we liue not as we ought to do. But when in steed of going forward, we go back, or els lie welring in our own idlenes: let vs bethink vs of gods benefits, & keepe a register or booke of remembrance of them: & therupon fal to concluding ỹ there remaineth no excuse for vs, if we make not some acknowledgement vnto God, of ỹ mercie ỹ he hath shewed towards vs. That was the thing ỹ Moses amed at. Therfore loue ỹ lord your god (saith he) seeing you know him to be such a one.

And further besides ỹ thing that we haue sene alreadie; which is ỹ the true performance of the law beginneth at the louing of God: here Moses telleth vs, ỹ Gods intent is not to be feared like a prince ỹ desires no more but to haue his subiects to stand in awe of him, & therfore will not suffer any man so much as once to quetch against him, but wil haue thé to do al ỹ he cõmãdeth thé: but ỹ God cõmeth to vs after a more louing maner. Truly if we consider wel what the princes of the earth are, they be but smoke or verie wormes of ỹ earth: but yet are they to be honored, bicause god hath printed his marke vpon thé. Albeit ỹ they be nothing of thémselues: yet are they so ful of pride, ỹ their subiects must be faine to put it vp quietly at their hands, though they would set their feete vpõ the throtes of them. And they be so far of frõ considering themselues to be shepherds or herdmen, or to owe any duetie or good demeanor towards their people: ỹ to their owne seeming, the world was created alonly for themselues. They passe not for meeke & quiet reuerence: but they wil needs haue an inforced & constreined bondage. But behold, Our God whose maiestie is so great, ỹ euen the Angels of heauen are faine to stoupe vnder it, euen he I say stoopeth downe vnto vs, & saith, loue me. He could haue said, stand in feare of me, & trẽble at my speech, or else ye shal feele that there is such a glory in mee, as ye must needes be ouerwhelmed by it. Nay, he vseth no such spech, but saith: true it is ỹ I am to be feared, for I haue soueraine dominion ouer heauen and earth, & therefore it is not for any man to dalie with me as with his fellow, for if he be so malapert with me, he cannot but go away with confusion. Now then, my desire is ỹ men should reuerence me: but yet would I also ỹ you should come familiarly vnto me, & ỹ ye should come boldly as to your father. And ỹ is the cause why I require loue at your hands as the cheefest thing ỹ I like best of. Loue me therefore, & shew your selues to beare me hartie good wil. For my mind is not to draw you to me by constraint of feare, my mind is not to rule ye like Oxen & asses. My intent is to hold ye as my children, without exercising anie tyrannical lordlines ouer you. I would haue but a fatherly authority ouer you, & ỹ you likewise should serue me with a childly loue, & giue your selues wholy & obediently vnto me. Thus see ye ỹ two points which we haue to note in Moseses concluding, ỹ the people shold loue ỹ euerlasting their God. For if we will performe gods law well, we must first & formost loue him before al things. Wel may we be busie with our feet & hands, so as we shalbe blameles before men: & yet shal all be nothing, except God possesse our affections, and ỹ we serue him with a good wil, & with a free and vnfeined hart. That is the one point. The other is, ỹ we must vnderstand how God applieth himself to vs, & fashioneth himself to our capacitie, in that his wil is not ỹ we should stand in feare & terror of him, but ỹ we should take him for our father, according to his calling of vs, which is so gentle and so full of allurement, as though he would set vs in his lap, because he hath adopted vs to bee his children. That is the effect of the things which we haue to remember here.

Now as touching that Moses addeth; that men should keepe gods obseruãces, his statutes, his iudgemẽts, his rights, his ordinances, his cõmandements, & his decrees: I haue declared already here tofore why he setteth downe so many words. For it had been enough for him to haue said shortly, Keep the cõmandemẽts of your god; you haue his law, which is the certain rule, hold your selues to ỹ. But Moses thinking it not inough to haue spoké simply after ỹ maner, to the intent to expresse the contents of the law, & what doctrine we haue to gather therof, setteth downe Statutes, Commandements, rights, ordinances, & obseruances. And why is that? To doe vs to vnderstand, that there we haue the ful perfection of al holines. We know ỹ in al ages men haue bin tickleheaded: & that their failing to serue god simply & purely, hath sprong of this that euery man would needs be casting of some peece or collup of his own making, to the things that God had commanded. And thereof come al the superstitions that are at this day in ỹ worlde. The very ground (say I) from whence al the diuelish superstitions wherewith gods seruice hath beene corrupted, is that men haue not thought it enough to haue obserued the things that God commanded, vnles euery man added somewhat more of his owne deuising. But now God to hold his people in awe, saith thus: In my law ye haue rights, ordinances, statutes, &c. And to be short, whé ye haue throughly examined the rule ỹ I haue giuen you, ye shal find it perfect & without want of any thing. Therefore play not the loose colts: but be contéted to serue me simply, according to my will: & ad not any thing of your own braine. Ye see then ỹ as wel in this text as in other without nũber, (for ye shal find at ỹ lest two hundred of the like) Moses indeuoreth to magnifie Gods law, to the intent ỹ men should not esteeme it to be of vnsufficiẽt authority, or but as able to teach vs by halfes: but ỹ they should know it to be their duty to hold thémselues wholy to it, so submitting thémselues to ỹ same, as they may giue ouer their own wit, & not take vpõ them to be wise in their opinion, but

but onely aunswere: Let GOD bee obeyed,
2.Chro.16. 36. according to the praiers which he hath cõmanded folke to make with this solemne protestation Amen, so as there may not be any replying at all to ỳ which God hath once vttered with his mouth. And that is the verie cause why the word Keepe, is set downe here. For men wil needs haue manie things to keep, and they beare thẽselues in hand, that they haue kept the law very well, after what fashion so euer it be. But our Lord telleth vs that we haue things enough to keep and to obserue, in following his lawe, so as we neede not to adde any thing to it.

Furthermore to the intent ỳ the people may be the more moued, Moses confirming here the matter ỳ we heard euen now, saith thus: Bethinke you therefore: for it is not spoken to your children which haue neither seen nor heard of it, but to you your selues which are witnesses of the great myracles, mightfull workes, and tokens which God shewed in bringing you out of the land of Egypt, and specially in your passing of the read sea, where he wrought with a wõderful power. For what a thing was it ỳ the sea shronk aside to make you way to passe through it? And that afterward it swallowed vp al your enemies, that followed you with so great puissance, ỳ you thought your selues vtterly vndone? You haue seen those thinges with your eyes saith he. What a thing were it then, if ye should forget such wonderfull workes of God, and suffer them to vanish away? Might it be imputed to any ignorance? No, but to vnthankefulnes, & it were malicious spitefulnes for you to tread the thinges so vnder foote, which God hath shewed vnto you.

And wheras he saith. It is not spoke to your children which haue neither seen nor heard of it: He meaneth ỳ he speaketh not of thẽ as shal be spoken afterward. True it is that at this day when we reade the storie of the deliuerance that was wrought at that time, we ought to be moued at it. For it is an euerlasting euidence of the care which God hath had of his Church. And in ỳ same we haue a liuely picture to shew vs how God draweth vs as it were out of the dungeon and gulf of death, by chosing vs to be of his house, and therefore it behoueth vs to make our profit of the thinges that were done then, although we saw them not. But here Moses reasoneth thus by comparison. If I speake to your children (saith he) yet were it their dutie to make their profit of ỳ things which they were taught: and although they haue not seene the things with their eyes, yet ought this recording of them, to do them good. But as for you, ye ought to be better aduised in taking heed to the things ỳ God hath shewed you. For your thankfulnesse is dubble, & much sorer shal your condemnation be, if you profit not by thẽ. What can ye alledge for your selues, if ye giue not your selues wholie to the magnifying of such grace, that is to say if ye honor not God, seing he hath bought you so dearly, and shewed that he setteth so great store by your welfare? Seeing that God hath shewed himselfe to be such a one towardes you, what is your dutie? Here we be put in mind that when our Lord hath made vs to find fauour by experience, if we profit not by it to serue him with the better courage and earnester zeale, it must of necessitie come to account, & we shal looke for more horrible damnation in respect of such vnthãkfulnes. But now let vs see what we be come the better by gods benefits. Hath it not sufficiently seene & perceiued in our time, how he hath helped vs at our neede, & howe he hath stretched out his mightie hande? If euery man would acknowledge for his own part, how many waies god hath shewed himselfe bountiful towards him, surely we should be at our wits end. Again let vs loke vpõ the state of ỳ Church in general. Hath not godwrought after such a sort as also in our daies, as if we be not very monsters, or at leastwise worse than bruit beasts, we must needs perceiue by his miracles, ỳ he ment to shew vs how he reigneth in heauẽ? But now let vs see how euery of vs is stirred vp therby, to serue him. For it should seeme we seeke nothing else but meanes to hid our eyes withal, and ỳ we beleeue not those thinges which are & ought to be most euident to vs. Yet was not this doctrine vttred to vs al. For if God haue shewed vs by his deeds, that he dwelleth amõg vs, & haue reached out his hand frõ heauen, to proue ỳ all power belongeth vnto him, and ỳ he wilbe ỳ sauior of his church, & yet we beleeue it not, but play ỳ blind buffards, and turne our backs vpon him, shutting our eyes wilfully when we should take most heed to them: in what wise ỳ Lord hath shewed himselfe to be ỳ father & sauior, both of our selues & of all his: what excuse will there be for vs? Ye see then here is a lesson ỳ toucheth vs. For if euer God vttered himselfe: surely we of our time haue seen such deeds of his, as are worthy of remembrance. And whẽ men shal reherse thẽ a hundred yeres hereafter, (if ỳ world indure so long) it is certain ỳ they shal serue to make them ashamed ỳ shal haue heard thẽ spoken of, so we may welsay (as is said by ỳ prophets) ỳ the strãgenes of the same make their eares to glow ỳ shal heare of them. For ỳ is ỳ maner of speech which the Prophets vse in such cases. And we haue seene these things, and had experience of them. Now if ỳ reporting of them in time to come, ought to moue ỳ people ỳ shal come then: although they shall haue had none other knowledge of thẽ: ought not we much rather to be moued by them now presently? Ought they not to pearce our hearts? Must not Satan needs haue vtterly sotted vs, whẽ after such perceiuing of gods benefits & power, we see nothing at all but go on stil & conceiue nothing? Is such blockishnes to be borne with? No verily. And therefore let vs bethink ourselues, & consider wel how god hath wrought in gathering vs together, & so that we can worship him purely as he requireth. Who is he, (be he a citizen borne or a straunger) which hath not cause to say, lo how my God hath so vttered himselfe to me, as if I had seene his hand come downe from heauen to me in some visible shape? For what hope had they which were here townsmen borne, to be either in liberty or to be but eũe a mean people? Insomuch as it seemed ỳ al should haue gone to wrack, & come to vtter ruine ere this time. As touching ỳ Gospel, this citie was but a hellish gulfe of superstition and

and dimelisshnes, (as was to be seen euerywhere) and al maner of abuses, ydolatries & practises of Satan did so reigne in it, as there was no likelyhood that euer there shold haue bin any roome for Gods grace. And therefore those whom God hath visited so louingly, and to whom hee hath vouchsafed to come home into their houses to seeke them out, haue good cause to glorifie him. And as for them ỳ are come out of forrein countries, and are gathered together here as it were into one flocke, what can they say, but that our Lord hath performed ỳ thing towardes them at this day, which he spake so long ago by his prophet Esay: namely that he would make charyots and wagons trotte apace through the world, to bring folke from al coasts to serue & worship him in his Church? Nowe then if we looke not vp at such things, surely it wilbe no excuse or shift for vs, to say: I thought not on these things, because they were not knowen to me: for God sheweth vs thē apparantly ynough, so as we need but to opē our eyes to see them. Thus ye see how we ought to practise this lesson nowadays, where it is said, I speake not to your children which might reply that they neuer sawe nor heard of these things. For looke what you ought to know as cōcerning Gods power, he hath done you to vnderstand it by his deeds.

And now by the way let vs be contented with the experience which we haue had of the goodnesse and power of our God, in his redeeming of vs from ỳ endles confusion wherin we be al born in Adam. For what is our original? Whence doth God draw vs when he vouchsafeth to haue vs to be of his flock? Frō our mothers womb we bring nothing with vs but vtter cursednes: we be heires of endlesse death: wee be forlorne & damned: if God should iudge vs after our deserts, he should needs be our enemy and aduersary, and imploy all his power against vs. Now if our nature be so graceless & frowarde, that as long as it beareth sway in vs, it bendeth it selfe against God: must we not needs also wage battel against him? Yes: for looke how many lusts be in vs, so many defiances are there, as if our purpose were to arme him to vengeance against vs. Yet notwithstanding it hath pleased him to pull vs backe. When God taketh vs so to him to be his people and of his household, it is more than was his deliuering of the Iewes out of the thraldome of Egypt. For that was but a figure of this redemption that is wrought by our Lord Iesus Christ. For his deliuering of vs is not from thraldom to some earthly & mortal prince: but from the gulf of hel & from Satans bonds. Where doth God take vs, when he vouchsafeth to call vs to him, & to make vs feele his grace? Must some messenger be faine to bring vs newes from farre? Let euery of vs looke vpon himselfe, and we shall finde that as in respect of our selues, our state is nothing but eternal death. Therefore to applie this doctrine to our vse, wee must vnderstand ỳ when God calleth any of vs to him, it is more than if hee had rid vs out of all the bondages and slaueries of this worlde, yea euen of the cruellest that could bee indured. Let vs know that: and also let vs apply our selues aduisedly to the cōsidering of Gods worke: for that is the thing whereto the scripture bringeth vs, to make vs perceiue the benefites that he hath bestowed vpon vs, that wee may fare the better by them. And it is also a way to bring vs to ỳ knowing of God, and to prouoke vs not onely to worship him as our God, and to make vs stoope vnder his glorious maiestie: but also to beare him such a childly loue, as to come vnto him willingly, and to yeelde him such reuerence, as he may accept vs and auow vs to bee his, for our Lorde Iesus Christs sake.

Now let vs cast our selues downe before the heauenly throne of our good God, acknowledging our wretched sinfulnes, ỳ we may be wholly cast downe before him: & yet notwithstanding, praying him to vouchsafe to admit vs in ỳ name of our lord Iesus Christ, so as we may not be shāke off at his hand, though we be worthy of it, but rather ỳ he beare with vs of his infinite goodnes, vntil he haue conueied vs quite & cleane out of this world, & clothed vs againe with his owne righteousnes, & with ỳ perfection which he hath promised vs. And so let vs say, Almighty god &c.

On Munday the xxiij. of September. 1555.

The Lxxv. Sermon which is the second vpon the eleuenth Chapter.

5 And what hee did for you in the wildernesse, vntill yee came vnto this place:

6 And what hee did to Dathan and Abyram the sonnes of Eliab the sonne of Ruben: how the earth opened her throte, and swallowed them vp with their households and Tentes, and with all the substance that was vnder their feete, in the middes of all Israell.

7 For your eyes haue seene all the greate workes of the Lord which hee hath doone.

8 Therfore keepe all the commaundementes which I commaund you this day, that yee may bee strong and goe in and possesse the Land, whereunto you goe to possesse it.

WE haue seene heretofore howe Moses hath tolde vs, that such as haue bin witnesses of Gods wonders, are much lesse to bee excused than such as haue but only heard ỹ things by report, and haue not seene them with their eyes. For when God hath beene so gracious vnto vs as to shewe vs his power to our faces; it must needs be that we bee too blockish, if wee bee not mindfull therof. When our children shal but heare of it, it shal becom thé to be moued at it: & what ought then to bee done in the very presentnesse of the things? Hitherto Moses hath shewed after what manner God had delt with his people through his goodnes, for he had behaued himselfe as an vtter enemie to ỹ Realme of Egypt, to shew him selfe to be the sauiour of the linage of Abraham. It is a benefite that ought to bee very highly esteemed, when God chooseth vs after that sort to be his: which is not for any worthines that he findeth in vs, but of his owne onely goodnes, in that he vouchsafeth to prefer vs before others, so that although we bee no better than they, yet he taketh part with vs, and fighteth for vs at our neede. If folke doe trouble and torment vs, and God be alway ready to succour vs; is it not such a bond, as if we keepe it not vnbroken, the verie world may condemn our malicious frowardnes? Nowe after he hath spoken of the wonders that were wrought in Egypt, & in the passing of the red sea, he telleth them briefly, that they ought to consider well, how God handled them in the wildernesse. And vnder that speech hee comprehendeth the thing which we haue seene expounded heretofore: that is to wit, both ỹ great number of benefits which they had receiued at Gods hand, and also his chastisements: for both of them ought to teach vs to feare God, & to walk in his wayes. If he do vs good, it is to draw vs to him by gentlenes, ỹ we should worship him. And if he correct vs for our faults, it is to meeké vs, ỹ we may learn to beare his yoke, & to serue him as becommeth vs. Moses therefore comprehendeth here both twain of them: As if he should say, Seeing ỹ God hath fed you w Manna, without any trauell or labor of your own; ought ye not to giue your selues al wholy to ỹ seruing of him? If a mortal man had kept you in his house & maintained you w foode & apparel, should ye not be so bound vnto him, as your whole life might bee answerable to such a benefite? Behold, God hath maintained you in ỹ wildernes, by sending you Manna from heauen. Now then if ye shold forget such a gracious good turne, what an offence were it? Nay, he hath not only sent you Manna: but he hath also preserued your garmẽts, so as thei haue not bin marred nor outworne by ỹ space of forty yeares together. He hath shewed himself to be your guide in ỹ night, in giuing you a visible sign by fire: & he hath kept you likewise a daytimes from ỹ heate of ỹ sun, by spreading his clouds ouer you. In al sorts he hath tendered you as much as was possible. When ye were thirsty, he made water to come gushing out of ỹ rock that was dry before. To be short, he left nothing vndone, wherby he might shew himself a louing & liberal father towards you. Now then what can you lesse do, than yeeld your selues to ỹ obeying of him? Again, remember what he did when ye murmured against him for your fonde lusts sake. Did ye not then feele his heauy hand for your labor? When ye required flesh, indede he sent it you; but he made ye to pay deare for ỹ shot: for ỹ meat was as good as a choking of you. While the meate was yet in your mouthes, his wrath came downe vpon you. Againe, when yee misbehaued your selues in whoredome, ye know ỹ his hand strake ye in such sort, ỹ a great nũber of people perished among you. When yee were disobedient to his mouth, he set a fire amõg you ỹ consumed you, vntill ỹ brasen serpent was set vp. All manner of wayes therefore haue you bin chastised at Gods hande; so as if ye be not mindfull of it, ye be worse than brute beastes.

Exod. 16. 4.

Deut. 8. 4

Exod. 13. 21.

Exod. 17. 6.

Now after that Moses hath declared al thes chastisemẽts: he inferreth an example ỹ was notable and worthy to be borne in mind aboue all ỹ rest: that is to wit, of the rebellion that was made by Core, Dathan, and Abiram. For (as is declared in ỹ sixteenth of ỹ numbers), these three with another of ỹ tribe of Rubé, made insurrection against Aaron, laying to his charge ỹ he had vsurped the priesthood, which was an office of great authority among ỹ people. For Aaron was there as ỹ person of our Lord Iesus Christ, & went into the Sanctuary to make attonement between God & the people. Nowe it spited these men, that they could not come to ỹ like dignity, & therfore vpon enuy they would needs stir the people to a commotion, saying: What? This is a derogation to ỹ prerogatiue ỹ belongeth in common to al of vs are the children of Abraham. God hath sanctified vs, he termeth vs his heritage and a priestly kingdome: & yet ye see here how Aaron and his children haue taken ỹ thing peculiarly to themselues, which belõgeth generally to ỹ whole people. Therfore let vs maintain our right, & not suffer this dignity to be turned to a state of inheritance. This was their pretence: but indeed they did it of great spite. For first of all God had well prouided aforehand, ỹ there shold be no inward or wicked suspition against Aaron, & his children for the priesthoods sake. Moses was ỹ leader of ỹ people; he was ỹ setter of them at liberty, & therfore there was good likelyhood ỹ his offspring should haue bin preferred before all others. He had childrẽ: & yet he took not ỹ priesthood vnto himselfe, but left it to his brother. True it is ỹ he made no choice, god did that. But howsoeuer he fared, to ỹ intent that ỹ law and the thing ỹ depended thereupon shold not be suspected: Gods will was not to doe Moses so much honour as to make him ỹ priest, but he was faine to stand humbly aloofe w the rest of the people worshipping God, when Aaron his brother went to enter the names of ỹ people of Israel into ỹ sanctuary, & to offer sacrifice to God in their behalfe. And where were his childrẽ? They abode in ỹ inferior degree, without aduancemẽt to ỹ dignity, which remained to his brother Aaron. Wherby God shewed that those things were not done vpon ambition or worldly couetousnesse, but that it was his own doing, who had set down the order that shold be kept in his Church and Temple. Notwithstanding al this, those leawd persons fel to rebelling, & charged Aaron falsly with vsurping ỹ dignitie of ỹ highpriesthood. So was God faine to maintaine his own doing. And thereupon Moses said vnto thẽ, How now? What is Aarõ? As if he shold say, hath he thrust himselfe in of his owne head? No: & now although he be of Gods aduancing to ỹ high and honorable state, yet if ye consider all things aright, hee doth but onely serue you. But those malicious creatures were not contented w̃ that. We be sãctified (said they) we be gods people; & what are you more? In this case god was to put to his hand for ỹ redres of it: And according as was commanded by Moses, To morow (quoth he) let euery of you bring his sensor, & you ỹ are the chief of this rebellion, (for they were as then to ỹ number of two hundred & fifty) come together, & you shall see by your offerings, whether parties seruice is best liked of God. This done he said vnto ỹ people, Assure your selues that if these folk do dye ỹ common death, and ỹ God lay not his hand vpõ them in your sight, so as some horrible & dreadful punishment do not light vppon their heads: I am contẽted ỹ ye shal not esteeme me as sent of God. But if ye perceiue ỹ god make good the thing ỹ I haue vttered with my mouth, then be ye sure that I haue don nothing on mine owne head, but that I haue faithfully performed that which was inioyned me from heauen. Hereupon the earth opened and swallowed vp those rebels ỹ had made the insurrection among the people. And when this was done, ỹ people forbore not to murmur still & to say, See here I pray you, how Moses and Aaron fall to destroying of Gods people. Those whom God hath chosen must be fain to perish at their pleasure, to maintaine their priestly dignitie, and of ỹ same number are we also. What an vnkindnesse is this? Ye see here how God had wrought a myracle that ought to astonish & amase the whole world, yea euen the very brute beasts & al: and yet this people which reported themselues to be chosen and holy, cease not to repine & rebel still of malicious set purpose, against God and his hand that was openly to be seene. God was faine to ratifie Aarons priesthood yet once againe: whereupon he commanded that euery of them should bring a wodden staffe w̃ their names written vpõ them and put them altogether, so as they might not bee discerned asunder but by the sight of the names. These Staues were laid before God in ỹ sanctuary: & when they were taken thence againe, Aarons staffe that had his name vpon it did florish, & al the residue remained drie: wherby God shewed that he had chosen that houle to the Highpriesthood.

Of these things doth Moses here put ỹ people in remembrãce, to do them to vnderstand, first ỹ if they dalyed any more with God by seeking any chaunge, or by attempting any thing against the commandemẽt of his word: they shold feele his vengeance in likewise as they had seene it light vpon Coree, Dathan, & Abiram, and their partakers. Besides this, he telleth them of their vnthankfulnes, how they had prouoked God againe, euẽ after they had felt his iustice: to ỹ intẽt they should no more returne to such doings, because ỹ if they abused Gods patience & bearing with them for ỹ one time, he wold in ỹ end vse ỹ greater rigor against thẽ. And so ye see what ỹ intent of Moses was. Now hereby we be warned to consider wel with our selues, ỹ whensoeuer any fault or offẽce is cõmitted among vs, & God hath laid his hand vppon vs for it: wee ought to beare it so printed in our hearts, as it may make vs to keepe his commaundements, as Moses addeth afterward. For it is not ynough for vs to know ỹ bare stories but we must also apply ỹ same to our instruction. So ỹ if god haue corrected vs gently, we must acknowlege his fatherly goodnes towards vs. And from thencefoorth let vs not prouoke him any more, but to ỹ intent we may keepe our selues frõ offending, let it suffice vs to know ỹ he cannot away with sin. That (say I) is ỹ thing wherof we be warned in this text. And herewal let vs also haue such humilitie printed in our hearts, as to be cõtinually sory for the faults ỹ we shall haue committed. And if our God haue bin so gracious as to execute his wrath vppon some others, let vs bee wel ware ỹ we wrap not our selues in ỹ same cõdemnation with them, by taking their part. Nay, let vs shun them a great way off, and let vs haue nothing to doe with them, if wee intende not to prouoke ỹ wrath of our God. That is the effect of the matter which Moses speaks of here. And it is written for our sakes, to the intent that euery of vs should haue an eye to himselfe.

I haue tolde you already, ỹ the thinges which were spoken as then to ỹ people of Israel, do concerne vs likewise. After what sort haue wee felt Gods hand? I meane as well those that are Citizens borne, as those ỹ resort hither from strange Countries. Is there any of vs that hath not perceiued gods wonderful power in his deliuerãce? For hath not this Towne bin as it were appointed to ruine and destruction? Was it not likely ỹ it should vtterly haue perished, and ỹ there was none other remedy as in respect of ỹ world? Yet hath God reached out his hãd after such a fashion, as the world hath seen an incredible alteration. It was as a dreame, men would neuer haue thought it: euen they themselues ỹ did seruice in it, were astonished at it afterward. Nowe then, if this be forgotten, on whom shall we lay ỹ fault? And God hath not only giuen liberty to those ỹ were in bondage, and drawen them out of ỹ gulf of death at such time as it was looked ỹ al should haue gone to hauocke: but also vouchsafed to set vp his kingdome among them. He hath planted his Gospel here, he hath set vp his chayre of estate here, here hath he chosen him a sanctuarie & a place to dwel in. And as touching them that are come from strange Countries, how hath god reached his hand to thẽ? Were not they also as it were in ỹ gulfe of hell, when they were in the cursed popedome? Ye see then how we be gathered here, altogether vnder ỹ hande of God. And therfore wel ought we to esteeme this grace, and not onely to preach it with our mouthes, but also to shew throughout all our whole life, that forasmuch as our Lord hath gotten vs to him, wee be wil-

willing to be his, & thereupon indeuor to please him in al things. Vnlesse we do so, surely there wil be no excuse for vs, but ỳ we shalbe a hundredfold more blameworthy, than those whom God hath let alone, so as they continue still in their old trade, wout finding him so gracious & fauorable towards them. Besides this, Gods working in our behalfe hath not bin for once & away: but if we looke wel vpon his maintaining of the state which he hath stablished in this city; there hath not bin any yeare wherein he hath not renewed his myracles, & made it appeare openly by some notable signe, ỳ he hath had a continuall care of vs, and ỳ he hath neuer forsaken vs. And in deed we be worse than blind, if we perceiue not ỳ our life hãgeth as by a threed. For there needeth but ỳ turning of a hand to dispatch vs: ah one conspiracy was like inough to haue put ỳ whole church of God in daunger of destruction. But yet for all this God hath preserued vs. And after what fashion? We cannot tell. Had we any drop of wisedome, surely as oft as it came to our minde wee wold be astonished at it & say; Lord, how far hast thou exceeded ỳ expectation of men! Againe on the other side let vs mark, let vs marke I say how God hath lifted vp his hande to punish such as went about to trouble ỳ order of his Church, and to ouerthrowe ỳ building which he had set vp by his Gospel. For it is certaine ỳ he hath punished them, to ỳ end that we should take instruction at their cost. He hath bin so gracious to vs as to let vs see and know his vengeance, and yet wee our selues haue beene exempted from it: not for our own deserts, (for there is none of vs al, but vpon due examination of his doings, he shall find him selfe faulty) but because it pleased God to spare vs. Neuertheless hee hath shewed vs as it were with his finger, that it is not for any man to prouoke him: and that if any bodie step vp against him, he shall finde himselfe too hardly ouermatched. This (say I) hath bin tolde vs sufficiently. But what God worketh, and we haue no eyes to see his working: & although we haue, yet do wee wilfully shut them against him. Yea & (to goe no further,) let vs apply this storie to our owne vse. Truly I touch things as soberly as I can; but yet is not ỳ holy scripture written to ỳ end we should but onely know what was done to the people of Israel: but to ỳ end we shold consider the likenes that is betweene them & vs, ỳ when the like matters befal amõg vs, we might do our selues good by the warningpeales that are giuen vs by thẽ.

2. Cor. 10. 11 According wherunto S. Paul saith, that ỳ things which God did at that time, are as a picture for vs to look vpon, to ỳ end we should refer al to our own profite: For ỳ end of time (saith he) is come vpon vs, and we see nowe the perfection of the things which God had but begun as then.

And here is mention made of Corse, Dathan, and Abiram, ỳ is to wit, of such as could not abide the obseruing of thinges in such sort as God had then commanded them by Moses. True it is that they professed thẽselues to be Gods chosen, & the children of Abraham: mark ỳ for one point. For they alledged ỳ they were sanctified; their intent was that their circumcision should be as a warrãt for them that they were a holy & sacred generation. But yet for al ỳ, they would none of the preesthood, at leastwise not as God had ordeyned it, but euery of thẽ would haue it to him selfe. Now I pray you, haue not we for our part seene the like rebellion against God & his word? For wherefore hath al the skirmishing bin, both against the doctrine & against ỳ disciplyne of the church with such rage: but to displace the order ỳ God set among vs? When heretikes, (yea euen such heretikes as brought no blasphemies than euer were herd of since there was any christian Church) came hither: they were maintained here with tooth & nayle, & openly, yea euen by such as sate in the seate of Iustice: in so much as they tooke part with them, and shewed them as much fauor as Turkes shoulde haue vnder Mahomet. Afterward when other heretikes came hither to bring in Frewil again, & to set it vp to the derogation of Gods grace, blaspheming his election and Prouidence: they had those for their Patrons & Aduocats, which ought to haue bin their Iudges: & those spake for them in our presence, and that with such impudence, as if they had bent them selues like buls to strike vs with their hornes, & to set themselues as stoutly as could be, against God and his doctrine. This haue we seene. Againe, when things were shewed them so plainly by the holy scripture, as would haue beene receiued euen among the very papists, and when so cleare and euident reasons were alledged, as coulde not be gainesaid, which things we not only spake by mouth, but also gaue them the articles in writing, & set downe the sentences of the scripture whereby the truth was pointed to as with ones finger: They were not ashamed to reiect all, but stepped forth proudly still, as it were to say; wee will fight against God whatsoeuer come of it. True it is that they durst not our such sayings with full mouth, for they protested still to hold themselues to the Gospel. O (sayd they) our desire is to haue ỳ Gospel. Ye but what maner of Gospell? A tauernegospel. There was no talking among them of the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ: For it was a cõmon word among them to say, There needs no more to be knowẽ than ỳ which al of vs know, that is to wit, that we must loue God and our neighbour. And what needeth there so much preaching for that matter? If a man replyed hereupon & said vnto thẽ, how can ỳ be? If yee wil haue preaching to ceasse & the Sacraments to be superthrowen, al must the whole order which God hath set in his church be disanulled: Wel (would they say) then let ỳ Gospel be preached simply wout such fanning. And againe as touching ỳ Sacraments, belong they not to vs as well as to you? Why nay would we ỳ there should be no more order kept? Nay we cã minister ỳ supper as wel as you preachers. Such things as these (I say) were seen and herd. But if Corse, Dathan, & Abirã be condemned here by ỳ holy ghost, to haue intẽded subuerting of al order: I pray you what shal a man say of those which haue fought so manifestly against god after this fashion? for these things were not done of ignorãce. Although they be so shamelesse as to say stil, wee haue ment no such thing: yet their malice too too apparant. For had no man ſpoken to them of it, or had no man pointed thē as with his finger to ỹ texts of the ſcripture, ſo as it might haue bin ſaide, ſee here the will of God, there is no difficultie in ỹ matter, it needeth not any ſcanning as though there were any doubtfulnes in it, ſee here ỹ opē text: [they might haue had ſome colour for their pretence]. But ſeing ỹ things were ſo ſhewed vnto them, & yet they cōtinued wilful ſtill: ſee yee not that it was an open making of war againſt God? Is it not to be ſeene alſo what pretence was made by Coree, Dathan & Abiram? Out of queſtion, their ſayings were after this maner: Why? If Aaron haue the high-prieſthod alone to himſelf, he ſhal haue al ſuperiority, & what ſhal we be? Euen ſo ſtandeth ỹ caſe with theſe men: to their ſeeming, al were marde on their ſide, if God ſhould beare ỹ ſway. But god will beare the ſway by this order, and we ſee it is no impeachment at all to the cauill power which is a thing vtterly diſtinct from it, neither can any thing better maintaine Magiſtrates in their ſouerainty, foraſmuch as ỹ order of Gods Church is ſpiritual, ſo as it medleth not with ỹ puniſhing of mens bodies, nor ẅ penalties, nor with impriſonments, nor with ſuch other like things: but all is referred to ỹ word & the ſacraments. Seeing ỹ this is apparant doth it not ſerue better for ỹ ſtabliſhment of Empyres, kingdomes, & Lordſhips: than if there were nothing elſe to be had than a confuſed tyranny, where nothing were reſerued vnto God & to our Lord Ieſus Chriſt? And therfore when men ſtreine themſelues to ỹ vttermoſt of their power to ouerthrow ỹ order, do they not fal to ſpitting in ỹ face of Ieſus chriſt to ſpite him withall? For it is his will to reigne among vs, yea & he will haue his kingdom to be in vs. Now thē, when he chooſeth men & ſetteth them vp to gouern his church in his name, is it not too ſhamefil an vnchankfulnes to ſay, we will not admit it, but thruſt it from vs? As who ſhold ſay, they wold make men beleeue ỹ the Conſiſtory were a thing vtterly ſeuered from Geneua it ſelf, wheras God hath granted vs ỹ grace to make it a member of the body. Nowe then, to diſmember Ieſus Chriſt by ſeparating ỹ things which he hath ioyned together, is it not a ſetting of themſelues openly againſt him? We ſee then ỹ theſe rebellions haue happened among vs: & who is to bee blamed for it? Truly ỹ heads of the ſedition are to be ſeene, and ỹ perceiuing of thē hath not bin at ſome one time, or a day or twaine ago, but it is now a ſeuen or eight years ſince it began, inſomuch as Gods children haue bin faine to grone and ſigh vnder their burthen, & to cry out alas, beſeeching God to haue pitie on his poore Church, ſeing it was in ſuch a hurly burly. Things went worſe & worſe, and one licentiouſnes brought in another, ſo as they bare thēſelues in hand ỹ al things were lawful for them. And yet notwithſtanding, of all that while they did but double the ſtings which they had ſek afore in their wicked cōſciences, by thinking thus ẅ thēſelues: What? We can neuer hold out, except we lay our heads together to fortifie our ſelues thus & thus. Herupon they made cōtinually new prouiſions. And after what maner? By practiſing al maner of treaſō & diſloyalty, & by apply ing their minds to al wicked ſhifts for ỹ maintenance of ỹ thing ỹ they had misbegun. But in ỹ end our Lord wrought. And what haue we to cōſider therin? That we be worthy of blame. For although thoſe folk did fight opēly againſt God: yet would he not haue ſuffered ſuch miſeries to haue happened among vs, but for our offences. And therefore let vs conſider ỹ ſeeing he hath ſo puniſhed ỹ parties that came to ſet themſelues apparantly againſt him, & made their reckening to ouerthrow all ỹ he had builded: he hath ſcholed vs at their coſt, & therefore we ought firſt of al to thank him for his ſparing of vs, and that he wrapped vs not in ỹ cōfuſion ỹ was prepared for vs, but hath put a myraculous differēce betwene them & vs. Thus ye ſee that the thing which we haue to marke, is on the one ſide Gods mercy in bearing with vs, & on ỹ other, the puniſhing of a few folk, which ought to ſerue vs for an inſtructiō to teach vs to fare ỹ better by it. For it is certain ỹ thereby God hath ſhewed vs, how it is his wil to haue things go peaſably, & to keep their ordinary courſe according to his worde. For it is not for men to pretend Gods name falſly in this behalf, to ſwarue aſide one way or other. The miniſters of ỹ word & ſuch as are appointed to be preachers, muſt for their part bee able to proteſt before God, & to ſhewe openly before men, ỹ they neither be nor deſire to bee counted any other, than as perſons to whom God hath committed ỹ charge of preaching & of adminiſtring his ſacraments, with ſuch purenes as things may not bee corrupted in ỹ church. Whē it is ſo: let vs vnderſtand ỹ we muſt ſubmit our ſelues thereto, & that we ſhal winne nothing by ſtriuing againſt it, but Gods hand muſt needs be always againſt vs. For he forgetteth not what he hath ordeined, but wil maintaine & defend ỹ ſame continually. Therefore let vs learn to leaue ỹ ſeeking of any change againſt Gods ordinance. Let vs looke vpon the rule that is conteined in the holy ſcripture, & let no man attempt to incounter it by any maner of meanes. Let vs rather die than alter any thing, or attempt any thing againſt our God. Let vs be as ſheepe, if we will haue Ieſus Chriſt to bee our ſhepherd. For whatſoeuer hee is that hath not a meeke heart like a lamb, is vnworthy to be counted of Gods Church, becauſe our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt wil not be our ſhepherd, but vpon ỹ condition. That then is the thing which wee haue to beare away in the firſt place. But let vs alſo look wel vpon the maliciouſnes of ỹ Iewiſh people, & take good heede that we become not like them. Sothly it is a terrible caſe ỹ God ſhold ſhew forth his power ſo vpon rebels, ỹ the very earth ſhould open and ſwallow them vp with their wiues and children. There were to the number of 250 that had murmured againſt Moſes and Aaron, which were al rooted out in ỹ open ſight of men, ſo as men ſaw that God wrought from heauen: & yet notwithſtanding complaintes were ſtill caſt foorth againſt Moſes and Aaron, men charged them with al ỹ blame, all ỹ fault was laid in their necks. Seing it was ſo, muſt it not needs be that ỹ people was exceedingly hardharted? Yes: but let vs nowe looke into our ſelues. For we alſo are guilty of the like maliciouſnes nowadays in that

behalf. For there are a number to be seene which foster poyson in their hearts, & are wilfully wedded to wicked matters, and yet knowe neither why nor wherefore. If a man aske them what it booteth them: they cannot tell, saying that the diuell hath so caryed them away, that they bee easily wonne to maintaine euill matters, and to murmure and grudge: and therwithal they fal to running vpon those that cannot doe withall, for none other cause but ỳ they indeuour to maintaine the things that concerne God. How haue wee had an eye to the thinges which God hath done beyond mans expectation? He wrought of al the while, when no mã thought it. There were neither Iudges, nor people, nor ministers of the word, ỳ euer thought vpon ỳ thinges ỳ are come to passe. Wel: is the thing done & past? and do we not perceiue ỳ God pitied vs in ỳ ende, and that therby he ment to schole vs, and ỳ we shoulde be mindfull of that deed for euer? Why consider we not ỳ he laid his hand vpon vs to humble vs, to ỳ intent we should henceforth liue in al subiection vnder him, & according to his order? Are they not too too vnexcusable, which cannot make their profit therof? Yes surely. For it is as a wilful shutting of their eyes against Gods workes. But no maruel if things be so out of order nowadays. For wee see ỳ in the countries where the Gospel is, there is more inordinate liberty & more leaudnes than is among ỳ papistes. Whereby we may vnderstande, ỳ God doth iustly giue them ouer. For when men haue heard ỳ gospel and will not beleeue it: they must needs alwayes become deuils incarnate and as badde as monsters, so as nothing may be seen in thẽ but cursed disorder. In deede ỳ Papists, forasmuch as they be deadly enemies vnto God, are well worthy of ỳ reprobate minde wherin they be. But as for them that boast of ỳ Gospel, & make a mocke of it, vtterly refusing al good doctrine, & fighting against god: must not God needs vtter greater rigor towards them, as men see he hath done? And a mã needs not to looke far for ỳ matter. Let vs but looke a little about vs, & we shall see ỳ Gods vengeance hath broken out to ỳ vttermost, vppon those vnhappie creatures which doe so refuse his grace dayly offered vnto them. Now then, if those kind of folk conceiue rancor against al goodnes, what get they by it, but ỳ they heape vp stil greater punishment vpon their owne heads? But as for our part, let vs learn to keep our selues in aray vnder ỳ standard of our God: and then let vs assure our selues, ỳ as he made Aarõs rod to florish in spyte of all ỳ rebels, so will he also make ỳ order to florish which he hath set among vs. Let vs wait vpon him, & rest vppon that order: and in ỳ meane while shrowd our selues vnder his wings, and not seeke any thing against his preheminẽce & dignity, but honour him all of vs both great & smal. If we proceede after ỳ fashion, we may wel hope that as he wrought then, so will he continue also towardes vs.

But by the way let vs beare in mind what Moses saith here. Bethink your selues (saith he) euen to keepe the commaundementes which I set before you this day. Hereby he sheweth vs whereto ỳ minding of the chastisements which we haue perceiued to haue bin done by Gods hand, should serue vs. Namely to bring vs vnto his obedience. For if we think to quit our selues by condemning such as haue so troubled gods order, & gone about to ouerthrow the doctrine of our Lord Iesus Christ: and yet in the meane while do play the same pageants, and followe their footesteppes within an houre after: surely wee shalbe double punished. Wee see what befell to Iehu; and it is a lookingglasse for vs to behold continually. For if a iudge turne his one hand vnto bribes, and punish theeues with the other for his owne profite: is not he himselfe worthy of dubble punishment? Euen so stoode ỳ case w Iehu. True it is ỳ God vsed his seruice in punishing ỳ ydolatries & abhominations of Achabs house: but yet for al that, Iehu himself followed the same, & therfore was God faine to punish him also as a robber, & to vse greater rigor against him than against the house of Achab, though al things were out of order there and ful of wickednes. As much shall befall vs when we shall haue condemned the wicked, and the despisers of God, and such as haue turned quite & cleane against him: if we our selues resemble them afterward. Therfore let vs take heede to ỳ which is spoken heere, which is that God calleth vs home to him, by our beholding of ỳ desolation that men had practised. Very well then, our Lord punisheth them: but his punishing of the wicked is for our benefite. For his meaning is ỳ by their example we shoulde learne to turne head when we haue gone astray, that wheras erst we followed him not, ne framed our liues according to his word, we shold come to attonemẽt again in him, and take heed to our conuersation, ỳ we obserue al the cõmandemẽts which he setteth before vs.

Againe, Moses sheweth vs heere, that it is not ynough for vs to serue God by halues, as men commonly doe to make their market as they list themselues. Indeede we wilbe ashamed so to do, specially if we perceiue that God chastiseth any man for the like doings, and that wee our selues haue found that hee hath vouchsafed to beare with vs, and to shewe himselfe as our father. I say we will be ashamed to disdaine to haue any regarde at all of it. But what? We will set a good face vpon the matter, and we will pretend some shadow of vpright dealing, at leastwise in smal particular matters: but otherwise, wee will holde on stilin our old trace, and we will do such thinges as may wel bewray that in al the rest there was nothing but hypocrisie, so as we went not to work roundly & soundly because we be doubleharted. But god admitteth no such parting of stakes. He saith expresly, Looke about you when I punish such as haue done amisse. For vnlesse ye purpose to wrap your selues in the same curse, ye must not only reforme your liues in one or two points, but also rule your selues throughout according to my law, ye must walk in such vprightnes, as it may be perceiued that ye haue giuen your selues to my seruice, and ỳ your whole seeking is to haue me to be your Lord & master. Thus ye see wherat Moses looked in saying. Therfore do yee all the cõmandements which I set before you this day.

But surely mans frailty is such, as he can neuer attaine to the full performing of the law: but yet must we stil indeuour towards it. When we haue inforced our selues to ỹ vttermost, yet shal we be behind hand stil in many things. And if we enter into accoũt for euery poynt which we shal haue performed, we shall haue failed in a hundred. Therefore let vs acknowledge our faultes: but yet for all that, the marke that wee must shoote at, must be the obeying of our God without exception, so as we make no parting of stakes with him to say, Go to, as for in this thing, I am contented to yeelde to God, but hee must pardon me in that thing, and he must beare with me for the other matter. If we fall to such chaffaring with him, wee shall finde in the ende that our fond ouerweening hath beguiled vs.

And in any wise let vs wey well this saying, where he sayth: that is to bee himselfe that setteth forth the commaundements of God. And thereby he bringeth vs back to Gods word in such wise as it is preached, for he wil not haue vs go seeke in the aire, nor yet aboue the clowdes for ỹ knowledge of his wil. We must be contented with his comming downe vnto vs, and with his speaking to vs by the mouthes of men. The rebellious sort haue alwayes sayd that their intent was to serue God: for it were too horrible a thing to be so blasphemous in wordes, as to say that they giue ouer God and will be none of his. Therefore doe they make faire protestations: but in the meane while they tread vnder foote the worde whereby God will be knowen and serued. This hath bin seene in all ages: and we haue found it in these despisers that haue crept in here among vs to corrupt vs, that all their talke hath tended to none other end, but to abolish some peece of the holy scripture. For they haue giuen forth that there is no more neede of the Lawe and the prophets, but that they be quite abolished. And this blasphemie hath bin held or rather flushed out in such sort, as it required to be resisted with stoutnesse. Insomuch as they haue not bin ashamed to spew out such wicked sayings as these in my presence: namely ỹ the old Testament was to be reiected, and belonged not at all vnto vs. And on their Alebenches they made it a common prouerbe, that the hauing of the Gospell was sufficient, that is to say, that wee ought to holde vs contented with these two wordes, A man must loue God, and he must loue his neighbour. Thus ye see how they haue gone about to bring in a Turkishnesse vppon vs, yea and a confusion more horrible than Turkishnesse, in that they durst so openly pronounce all those leawd speaches. Let vs marke then how it is not without cause that Moses sayth here, The commaundements which I set before you, as if hee should say: come not hither to protest dissemblingly that your intent is to serue God: but [say flatly] ỹ ye wil not admit his Lawe because it is preched vnto you by me, by me (I say) which am a mortall man as you be and not your God, least ye should make an idoll of me. Alledge none of all these shiftes, sayth he: for God hath ordained me to set forth his Lawe, and he will haue it receiued at my hand. And seeing he hath giuen me that charge and office: it behoueth you on your side to obey. Now againe wee knowe that our Lorde Iesus Christ intendeth not to dwell here visibly in his owne person among vs. Hee hath ordeined Pastors in his Church, and hee will be heard by their meanes: that is the perfection whereunto hee bringeth vs, vntill wee come to that happy meeting, to bee throughly joyned vnto him. Those are the wordes of Saint Paul. Now if wee will not submit our selues to that order: it is as if we would rend asunder the body of Christ as much as in vs lyeth. Therefore let vs beware that wee yeelde due authoritie to Gods word, and accept it reuerently when it is preached vnto vs. So then, whensoeuer we haue to deale with Gods seruice and religion: let vs not fall to fancying of high speculations, as if we would say, Let God shewe me what pleaseth him, and I wil doe it. For that is but a vaine excuse, as wee shall see that Moses himselfe will tell vs hereafter where he sayth: Thou needest not to goe ouer the sea, nor to mount vp into the ayre, nor to goe downe into the deepe, forasmuch as thou hast the worde in thy heart and in thy mouth. And this word (saith S. Paul) is not only that which was preached by Moses: but also the same word of faith which we preach at this day. Sith it is so, let vs beare in minde ỹ God ment as it were to bridle vs by telling vs ỹ it was his wil to make vs subiect vnto him, and ỹ for the bringing thereof to passe, it behoued vs to obserue the doctrine which he did set forth by the hand of Moses. And cõsequently it behoueth our Lord Iesus Christes gouerning of vs nowadays to be such, as we receiue and beleeue whatsoeuer is preached to vs in his name. Ye see thó that the way for Gods word to haue due preheminence and authoritie among vs: is that wee gouerne not our selues after our owne lyking: but hearken to the voyce of Iesus Christ to submit our selues thereto, so as hee may haue the souereintie ouer vs that is giuen him by God his father, and we receiue his word without exception or gainsaying, knowing that that is the meane whereby God intendeth to try what obedience wee yeelde vnto him.

Deut. 30. 11. 12, 13, 14.

Rom. 10. 8.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs perceiue them better than wee haue done heretofore, so as we may fare the better by all the instructions that are giuen vs, as well by the benefites that are dayly bestowed vppon vs at his hand, as by the chastisementes which hee sheweth vs: that thereby we may be brought to feare him, and to honor him by all meanes, and not take vppon vs the name of Christianitie falsely, but become his people in very deede, being separated from all worldly infections, and from all wicked lustes that are contrary to his lawe, or which striue against it. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The Lxxvi. Sermon, which is the third vpon the eleuenth Chapter.

8 Therefore keepe all &c.

9 And that yee may prolong your daies in the lande which the Lorde ſware to your fathers to giue to them and to their ſeede, euen a lande that floweth with milke and honnie.

10 For the land which thou goeſt vnto to poſſeſſe it, is not as the lande of Egypt whence thou cameſt: where thou diddeſt ſow thy ſeede and water it with thy feete as a garden of herbes:

11 But the Lande which thou goeſt vnto to poſſeſſe, is a land wherin are hilles and plaines, and it drinketh raine water from the skie.

12 It is a land which the Lord thy God regardeth: the eyes of the Lorde thy God are continually vpponit, from the beginning of the yeere to the end of the yeere.

13 And if ye be diligent in obeying my commaundementes which I commaunde you this day, ſo as ye loue the Lorde your God, and ſerue him with all your hart and with all your ſoule:

14 Then will I giue the foreraine and the afterraine in ſeaſon vppon your lande, that thou mayeſt gather vp thy Corne, thy Wine, and thyne Oyle.

15 Alſo I will giue thee graſſe vpon the feeld for thy Cattell. So ſhalt thou eate and haue thy fill.

AFter that Moſes hath warned the people to keepe Gods commaundements, now hee harteneth them by ſetting Gods promiſes before them, as if GOD ſhould tell them, that his will was they ſhould not ſerue him but for good wages. And in deede, God perceiuing how loth & ſlowe we be to follow him, allureth vs to it, by promiſing vs that wee ſhall not loſe our labor in ſo doing. Not that he is bound to doe it, or that he intendeth to haue vs as hirelings, or that we can deſerue or earne any thing at his hand: wee muſt rid away all ſuch imaginations. It is meete ỹ wee ſhould yeeld obedience vnto God, though no reward at al were behighted vs. For we ought to loue him for his owne ſake, & not for any recompence that can be looked for. Againe on ỹ other ſide, our affection muſt be francke & free, and not lyke theirs that wil doe nothing, except their profite be alwayes before them. We muſt loue God w a free heart. Thirdly, we can deſerue nothing at all by our doings: doe what we can, God is neuer ỹ more bound vnto vs for it. For we be his already, & what can we bring, which is not due to him already by nature? Yet is he contented to apply himſelfe to our rawneſſe, in ſaying ỹ if we ſerue him, there is a reward ready for vs, ſo as we ſhall not neede to be afraid ỹ our Labor in honoring him ſhoulde be vnprofitable to vs if we indeuour ſo to honor him. Now we ſee what a fondneſſe it is for men to conclude, that becauſe God promiſeth rewarde to ſuch as keepe his Lawe, therfore men can deſerue at his hand: For that is not his meaning: but it is done for our infirmities ſake becauſe God ſeeth that wee haue nede to bee quickened vp. And therfore all the promiſes of the lawe are as ſtrokes with ỹ ſpurre. Beſides this, we muſt alſo come backe to the doctrine of S. Paul, which is, that whatſoeuer promiſe with condition God doe make vs in his lawe, it ſtandes vs in no ſtead. For we on our ſide, in ſteade of performing the thinges ỹ God commaundeth vs, doe goe cleane backe from them, and by that meanes are farre off from all ỹ benefit ỹ is behighted vs there. And whereas the Lawe ſayth, hee that doth theſe thinges ſhall liue in them: that booteth vs nothing at all vntill God of his owne free goodneſſe be attone with vs againe. For then writeth he his lawe in our heartes, and we learne to obey him: which thing we cannot doe by nature. And yet for all that, we doe it not then perfectly, but there is ſtill ſome blemiſh in our doings, ſo as God might iuſtly reiect our workes, becauſe they be altogether ſinfull. Neuertheleſſe hee taketh them in good woorth, and yeeldeth vs reward, not as of ductie, but of his owne good will.

Therefore to come againe to the firſt matter, let vs note ỹ God prouoketh vs to the keping of his commaundements, by ſuch meanes as he knoweth to be moſt conuenient for vs. And that is the cauſe why he ſayth, that if wee be whole his, he alſo is ours: and ỹ if wee draw neere vnto him he will drawe ny vnto vs: & will bleſſe vs, & he wil not only proſper vs in this tranſitorie life but we may wel hope for a far greater reward in ỹ kingdome of heauen. All theſe thinges are told vs: and to what end? Not to puffe vs vp with any vaine preſumption, as though wee were able to deſerue aught at Gods hand, but to incourage vs the more to doe well, ſeeing that our God which might well exact the performance of all that is conteined in his Lawe, without allowing vs any rewarde at all, doth neuertheleſſe voutſafe to binde himſelfe freely of his owne accord. Marke that for the firſt point. For we ſee here, ỳ Gods promiſing of all theſe thinges to that people, was not for any obedience that they had yelded vnto him; for the land had bin promiſed to their fathers, yea euen by othe, long before they were borne. And if a man ſpeake of the time that was to come: we ſee that God had no reſpect of that, he looketh not that the people ſhould behaue themſelues ſo well as to receiue reward of him for it: but he ſayth; I haue already promiſed you the land, yea I haue promiſed it you for your inheritance, to the intent ye ſhould not thinke ye haue gotten it by your owne purchaſe. And for proofe thereof, I aſſured it vnto you by free gift before you were begotten: but yet if yee intend to inioy it, take heede that yee giue your ſelues to me. Here yee ſee how God preuenteth all deſerning: he regardeth not what wee haue deſerued, but whereas he ſeeth vs to be wretched and deſtitute of all goodneſſe, ſo as he findeth nothing but ſinne in vs, whereby we deſerue to be riuoted: yet neuertheleſſe he of his owne infinite mercie bindeth himſelfe vnto vs, & telleth vs he will doe vs good, as though we had ſerued him according to his law. Marke ỳ for one point.

And thereupon he ceaſeth not to ſay, Do the things that I haue commanded you, that ye may inioy the kingdom that I haue promiſed you. The reaſon is, that he will not haue his goodneſſe daly-ed withall. If he be liberall, he will not haue men to abuſe it as they commonly doe. When it is told vs that all this euer we haue at Gods hand, is of his onely free gift: wee beare our ſelues in hand, that we haue leaue to doe euill, and to liue euery man after his owne lyking, and that it is no matter what we doe. But God wil not haue his gracious goodnes ſo diſgraced. For his ſhewing of himſelfe fauorable vnto vs, is to another end and purpoſe: namely to prouoke vs to loue him againe; and that becauſe wee finde him ſo good a father, we ſhould be lykeminded againe towardes him, & behaue our ſelues as his children. That is the thing which Moſes telleth vs here when hee ſayth, Looke that yee obey your God, if ye minde to poſſeſſe the land which he promiſed to your fathers. For on the one ſide he ſheweth that the land of Chanaan was an heritage of free gift: and yet hee forbeareth not to tell them, that they muſt not dallie wt God in abuſing ỳ liberalitie of his, but ſo much the rather both loue him & feare him. And when they ſee that God hath powred out the great riches of his mercie ſo vpon them; the ſame ought to inflame them to ſay, let vs giue ouer our ſelues wholy to our God: Seeing that hee hath ſought vs out at ſuch time as wee were gone from him, & preuented vs wt his goodneſſe, not reſpecting our vnworthineſſe, but taking occaſiõ of himſelf to doe vs good: let it kindle ỳ greater deſire in vs to ſubmit our ſelues to his power and will.

And whereas Moſes ſpeaketh here but onely of the land of Chanaan, & of the fruites that the people ſhould gather there for their finding and ſuſtenance: it is not for that God meant not to leade the faithfull any further than ſo at ỳ time: for it is certeine that they had the promiſe of life after the ſame maner as it is conteined at this day in the Goſpell. And therefore it is horrible blaſphemie againſt God, to ſay ỳ God held the people of olde time lyke ſwine in a ſtye, and that they had no more but a certeine figure of ỳ ſpirituall good thinges which are giuen vs preſently in theſe dayes, as that wretched caytife ſayd which was puniſhed here, who turned all thinges vpſide downe, & was ſo bold as ſo belke out this hereſie, ỳ the olde teſtamẽt was nothing elſe but a figure: inſomuch ỳ euen Abraham the father of all the faithfull, had but a fantaſticall faith and knew not God aright. And for proofe therof (quoth he,) he worſhipped Angels in ſtead of God, & had no knowledge of the euerlaſting lyfe. Loe what curſed ſtuffe here was: for we know (ſaith S. Paul) ỳ the fathers of old time were the childrẽ of God, & heires of ỳ kingdome of heauẽ as well as we. There is but this difference, ỳ they were lyke young children: but yet for all ỳ, they failed not to poſſeſſe ỳ benefite, howbeit ỳ they were ſtil vnder tutors and gouernours, according to ỳ ſimilitude that S. Paul alledgeth there. The auncient fathers had the law & the ceremonies & ſuch other lyke thinges: but yet they wanted not the ſubſtance & trueth alſo. Now then, Gods ſetting forth of the land of Chanaã to the Iewes was not to the intent they ſhould ſtand poring vpon ỳ, lyke ſwine that ſtand muſling with their groyns in their ſwil trough: but vnder the earthly inheritance which he had promiſed to their fathers, he gaue them a taſte of the heauenly heritage, accordingly as we ſee ỳ in their ſacrificing, although they offered brute beaſtes: yet were they made partakers of the redẽption that is purchaſed for vs by our Lord Ieſus Chriſt; and their offering of ỳ brute beaſtes in ſacrifice, directed thẽ to ỳ redemption ỳ was wrought by the ſonne of God, when he ſhedded his holy bloud to waſhe away our ſpottes and ſinnes. And after the ſame maner was it wt the land of Chanaan. For ſuch was their ſlender capacitie, ỳ it behoued thẽ to be guided that way. The land of Chanaan then, was to thẽ not onely a pledge but alſo an earneſt penny of the heauenly lyfe & endleſſe welfare which the fathers hoped for as well as we, inaſmuch as they had the ſame faith that we haue. So then let vs marke well, that whereas here is mentiõ made of the land of Chanaan, and of Gods maintening of his people there in wealth: it ſerueth not to the end that the Iewes ſhould looke for nothing els but earthly things: but to the end that by taſting of Gods goodnes in this trãſitorie life, they ſhould vnderſtãd that he had prepared thẽ another heritage in heauẽ, which was more worth than al the world.

But our Lord vſeth no ſuch maner of dealing with vs nowadayes. True it is that (as ſaith Saint Paul vnto Timothie) if we walke as becommeth vs, we haue promiſes both of this preſent life, & of ỳ life to come. God telleth vs ỳ he wil not only receiue vs into ỳ euerlaſting life, but alſo ỳ he will

1. Tim. 4. 8.

wil neuer forsake vs so lõg as we be in this world and in this earthly pilgrimage, but will stil haue a care of vs to doe vs good, and to succor vs and prouide for vs in all our needes: howbeit the heauenly lyfe is the chiefe thing, and that is the place whereunto our Lord draweth vs, notwithstanding that he ad this present lyfe to it as an accessorie. And that is done because wee haue a greater light nowadayes, than our forefathers had vnder the Lawe. For Iesus Christ is come downe from heauen, and hath opened the euerlasting kingdome vnto vs: & he is gone vp thither as in our person: for he is risen againe in ỹ nature of man which he took of vs. Ye see then ỹ heauen is now opened: and therefore it is not to be wondered at though God speake in a larger language now, thã he did in the time of the law. For it behoued the people of those dayes to bee led as we see little children are: & (as saith Saint Paule) we be come to mans estate, in comparisõ of them. Yet notwithstanding we may gather hereupon, that God intending to incourage his people to serue him with the better will, telleth them ỹ he will shewe himselfe a father towardes them, euen in respect of this world, howbeit not in all pointes, but onely so farre forth as may giue them some taste and feeling of his fatherly loue, that they may lift vp the eyes of their faith yet higher, and vnderstand that God hath reserued the true blessednesse and perfection of glorie for them, till they be taken out of this worlde and out of this corruptible lyfe. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to gather vppon that text: Yes and it behoueth vs to marke wel this saying, That thou must be strengthened.

Hereby Moses declareth that God for his parte is faithfull, and that when hee hath once spoken the worde, we may well assure our selues of it. But forasmuch as we drag our legges after vs, and although he allure vs to him so gently, and draw towards vs of his owne accord: yet are we lazie & slow in comming vnto him: we haue need to be strengthened. That is the very end ỹ al ỹ promises of the lawe do tend vnto. It is not meant that God should binde himselfe vnto vs as our detter: it is not for that he looketh whether wee haue deserued any thing at all or not: neither is it of purpose to bargaine or indent with vs, as though he should take vp hackencies among vs to serue his turne withall, by constraint: but forasmuch as he sees wee be feeble, and haue not so resolute a minde as were requisite, but are intangled in this world, and held backe with a number of vanities, and wicked affections, and (to be short) are not so liuely as to yeelde our selues vnto his obedience: his purpose is to strengthen vs, and to help vs. He seeth our default, and he remedieth it. Be strõg therefore. And how? Euen by considering thus with your selues: Go to, Our Lord might commaund vs peremptorily at one word: for he hath full souereintie ouer vs, and we be his by nature. And when we haue all of vs streined our selues to the vttermost of our power, yet can wee not doe as we ought to doe. Yet notwithstãding, he will not be serued at our handes wout recompence, but he saith ỹ if we doe but a peece of that which is due to him, he bindeth himselfe to vs for it. Seeth we see this, are we not too leawd if wee bee not touched to the quick, & amend not all slothfulnesse, to go forth vnto God lustily without stopping for any worldly impediмẽt or hinderance? That is ỹ strength which Moses speakes of here.

And he addeth hereunto, that it is not enough to be entred into the land: but wee must also abide and dwell there: for if wee haue once receiued the promise of saluation, and God hath blessed vs & made vs to prosper to ỹ worldward: we must not thereupon fall a sleepe, but wee must still follow our cause. We know that this life is a way, and therefore wee must still goe on forward. And whither is it that God calleth vs? Saith he to vs, when ye haue gone on a little way, tary still intangled in the world? No: but we must trauel vpward to the heauenly lyfe. And that can not be done without forsaking the world continually more and more. Then let vs marke well, how it is told vs here, ỹ when God hath once put vs in hope of saluation, so as he hath taken vs into his Church and into his flocke, and begunne to doe vs good: we must not fal asleepe vpon it, but proceede on stil, assuring our selues ỹ al is to no purpose, vnlesse wee hold out to our liues end, without ceasing or failing in the middes of our way. This is it ỹ Moses meant, in saying ỹ when the people were once entered into ỹ lande, it behoued them to haue an eye to ỹ euerlasting inioying & possessing thereof which had bin promised them with the same. Hauing said so, he addeth that the land of Chanaã is not as the land of Egipt. And why? For your being in Egipt (saith he) was as it had bin in a garden. For men doe water their gardens, so as when they haue sowed or set their herbes, they wil haue water at hand to moysten thẽ wal. After ỹ same maner was it with you in ỹ land of Egypt, which is watered partly by cunning, & partly by nature. For we must vnderstãd, ỹ that land hath one propertie which all other landes haue not. We reade not ỹ any other cõtrie of the world is vnmoystened with raine and showers frõ aboue, saue only Egypt. For once a yeere ỹ riuer Nilus ouerfloweth his banckes, according to ỹ growing therof, so doth it bringe thẽ abundance of fruites. Insomuch ỹ if it ouerflowe not aboue fiue or sixe foote deep, it is a token of dearth, as who should say ỹ God threatneth famine to ỹ whole countrie. If it rise to twentie foote or somewhat vpward, well, there will be some abundance. But if it increase to thirtie or fortie foote, then will there be much more ioy in Egypt: they haue none other signe of a good yeere & a fruiteful haruest, than the ouerflowing of Nilus. Whereas all other riuers doe marre the landes where they ouerflowe: and although they be muddie, yet doe they much harme: This riuer, by his ouerflowing, causeth ỹ land to yeeld great abũdance. That is ỹ cause why it is said, ỹ at ỹ time ỹ Israelites had as it were euery man his garden, & were faine to haue water to moistẽ thẽ wall after ỹ maner of ỹ cõtrie, which is cut into many ditches & trẽches to water the land withal: & all this is according to ỹ ordinance which God hath set there. But here Moses telleth the Israelites, that it shall not be so with thē in the land of Chanaan. For why? There is small store of riuers in many of the countries, yea and in the most part of them. True it is that Iordan passeth through it, and there are certaine lakes also: but that is all, and yet one of them serues but to infect the land. For the lake where Sodom stood, did rather marre the countrie, than yeeld any commoditie. And therewithall wee see how the fathers had much adoe to digge pittes, and were in daunger to be vndone with drought: insomuch that they were driuen frō place to place for lacke of water. Ye see then that the land of Chanaan was not watered after the maner of Egypt, neither had it water at hand and at commandement as Egypt had. And therefore is it sayd vnto them, See how God visiteth the land of Egypt but once a yere: and if the riuer flowe lushly ouer all the countrie, it is as good as if he had rayned ouer so much vpon it, so as the Egyptians are sure of a good harueſt, when the riuer hath increased after that fashion. But your God must be faine to send you raine and conuenient moysture from aboue, from the one end of the yeere to the other. When yee haue sowen your seede, ye must waite for raine from aboue, and thinke thus with your selues, Alas Lord, wilt not thou make the seede to increase which wee haue layd into the ground? Now must thou shew that thou regardest vs, and that it is thy wil that our labour shal prosper. And when thou hast sō giuē vs raine, we must be faine to returne againe and looke vp still to heauen, that thou our God must haue thine eyes cōtinually vpon the land, to make it yeelde fruite. For it is not enough for you ỹ your God send you rayne once; but he must be faine to hold on still: for other way there is none to water ỹ land, except your God power out his blessing vppon you from heauen. Otherwise the land must needes lye dry and vntilled. Thus doe we see how Moseses meaning is, to stirre vp the people to liue in awe and feare, and to prouoke them to call vppon God continually, and therewithall to submit themselues to his gouernment, and to consider how great need they haue of his help, so as they may say: Alas Lord, what will become of vs if thou blesse vs not?

Moreouer hee putteth them in minde also, to consider what a fatherly care God had of ỹ land of Chanaan, sith it was his pleasure to raine so vpon it, not for once a yeere onely, but yerely from the beginning of the yere to the ende of it. That is the effect of the thinges that Moses intended to say here. And thereby wee be done to vnderstand, that Gods bringing of vs into distresse and necessitie, is to prouoke vs to repaire vnto him, and to looke vp to his goodnesse, so as wee should not onely haue cause to giue him thankes for his benefites; but also bee driuen to call vpon him by being held at the staues end, and thereupon dayly resorte vnto him. After the same maner, wee see nowadayes how wee haue neede of faire weather; and that not for fower or fiue dayes in a yeere: but as oftē as seed is to be layde into the ground, or the lande is to be tilled; or elſe we see men coulde not put the plough into the ground, nor sowe their corne: if they should, it would rotte immediately, and neuer take roote in the earth. Againe the grapes would rotte vppon the vines and neuer ripen. Neuertheleſſe, when corne is layde into the ground, it requireth rayne; and it is mard if there followe an vnmeasurable drought. Afterward in sōmertime when harueſt commeth, the time must be fit for it, and likewise for dreſſing of vines and for mowing of graſſe. To be short, all the yeere long God calleth vs to him, by making vs to haue neede of him. And although wee were not prouoked at all; yet the very wit and vnderstanding that he giueth vs by nature, may cause vs to see that hee calleth vs dayly to come vnto him, and to put our whole trust in his goodneſſe. This is the thing in effect which we haue to remember vppon this text.

But the chiefe point is to put this lesson well in practise. And therefore whensoeuer we see that our God hath looked vppon vs throughout all the yeere; let vs vnderstand that his intent was to shewe the more familiarly, what a fatherly care he hath ouer vs. For if wee had any riuer lyke to Nilus which watered the land in stead of rayne: wee would thinke thus with our selues; well, now hath God done pitying of vs for this yeere: & it would not touch vs so wel, as when we see ỹ God not onely regardeth vs in the springtime, but also holdeth on all the yeere lōg, so as there is not any one day of all the yere, wherein we may not behold Gods wonderful goodneſſe, in making ỹ earth to yeeld fruite for our sustenance, by considering how he is faine one while to hold ỹ rayne backe vp, & another while to opē the windowes & watergates of heauen, that wee may haue moysture in due season: How hee is faine to send heate, and to asswage it againe: & to send cold and to abate it againe; how hee is faine to send faire weather & fowle, and to temper the one with the other: so as finally, we haue neede of all these diuersities, in their due times and seasons. And sith we see that God prouideth vs of all these thinges; ought wee not to be the better assured that he hath a continuall regard of vs and neuer forgetteth vs, and that hee is a father tō vs all the yeere long? Lyke as a man ỹ is mindful of his housholde, riseth betimes a morninges to goe to his busineſſe; & when hee hath done one thing, looketh about if there bee any thing els to set in order, forecasting in his minde how to dispose the thinges ỹ are giuen him, so as the benefite thereof may redound to his whole housholde: euen so God behaueth himselfe as a housholder towardes vs, so as hee ceaseth not to watch for our benefite both early and late; not that he is faine to toyle after the maner of men: but that howsoeuer the case stand, hee maketh vs to feele that he is more than a fosterfather to vs, & we be too blind & beastly if we consider it not. Thus ye see how the practising of this lesson of Moseses, consisteth in giuing thāks to our God, according to the varietie of ỹ time & weather which we perceiue in ỹ yere. And whē he hath prouided vs for the whole yeere; let vs assure our selues that hee hath had pitie of vs, and regarded vs, and neuer turned his eye from our benefite, to the end that we might be furnished and prouided thereof. Furthermore, it is not enough for vs to thanke God when we haue so felt his goodnesse: but lyke as Moses sayth here, that his eyes are alwayes vpon the landes ẏ are full of hils & dales, where hollow grosides are not at commaundement to cut trenches in, nor streames at hand to water ẏ fields as it were gardens: so when we thinke vpon those thinges, we must beare in minde that God hath his eyes continually vpon vs, to ẏ end that we also should lift vp our eyes vnto him, to call vpon him and to resorte to him for succor all ẏ yeere long, & that when he hath giuen vs a good season, we should pray for the continuance thereof thereafter, as we should haue neede of it, and it ought to prouoke vs to doe ẏ lyke from day to day. But contrariwise, we see our owne negligence. For when thinges fall out according to our minde, wee doe as it were despise God. If we see there hath bin a good seede time, then go to, let vs make good cheere: seeing the seede time was so good, we are lyke to haue as good a harueste. And doe we wonder ẏ God disappointeth vs of our desire, because of such vnthankefulnesse? What a leawdnesse is ẏ? God hath his eyes vpon vs, & yet we shut our eyes at him, & kicke & spurne against him, & mocke at him: and thinke we ẏ he either ought or can beare w such beastlynesse? Nay rather, seeing ẏ he sayth first, My children, I looke vpon you & haue a care of you, to prouide sustenance for you: it would become vs to be answerable vnto him. Seeing ẏ our Lord beginneth after ẏ fashion, what ought we to doe? Ought we not at leastwise to say, well Lord, and we likewise will haue an eye vnto thee? Nay, contrariwise, when we haue receiued benefites at his hand, we fall to kicking against him. He would take vs into his protection, & we fall to flinging away from him. Againe, where is ẏ care ẏ we ought to haue to cal vpon him? It would become vs to consider thus with our selues, Our Lord holdeth vs as it were at ẏ staues end, to ẏ intent we should stand in awe of him: now therefore, let vs not giue our lustes the head: as if a father shoulde say to his children, sirs, looke ẏ yee apply your selues wel, the one of you at his booke and the other at his worke, & then shall ye haue your dinners, & else ye shall haue nothing. If a father hold his childrē at that point, so as they knowe not wether they shall haue meate & drinke or no, except it appeare that they haue done some good, surely it will moue thē though they haue no reason nor vnderstanding. Behold, our God could well giue vs at once all that euer we need: or else he could in one day shewe vs ẏ the yere should be prosperous, so as there should bee both a good harueste and a good vintage: but he wil not doe it. When wee haue passed ouer one day, we must beginne againe the next day to pray to him: & God hath ordeined that it should be so, because he sees wel ẏ it is more thā requisite for vs to be held in awe. And therefore let vs learne to profite our selues by this lesson: & whensoeuer we want raine, let vs beware ẏ we be patient, in waiting quietly till God open ẏ clowdes. And on ẏ other side, when he vouchsafeth to water ẏ earth, let vs vnderstand ẏ he giueth vs sustenance w his owne hand, and let vs call vpon him dayly: & sith wee perceiue ẏ he watcheth for vs: let vs lykewise haue our eyes vpon him againe. Thus ye see in effect what Moses meant to declare here.

Now he addeth thereunto, If ye keepe the commaundements which I set before you, so as ye loue your God, & serue him with all your heart, in the lande which I will giue you. Here Moses putteth ẏ people in minde againe what ẏ true seruice of God is, namely ẏ we learne to obey him. This hath bin sufficiently layd forth alreadie: but yet is it not wout cause ẏ the holy Ghost speaketh of it so often. For it standeth vs in hand to haue such warnings set before vs, as it were euery minute of an howre. And for proofe thereof, how serue we God, but by force & constreint? We haue no willingnesse nor desire at all to it. But our Lord telleth vs ẏ he accepteth no seruice ẏ is done vnto him, except it come from the heart, & that we loue him as our father, according as it is sayd in ẏ psalme, ẏ we cannot feare God but because he sheweth himselfe mercifull vnto vs. For so long as we cōceiue nothing in God but rigor, we can doe nothing else but shun him, & shrinke away from him as farre as is possible: & although we be constreined to looke vnto him, yet shall he draw nothing ẏ is aught worth frō vs. Therfore ẏ first step to serue God wel & to loue him, is to knowe his fauorablenesse, that we may rest vpon it, & looke for mercie & fauor at his hand. For lyke as in ẏ sayd hundred & thirtie psalme: so also here, mention is made of obedience after long, to shew vs ẏ it is not enough to pretend ẏ feare of God, but that we must so submit our selues to him, as we may say, Lord thou hast giuen vs the grace to rule our lyfe aright; & therefore vouchsafe to gouern vs in such sort, as none of vs may take leaue to doe what he list, but all of vs may harkē simply to thy voyce, to submit our selues thereunto.

Now let vs come to ẏ word ẏ Moses addeth, which is, I will giue. Here he speaketh in the person of God. He had sayd afore, looke ẏ yee obey the cōmandements which I set before you, & then Lord your God will blesse you. And now he sayth I will giue, as though he himself were God. It is not wout cause ẏ he chaungeth the person after that fashion: for it serueth to giue the greater authoritie to his doctrine, & to make it to be the better receiued. For we be inclined to such contempt & skornefulnesse, ẏ when God speaketh vnto vs by men, we make no account of it, because his worde is preached vnto vs by mortall men. Behold, a man speaketh in the pulpit, & we be not touched with his doctrine as were requisite. It ought to haue there a heauenly maiestie, and we be so dull and grosse, that we perceiue not how it is God that speaketh there. In this respect Moses saith here, I will giue thee: and yet for all ẏ, he was not able to giue them one drop of raine. And what is his giuing then? Verily he sheweth that his speaking is not of himselfe, but of

God,

God, and therefore that wee must receiue it as if God had spoken it with his owne mouth, and had shewed himselfe in visible shape, and vttered his glorie to the eye. Let vs marke well then that in this text we be done to vnderstand, that when we come to the hearing of a sermon or to the reading of the holy scripture, wee must not bring deafe eares with vs to bee no whit moued at the wordes, nor to bee quickened vp by the commaundementes and exhortations that are giuen vs there: but wee must yeelde our selues vnto our God, assuring our selues that although he serue his turne by men as his instrumentes, yet is it hee himselfe that sendeth the message and authoriseth the word, according to this saying of our Lord Iesus Christ: Hee that heareth you heareth me, and he that receiueth you receiueth mee. And whosoeuer reiecteth you, reiecteth mee also, and lykewise my father that sent me. Ye see then how it is an open rebelling against God, when wee disdayne to heare his word that is preached vnto vs by men, and to heare it with as much humilitie as if he himselfe came downe vnto vs, or as if he sent it vs by the Angels of heauen. That is the matter which Moses meant to shewe here.

Luke 10.16

Now in the end he sayth, that they shall haue their fil, and be well maintained, when they shall haue kept Gods commaundements after that fashion. Wee haue two poinctes to marke in this text for a conclusion. The first is, that our Lord telleth his people, that hee wil not barely giue them whatsoeuer is needefull for them: but also giue them their fil of his benefits, so as they shal be through ly satisfyed with them. That is for the one. The second is a comming backe to that which hath bin touched alreadie: namely, that although God speake but of temporall goods, such as concerne but this transitorie lyfe; yet hee leadeth them further thereby. First therefore let vs vnderstand, that God not onely giueth and bestoweth vppon vs, such thinges as hee knoweth to be needefull for vs; but also inlargeth and extendeth his riches yet further, by vsing a kinde of ouermeasure. And in very deede wee see it to be so. For as in respect of naturall necessitie, what needed wee more than bread and water? Psal.104.15 But God addeth wine to cõfort and glad mans heart, as is sayd in the psalme. Againe wee see he vouchsafeth to pleasure vs after all sortes, by sending vs so many thinges as are in the worlde to delight vs withall, which are all witnesses of his liberalitie towardes vs, in that he not onely prouideth vs of all the thinges which we coulde not forbeare; but also addeth as an ouerplus, a great number of good thinges that serue for our pleasure: Whereby wee ought to bee the more prouoked to loue him, and they ought to bee as winges to vs, wherewith to fly vnto him. But contrariwise, if God giue vs store, wee cannot forbeare to pamper our selues lyke brute beasts, insomuch that wee be wedded to this world. I speake not only of drunkards and Gluttons that cram themselues till they be without wit & reason: but also of all such as are in loue with their delicates and delightes, so as if they haue abundance more than ordinarie, they cannot holde themselues within any measure, but thereupon doe fall asleepe, and in stead of being prouoked to resort vnto God, doe runne away from him, or rather lye weltring and bathing of thẽselues in their pleasures, and forget themselues I wote not how. Wherefore let vs marke wel, that whẽ God giueth vs abundance, it is not to minister occasion of disorder, but to make vs the more in loue with him, forasmuch as he handleth vs not as seruantes or hirelinges, but as his owne children, from whom he withholdeth nothing. Now then, sith we see this; let vs learne to fare better by it. Thus much concerning the word Fil. But yet let vs marke, that although God giue vs not our fill; yet faileth he not to shewe his freegoodnesse in so dooing, insomuch that there was neuer yet so great a famin, but that our Lord hath alwayes shewed himselfe a father, yea and more than a father towardes men: but ill is that considered of vs. And that is a cause also why hee bestoweth not so much as were requisite. Because Gods benefites haue so ill intertainment at our handes, he also is faine to shut his blessings from vs, and to lette vs alone in want and penurie. Thus much concerning the first poynt.

And touching the second, let vs marke that when God feedeth and maintaineth vs in this world euen to our owne contentation; the same must be a prouocation to vs to consider by faith, the infinite riches that are reserued for vs aboue in heauen. It is sayd in the psalme, I shal haue my fill of the abundance of thy goodnesse. And in an other place it is saide, Lorde howe greate is the abundance of thy goodnes, which thou hast layd vp for them that loue thee? True it is that God maketh vs to feele the abundance of his goodnesse, partly euen in this world: but yet shall we neuer haue our fill of it, (as is said in the sixteenth psalme) vntill our Lord haue taken vs vp to himself, & rid vs quite out of this world. And so let vs marke, that the full measure of the good things that are promised vs, & which we looke to inioy, is not to be found here beneath, it is enough that we see some part of them. Yea and although our Lord bestow but as much vppon vs as he seeth requisite for our infirmitie: Let vs alwayes be led vp higher therby, so as it may make vs to consider, that when the time commeth wherein God wil shewe himselfe vnto vs face to face, then shall we be linked much neerer to him, than we be now: and (to be short,) that whē we be gathered vp into his heauenly kingdome, then we shall haue our fill of all thinges. Ye see then that we must so passe through this world, as we must not take our fill, contentation, and rest in the thinges that are here, but bee drawen euer higher and higher to the spirituall good thinges: and that if we linger in penurie heere beneath, we must consider that by that meane God prouoketh vs to come vnto him, vntill wee bee perfectly vnited vnto him, as the vnion shal be at the last day.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele thẽ better than we haue done, so as it may cause vs to hũble our selues continually, and to misslyke of our selues, and to aske him forgiuenesse of the great number of sinnes and iniquities which we haue committed; and that in the meane while it may please him to beare with vs in our weakenesse, vntill he haue clothed vs againe with his owne righteousnesse, and also taken vs vp into his endlesse glorie. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all &c.

On Wednesday the xxv of September. 1555.

The Lxxvij Sermon which is the fourth vppon the eleuenth Chapter.

16 Beware that your heart bee not beguyled, and that yee turne not away to serue other Gods, and to bowe downe before them,

17 Least the wrath of your God bee kindled against you, and hee shut vp the heauen that it raine not, and the earth yeeld not her fruit, and least ye perish sodenly from of the good Land which the Lord giueth you.

18 Therefore lay vp these wordes in your heartes and in your mindes, and tye them for a token to your hands, & let thẽ be as frontlets written betweene your eyes.

19 And teach thẽ to your childrẽ, talking of thẽ when thou art at home in thine house, & when thou goest abroad, and when thou lyest down, & when thou risest.

20 See thou write them vppon the portals and gates of thy house,

21 That your dayes & the dayes of your children, may be increased in the Land which the Lord sware to your fathers to giue you, as lõg as ỹ skyes are ouer ỹ earth.

WHen as Moses sayth here, that men must beware that they ouershoote not themselues: thereby he doth vs to vnderstand, howe frail we be, & how inclined vnto euill, if we be not diligently restreined by the feare of God, & by continuall minding of ỹ doctrine whereby he guideth and gouerneth vs. To our seeming it had bin enough to haue sayd; Keep the cõmandements of your God. Yee see what he requireth of you: sith yee know his will, holde your selues to it. But forasmuch as men are vnconstant, & a small thing or nothing will make them start out of ỹ right way: he addeth yet further this warning, that they should beware; As if he should say; Syrs, keepe good watch. Why so? For wee shall be surprised by and by, if we watch not to withstand Satans temptations & wiles. Specially when ỹ case cõcerneth ỹ seruing of God, wee bee streightwayes turned aside, and we need none other bodie to tempt vs, for euery man shall finde continually some seede of superstition in his owne heart, and the minde of man is a warehouse of Idolatrie, so as euen without schooling, euery of vs will forge idols, & ouerthrow the seruice of God. For ỹ diuell sleepes not, ne ceaseth to intangle vs in many fond & wicked fancies. Hereby therefore we may iudge how needefull this warning is for vs, where we be willed to be watchfull. Yea and wee know ỹ frailetie of our minde to be such, ỹ if wee be not well fenced to wstand Satans tẽptations constantly, he wil soon haue turned vs out of the way of saluation, & from ỹ pure doctrine of God. And therefore let vs vnderstand at a word, ỹ we haue need to stand continually vpon our garde, as long as we liue in this mortall lyfe. For why? On the one side ỹ diuell tempteth vs, & hath an infinite number of wiles to winde about vs euery minute of an howre: & although his tẽptations were not so great as they be; yet are we so weake of our selues, ỹ euery thing of nothing is able to ouerthrowe vs. Sith it is so with vs, let vs watch, specially seeing ỹ the spirit of God warneth vs so to doe. But what? It is well seene how we be taken vnwares & vnprouided, and God punisheth our negligence in falling so asleepe, as though wee were at peace & rest here. Nay our life ought to be kept occupyed here as though there were continuall warre, & the diuell failleth not to purvey infinite assaultes & skirmishes on all sides. And therefore seeing we on our side be so sleepie, and our enemie on ỹ other side is so watching to cut our throates: it is good reason ỹ we should soone ouercome. For seeing ỹ God warneth vs to stand at our defence, & we voutsafe not to be mindeful of it, & to cal vpon him & to refer our selues vnto his protectiõ; must he not needes shew vs by experience, ỹ his warning of vs is not vaine? Yes; & therefore let vs beare this exhortation in mind, & specially when God is to be serued (as I said afore), let vs assure our selues there needeth nothing to dazle our eies, as appeareth by experience. As soone as ỹ true & pure religion is established in any place; by & by mẽ fal to imbosing of it; for their very nature affordeth it. And therefore so much ỹ more behoueth it vs to hold our selues as imprisoned, and not to swarue one way nor other, ỹ we may hold our selues continually in ỹ pure simplicitie of Gods word. Againe let vs not be out of quiet though neuer so many mẽ do turne out of ỹ right way: for it is their kinde so to do. Wherfore let vs strengthẽ our selues against such stumblingblocks, when we see corruptions creepe in againe, & that such as were in a good trade doe disgrace themselues. Sith it is so ỹ men doe easily fall asleepe, & take no heede to themselues: let vs not maruell though euery thing of nothing do corrupt them. Thus ye see how this sentence may serue vs to dubble purpose.

2. Pet. 3. 8.

And it is sayde expressly, that our hearts should not be beguiled. For it is not enough for a man to abſteine from doing of euill wilfully: but alſo all fond deuotiõs are lykewiſe condemned, becauſe our Lord wil not haue men to be ſelfewiſe, but to obey ſimply whatſoeuer God commandeth thẽ. Men thinke it to be a reaſonable excuſe before God, when they can ſay, I meant to doe wel: but that meant is but a mockerie, as Moſes ſheweth here. And for proof thereof, although our harts be beguiled, ſo as men perceiue not their owne euil doings and deſtruction, but make their reckoning that God will take their doinges in good worth: yet are they condemned here (as ye ſee) with all their good intentes, and they faile not to offend God neuertheleſſe, and in offending him they faile not alſo to heape vp vengeance vppon their owne heads. And why ſo? Euen becauſe they walke not in obedience vnto him. Now then, let vs learne, not to sheeld or ſhrowd our ſelues any more vnder deuotions after the foolithe maner that hath reigned too much in the world: but let vs vnderſtand that our Lord will haue vs to fetch light at his word, and to rule our lines by that. And ſith he is ſo good to vs as to teach vs what is good, to the intent that Satan may not haue any entrance into vs, but that hee may bee put backe though hee goe prying about vs and indeuour to vndermine vs, and ſeeke neuer ſo many byweyes to creepe into vs: let vs aſſure our ſelues throughly, ỹ we haue but only one way, from ỹ which it is not lawful for vs to ſtep aſide in any wiſe. And when we ſtand ſo vpon our gard, let vs not doubt but ỹ God will reach vs his hand, & ſo fence vs on all ſides, as Satan may well practiſe what he liſteth, but hee ſhal neuer win any thing at our handes. For otherwiſe this exhortation were to no purpoſe. If God ſhould ſay vnto vs, beware, & in the meane while we had no meanes to beware, hee might ſeeme to mocke vs. But inaſmuch as when wee reſorte vnto him, he voutſafeth to guide vs, by giuing vs ỹ ſpirit of wiſedome & diſcretion, to ỹ end we ſhould not be deceiued: ſurely whatſoeuer the deuill practiſe, yet ſhall he not preuaile, but we ſhall euer ouercome his temptations, at leaſtwiſe if wee ſuffer our ſelues to be gouerned by Gods pure word, ſo as wee forſake our owne fanſies, & truſt not to our own wit, but pray God to inlighten vs, and to ſhew vs by his holy ſpirit, what is acceptable vnto him. When wee goe to worke after that faſhion, ſo as our wareneſſe is matched with humilitie, it is certeine ỹ God will alwayes reach vs out his mightie hand. Thus ye ſee that the thing which we haue to put in vre, is firſt of all to be vigilant & to keepe good watch: and ſecõdly that foraſmuch as we know we may quickly be deceiued, we muſt pray God to defẽd vs, & vtterly diſtruſting our ſelues, leane onely vnto him. Theſe two thinges wil ſo preſerue vs, that we ſhall continually keepe ỹ right way, euẽ in the middeſt of darkneſſe. For why? God himſelfe will ſerue vs both for Sunne and Moone, as it is ſayd in the Prophet Eſay.

And now by the way he ſheweth that if ỹ children of Iſrael continued not in ỹ ſeruing of God and in his pure religion, they were leſſe to bee excuſed than all the infidels of the world: for it is ſaid vnto them, turne not away. Men that haue neuer had any good inſtruction, are by nature as brute beaſtes; but when God hath called vs and ſhewed vs the true foundeneſſe, then if we faile afterward, it is not with vs as with the fillie infidels that haue euer bin blinde and ignorant, but it is a rebellious turning away vnto wickednes, as though we meant to ſpite our God by ſeparating our ſelues from him, by renouncing the couenant which he had made w vs, to hold vs vnder his ſubiection. This ſaying therefore ought to be well weyed, & ſpecially of vs in theſe dayes which haue the pure trueth of ỹ Goſpel, whereas wee ſee how all our neighbours round about vs runne headlong on ſtill in blindneſſe. In deede it is pitie ỹ they haue not knowen Gods trueth; but yet ſhal not ỹ excuſe them. But what is to be ſayd to vs in compariſon of them, ſeeing that our God hath ſhewed himſelfe to vs, & hath layd the matter ſo playne before vs, as we cãnot miſſe but knowe how to obey him? Wherefore let vs take heede ỹ we keepe on our courſe, when God ſhall haue ſet vs in ỹ way of his obedience, & taught vs how to do it. Let vs beware (I ſay) that we ſtep not aſide in any wiſe, vnleſſe we intẽd to be worthie of dubble blame. Let vs bethinke vs of this ſaying, that ỹ ſeruant which knoweth his maiſters will, ſhal haue dubble puniſhment if he doe it not. And ỹ we may ſo doe, let vs ſeeke to ſettle our ſelues ỹ more by Gods word. When he hath once told vs what he would haue vs to doe, let vs profite therein, & let vs be ſo ſtrẽgthened thereby, ỹ the diuel (doe what he can, and inforce hee himſelfe neuerſomuch againſt vs) may not bee able to turne vs out of the way.

2. Tim. 3. 16

Luk. 12. 47.

Now he ſpeaketh afterward of ſtrange Gods. For the welſpring of all euil, is the not knowing what God we ſhould ſerue. If men bee to ſeeke in that point, needes muſt all the reſt of their lyfe be vterly vncerteine, & wrapped vp altogether in error. And therefore it is not for naught ỹ God ſtãdeth vpon this point, ỹ men ſhould know him, & ſerue & worſhip onely him alone. For when wee ſay we muſt ſerue no ſtrange Gods: it importeth two thinges. The firſt is that we ſhould be able to diſcern who is our God, ſo as we ground not our ſelues vpon falſe opinion or fanſie, but vpon ſubſtantial certeintie: which thing cannot be if we giue way to our own mother wit. For ỹ is ỹ roote whence all the ſuperſtitions in the worlde haue ſprong. And the very cauſe of ỹ huge confuſion ỹ is ſtill in the world at this day, is that men take leaue continually to imagin whatſoeuer comes in their heads. O (ſay they) I trow God will lyke wel of this: & to my ſeeming, ſuch a thing is good Now if men behaue themſelues ſo after their owne imagination, all things muſt needes be out of order. Ye ſee it is euen a very ſeagulfe. Therefore let vs learne to giue eare to God when hee ſpeakes to vs, & let vs not take leaue to cõceiue any thing of him, otherwiſe than is ſhewed vs by his worde. This then is the firſt point, that we ſhould learne to diſcerne our God from all the Idols which the world forgeth to it ſelfe: & therewithall ỹ we ſhould not attempt any thing, but that which he alloweth. For ỹ Papistes can wel enough protest, ỹ their intent is to serue ỹ God ỹ made both heauen & earth; & so also doe the Iewes & Turkes: ỹ ease is common to them all. But yet for al ỹ, ye see how ỹ Turks haue wounde themselues into a maze of superstitions, through ỹ deceitfulnesse of their Mahomet who hath bewitched them. Again ỹ Iewes on their parte are growen out of kinde, & haue mingled ỹ Lawe w their owne inuentions, refusing ỹ redeemer that had bin promised them, who is the very foundation of all ỹ religiō which they should haue held. And as for ỹ Papists, ỹ world sees how they haue corrupted all trueth, & turned it vtterly into lying. Therefore let vs learne, ỹ if we will not worship straunge Gods, we must so holde our selues in awe, as we attempt not any thing, vnlesse we be sure ỹ it is according to Gods will. For whensoeuer we fal to worshipping him after our owne deuice, we doe set vp an idoll in our owne braine: & that is a thing which he vtterly mislyketh, reiecteth, and abhorreth. Thus ye see ỹ the thing which we haue to remember vpon this place is, ỹ seeing God hath graunted vs ỹ grace to haue his word to be our guide, we ought to be ỹ more watchfull: & sith we be so weake as we neede not any thing to thrust vs out of the way, wee ought to take so much ỹ moore heede, ỹ we may profit dayly by his word. And besides ỹ, let vs assure our selues throughly, that it is not enough for vs to weene we doe well: for we win nothing by being deceiued, our case is neuer a whit amended by it before God: & therefore let vs learn to pray him to inlighten vs. And therewithall let vs knowe, ỹ whē God hath shewed vs his wil, we must hold vs to it without adding aught thereto. Thus yee see in effect what we haue to remēber vpon this text of Moses.

Now he addeth immediately, that men shoulde lay vp the things in their hearts which he telleth thē, & that they shoulde make a continuall monument of them: as if it were of bracelets about their wristes, or of attyres on their heades, or of deuices in writing at the entrance of their doores: to the intent they might occasion them to thinke vppon the lawe of God: so as at their rysing in the morning, & at their going to bed at night, men should talke & conferre of it, that their children might learne thereby. Hereby Moses sheweth yet better, ỹ vnlesse men be held as it were by force, they will soone start away frō God: Lyke as whē a man thinkes he hath made a Foxe tame, if he let him alone but one halfe day, he returnes againe to his kinde by and by. Euen so is it with vs. We be so wilde, ỹ although it may seeme for a time that we be throughly brought home vnto God, & very wel reformed: yet in ỹ turning of a hand all is quite forgotten. And therefore our Lord is faine to put vs in remēbrance, (as hee doth in this text) & to quicken vs vp to inforce our selues to seeke al the means and helps ỹ may be, to hold our selues in awe vnder his obedience. That is the cause why he saith, ỹ folke shoulde make thē frontlets as ornaments of their heads. Whereas men doe commonly weare brooches, buttons, & such other thinges, & women weare billiments of gold and other costly attyres vpon their heades: the attire of the faithful must be to haue some remembrāce of Gods law. In stead of bracelets & other fine toyes to apparell & deck our selues withal, we must vse such an attyre as may teach vs to garnish our soules, yea & to giue our selues wholy to God, & to submit our selues altogether to his word. In stead of the hauing of py things to furnish our houses withal for delight, we must haue some such thing as may put vs in minde to say, These are the things that our God calleth vs vnto, he will neuer haue vs to forget him. And if we haue ouershot our selues, so as our minds do wander abrode, he calleth vs home againe, & telleth vs ỹ we must not raunge so after our own vaine fancies. Thus we see ỹ summe of that which is contained here. We haue had the like saying in the sixth Chapter. But yet this text (6.9) weeth vs more expresly, that it is not ynough for vs to haue withdrawen our selues for once frō our vain and wandering imaginations: but God must bee faine to bring vs to that point againe, by putting vs in minde of our slouth and negligence, or else we shall dwel in it continually, and he must be faine also to shewe vs the weakenesse & feebleneesse of our spirites. And in deede, my experience shewes it: for the whisking of a fly before our eyes, is ynough to make vs run after it, & to do what we can to stop her. Wee build castles in ỹ aire, & by and by al vanisheth away. Now then seeing there are so many vanities in our braine, do we wonder ỹ we doe very quickly start away from God? What a nomber of occasions are there in this world, to turne vs this way & that way, so as we shal be led & caried quite away ere euer we thinke on it? Again, Satan is such a suttle Sire, that if we be not wel armed against him, we shal neuer continue in ỹ obeying of our God. This repetition therfore is not superfluous, where God telleth vs again, ỹ it is good for vs to haue his law written euerywhere, so as we might reade his cōmandements vpon our fingers. And he hath disposed them into ten sentences, to the end they should be ỹ better knowen vnto vs. For looke how many fingers there are vpō our hāds, so many are ỹ commandements of God, to ỹ intent they should be ỹ easier to beare in remēbrāce: so as there needeth no lōg registers, (which were hard to carie away,) forasmuch as he hath giuen vs so short a rule, ỹ if we be long in learning of it, we proue our selues to be wilful. To be short: if we shut not our eyes wilfully, we cānot say but ỹ we may soon haue lerned ỹ things which our God sheweth vs. Againe sith it is his wil, ỹ in stead of ỹ deckings wherunto both men & women are too much giuen through fond desire of vainglorie, wee should haue wherewith to put our selues in mind of his lawe, ỹ we might be held in awe by it: what excuse wil there be for vs, if we fal to going astray, or if we bee wedded to this world, or giue our selues to wickednesse? Thus much concerning this text.

But according to ỹ fashion of ỹ world, which is alwaies giuen to hypocrisie, & to shamefull mocking at al Gods ordinances, ỹ Iewes made them frontlets of certaine sentences of Gods law, and they obserued the law very well as in respect of

ꝑ words ꝑ are set down here. For they had bracelets of them, & rolles, & attires on their heads, so as it might seeme ꝑ there was nothing but holynesse in them. Also they had the commaundementes written in their houses. All this (say I) was well done. But they surmised that they serued God by these outward shewes: and that was nothing so. We also for our parte should come to the same point lykewise, if wee considered not what the will of our God is, to submit our selues thereto. For as I said afore) hypocrisie is so rooted in mans nature, that they would alwayes be dalying with God, & content him with counterfeitings, so as there might be nothing but dissimulation: & yet for all that, they beare themselues in hand, ꝑ he ought to hold the discharged. But we must marke that God will not bee serued by the wryting of some sentence of his Lawe vpon a post or a doore, or at the entrie of a house; his meaning is nothing so. But what? Forasmuch as he seeth that we be short witted, & that although we haue bin taught his word duely, yet we bee easily turned away frō it; it is not without cause ꝑ he will haue vs to seeke all the helpes that can be, ꝑ we may haue the better stay of our selues, & learne the remedies of our fraileties, sith wee stand none other thing to turne vs out of ꝑ way. And sith we know ꝑ vice to be in vs, let vs bee the diligenter in seeking God, & let vs say: How is it possible ꝑ I should hold my selfe in ꝑ feare of my God if I should passe but one day wout thinking vpon him & vpon his cōmaundements: I should forget him by & by. What is to be done then? As soone as I rise in the morning, the diuell offereth me ꝑ many lettes. Now is standeth me in hand to resist him, & that I tary not till mine enemie giue me ꝑ assault: but I must think vpon my God who calleth me to him. Againe at night when I goe to bed, for asmuch as a nightimes the diuel ceaseth not to put many fond fancies in my head, and a man is not able to restreine his own minde from conceiuing some vaine thoughtes or otherwise beseemeth me to be stil serued by being mindful of my God, & by referring my selfe vnto him & by resting wholy there. For if I tary long, I shall be so drawen from him, ꝑ I shall not finde the way thither againe, lyke as when a man taketh no heed, but runs galloping on wout minding of his way whether he be right or no; ꝑ longer he trauaileth, the further he is from his way; yea & if there be folke to set him in the way, & he regardeth not to take the right way againe; then is hee well woorthie to wander still out of his way. If one say to him; Sir, you must take on that hande, and yet he will needes goe the contrary way, as though his wits were rouing in the aire, & so goeth on still in the ende hee shall find himselfe farre off from the right way. And therefore let vs beware that we be not so headstrong in our vanities, as not to indeuour to amend our selues. For (as I said afore) we may easily wander out of ꝑ way euery minute of houre, so as we need not any thing to make vs stray frō ꝑ right way. But if wee bee out of it, let vs seeke to come in againe by & by & to be reformed. For our God is not far frō vs, he promiseth by his Prophet Esay, that he will be at our backs, as a scholemaster is at the back of a yong scholer. And like as ꝑ mother ꝑ hath her eye alwayes vpon ꝑ childe ꝑ she bringeth vp, wil alwayes be at hand by it: so God sheweth by a familiar example, ꝑ he wil be at our elbowe, if so be that wee seeke him & suffer him to reforme vs. And therefore let vs learne to exercise our selues in ꝑ studie all the time of our life. And specially sith we see there is so vrgent necessitie, let euery of vs quicken vp himselfe, & let vs not tarie til ꝑ diuel haue caried vs so farre astray, ꝑ we can no more return into ꝑ way; but as soone as we set but one step awry, or swerue neuer so little aside, let vs bethink our selues againe by & by. Nay let vs not tarie so long; but let vs be aforehand, & let vs call so much ꝑ more earnestly vpon our God to guide vs, & to preuent vs with his goodnesse. Let vs follow his word, which is ꝑ true shooteanker, & the very lampe to giue vs light. Let vs open our eyes to behold the light that he sheweth vs, & let vs often call to minde ꝑ things which we haue learned. Let euery of vs marke to what vice he is inclined, ꝑ he may seeke the remedie of it, as some be giuen to one affection & some to another. And so when we once know our owne diseases, let vs apply the fit medicines vnto them. In Gods word we shall finde ynow of them wherewith to heale & cure vs, so we be willing to vse the good ꝑ is offered vs there. Thus ye see in effect how we ought to practise this text. It consisteth not in the doing of a sort of Ceremonies, nor in pretending faire countenāces, by wearing texts of Gods law vpon our apparell, or by writing vp of a nomber of goodly sentences without any other minding of them at al; al ꝑ (say I) is nothing. What then? We must seeke the meanes to confirme our selues in ꝑ feare of our God, and to recouer againe into the right way: & because wee bee so weake, wee must receiue such remedies as God appointeth vs.

Aboue al things we must obserue that which is said here; Lay vp these wordes and sayings which I set before thee, in thy heart and in thy soule. To the intent then ꝑ men should not stand poring vpon ꝑ outward fashion & figure; that is the chiefe poynt. The marke (say I) whereat hee shooteth, and whereunto all this doctrine is to bee referred, is that Gods lawe should be in our hearts and in our soules. For though wee haue it euer before our eyes, & at our tongues end, so as wee seeme to set neuer so great store by it, and yet in the meane while our heart is locked vp, & wee haue no courage to serue God; truely we doe but deceiue men, & procure our selues the sorer condemnation before God. Now then let vs haue Gods law written, let vs haue the sayings of it painted vpō our walles as in tables, & let vs haue thinges to put vs in minde of it early & late: but let not ꝑ serue for our discharge, as though God were to be payed in such coyne. How then? Let vs indeuer to haue it so grauen in our hearts, as it may neuer be wiped out againe, yea euen in our harte & in our soules, ꝑ is to say, in such sort as is may possesse al our affections. For that is ꝑ place where Gods word is to bee kept. But what? The thing ꝑ S. Iames speaketh of, is seene more now- Iames. 1. 23.

adayes than euer it was, namely that they which come to heare Gods word, take as much profite by it, as by looking vpon themselues in a glasse: they be no sooner gone, but all is forgotten. What fareth a man the better by his seeing of himselfe in a glasse? As soone as he turneth away his face, his shape vanisheth away. Euen so is it with vs. Whereas our comming to Gods word, should be to be transformed into ỹ lykenesse of
2. Cor. 3. 18. God, (as S. Paul teacheth vs in the second to ỹ Corinthians,) & whereas it is the power & propertie of ỹ Gospel, to transforme vs into the glory of God, by beholding him in the person of Iesus Christ: we come to it but to make a pastime of it, so as anon all slippeth away againe, & there remaineth no substance nor power of it with vs. And by that meanes the precious seede of the Gospell perisheth. For it lighteth amõg stones, so as it can take no roote. A man may loose a good deale of corne, if he cast it vppon the drye
Matt. 13. 19. ground, or in a footepath, or vpon stones: for the byrdes will picke it vp by and by. Euen so let vs not mariel though Gods word enter not into vs, for whereas our hearres ought to be tilled as when a plowgh hath eared a peece of land: they lye still vnopened & vnbroken vp at all. By reason whereof, Gods word may wel be giuen vs as a seede, but it shall doe vs no good, the diuell wil catche it away by and by, because it sinketh not into our hearres & our soules. That is the cause why I sayd ỹ al ỹ Moses hath spoken of frontlets, of bracelets, & of writings set vp in mens houses, must be referred altogether to this, ỹ wee shall fare neuerawhit ỹ better for ỹ vttering of ỹ Lawe vnto vs, nor vnderstand any thing at all by it, vntill it haue taken roote in vs, & that wee haue receiued it with hartie affection to giue our selues vnto God.

And yet is not all ỹ wee haue to doe, neither doth God thinke it enough ỹ euery man shoulde indeuer to profite himselfe by it: but he will also haue the fathers to teach their children. Wherein he sheweth ỹ (as I haue sayd afore) it is not enough for vs to serue our God during our owne liues; but we must also prouide ỹ the seede of religion may remaine after out decease. For we be transitorie, & our lyfe is but a shadow: & therefore inasmuch as Gods trueth is immortall, it is good reason ỹ it should continue for euer, & that it should be preserued frõ hand to hand, & that men should put their indeuour thereunto. And specially whẽ God hath giuẽ them childrẽ, it behoueth them to know ỹ it is a treasure, and that they must yeeld an account therof. For it is no small honor ỹ God doth to men & women, when he giueth them children. They be creatures fashioned after ỹ image of God, & we terme them ỹ seede of ỹ Church. Now then seeing that God committeth thẽ to our charge; it is good reason ỹ we should indeuour to bring thẽ vp in such wise as God may be serued by them, ỹ when religion shal haue continued her course all our lyfe long, it may also hold out and continue stil euen after our death. But here we see our owne negligence, or rather our leawdnesse. For wee bee not onely slothfull; but we see how the most part of vs doe shun & eschew (as much as we can) to be trained in Gods worde. If men bee spoken to of it, it is a corse to them, & if they perceiue ỹ there shal be talke of any good doctrine, they haue no regard to come there. It is well seene ỹ a number are worse than ỹ Turkes, & are so bewitched ỹ their owne fond opinions, ỹ as soone as ỹ bell ceaseth to call & prouoke vs to come dayly to ỹ hearing of Gods worde, they goe another way. And for proofe thereof, what a number are there which withdrawe thẽselues from it as much as they can? Yea & when they come, they stoppe their eares wilfully, because they bee occupyed about their wicked affections, and the diuel hath so bewitched them, as they finde not any sauor at all in any word that is spoken vnto thẽ, but are weary of it as soone as there is any matter spoken concerning God.

As for ỹ bringing vp of children, ỹ world seeth what it is. Fathers are loth to haue their children better than thẽselues, for feare least they should put them to shame. Forasmuch as they themselues haue despised God all ỹ time of their lyfe, they be contented ỹ their children shall do the same full as much or dubble: & if they happen to haue any regard of ỹ doctrine, it is but for fashions sake, & by way of constreint. But wee haue taught these thinges in this text, ỹ it shal not be full deare to haue bin so warned by God, if we regard not the thinges ỹ he hath tolde vs. Therefore let vs bee alwayes carefull to beare Gods word in minde, assuring our selues ỹ although we haue profited neuer so wel, yet are we but in the way, & we must goe on still, so as the exercising of things is not enough for vs, but we must be faine to be put in remembrance of thẽ continually, & to be stirred vp by God; or elles we shall starte away by and by. Now then let vs think vpon it, & let euery of vs haue an eye to ỹ charge ỹ is committed vnto him. Let such as haue children bring them vp in the feare of God, & let ỹ be their chiefe care; for it is the best inheritance ỹ they can leaue them. For otherwise, although they leaue them neuer so riche, and set them in neuer so good a stay; al must needes go to ruine. For God will curse all, if it bee not grounded vppon the pure religion. For whereas our Lord speaketh of going to bed, and rising vp, of rest and labor: it is not for nought. For he thereby teacheth vs that wee haue neede of all the helpes that can bee, to put vs in minde of his loue. And therefore sith we see that by all manner of meanes we be turned away frõ the remembring of God, if the helps that are shewed vs here bee not set still before vs: these occasions ought to quicken vs and stirre vs vp thereunto.

First of al then, whereas it is saide, when ye goe to bed at night, and when ye rise a morning: it behoueth vs that wee may well take our rest, and thinke vppon all our bodily needes, so as a man may wel seeke his ease when hee is weary of his travelling & of following his busines al day long: but if we be so careful to seeke the rest of our bodies, is it not said also ỹ the rest of our souls is to heare ỹ voice of god? If a man say, I haue no leasure: hast thou no leasure to rise in the morning? Against when thou commeſt to the table to take thy reſt, haſt thou not time ynough to edifie thy ſelfe in the feare of God? Moreouer, when thou art about thy buſineſſe all the day, or when thou art going a iourney, muſt God needs be forgotten all the while? No: but yet doe men alwayes finde lettes to keepe them from comming vnto God. Indeede we may eaſily finde trifling excuſes to content men withall: but when God ſaith vnto vs, Go to, what haue you to doe all your life long? are yee ſo ſore troubled that yee cannot ſpare a little time to exerciſe your ſelues in my worde? I giue you time ynough to followe your owne buſineſſes: and yet ſo as yee may beſtowe ſome time in the ſtudie of my doctrine: but you thinke not vpon it: Nay rather you take occaſion to turne away from it at euery ſmall let that can happen. And by that meanes you bee hardened in all euill, ſo as a man cannot reclaime yee, but ye become worſe than wilde beaſts. Thus ye ſee of what contempt and vngodlineſs we be conuicted, when we benefit not our ſelues by Gods doctrine, wherein we ought to keepe our ſelues occupied at all times.

Furthermore whereas he ſpeaketh of talking of it; it is a rebuking of the wicked corruption y is among men, who neuer make an ende of their fooliſh talkes but when they ſhould ſpeake of god, the matter muſt be cut off by & by the waſte, and they thinke it to be but matter of griefe. Yea and they be not contented to vſe fond and fooliſh talke; but they do alſo vſe ribaldrie & leawd talke, ſuch as tendeth to the poyſoning one of another. And therefore it is good reaſon, that God ſhould tel vs that the thinges which wee haue heard to day, had neede to bee brought ofentimes to our remembrance: and that God had neede to quicken vs vp, ſo as wee may bee made to bethink our ſelues: And that foraſmuch as we be pulled backe with ſuch ſloth, and we ſee our ſelues are caried away with ſo great and vrgent neceſſitie, that our mindes are giuen altogether to euill; inſomuch that whenſoeuer God allureth them to good, by and by they ſtrike away vnto euill: we perceiuing this ſame, ſhould take the helpes y God ſetteth downe for vs in telling vs that we muſt think vpon his lawe both at our vpriſing a mornings, and at our going to bed a nights, & that we muſt talke of them all the day long. Let vs aſſure our ſelues it is not without cauſe that God ſpake ſo to his owne people: but that it is a generall leſſon for all men in all ages, and he ſpeaketh not onely to the rude and vnskilfull, that they ſhoulde take theſe helpes to refreſh their remembrance: but he ſaith, all of you, doe it euerie one of you. He ſpeaketh to thoſe that weene themſelues wiſeſt. And therefore let no man thinke himſelfe excepted here. Let ſuch as haue the charge of teaching others, vnderſtande that this is not ſpoken onely to the rude and ignorant; but alſo to the intent that euen they themſelues ſhoulde learne to rouſe vp themſelues, and y all of vs togeather ſhould ſhew our ſelues ſo deſirous to profite in Gods word, as we may ſeeke to be put continually in mind of it. And let vs aſſure our ſelues, that it is the chiefe thing wherein we ought to occupie our ſelues, ſo long as we be in this world.

And nowe let vs caſt our ſelues downe before the maieſtie of our good God with acknowledgment of our faultes, praying him to bring vs to ſuch repentance, y being aſhamed of our ſelues, our only ſeeking may be to win his fauor by fleeing to his mercy, and that we may attaine thereunto by meanes of our lord Ieſus Chriſt, praying him not only to forgiue our offences paſt, but alſo to correct them after ſuch ſort in vs, as our whole ſeeking may be to obey him. And that in y meante while it may pleaſe him to guide vs by his holy ſpirite, vntill hee haue brought vs to the full fruition of the glorie whereunto we be nowe going. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo to all people and Nations of the earth &c.

On Thurſday the xxvj. of September. 1555.

The Lxxviij. Sermon which is the fifth vpon the eleuenth Chapter.

22 For if ye do earneſtly keepe all the commandements which I command you to doe, and that you loue the Lord your God and walke in all his wayes and ſticke vnto him:

23 Then the Lorde will driue out all theſe Nations before you, and yee ſhall poſſeſſe Nations that are greater and ſtronger than your ſelues.

24 Whatſoeuer place the ſole of your foote treadeth on, it ſhalbe yours. Your bounds ſhalbe from the wildernes and from Libanus, and from the Riuer, euen the riuer of Euphrates, vnto the vttermoſt ſea.

25 No man ſhall be able to ſtand againſt you. The Lorde your God will caſt the feare and dread of you vpon the face of all the Land whereunto you go, as hee hath ſaid vnto you.

WE haue seene what promisse Moses made to the Israelites: namely, that they should possesse the land which was giuen them to inherite. Howbeit forasmuch as their enemies might bee a stop in their way, and it might well seeme that God was not yet fully minded to performe that which he had saide: he addeth further, that that let also should be taken away. As howe? Euen by this, that God would cast a terrour vpon all the nations whom he had ordained, so as none of them should bee able to withstande the people that was so guided by his owne hande. That is the effect of Moses meaning in this place. And it is as much as if he had said vnto vs, Whē God hath once warranted vs a thing, although all the lets in the world shoulde incounter vs, yet ought we not to doubt of his promise. For why? The things that may seeme vnpossible to men, are altogether in his power, because no creature is able to resist him. And therefore when we be abashed at the sighte of the impediments that come before our eyes: wee must fall to the considering of the mightinesse of our God, which is able to ouercome all things. So then let vs marke well, that wee must fully conclude with our selues, that God is able to performe whatsoeuer hee hath vttered with his mouth: insomuch that although all accesses bee (in our iudgement) foreclosed vnto him, yet will hee wade through them all by his power. And therefore lee vs not measure the effect of Gods promises by our owne eyesight, nor by the coniecture of our owne naturall vnderstanding: but let vs assure our selues that hee hath victorie alwayes in his hande, howe much so euer the worlde set it selfe against him, and striue to stop the performance of that which hee hath spoken.

Herewithall, it standeth vs in hand to applie this thing chiefly to our owne strengthening: and forasmuch as we see the diuel euer ready to hinder our welfare, yea and to disappoint it vtterly: let vs haue this saying continually printed in our remembrance, that God which hath receiued vs into his fauour, and promised to leade vs into the heritage of the kingdome of heauen, is the God of hosts and of victorie, and that although all the furniture of hel do set it selfe against him, it is all noughtwoorth, but shalbe turned into smoke: insomuch that although wee bee driuen to abide neuer so many assaultes in this worlde, and that the diuell neuer cease to practise one thing or other against vs: yet are we sure that god will wel inough worke such deuises, as wee shall neuer be ouercome, so hee be on our side, as hee hath assured vs, so that wee keepe our selues vnder his protection. And this is to be vnderstood, not onely of Satan himselfe, but also of al his vpholders. For the diuell vseth all the meanes that can be: he hath all the wicked of his beelie: hee ruleth them and driueth them to all euill. Forasmuch therefore as they be led by the wicked spirite, they vex and trouble vs as much as they can. But we haue God on our side to fight for vs, and we shalbe defended by his power. Wherefore let vs not feare but that hee will alwayes giue vs the victory: though wee bee faine to indure much paine and trouble: for it cannot bee but that in such incounters, there must euer needs be some terrour, because wee see that the wicked are alwayes as whot as fire to annoy the children of God, and that as soone as they bee able to stirre but one finger, by and by they begin a new skirmish. Therfore must we beare it patiently, whensoeuer it pleaseth God to exercise vs after his fashion. And we must waite for the end which Moses promiseth here to the faithful, which is, that they shal alwayes haue victory of their enemies. And so we see to what end this doctrine is to be applied.

Now remaineth to be noted also, that whereas God promiseth such thinges, hee hath meanes in his hand: for he addeth the meane, which is, that hee will cast our feare and our terrour vpon all our enemies. As if hee should say, hee will print his mark vpon vs, so as the wicked (be they neuer so full of rancor, and bee they caried with neuer so great fury and rage) shalbe abashed, dismayed, & vtterly at their wits end. As to the worldward, they may well seeme to haue the hearts of lyons: but God will make them to melt away like water, so as men shall see with their eyes, that there is not so much as one drop of courage in any man, but so farre forth as God giueth it them. And as for vs, although we bee afraide, and haue not so stoute a courage by nature: yet wil God change vs, & giue vs inuincible constancy, so that although we had but imen of warre, and were the least, yet should our manlinesse bee nothing like to that which he will make vs to feele in our selues, so we goe not presumptiously to worke, but rest vpon him, seeking to be vpholde by his hand and power. The matter therefore which wee haue to marke vpon that place, is, first that whereas our life is as a warfare, yet must wee not bee afraid, because god hath promised to fight for vs. Yea, but we haue to do with an ouermightie enemie: and it is not one diuell alone that wee haue to withstand, but infinite legions of diuels. What shall we do then, seeing wee be so fraile, and are tempted on all sides, & (to be short) our safetie is set as it were to the spoile? For what haue we to defende our selues withall? But wee must haue an eye to our god. I haue told you heretofore, that it is not without cause that he intideth himselfe to be the Gods of Hosts. It serueth to shew that he will defende vs in such sort, as our enemies shalbe disappointed. Although they aduance themselues with neuer so raging violence, & that we be terred at their first alarmes, yet shal we alwayes get the vpper hand, by the helpe of him which hath all power in his hand. And indeede wee know that God hath his Angels, whom he hath ordained for our safegard. He thinks it not ynough to reach out his arme to helpe vs, but he hath also vttered foorth all his blessings, to fence vs with them on all sides. Therfore let vs trust to it, and let vs walke on boldly through all the troubles that are prepared for vs, not doubting but that we shall ouercome them, hauing such a guide as is spoken of in this text.

Again,

Againe, let vs also apply these things euen to the necessities of this present life. Indeede the chiefe point is, that god should succour vs to the intent wee may finish the course of this present life. But yet must we be faine to be aided by him euerie minute of an houre; so as hee leade vs through the great number of euill wayes which we haue to passe, and preserue vs from all daungers. So then we must be fully resolued of this, ỹ God will not onely giue vs victorie in the ende, thereby to bring vs to the kingdome of heauen; but also will helpe vs continually in this worlde; so as we shal wade out of al the troubles and perplexities wherin we be; insomuch that euē when we seeme to bee vtterly ouerwhelmed, he needeth no more but to reach vs his hand, and by & by wee shalbe aflote againe. Moreouer let vs assure our selues, that seeing God hath promised vs such victory against Satan and our Ghostly enemies: men also shall not bee able to preuaile, when they set themselues against vs: but although the whole world be bent against vs and at deadly foode with vs; yet ought it to suffice vs, that God is fauorable to vs. For inasmuch as he hath promised that al their practises which they attempt shalbe to no purpose, and that he wil turne them vpsidedowne: we may wel be quiet, and tary his leasure still with patience; and although we be abashed for a time; and perceiue not that God intendeth to worke according to his sayings: yet let vs stand stedfast in his doctrine, vntil he haue shewed vs the effect of his truth. That is the way for vs to despise and defie all the wicked ỹ seeke nothing else but to destroy vs. They be like a sort of madde dogges, and when they cannot bite they wil barke. They haue their throtes alwayes open, and their teeth alwayes sharpened, & their pawes are alwayes in a readines, so as whensoeuer God leueth them loose, they be crueller thā Lyons or any other beasts. Let vs sticke alwayes to this that our Lord hath taken vs into his protection, and that when the wicked haue done what they can, in ỹ end they shalbe ouerthrowen and all their attempts shall come to no purpose or effect: That is the thing which wee haue to remember here. Notwithstanding, forasmuch as it cannot but bee a trouble and vexation of minde vnto vs at al times, to see what power our enemies are of; and to see howe spitefull they shew themselues against vs; let vs haue recourse to that which is said here, namely that God hath mens hearts in his hande. And therefore be the pride of men neuer so great, and their stoutnesse such as were able to make the aire and the world to tremble: yet let vs assure our selues that our Lord will turne it into feare and cowardlynes, so as the parties that would needes be so feared of others, shall in the ende haue lesse courage than women and children. For why? it is God that giueth men corage and constancie: and it is he that bereaueth them of it again whē he listeth. Now then if we be fully perswaded and resolued ỹ our Lord bridleth mens hearts: we wil not doubt but that he will alwayes giue vs victorie against our enemies; and it is the point which the scripture standeth expresly vppon. And to the intent wee may know that men haue not one spark of prowesse or manhood in them, furtherfoorth than god giueth it them, Salomon saith expresly, that the hearts of kings are in the hand of God. Prou. 21. 1

It shoulde seeme that though all the rest of mankind be in subiection and bridled; yet kinges bee exempted from the common aray: for no man dares once open his lippes against them: & when they haue once spoken ỹ word, by and by it must be put in execution. It shold seeme therfore that they haue a prerogatiue aboue al ỹ world beside. Yea, but like as God maketh ỹ riuers to run here and there, and turneth their streams which way he listeth: so also doth he hold ỹ hearts of kinges in his hand saith Salomon. And what shall then become of ỹ little Gōslings when they perke vp, & haue no power nor strength at al? Shall we be dismayed at their threatnings? The thing then wherin we must trust, is our yeelding of ỹ honor to God which he requireth at our hands, to wit, ỹ it belongeth to him to giue men corage when they be fearefull, & to daunt the corages of such as are as lustie as if they had the thunder & lightening at their commandement: for God will so cut their combes, as they shal not know where to become, but be vtterly dismayed, so that in steed of ỹ stoutnesse which they had shewed before, there shalbe nothing in them but weaknesse and fearefulnes. After that manner must ỹ faithfull assure themselues. For otherwise what will become of vs? In what taking are we? As I said afore, we be hemmed in on al sides by Satan & his vnderlings. There is not ỹ minute of an houre, wherin we haue not somewhat to be afraid of: a thousand dangers beset vs round about: & therefore what will become of vs, if wee be not so fully perswaded of this doctrine, as to make it to serue vs for dyches & rampyres, to hold out al ỹ assaults that our enemies make vppon vs? And so, forasmuch as our life is full of vnquietnesse, & we bee threatened with many sortes of death, so as wee cannot stepfoorth one foote but wee shall meete with some mischance or other, specially considering the meanes which the diuell hath to annoy vs withal, & the indeuer which he putteth therunto; & also considering ỹ multitude of ỹ wicked, whom hee driueth forward & carieth headlong; let vs put this lesso in vre, ỹ the god of hosts who hath ỹ victorie in his own hand, is on our side & wil defēd vs, so as we shal not be ouercome, but be preserued & defended by his power. Haue we this once well printed in our hearts, we may go on boldly: and though we see men neuer so full of pride that they spew it out again, and so spitefull that they coulde finde in their hearts to eate vs vp at one bit: let vs not passe for that, for God will strike them in such a feare, that they shalbe daunted and discouraged; and although wee haue neither sworde nor staffe, yet shall they be vanquished by themselues, & not perceiue why nor how, but only by Gods secret working. Let vs looke vpon it, & experience will shew vs that God ment not to beguile vs when he behighted it vs with his own mouth. But our own vnbeliefe & leawdnesse, suffer vs not to perceiue the thing by experience which is spokē here. We cā wel y-

nough make our complaints and say, howe happeneth it that God giueth such proweſſe to our enemies? how happeneth it ỹ we be so cowardly and forlorne? We can aske such queſtions wel ynough. But we conſider not the cauſe of them: & yet it is in our ſelues: & our enemies haue none other power, than we our ſelues giue them: and I say the ſame of Satan, as well as of all his vnderlings. For whē we forſake our god it is good reaſon ỹ we ſhould be diſfurniſhed of his help, and ỹ he ſhould let vs alone like poore forlorne caitifs looking on either ſide of vs, & not eſpying any remedy to reſiſt our enemies withal, becauſe we be bereft of ỹ garde and inuincible fortreſſe ỹ God promiſed vs, according as it is ſpoken of, both in Exodus and in the Pſalme, where it is ſaid that ỹ people were diſappointed of their ſtrong holde, when they had once forſaken God. I pray you if we ſtand not in awe of God, is it not reaſon that he ſhould make vs afraide, both of men & beaſts, yea and euen of a flie when it doth but flie by vs, as the ſcripture telleth vs? Beholde, our God offereth himſelfe in his maieſty, requiring that we ſhould do him homage, by humbling our ſelues vnto him, and by offering our ſelues both bodie & ſoule in ſacrifice to him, ỹ he may poſſeſſe vs: & we deſpiſe him, making but a mocke at his holie word, ſo as he cānot get any ſeruice at our hāds, for we ſtriue againſt him like wild beaſts. Seeing ỹ this is apparant, is it not reaſon that he ſhould chaſtiſe vs, by making vs to ſtand in feare of mē? Yes: for what are we? Behold I am ſcared & made afraide, at the peering of a worme that doth but put vp his head at me. I neede not to ſeeke farre to knowe the cauſe thereof. Let me but conſider whether I haue behaued my ſelfe well towardes my God, in yeelding him obedience in al things. Nay contrariwiſe, I haue turned away frō him, and moreouer I haue played the rebell, I haue leaped beyonde my bounds, and to bee ſhort, I haue fought againſt him: and therefore I muſt not thinke it ſtraunge, if I bee afraide of men, which are nothing. Verily God will yet more laugh our pride and ouerweening to ſcorne. For he will make vs to quake at the falling of a leafe from a tree. To be ſhort, as Salomon ſayes, wee ſhall flee when noman followeth vs: euerie little noyſe ſhall make vs to thinke that we be purſued with maine ſtrokes. Verily it is a ſingular giſte of God to haue quietneſſe of conſcience, ſo as wee may bee aſſured of his defence. And on the contrarie part, if we be not vnder his protection, wee ſhalbe diſmayed without any cauſe or mans behalfe, onely becauſe we haue God againſt vs. And ſo the cauſe why our enemies doe ſo trouble vs as wee wote not where to become, is that we regard not our god. For is it reaſon that hee ſhoulde bee our friende when we be not on his ſide? No: but he muſt rather ſet himſelfe againſt vs. And that is ỹ cauſe why Moſes both in other places, and ſpecially in his ſong that is in the 32. Chapter, ſaith, How coulde it bee that a hundred of you ſhoulde flee before one man, and that a thouſande of you ſhould be chaſed by a hundred of your enemies, if it were not for that the Lorde hath forſaken you, and deliuered you as priſoners into your enemies handes? Conſider then (ſaith hee) that when yee be afflicted by your enemies, it is for that your God hath appalled you. For you be not worthy that he ſhoulde put his power into you, or vtter it in your behalf. And therfore whenſoeuer we ſtand too much in feare of our enemies, & are ſo diſmayed that we can hardly call vpon God, but are ouerwhelmed with diſtruſt and vexation of minde: let vs vnderſtande that God hath withdrawen himſelfe from vs, and hath left vs deſtitute after ỹ faſhion, becauſe we be turned away from him, and haue ſhaken off his feare, and not ſtoode in awe of him as wee ought to haue done, in reſpect whereof hee threateneth vs by men, & maketh vs to feele our owne wretchedneſſe, to the intent we ſhould returne vnto him. Furthermore hee ſheweth well by the ſequele, that his promiſe was not in vaine. What a proofe was there thereof, at the entring of the people into the land of Chanaan? For they had ſuch a multitude of enemies, as might haue made them al diſmayed. But what for that God himſelfe fought for his people. And that did the poore harlot well perceiue, when ſhee ſaid to the men that were come to ſpie out the land, I know that your God is the God of heauen and earth, which reigneth ouer all. And for proofe thereof I ſee ỹ al the inhabiters of theſe countries, are aſtoniſhed at the only fame and report of you, wherwith they be diſcoraged, that they be as good as vanquiſhed already. She attributeth this miracle to ỹ wonderful working of God. Now ſeeing that this ſilly woman, hauing but a little taſt of faith, did lay ſo ſure hold vpon it: I pray you ought not we to behold ỹ ſtrēgth much more openly, which our Lord promiſeth vs here, which is, that he will caſt a terrour and fearefulnes vpon all thoſe that are much ſtronger & mightier than we? It is ſaid ỹ euen when God ſetteth his mark vpon kings & princes, ỹ brute beaſts which haue no reaſon do ſtande in awe of them. And why is that? Becauſe God worketh by a ſecrete meanes vnknown to vs. If our lord had not ſuch power to inſpyre men withal, ſurely principalities & ſeniories could not continue one minute of an houre. Nowthen ſeing that God imprinteth ſuch a marke, ỹ he maketh not only mē but alſo beaſts to ſtand in awe, & to be ſubiect to thoſe to whom hee hath committed the ſword of iuſtice: let vs note ỹ if we be his children, wee ſhall alſo beare his image: inſomuch ỹ if we be vnder his tuition, wee ſhalbe defēded in deſpite of our enemies: yea & we ſhall be feared, ſo as wee ſhall perceiue by the effect, that it is long of none but our ſelues that we be not ſuccored by him, and ỹ although our vnfulnes do beat backe his hand, yet doth he ouercome vs w̄ his infinite goodnes. For we ſee ỹ although the wicked haue the Law in their owne hand, yet notwithſtanding they be ſo abaſhed & diſmaied, ỹ they be quite and cleane out of heart. We muſt needes ſee it, or elſe we be duller than blockes. For our Lorde hath wrought with ſuch power, that though wee were blinde, yet we might grope it with our hands, namely that God hath daunted thoſe that thought to haue ouerthrotes of his children, euen when no man durst lift vp his little finger against them, insomuch ỹ when they thought themselues to haue wonne ỹ gole, then were they seen to be so striken down & discoraged, & cast into such feare & perplexitie, and so at their wits end, as they wist not what to do nor where to become. Indeede they had ỹ Law in their own hand (as I said), they had practises and deuices ynow, and ỹ world sees ỹ they had neither vprightnes nor faithfulnes in them. But yet howsoeuer they fared, they were discoraged, & were made to stand gaping & gasing one vpō another, & could not tel what to do for feare. Hereby we see that our Lord not only held their hands tyed, but also bereft them of heart; so as he disappointed them of wit & reason, by reason whereof they were so dulled, that there was lesse skill in them than in little babes, yea or euen in beasts. Ye see then how it is a goodly proofe of ỹ which is promised here: so as if we yeeld god his due honor, we should bee the more stayed vnder his protection, to walke on continually, yea & to keepe our selues from stepping out of the way.

Now let vs take good heed to ỹ which I haue said, namely ỹ such as do so go astray & giue thēselues to naughtines, haue not ỹ protectiō which our Lord hath promised: for they goe wilfully to cast themselues vp as it were to ỹ spoile. Therefore it is good reasō ỹ God should forsake them, & that they should find themselues to be taken vnprouided. But if we walk in humility, & seeke to be always guided by ỹ hand of our God: then let vs hardily put our trust in him, and we shal euer be maintained. Although men gape vppon vs like Lyons with opē mouth; & although we haue not wherewith to resist them: yet will God be able ynough to beate them backe. Wee may be driuen to fight, but in ỹ mids of the incounter we shalbe sustained as God hath promised vs, and ỹ will be an inuincible fortres vnto vs. That is the thing which we haue to remember vpon this place.

Yea and Moses saith expressly, People or Nations are mightier and stronger than you; to the intent wee shoulde not make comparison with the things that are seene, to thinke that God wil not helpe vs except there be some naturall meanes, or some worldly enterance. No no, wee must not bee at that point: but wee must consider that his power is infinite. Therefore wee doe him great wrong, when we restraine his power to ỹ which our senses can attaine vnto. Nay, when our enemies are too strong and too mighty for vs, and when it seemeth that they be ready to treade vs vnder foote: euen then must wee perswade our selues that God wil vtter his power to succor vs. And therefore let vs go on boldly, at leastwise so there bee no presumption in vs, and that we bee not stubborn against our God. For there are two things which are very requisite for vs. The first is that we giue ouer our selues wholly to the seruing and honoring of our God: & secondly that we put our trust in him, and sticke vnto his promises, not doubting but that he will giue things a good ende, though they seeme vtterly past all hope. Thus you see in effect what we haue to remember vpon this lesson.

Now immediatly Moses addeth, That whersoeuer the people set their feete, they shall possesse the whole land from the wildernes vnto Libanus, and from ỹ great River Euphrates vnto the Sea. For those were the bounds & borders which God had promised to his people, as appeareth in the person of Abraham. For the promise that is made here is no newe thing, but a ratifying or confirming of the same thing that God had spoken long afore. As if he should say, nothing shal bar you from inioying ỹ heritage ỹ I haue assigned you: stick you to me, & I wil performe whatsoeuer I haue said vnto you. True it is that if ye haue an eye to ỹ great nūber of Nations which you haue to ouercome, ye may be so scared as to say, How shall we nowe do? Indeede wee be a great multitude of vs; but what are we in comparisō of our enemies, which are men exercised in feats of armes, & bouge mē like gyārs? as we haue seene already heretofore. Againe they be nestled alreadie, they haue their townes well fortified, and when we shal haue taken a two or three hundred of their townes, yet is it nothing in respect of ỹ rest, but our enemies will be continually both before vs & behinde vs. Ye see then ỹ these were thinges that might well haue made ỹ people afraid. But it is said vnto thē: Although ỹ land be neuer so large, although yee haue neuer so many cities to take, and although there be neuer so great a number of battels prepared for you: yet settle you your selues vpon the promise of your God, for he can skil welynough how to performe the thing that he hath spoken. Shut you your eyes against all likelyhoodes of thinges that may daunt your corages, and open your eyes to behold ỹ inestimable power of your God, & doubt not but he will shew himself faithful. Now we see wherat Moses amed. But yet was not this thing accomplished to the ful, vntill the reigne of Dauid & Salomon. For although Iosua made partition of their portions, & god appointed him to ỹ office: yet were ỹ vnbeleeuing people mixed stil with ỹ Iewes, and (which worse is) wheras they should haue rooted them out quite & cleane, & haue had peasable possession of the land: they payed tribute to their enemies, which held thē in bondage like slaues & fleeced ỹ wool from their backs. They were vexed in such sort, ỹ they were as good as slaine quick, & they indured such cruelty as was pity to see. It shold seeme therfore ỹ God kept not touch w̄ them. But here is an excellent goodly text, to open vnto vs the thing which I haue expounded afore, and which wil come to be spoken of again. It is said that God will giue his people the victory, conditionally that they keepe all the commandements which are inioyned them. God tieth it w̄ a conditiō. Do whatsoeuer I commaund you (saith he,) & then shall you finde my power to be such, as your enemies (do what they can) shal not be able to preuaile any whit against you. Nowe let vs see if ỹ Iewes were able to performe all Gods cōmandements. Nay, they were vtterly disobedient vnto thē. And we also cease not to take ỹ clean contrary way to ỹ which god teacheth vs & commandeth vs vntil he haue reformed vs by his holy spirit. Ye see then that the Iewes were disobedient vnto god, & therfore were disappointed of his promise. Yea, but yet for al ỹ he ceased not to make place for his owne mercy still ſtill by meanes of their leawdneſſe. For although their enemies pricked them like thornes; yet they held ſtil the poſſeſſion of the dwelling place that God had appointed them. Trueth it is that it is ſaid expreſly, forasmuch as ye haue behaued

Iosua. 23.13 your ſelues leawdly, and prouoked your God, by refuſing to goe forwarde when he was readie to guide you: therfore ſhall you not ouercome your enemies, but they ſhall remaine ſtill, and bee as thornes in your ſides, & as waſpes to ſting you, yea and they ſhal euen picke out your eyes, becauſe yee haue not taken courage as ye ought to haue done, nor ſubmitted your ſelues to God, to go forwarde at his commaundement. Lo what threatnings are made vnto thē: & they perceiue them wellynough: and afterward they become ſubiect vnto them, inſomuch ỹ they were fain to beare charges & tributes euen til they groned again. But our Lord hauing chaſtiſed them ſo many waies, did afterward ſhew vnto them, that he failed not to pity them ſtil; for he raiſed them vp ſuch men from time to time, as ſaued them frō their enemies. And ſo howſoeuer ỹ world went with thē, they ſtill inioyed Gods gracious gifts, at leaſtwiſe in part: not that they were worthie
2. Sam. 7. 10. & 11. 13. of them, but becauſe Gods wil was to be as good as his promiſe, ſo as mē might not be diſappointed of it through their own leaudnes & vnthankfulnes. In the end, Dauid and Salomon obtained the promiſe, ſo as God by their hand did ſet the people in ful & perfect liberty, & their kingdome was perfectly ſtabliſhed, becauſe god had ſo promiſed. But wee muſt note, ỹ Dauid and Salomon were a figure of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt: and we be ſure ỹ it is long of none but our ſelues, that God ſheweth not himſelfe bountifull & liberall to the vttermoſt. For if we obeyed him according to his commaundement; wee ſhould want nothing, but we ſhould euen in this earthly life feele his drawing of vs vnto euerlaſting ſaluation. And forasmuch as he is ỹ fountain of al goodnes, he would giue vs ſuch abundance of all thinges, that wee ſhould haue al things at wil; and we ſhould paſſe through this world as through an earthly paradiſe, and afterward attaine to ỹ kingdom of heauen ỹ is prepared for vs. Lo howe God offereth himſelf vnto vs in his law: but yet with condition ỹ we do whatſoeuer he commaundeth vs. But we be ſo far off from doing it, ỹ we drag back from it, and there is not that thought nor that affection
Rom. 8. 7. in vs, which is not enemie to God & his righteouſnes. By reaſon wherof, in ſteede of the inioying of his benefites which hee hath promiſed in his Lawe, he is faine to become our enemy, & to arme himſelfe againſt vs, and to conſume vs till we be vtterly come to nothing. Sometimes hee thundreth in ſuch ſort, ỹ wee be ouerthrowen in ỹ turning of a hand. And wherof commeth that? Euen ſo it muſt needs be: for (as I ſaid afore) god ſheweth himſelf liberal towards vs & vttereth his great treaſures towards vs. But what? Our hearts are ſhut & locked vp. And therfore muſt we needs be bereft of them, and feele the paine therof; we muſt be ſo vexed as we may grone again, & be in ſuch anguiſh of mind, as we may not wote where to become. Yet notwithſtanding, if we be his, he neuer faileth to mingle ſome ſweetnes continually with the corrections ỹ hee ſendeth vs. Trueth it is that hee beareth with the wicked, and with ſuch as are vtter caſtaways: but yet in the end he is terrible to them, and dealeth not in ſuch wiſe with them, as he doth with thoſe whom he inſtructeth to reſerue to himſelfe. Although that generally all of vs be diſobedient vnto him, yet ceaſeth hee not to haue pitie vpon vs: and although wee feele ſore blowes at his hande; yet doth he ſhew vs therewithall ỹ he is not minded to caſt vs out vtterly. But ſurely we ſhould continue ſtil in our ſins to the end, yea and rot away in them, were it not for his raiſing vp of the promiſed Dauid, that is to ſay, of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. For by his meanes wee recouer ỹ which we had loſt by our owne ſinnes, and ſo yee ſee how Ieſus Chriſt ſetteth vs in poſſeſſion of the heritage that was promiſed vs by the Lawe. Yet notwithſtanding we ſhoulde be diſappointed of it, and it coulde not belong vnto vs, vnleſſe ỹ Ieſus Chriſt had as wel made vs partakers of the benefites of God his father in his own perſon, as redeemed vs in our owne perſons. Nowe then, wee recouer al this in him, whereas erſt we were quite & cleane bereft and cut off from the inioying therof. Therefore let vs marke well, that whereas God made ſo many & ſo large promiſes to the Iewes in his law, vpon condition that they ſhould keepe his commaundements: he meant to ſhew thereby that ſame tooke no place, vntill the kingdome was ſtabliſhed in the perſon of Dauid. And therefore wee muſt not alledge as the beaſtly Papiſts doe, who ſay: Tuſh, God promiſeth vs this and that, if we keepe his commaundements; therefore it followeth that wee winne Gods fauour by our owne deſertes, and that wee purchaſe the kingdome of heauen, and are able to attaine ſaluation by our owne obedience, for God hath no cauſe to yeeld vnto euery mā according to his deſerts. They ſhew fulwell, that they neuer vnderſtoode one ſillable of the holy ſcripture. And euen this text without going any further, is ynough to bewray their beaſtlines & ignorance. True it is that God promiſed his people that they ſhould inioy ỹ land which he had appointed vnto them: but ỹ performance thereof was to bee deferred to the reigne of Dauid. Wherupon let vs marke how it is our Lord Ieſus Chriſt which maketh ỹ promiſes of ỹ Law auailable towards vs, ſo as wee ſhal not be diſappointed of ỹ thinges ỹ are conteined therin. And indeed, ỹ is the very cauſe why ỹ promiſe is made expreſly to Dauid & Salomon, as it had bin made before to al ỹ people. And this ſerueth well to make ỹ doctrine yet plainer which I com to treat of. For there are two ſorts of promiſes in ỹ holy ſcripture. The one is, He ỹ doth theſe things, ſhal liue in thē. The other is, He ỹ beleeueth in ỹ ſon whom ỹ father hath ſent, ſhall be ſaued. Loe here two promiſes, betweene ỹ which it behoueth vs well to put a difference: for they be farre vnlike. When God ſaith, He ỹ doth theſe things, he bindeth not himſelf to vs but with an if, namely that wee diſchardge our ſelues by performing his Law; and that, not only in part, but throughout and perfectly. But no man is able to do that, and therefore yee see wee be shut out from all hope, and we cannot looke ỳ the promise should bee of force any more towardes vs, because of our default. For God continueth alwayes faithful, but wee suffer not his goodnes to come vnto vs. Now when he seeth vs so bereft of all his benefits, he findeth another newe remedie for vs, which is this: Lo here my sonne who is vniuersal heire both of heauen and earth; hee holdeth all the worlde in subiection, hee hath the whole fulnesse of the Godhead inclosed in him, my image shyneth most perfectly in him: which is shewed foorth in his Gospell: and therfore they that are members of his bodie, are made partakers of all the benefites which hee hath in him. That is the way for the promises to haue their effect and force in vs, and not to looke simply to the doctrine of the lawe. For when God sayd, I will giue you the lande: to whome spake he? To all the people. But yet with condition, if yee keepe my commandements. And that was made voide. As howe? Because the people were disobedient, and kept not couenant with God. And so ye see that the whole couenant was broken, so as God was set free againe, and no longer bounde vnto them, because it was tyed to a condition. What doeth he then? He sends vs a king to whome he sayeth, I will giue thee the lande for thine inheritance. Hee vseth the selfe same wordes that are set downe here by Moses. I will giue thee the lande (saith hee) for thine inheritance, from the wildernesse vnto mount Libanus, & from the riuer Euphrates to ỳ great sea. And to whome doth God giue it? To Dauid & Salomon. True it is that he had giuen the same land afore to all the people, but the people were banished from it through their own fault. And was it then but for one onely person? was it the worthines of Dauid or Salomon that made God willing to giue them the thing which hee had promised to al the ofspring of Abraham? No: but it was because they were a figure of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And in verie deede when the Prophets intended to assure the people of the quiet that was promised to thẽ, and of the inioying of the land: they saide, I will raise you vp a Dauid. Now then, Gods offering to lay foorth his riches to al men without exceptiõ in his law, to maintaine them withall in this present life, is as if he should say, whatsoeuer I haue promised to giue to the fathers of olde time, belongeth to you also, at leastwise if ye obey my law throughly in all points, & not by pieces & starts. But wee be so farre vnable to discharge our selues of that duetie, that we fall to despising of God, so as hee is faine to shewe himselfe an enemie vnto vs. That is al that we be able to win by our keeping of the lawe, if we wil needes stick simply to it as I sayd afore. Neuertheless there is this other remedie for it. Whẽ our Lord Iesus Christ cõmeth forth & reacheth vs his hande to pull vs to him; then we find that he is not without cause termed the vniuersal heire of all the goods which God his father hath. And his possessing of them is not for himselfe: for he is one selfesame essence w God the father, he hath bin the God of glory at all times. But in this flesh of ours & in our humaine nature wherewith he was clothed, he was ordeyned chiefe king, and the dominion of the worlde was giuen vnto him, euen as wel in heauen as in earth. Now then if we be once grafted into his bodie, and perfectly made one with him; then shall wee recouer that thing in him, which we cannot obteine by our deedes & deserts. And then shal we see that Iesus Christ beeing raised againe vnto glorie, wil of his goodnes drawe vs after him, to make vs partakers of all things that he hath.

1. Cor. 2. 8. Matt. 28. 18. Phil. 2. 7. 9.

Furthermore, the telling of this thing vnto vs is not to giue men scope to do euil; but wee must marke that when God receiueth vs to himselfe to put vs in possession of his goods, he doth also reforme vs by his holy spirite. Yet notwithstanding, all that euer we can do, albeit that wee bee gouerned by God & haue a good will to serue him, is of no value at all if it bee esteemed of it selfe: but yet for Iesus Christes sake God will accept vs and our workes, and the inheritance shal abyde sure & stedfast vnto vs: for wee must not be afraide but that we shal attaine vnto it. It is not giuen vs for our own sakes, but because wee be partakers of our Lord Iesus Christ, & receiue the grace that he hath purchased vs, so as we bee reconciled to God by his death & passion, in respect whereof he is mercifull to vs, & we be sure of the forgiuenesse of our sinnes, because all our spots are washed & scoured cleane away. Although there bee sinnes & imperfections in vs, which might make vs blamable before God, yet are we iustified and brought into his fauour againe, when hee hath once renewed vs by his holy spirite. Therfore if we go that way to work, let vs not dout but the promise shal stand fast, so as we shal feele the effect & force of it to our saluation. But in the meane while let vs not glorie in our selues, for there is no matter nor cause why we should do so.

Now let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them better, yea and so to feele them as that misliking and condemning our selues for them, we may submit our selues to our Lord Iesus Christ, beseeching him so to reform vs by his holy spirit, as Gods image may shine forth in vs, and wee not faile to continue in the possession of the heritage which hee hath promised vs, because it is not grounded vpon our owne workes & deedes, but vppon his freebestowed goodnes. And moreouer let vs pray our Lord to be so gracious to vs, as to giue vs such strength while wee passe through this world, wherin wee haue a great sort of enemies to fight against, that we may get the vpper hand of them, & be alwayes certified more and more, ỳ he is neere at hand to such as call vpon him & submit themselues vnto him, that by ỳ meanes he may continually be glorified at our hands, & that it may appeare howe hee will alwayes vphold vs, if wee fight vnder his standarde. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Fryday the xxvij. of September. 1555.

The Lxxix. Sermon which is the sixth vpon the eleuenth Chapter.

26 Behold, I set before you this day a blessing & a curse.

27 A blessing if ye obey the commandements of the Lord your God which I commaund you this day.

28 And likewise a curse if ye obey not the commandements of the Lorde your God, but turne out of the way which I cõmaunde you this day, to go after straunge gods which ye know not.

29 And when the Lord your God shal haue brought you into the land which thou goest vnto to possesse it: then shalt thou set the blessing vpon mount Garizim, & the curse vpon mount Eball.

30 Are they not on the other side of Iordan, on the west side in the lande of the Cananites, which dwel in ỹ plaine ouer against Gilgal, beside the groue of Moreh?

31 For ye shall passe ouer Iordan, to go & possesse the lande which the Lorde your God giueth you: and you shall possesse it & dwell therein.

32 Take heede therefore, & perfourme all the ordinances & lawes which I set before you this day.

THE protestation that Moses maketh here, serueth to shewe ỹ men themselues are the cause of all their miseries, & that it is not for them to seeke the blame therof any where else. And on ỹ other side, that when God declareth his will vnto vs, the way of welfare is shewed vs, & it is long of our selues ỹ our life is not happie in al respects throughout. So then, the meaning of Moses is, ỹ God doth men a singular good turne, when hee vouchsafeth to teach them by his word. For whē they haue the record of his wil, it is as good as a shewing of them howe to attaine to saluation, & how to prosper in this transitorie life. Contrarywise also they be warned ỹ if they fare not ỹ better by the doctrine that is deliuered vnto them, vnhappie are they, & they haue not cause to cõplaine of God afterward as though it were long of him; for they had choyce. Therefore when we haue beene instructed in Gods worde, & knowen ỹ true & pure religion: if we hold not on through out, all the blame is to be layed vpon our selues. For God had shewed vs the good way; & we held it not, ne kept our selues in it. Needes therefore must we be barred from al excuse, and God must hold vs as conuicted for that we had leuer to perish wilfully, & to go to destruction, than submit our selues to him who was willing to haue led vs to life & saluation. For this cause Moses sayeth, Behold, this day do I set before you a blessing & a curse. As if he should say; Bethinke your selues: Seeing ỹ God hath commanded me to publish his lawe, it is not for you to fall asleepe: For on the one side hee sheweth you howe you may prosper all your life long: namely by obeying him. On the contrarie part thinke not to scape scotfree when ye shall haue disobeyed your God; such vnthankfulnes shal not abide vnpunished. For God must needes be reuenged of such as haue refused his doctrine & made nō reckening of it.

So then, first we be done to vnderstand that ỹ hauing of the knowledge of Gods will is an inestimable treasure. All of vs are desirous to lead a happie life, but there is no meane for vs to attain to it, vnlesse God open vs the gate to come vnto him. If it be alleged, How then? Shal not men be blessed, if they indeuour to do wel? Wil not God accept all their seruice when he sees them plaie with a good intent? Let vs marke first of all, that men may (to their own seeming) haue as great deuotion as is possible, & yet they shall be cur... To weene that we do wel is not all that we haue to do. We must be sure ỹ the way which we take is no bypath, but the way that leadeth straight forth vnto God. Ye see then that we cannot be sure of any blessing, that is to say, that our liues please God, and that the seruice which we do him is wel liked of; vntil he haue shewed vs what he requireth & what he alloweth. For so long as we walke after our own imagination, wee go the clean contrarie way; & in stead of going forward wee go back. Marke that for one point. Again, for the second point, when we haue done all, yet is God nothing beholden to vs for it. What oweth he vnto vs? [Nothing.] Now then al that we can hope for is by reason of the promise ỹ he maketh vnto vs, & by telling vs that if wee keepe his law, we shal not lose our labour nor be disappointed, but we shall haue a good rewarde at his hand. Gods saying so, is the ground from whence the blessing springeth that Moses speaketh here. And it is the same thing that S. Paul telleth vs, where he presupposeth ỹ euen before ỹ law, men could not deserue any thing: & not without cause. For if wee had done all that which were possible for vs to do, (as I said afore) were it possible for vs to deserue aught at Gods hande? No for wee owe it him euery whit of it, & he oweth nothing vnto vs. And so yee see why Moses sayeth here, ỹ when the lawe was published, then was a blessing set before the people. As if he should say, Heretofore ye haue knowen no rule, ye haue beene as the wretched infidels which go on at all aduenture & haue no certeintie to trust vnto. But now hath your God gathered you to him, & shewed you ỹ right way. Therfore ỹ way for you to leade a happie life is to obey the wil of your God.

Also here is a promise added to it, whereby the people might bee in the better hope ỹ God would would bleſſe them. It is alone then with ỹ which I haue told you alreadie, namely ỹ God is verie gracious to vs, in ſhewing vs after what manner we ought to lead our life. For without that, wee might martyr our ſelues as much as we liſted, & yet it ſhould be to no purpoſe. Wherefore let vs beware that we receiue the word the more reuerendly which is preached vnto vs in his name, ſpecially ſeeing it bringeth vs a bleſſing, not only in ỹ we learne therby to know what Gods wil is, & how to liue in his fauour; but alſo for that hee bindeth himſelfe of his own good will inſomuch ỹ although no duetie compell him thereto; yet vouchſafeth he to couenant with vs in ſuch ſort, as we ſhal not ſerue him in vaine. But here a mā might caſt a dout, how it commeth to paſſe that Moſes ſpeaking of the law, ſayth that he ſetteth forth a bleſſing? For (as was declared yeſterday) whatſoeuer God promiſeth vs in his lawe, wee fare neuer a whit the better by it, becauſe of the conditiō that goeth with it, which is that ỹ promiſe of his bleſſing is tyed to performing of his commandemēts. But no man doth that; & therfore are we al diſappointed of the promiſe of the lawe, by reaſon of the vnpoſſibilitie of the condition. It ſhould ſeeme then ỹ Moſes ſpeakes to no purpoſe in this text, in promiſing a bleſſing to the people. And in deede wee heare how S. Paul ſpeketh of it. He ſaith ỹ the law bringeth nothing but Gods wrath & vengeance; for it rebuketh euery one of vs, ſo as there is none of vs all that is righteous, neither hath euer any man bin. All of vs then are conuicted by the lawe, as tranſgreſſors againſt Gods righteouſnes; & ſo be wee in danger of endles death. Sith it is ſo: it followeth ỹ the law of it ſelfe can do no more but ſhewe vs that we be accurſed of our God, & that he is our deadly enemie & muſt needs be our Iudge. And where is then the bleſſing that Moſes ſpeakes of here? The anſwere hereto is this; that if we looke no further but what we be in our own frowarde nature, in reſpect of the ſinne ỹ we haue drawen from Adam: the law can doe nothing but curſe vs. For whereas God ſheweth vs what our righteouſnes ought to be; if we fall to the examining of our liues; we ſhal find ỹ we haue offended him in euery point, & therfore we be paſt hope. Yea, but ỹ ſpringeth not of the nature of ỹ law, but of our own ſinfulnes, in ỹ we are ſtubborne againſt God, ſo that in ſteede of obeying him, wee indeuour altogether to follow our own wicked luſtes. The lawe then as in reſpect of our ſelues, bringeth nothing but wrath & death. But as in reſpect of it ſelfe, ſurely it bringeth bleſſing. For were we as we ought to be, that is to wit, were we ſo ſound & vncorrupted ỹ we were as throughly diſpoſed to ſerue God as was our forefather Adam by creation before his fall: the lawe ſhould bring vs his bleſſing. For why? It ſheweth vs that we muſt loue God with all our heart. When wee be once ioyned vnto him, & when wee bee once knit vnto him in all perfection of goodneſſe, of ioy, of life, & of glorie; then ſhal this ſaying bee found true. For were we of nature good & right, we ſhould be anſwerable to this doctrine, & wee ſhould obſerue it: & ſo ſhould this bleſſing be performed towards vs. Wherof is it long ỹ as now the law bringeth vs nothing but death & damnation? Euen for that wee be not able to receiue the promiſes ỹ are conteined there. Our Lorde ſaith, Come ye to mee, & I will fill you full of all goodnes; & we ſhrinke quite & cleane from him. So is it not long of the doctrine. Wherof then? Euen of our ſelues. Where is the fault to bee found? In the law? No: but in our owne ſelues. Now then let vs mark, that whereas Moſes proteſteth here ỹ he ſetteth a bleſſing before ỹ people, his ſo doing is not without cauſe.

But here it might be replyed, that although our own ſin be the let that we be not made partakers of ỹ bleſſing that is behighted in ỹ lawe to enioy it; yet notwithſtanding, for aſmuch as wee be vtterly excluded from it; it is in vaine for him to ſay, I ſet before you a bleſſing. That is not ſo: For we haue two points to note. The one is, that Gods ſpeaking after that maner concerning his word, is to the ende ỹ we ſhould haue it in reuerence & eſtimation, & alſo loue it & ſet our harts vpon it; & moreouer fall to the conſidering of our owne curſednes, ſo as we might be humbled & caſt downe, & be ſorie when we ſee our benefite turned to our bane, & our life into death be cauſe we be not diſpoſed to receiue it. But God ſhall haue wunne nothing at our handes by letting vs alone there: wee muſt be faine to go one ſtep further. Foraſmuch as we ſee our ſelues bereft of the bleſſing of the law ſo long as it continueth but a dead letter; that is to ſay, ſo long as it doth but only tel vs what wee ſhould do, & giueth vs not power to do it in deede: wee muſt reſort to our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, whoſe office is to write the thinges in our heartes which God had written in ſtones, that hee may make vs willing to obey, in ſteede of our ſwaruing aſide to ỹ contrarie. Againe, our Lord Ieſus Chriſt hath deſerued this bleſſing for vs; that wee might henceforth be receiued into fauour for his ſake, & our workes be accepted at Gods hande though they be nothing worth of themſelues. For we come not as euery man in his own perſon, nor as they ỹ had performed the law themſelues: but we come in the name of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, as members of his bodie. Ye ſee then that the bleſſing is perfourmed in vs by ſeeking the remedie which we want, which is that whereas God hath promiſed to bleſſe men vpon condition, foraſmuch as the ſame booteth vs not, there is added another point of fauour, which is that he receiueth vs for his ſonnes ſake, & writing his lawe in our harts, imputeth not our ſins vnto vs; by meanes whereof we faile not to bee partakers of the bleſſing that is contained here, though we be not able to performe the law, but that the ſame paſſe our abilitie. Marke that for one point.

Now let vs come to ỹ which Moſes ſayth concerning ỹ curſe. He ſayth ỹ like as the law offereth vs Gods fauor, which is the bleſſing ỹ tendeth to our welfare; ſo alſo we muſt not ſet light by the threatnings ỹ are ſet downe there. For if we giue deafe eare to Gods ſpeaking, ſo as our harts rancle againſt it through ſtubborneſſe, or ỹ we play the ſcoffers which turne all thinges to

2.Cor.2.15. 16. laughter: let vs beare this in mind, that howsoeuer the world go, Gods worde shall either be our life or our death, there shall not so much as one word therof fall to the ground. Such as benefite themselues by ỳ things ỳ are told them on gods behalf, shall find ỳ the doctrine serueth to their saluation: And on the other side, the despisers thereof, & such as refuse to be taught by it, must yeeld an account thereof, and they shall feele ỳ no one iote of it shalbe lost, neither is to be despised. For should the thing be vndone & vanish away wout effect, which passeth out of ỳ mouth of God? No. And therefore let vs marke well, ỳ if men cannot find in their hearts to vse Gods doctrine to their benefite when he sendeth it vnto them; it shal turne to their euerlasting death, & their damnation wilbee doubled, because they held scorne of the benefite ỳ was profered them. And this is very needfull for vs. For we see how men dally with Gods word; & they ỳ cast it not quite & cleane away, do thinke themselues to be more than half perfect, because they becom not vtter enemies to fight against it, they beare thé selues in hand ỳ God ought to hold himself contented with it. But think we that God wil suffer so good a thing to perish? He offered vs life, and we refused it: and doeth not such vnkindnes deserue horrible vengeance? Againe, God setteth more store by his own honor, than by the saluation of our soules. And good reasõ it is ỳ he shonld. Now he hath shewed vs after what manner he wilbee glorified by vs, & wee make no account of it but reiect it vtterly. And therfore let vs consider wel, ỳ if we receiue not the blessing of Gods worde, ỳ is to say, if it serue not to reconcile vs to him, ỳ we may take him for our father: we must (spite of our teeth) feele him our Iudge, & his worde must condemne vs. Wheras it should haue ben a witnes of his loue towards vs to bring vs to saluation, & to the inheritãce of ỳ kingdom of heauen: it must become an inditement to passe vpõ our liues, so as we shalbe accursed in this present life, & after our death Gods vengeance shal pursue vs for euer, because we obeyd not gods word when it was preached & set forth to vs.

Esa.49.8. Now then, seeing ỳ God telleth vs ỳ this is ỳ conuenient time, & ỳ he calleth vs vnto him: let vs learne, let vs learne I say to go to him and to make hast, least this threat light vpon vs, that we be cursed for our wickednes, in ỳ we lifted not to receiue ỳ benefite that was offered vs. And specially nowadayes we ought to be ỳ more prouoked therunto, because our fathers of old time had not the like occasion. It is true that Moses might wel say he offered ỳ blessing to those people in ỳ law: But we in these dayes haue the blessing set forth more openly in ỳ Gospel. The promises at ỳ time were dark, & they pointed at Iesus Christ, howbeit a farre off. They yeelded some smal tast of life; but wee at this day haue our fill of it, so as god giueth vs euen his hart there without omitting of any thing, to ỳ intent to make vs to perceiue his inestimable loue, therby to draw vs & to win vs vnto him. Sith it is so, ỳ the law sheweth vs it alooſe, & ỳ gospel bringeth it neerer to vs: let vs not bee so frowarde as to shrinke away as though we would needs spite God of purpose to be cursed: but let vs rather imbrace the blessing which costeth vs nothing as they say: For there is no more for vs to doe but to receiue it willingly, according to ỳ promise which he maketh vs, saying: Opé thy mouth & I wil fil it. And for ỳ same cause also doth S. Paul say, Now are ỳ acceptable dayes, now are ỳ dayes of saluatiõ; shewing how ỳ same is to be applyed to ỳ preaching of ỳ Gospel. His alledging of that text of Esayes is as he should say, Our Lords desire is nothing else but to do ỳ office of a sauiour among vs: & therfore suffer him to shew himself such a one. Againe, let vs vnderstand ỳ we neede not to seeke farre for him; for he offereth himself to vs before we once thinke of him, to make vs perceiue his fatherly kindnes & goodnes. And on the contrary parte, when he threatneth vs & is minded to make vs feele his rigour; he runneth not vpon vs at ỳ first dash, neither lifteth he vp his hand by and by to strike vs: but only sheweth it vs first alooſe. Yet notwithstanding, howsoeuer he fare, let vs mark ỳ the Gospel is neuer preached, but ỳ he witnesseth on ỳ one side ỳ he is readie to receiue men to mercy, & to open them ỳ gate of his kingdõ, ỳ they may go into it: & on the other side that if they be stubborne & wilful in their wickednes, it shal not boote thé to think to escape, or to wonder ỳ the word shalbe vaine & to no purpose: for god wil always giue it force & power. What to doe? To destroy those ỳ haue so refused it, & trode it vnder foot, & made a mocke of it, & openly resisted it. Now by the way we must call to minde again what I haue touched already heretofore in following Moseses discourse: namely ỳ God promiseth not any blessing but to such as obey his cõmandements: like as on ỳ other side he threateneth none but such as turne away from him. And therby he sheweth that men may well take much paine, but they shal but lose their labour if they rule not themselues according to the law. Here ye see how al ỳ deuotions ỳ men deuise, are cast down. Moses saith they be vtterly fruitles. In deede ỳ Papists, Turks & Iewes doe perswade themselues, ỳ they deserue much at Gods hands by their doing of things vppon their own head, whé they be able to say; I take it to be very good. They beare themselues in hand ỳ they come very neere to God by their wãdring in their wind-lasses after ỳ fashion. But on ỳ contrary parte we see, ỳ God promiseth not any thing but to such as obey his word. Therfore if we intẽd to be vndisappointed of our hope, let vs seeke to know Gods wil by asking it at his own mouth, & therupõ let vs simply obey whatsoeuer he telleth vs. For as long as men rule themselues after their own imaginations, or after ỳ traditions of men, it is no obedience, but a displeasing of God, & he wil not admit it to come in their account. Thus much for the first point cõcerning this blessing.

On ỳ contrarie, how much soeuer mẽ repine at it, setting themselues against vs, yea & condemning vs for our refusing to follow their foolish inuentions; God acquiteth vs here, for he threatneth none but such as rebel against him. Nowadays ỳ Pope thundreth against vs, because we wil not wil not be ſubiect to him as other do, which hold downe their neckes vnto him and yeeld themſelues in bondage to him like wretched beaſtes.

True it is ỳ their imagining that he hath power to ding vs down to the deepe pit of hell, is ỳ thing ỳ amazeth them, & maketh the rude and ignorant ſort to quake. But forasmuch as we heare it at the mouth of our God, ỳ we neede not to be afraid except we haue diſobeyed him: let vs hold vs to it, & be bold to laugh al the popes manaces to ſcorne, for they be no better than the rattling of a bladder with a fewe beanes in it to ſcarre a yong babe withal. In deed it makes a great noiſe: but yet it is but a toy. And euen in like caſe is it with all the manacings that men can make.

But here is yet one other ſaying wel worthy to be noted. Moſes ſaith that the curſe ſhal come vpon the people when they turne away from their GOD to ſerue ſtraunge Gods and ſuch as they haue not knowen. Here againe he ſheweth ỳ they which haue bin rightly taught, are much more blamewoorthie than the wretched infidels. For they ſpite God maliciouſly & wilfully: they offend not any more of ignorance, but turne aſide wilfully frõ ỳ way ỳ God had willed them to walke in, & ſeeme to make warre againſt him of ſet purpoſe: by means whereof they make their condemnation the grieuouſer. And therfore let vs marke well, that wee which haue receiued ỳ doctrine of the Goſpell, ſhalbe leſſe excuſable than ỳ papiſts, if we obey not our God. For the papiſtes holde on ſtil their old trade, they be gone aſtray like ſillie beaſts, & all that euer they do is but filth & abhomination. This is true. And yet do we for our partes much worſe in turning away from our God, after his comming vnto vs, & ỳ hee had brought vs nigh vnto himſelfe. And Moſes ſaith expreſſely; The Gods which you haue not knowen. Wherein he rebuketh the malice of men, in that they had leuer to follow ỳ vncertaine than the certaine. True it is ỳ we haue a cleane contrarie ground in nature. For if a man be demanded whether he had leuer to be ſure of a thing or to be doutful of it; He wil alwaies ſay he had leuer be ſure of it. And yet for all that, we ſeeme all of vs to ſtriue who may bee moſt wauering, doutful, & vncerteine of his ſoulhealth, & yet notwithſtanding what is there that we ſhould make more account of? And God is readie to aſſure vs of it, warranting vs it by his word, ſo as we cannot faile of it, if we obey him. We heare it, & can God ly? No: & therfore let vs go on as he hath cõmanded vs. Nay, we be loth to do ſo. And what do we in ſteed therof? I trow, I weene. Loe at what point we be! Let vs ſee howe the papiſts do. When they ſhould pray vnto god, this one good point they haue, that they knowe themſelues vnworthie to preaſe vnto him. That is true. But behold, our Lord giueth vs a remedy, which is, that our Lord Ieſus Chriſt ſhalbee our ſpokeſman ſo as if he intreat for vs, we ſhalbe admitted & God wil heare all our prayers. It is the thing which the holy ſcripture aſſureth vs of euerywhere. But what do the Papiſtes? I am not worthie to preaſe vnto God (ſay they) & therefore I wil go ſeeke to the virgin Marie, S. Michael, & S. Peter: & therupon they deuiſe & ſet vp a great ſort of Saints at their own pleaſure. And what a dealing is that? Sure we be that our Lord Ieſus Chriſt wil not faile vs: for as much as it is his office appointed him of his father; hee will diſcharge it. And why then do we not go rightforth vnto him? He wilbe a good ſtay for vs. Com' vnto me ſaith he, alluring vs gently. Againe wee haue promiſes innumerable, that if we reſort vnto him we ſhal not be diſappointed of that which we hope for: & yet for all this wee leane to our own weening, & we ſay, to my ſeeming I were beſt to go to S. Michael or to our Lady. And ſo we fall to forſaking the certaintie ỳ God hath giuen vs, to ketch an vncerteintie: and in likewiſe wiſe deale we with al ỳ reſt. For in ſeruing God according to his law, we be ſure that our ſeruice ſhalbe wel taken. But the Papiſtes fall to inuenting of this & that, & leaue the law of God: & is not that a forſaking of the certaine to followe an vncertaine? Yes, & that is againſt nature. Therefore it appeareth ỳ we be blinded by Satan. For we haue the cleane contrarie in vs by nature. We haue wit ynough to ſay, I would faine be aſſured & we bee loth to hazard our ſelues at all aduenture: & yet in this caſe we be ſo mad, that neither ropes nor chaines can hold vs. My alleaging of theſe examples is to ſhewe after what ſort wee ſhould put this doctrine in vre: for it falleth out ỳ men haue wilfully eſtranged themſelues from God in al caſes. Howſo? For whereas God hath diſcouered himſelfe vnto them; they haue not vouchſafed to hold themſelues to him, but rather haue buſied themſelues about their own dreams & dotages. In deed they wil eaſily ſay, We know there is but one god ỳ maker of heauen & earth: but in ỳ meane while they hatch a whole ſwarm of other gods, as we may wel perceiue by ỳ idols which they haue forged. And whereof commeth that? Euen of this, ỳ wheras men knew God, yet they haue had no luſt to glorifie him, but haue wandred away after their own imagination, by meanes whereof they be turned away from him. And at ſuch time as God gaue his law, ỳ bleſſing was more darkſom than it is nowadays in ỳ time of ỳ Goſpel. Beholde, God doth not onely report himſelf to be ỳ maker of heauen & earth: but alſo becauſe he is incomprehenſible, & his maieſtie paſſeth all our vnderſtanding: he will haue vs to looke vpon him in his liuely image, that is to wit in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. He is the ſonne of god, which hath ſhewed himſelf ſo familiarly, ỳ we may be ſure ynough that we worſhip the liuing God forasmuch as we knowe that the whole fulneſſe of glorie & of ỳ Godhead dwelleth in him. That is the cauſe alſo why ỳ Prophet Eſay ſpeaking of him, ſaith, Lo this is he, lo this is our god. If the caſe ſtoode ſo with the fathers of olde time, ỳ it behoueth them to ſtand vpõ a certeintie euen in the time of the law, ſo as God woulde not haue his people hang in doute, but that they ſhould be certified of as much as was for their behooſe & benefit: much more ought we to bee ſure nowadayes. For we haue a larger diſcouerie of things in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, ſo as ỳ voyce of the prophet Eſay; Lo this is he; lo this is our God, ought to ſound continually in our eares; by reason wherof it is not for any man to turn away from it, nor to runne gadding at rouers, nor to reele one way or other; but we must knowe & assure our selues ỳ we haue ỳ ful & perfect mesure of al wisdome, if we can hold vs to Iesus Christ, & to the things which his doctrine teacheth vs. But herein we see how the wretched world gaddeth vp & downe, euery man trotting after his own way, so as euery mans will is to go astray: & yet notwithstanding we shield our selues with ignorance. When we haue shut our eyes after ỳ fashion against ỳ light, when we haue stopped our eares against ỳ doctrin of saluation, whē we haue turned our backs vpon him at his shewing of his face, & whē we haue spit at him for his reaching of hand vnto vs: yet we fall stil to excusing of our selues by ignorance. So then the thing which we haue to remember here in this place, by Gods vpbraiding of men with their turning away from his word when it is preached vnto them; is that their so doing is through a diuelish stubbornes, & ỳ (euen by ỳ witnes of their own consciēces) it is a worshipping of gods which they haue not knowen. For our faith must not be vncerteine, it must not be an opinion or weening, but it must bring a sure knowledge with it. And what maner of knowledge? Truely as in respect of our own wit & reason, if we intend to come vnto god, we must worship him w̄ all humilitie, & remēber that his secrets surmount our vnderstāding. But yet here withall it behoueth vs to stande vppon so sure a ground, euen by knowledge; as our owne consciences may beare record of it, & wee bee able to

1. Iohn 3. 2. say with S. Iohn, we wote well ỳ we be ỳ children of God. Lo here what the true Religion is. It is not an vnaduised zeale, or a liking that men cast to this thing or that: but a sure knowen doctrine grounded vpon Gods trueth, wherethrough we be able to say ỳ it is he which hath spoken to vs, & ỳ he is a faithfull witnesse of ỳ things ỳ are for our welfare & saluation And againe, whatsoeuer we alleage, wee shall alwayes abide conuicted of our malice. So that when wee haue once beene taught ỳ word of God, if wee afterwarde worship gods whom we haue not knowen, if we swarue aside to any superstition, or if we continue not in ỳ pure simplicitie of ỳ holy scripture: surely we shal iustly be accused to haue had strange Gods, & to haue bin forgers of them, as folke ỳ loue the vntrueth better than ỳ trueth. According wherunto S. Paul speaking of all such as obeyed not the
Rom. 1. 25. 28. Gospel, saith it is good reason they shold be stricken with horrible blindnes, & that forasmuch as they honored not the creator, it was meete that they should become vnderlings to the creatures, ỳ is to say, to the things which they had dreamed in their own fond braine & foolish fancies. Now thē seeing ỳ our God hath taught vs; let vs learn to hold our selues at a stay to his word, & to vnderstand in what maner he hath shewed himself vnto vs; & let vs benefite our selues by al the records which he giueth vs, & beware ỳ we wander not one way or other, ne followe not our owne leasings. For there wilbe no excuse for such as would not be certified of God when he was readie to do it.

Now in the end Moses addeth, that when the people were come into the land of promise, they should diuide their companie in two parties: the one half vpon mount Garizim, & the other half vpon mount Hebal, & that they which should bee vppon mount Garizim, should pronounce the blessings; & that they which should be vpon mount Ebal, should pronounce the curses, which thing wee see was done accordingly. For this commandement shalbee rehearsed yet againe in the 27. Chapter of this booke. And Iosua in his eyghth Chapter declareth ỳ he had obeyed the cōmandement of Moses. The effect of ỳ storie is, that when ỳ people were entred into ỳ land, they should meete with two mountaines, ỳ one called Hebal & ỳ other Garizim. Now god had commanded ỳ one part of ỳ people, namely certaine tribes, should be on ỳ one side on mount Garizim; & ỳ the rest of the tribes should be vpō mount Hebal, & ỳ the Leuites shold stand in the middes of ỳ host bearing the Ark of God, to shew ỳ God was chiefe souerein there, & that the Leuites were as witnesses or sureties to vnderstād matters in ỳ behalf of the people, like as if there were two parties to make som solemne mariage or couenant, a notarie or register is present to take an othe betwixt them: euen so God had ordayned ỳ the people shoulde be there to heare & receiue ỳ doctrine of saluation, & ỳ they should answere on their part, as in ỳ passing of som solemne contract; to ỳ end they might knowe vpon what condition God had chosen thē & presented thē before al other nations of ỳ earth, as shalbe shewed hereafter in the foresaid 27. Chapter. And what were ỳ blessings? They were a rehersall of ỳ same thing that God had spoken afore: namely, al such as keepe my law shalbe blessed; al such as worship me with a pure conscience shalbe blessed; all such as hallow my name, shalbe blessed; al such as obey their fathers & mothers, shalbe blessed: all ỳ liue chastly shalbe blessed: all ỳ abstaine from deceit, extortion, & al maner of euil, shalbe blessed. God then on his parte promised blessing after ỳ maner. Hereunto the people answered, Amen, Amen: ỳ is to say, So be it: whereby they ratified ỳ which had been spoken by the mouth of God. Again, on ỳ contrarie part, ỳ curses were vttered on mount Hebal in this wise. Cursed be he ỳ turneth aside after strange gods. Cursed be he ỳ dishonoreth his father or his mother: Cursed be hee that offendeth in theft or in whoredom: Cursed be he ỳ performeth not all ỳ cōmandements conteined in this booke. Amen, Amen, said ỳ people. When the curses were vttered after ỳ fashion, it behoueth euery man to answer Amē. And so ye see what is said in this text.

Now let vs mark ỳ by that meanes god went to touch ỳ people neerer to ỳ quicke, by their agreeing to such a couenant. And the same belongeth vnto vs. For although wee haue not ỳ same ceremonie ỳ was obserued at ỳ time, yet haue we ỳ trueth howsoeuer the world go: & whensoeuer Gods word is preached vnto vs, although we receiue it not, yet shal it not fal to ỳ grounde, but it shal light vpō our heads spite of our teeth, & it shalbe an intolerable burthen to sink vs down to ỳ bottom of hel. Therfore when we receiue gods word into our harts, let beware ỳ we like wel of it & ỳ we ratifie the promise of our saluatiō which he maketh vs. Nowe hee adopteth vs to be his children; and if we be his children we be also his heires. Therfore when we imbrace the preached word by faith & obedience, although our mouth speake not a worde, yet doe wee confirme Gods truth to our saluation, according to this saying of S. Iohns, that as many as beleeue in the only

Ioh. 3. 33. sonne of God, haue sette to their seales that God is true. Thus ye see howe the full measure of our saluation and of the promise is accomplished & hath his full effect & power, when we on our side do aunswere rightly Amen. And although it be not spoken with the mouth, yet let the heart say it: for ỳ is the chiefe point. True it is that if there be faith in the heart, the mouth must needes agree vnto it also; according to this saying of the Psal. 116. 2. Cor. 4. 13. Psalme, I did beleeue, and therfore will I speake, which saying, is alledged likewise by S. Paul to the Corinthians. But my speaking at this time is of the ceremonie; namely ỳ although wee haue not a mount Garizim & a mount Heball among vs, although we assemble not together into one citie, to seuer our selues into two hostes, and although there be not a visible Arke among vs; yet is Gods once declaring therof inough for vs, & his once setting downe of a memorial thereof before vs is sufficient for vs, to make vs know ỳ same belongeth to vs at this day, & ỳ the preaching of the Gospell vnto vs in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, is all one as if wee confirmed God to be our father by our saying Amen. That is ỳ very meane wherby we be receiued to be his children, & wherby we be assured of the inheritance of the kingdom of heauen. For otherwise, how were it possible that we wretched creatures should attaine to such dignitie, as ỳ God should vouchsafe to win vs by gentlenes, & vtter ỳ good loue that he beareth vs, & be willing to haue vs to be his, to the ende ỳ he might be owner of vs? Must it not needs be ỳ we be worse than froward if we benefit not our selues by such grace? Yes, & therfore let vs learn to answere Amen willingly, when our Lord behighteth vs his blessinges. For on the contrary part, although wee harden our hearts & shut our eyes, yea & grind our teeth at God as it were in rage & dispite of him: yet must there follow an Amen therupō, which shall burn vs like a searing yron, wherby God wil shew ỳ his word is as a burning fire to consume all thinges, so as we must needs feele ỳ inward scalding therof when God vttereth ỳ power of his word, by reason whereof we shalbe in continuall vnquietnes & torment for euer, if he set himselfe against vs. Yet for all this ỳ faithfull must answere Amē, as well to the blessings as the cursings. Amen, by imbracing ỳ grace ỳ God offereth vs. Doth God offer himselfe so vnto vs? Cōmeth he to seeke vs out when we be vtterly lost & forlorne? Doth he come downe to these horrible miseries wherein we be plunged? Well, then it is our duetie to go vnto him, and not to be so froward as to drawe back when he allureth vs so gently. Thus ye see how we must answere Amen to the blessings, by imbracing ỳ grace of the holy Ghost, ỳ we may be guided & gouerned by it, & made acceptable to our God, by fashioning our life after the rule ỳ he hath giuen vs, in resting vpon ỳ grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, wherby he is reconciled vnto vs, & accepteth vs for righteous, insomuch ỳ although we be sinners, yet he receiueth vs for his sonnes sake, & couereth al our sins & vices. After that sort therfore must wee answere Amen, that our Lorde may performe all the free promises which he hath made vnto vs.

Also we must aunswere Amen to ỳ curses. For why? We haue such a number of contrarieties in vs, as is pity to see. Although God haue giuen vs a good desire to receiue his word, & ỳ we receiue it in deede; yet do we it not to the full. For wee drag our legges after vs; there is alwayes some gainstriuing in vs; we haue still some remnantes of our flesh; & besides that, there is too too much stubornes in vs, so as we be like asses ỳ haue need to be driuen forwarde by force. And therefore I sayd ỳ we must answere Amen to ỳ curses. When we see ỳ God will haue vs to passe through ỳ afflictions of this worlde, & through the cares ỳ are vpon earth: Let the prouoke vs to repaire vnto him, and let vs assure ourselues ỳ oftentimes his causing of vs to feele his curse, is for our benefit. Moreouer let vs consider thus with our selues: Alas, if God curse all such as transgresse his cōmādementes; what shall become of me? Now then let euerie of vs finde such fault with himselfe, as we may patiently indure whatsoeuer it pleaseth God to lay vpon vs in this present life. Thus our pronouncing of the curses must be to ỳ end that they light not vpō vs. For they ỳ quicken vp thē- 1. Cor. 11. 31 selues after ỳ maner, shalbe set free from the curses. And let vs mark by the way, ỳ when we shall not haue performed all ỳ cōmandements of the lawe, we haue a remedie for it in our Lord Iesus Christ, for otherwise we shold be accursed euerychone of vs, according to this alegation of saint Paules to the Galathians: Cursed are they ỳ per- Gal. 3. 10.
forme not the whole Lawe to the full. Whereupō he concludeth, ỳ all men are cursed of God as in respect of their owne workes, and ỳ if we will be iustified by our owne deserues, we must go seeke our payment in hell. For God hath shot out one thunderbolt against all mankinde, in saying, cur- Deut. 27. 26.
sed be all they ỳ perform not the whole Law. But no man performeth it. Euen ỳ holiest men in the world are indebted in ỳ behalfe. So then S. Paul rightly concludeth, ỳ we be all accursed in our selues. But yet he sendeth vs to our Lorde Iesus Christ, & telleth vs ỳ forasmuch as he is giuen vn to vs, we be set free from ỳ rigor of the Law: so ỳ whereas God as now doth teach vs his will, telling vs what way we should walke, & setting before vs both his promises & his threatnings: although our liues be still vnperfect, yet wil he not cease to accept vs, so wee haue recourse to him which hath supplied our want. For our Lord Iesus Christ hath made such satisfaction by ỳ sacrifice of his death, ỳ God accepteth it in full paymēt to couer al our faults. Therfore let vs repaire thither, & let vs so plundge our selues in it, as we may be clensed & scoured frō al our spots. Which thing will come to passe, if we learne to walke in humilitie and feare before our God, & abuse not his goodneſſe & patience. For ỳ is the meane to make vs acceptable vnto him, ſo as his curſes ſhal be turned frō our heads, & his grace & bleſſing ſo increaſed after he hath once vttred the ſame, as it ſhal growe cōtinually in vs, vntil it be come to the full perfection.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him &c.

On Saturday the xxviij. of September. 1555.

The Lxxx Sermon, which is the firſt vpon the twelfth Chapter.

THeſe are the ordinaunces and Lawes which yee ſhal keepe, that yee may doe them in the Lande which the Lord God of thy fathers hath giuen thee to poſſeſſe, all the dayes which thou ſhalt liue vpon the earth.

2 Ye ſhall deſtroy all the places wherein the people, whom yee ſhal conquere haue ſerued their gods, whether it be vpon high mountaines, or vpon the hils, or vnder any maner of greene trees.

3 Alſo yee ſhall digge downe their Altars, and breake their images, and burne their woods with fire. Yee ſhall deſtroy the images of their gods, and diſpatch the names of them out of that place.

4 Yee ſhall not deale ſo with the Lord your God.

5 But looke what place ſoeuer the Lord your God ſhal chooſe out of al your tribes to ſet his name in and to dwel in: there ſhall yee ſeeke him, and thither ſhall yee reſorte.

WHeras Moſes exhorteth ỳ people here againe to obſerue the ordinances & ſtatutes of ỳ law, and to do thē; it doth vs to vnderſtand, ỳ if we be not diligēt in following Gods will, we ſhal ſoone be carried away vnto wickednes one way or other. For it falleth out vpon vs ỳ we do cōmit many faults through ouerſight, we ſtumble at euery turning of a hand becauſe ỳ deuill doth eaſily beguile vs; & we haue no great wit or diſcretion in vs, our mind is ful of fondnes, & conſequētly vnconſtant: & therfore if we be not very diligent in obeying our God: we ſhall neuer obſerue his law as we ought to do. Now thē let vs beware ỳ we ſet our minds earneſtly to ỳ ordering of our life. For if we bethinke vs not aduiſedly of it, ne haue any great care of it; we ſhal not fail to do amiſſe ſome way or other. That is ỳ thing which we haue to gather vpon this place where Moſes ſaith ỳ we muſt not only put gods cōmandemēts in execution, but alſo keepe thē to do them. As if he ſhould ſay, ỳ if men holde not themſelues well in awe; if they bee not very watchfull in following their duety, & if they be not well aduiſed & earneſt in their doings: by & by they ſlip away, and there is no ſtedines in them; and although there haue bin ſome good zeale in them, yet it vaniſheth away out of hande.

And he ſayth expreſly that they be the ſtatutes and ordinances of the God of their fathers. Which ſerueth to the better confirming of the matter ỳ we haue ſeene heereto fore: which is, that the Land of Chanaā was giuen thē by vertue of the couenant and promiſe ỳ was made before they were borne. The Iewes then are put in minde in this place to thinke themſelues beholden to Gods free beſtowed goodnes, for their promiſed inheritāce foraſmuch as they coulde not boaſt of it as of a cōqueſt, becauſe God had aſſigned it to their fathers before they were borne. Neuertheleſſe his purpoſe is alſo to confirme them in the doctrine of the Law, to the end they might knowe ỳ they worſhipped not a new god, or a god lately found out: but the ſame God which had bin reuealed to their fathers in all ages afore, & therfore he telleth them they were leſſe to be excuſed, if they held thē not to the religion ỳ had bin knowen in all times afore, at leaſtwiſe among their fore fathers. For we heare what God vpbraydeth them withall by his prophet Ieremie. Go ſeeke all the worlde about (ſaith he) go ouer ỳ ſea, & ſee if the heathen nations haue changed their gods, and yet they be but idols. Sith you ſee ſuch ſtedfaſtnes & conſtancie in the infidels, ỳ they be not variable in their ſuperſtitions, but rather as it were wedded & wilfully giuē ouer to thē: what a ſhame will it be to you to haue forſaken the liuing God when ye haue knowen him, & not to continue in his word? Then let vs marke wel in this text, that Gods vpbraiding of ỳ Iewes with his manifeſting of himſelf vnto thē & to their fathers ſo long time aforehand, is to ỳ ende they ſhould be the more worthy to be condemned, if they hild not themſelues to the doctrine which had bin ſo well warranted vnto thē. But let vs marke alſo ỳ it is not inough for vs ỳ our forefathers held ſome kind of religion: but we muſt alſo ſee ỳ the ſame be alowable. And whereas it is ſayd here, ỳ their forefathers knew the ſame God which had ſet forth his Law to thē at ỳ time: the knowledge or opinion which the fathers had, is not ỳ chief ground that we ought to ſtand vpon; for God preſuppoſeth ỳ he had ſo certified thē of his word, as they were not in any doubt at all. Therfore firſt let vs learn to knowe what our Lord declareth vnto vs; and then let vs afterward go to antiquitie. And it is certaine that if the religion be true, & good, it is not new nor deuised in our time; but our repaire must be to the things ỳ are witnessed in the Law and ỳ prophets. There we shal see how God hath gathered his Church, how he hath gouerned it, & how it hath alwayes had his truth, euen from the beginning of the world. In dede the number of people is but small ỳ haue followed godlinesse: the rest haue turned away after their owne inuẽtions. Howbeit, we must not haue an eye to the world, but let it suffice vs ỳ god hath had a church of his owne in all ages, whereunto it behoueth vs to be ioyned & to become one wt it. For although the Church haue bin despised of the worlde; yet hath it alwayes bin precious in Gods sight. And we see the like still at this day. True it is that the most part of such as boast thẽselues to be beleeuers, are doted with leasinges, errours & abuses: but wee must let thẽ alone, & submit ourselues to the truth ỳ God telleth vs, knitting ourselues in vnity of faith & concord with the faithfull which are contented to followe whatsoeuer God hath shewed thẽ. Thus ye see ỳ the way for vs to put this text in vre where the God of the fathers is spoke of, is ỳ it is not ynough for vs to haue som antiquite as the papists alledge, saying; we haue bin a long time in possession: but we must be well groũded vpõ certainty, so as we know ỳ the God whom we worship is not an idoll. When a man knowes ỳ once, then let him proceede to the cõsent & agreement of faith, according to our belef whereby we confes ỳ there is but one almighty god, which is ỳ father of our lord Iesus Christ, and by the same reasõ our father too; ỳ our Lord Iesus Christ is the redeemer that hath appeared vnto vs; that we be sanctified by the holy Ghost, and also ỳ we can beare record of the maiesty of our God, at leastwise according to his vttering of himselfe vnto vs by his holy scriptures. Which done, then let vs adde, ỳ we beleeue the holy catholike Church, and that there is a cõmunion of Saints, so as there is but one body. But yet must God be faine to shewe himselfe to vs to be the almighty: that he is ỳ same which made both heauen & earth, that he is the same at whose hande we must hope for saluation; ỳ he is able to maintaine his owne glory, so as all the thinges ỳ men haue deuised of their owne braine are but lies. That is the first end whereat we must begin. And afterward we must agree with the holy patriarks, Apostles, & all the faithfull that haue liued since the worlde began. We must haue ỳ indissoluble bond of faith, & al must come to this point, namely that they be grounded vpon the certaine and vnfallible truth. As for example, The Iewes that came after, had the fathers as well as they, of whom also they made thẽselues a sheelde. but God did vtterly mislike their so doing, according to this saying of the prophet Ezechiel; Walk not after the righteousnes of your forefathers. At the first blush here seemeth to be some cõtrarity. For in this same place it is sayd; Worship ye the God of your fathers, stick to him, & beware ye change not your religion. And there ỳ prophet Ezechiel layth contrariwise; beware that ye follow not ỳ deuotion of your fathers. Yea verily: for there were two sortes of fathers among the Iewes: the one was Abraham, & the holy Patriarkes & Prophetes, and such as knewe the liuing God, & serued him in all pureneſſe: those it behoued the Iewes to rule thẽselues by. And in ỳ respect doth Moses say now vnto them, beware ỳ ye turne not away from the God of your fathers, but cõtinue still in their faith. Besides this, they had other fathers also, which were backesliders, & frowarde, and had corrupted the Lawe, & made a minglemangle of it with all the superstitions of the heathen. In respect of this it is said, beware ye folow not your fathers: for they were frowarde & falsehearted towardes God. In the same taking is the world at this day. The Papistes alledge their fathers. But what? Are not the Apostles the true fathers of the christian Church? Yes, but the papistes will not heare them speake, nor any other that haue stablished such order in the Church as God cõmanded. But they haue their bastardefathers like themselues, which being a misbegottẽ generation, they take Monkes & old dotterelles for their fathers. Againe, when they alledge any of the auncient doctors, if there be any folly or superstitiõ in their writings, they can skill to cull it out euery whit: but as for the good, they cast ỳ a great way off. Now then let vs beware of such maner of fathership, & let vs vse discretiõ in chosing out ỳ true fathers, & let vs put ỳ in vre which Paul speakes of where he sayth ỳ all fatherhood dependeth vpon God and vpon our Lord Iesus Christ. Thither (say I) must we refer our fatherhood, if we wil haue good fathers; so as God may be the chiefe father of them all, & they giue record ỳ they be his sonnes, ỳ they may beget vs by the vncorruptible seede of his word: or els there wilbe nothing but vtter confusion. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon that saying. Eph. 3. 15.

Now heretofore Moses addeth further, ỳ the Iewes must not serue God at the first, and afterward become cold: but ỳ they must perseuere in it all the time of their life. And after ỳ maner will God be honoured of vs. For he taketh vs not to hyre for certain dayes, & then to let vs go, or to giue vs leaue to depart at the ende of our termes: he taketh vs for life & death. And it is good reason, as S. Paul sheweth vs where he sayth ỳ our Lord Iesus died & rose again to reigne both ouer the quicke & the dead. Though there were none other respect than this, were it not ynough? Behold, ỳ son of God which bought vs by his death and passion, is risen againe immediatly: & is it not meete then ỳ we shold giue our selues to him & to God his father, and ỳ we should be wholly dedicated vnto him, & that we should both indeuor to serue him as long as we liue vpon ỳ earth, and also ỳ our death should be as a sacrifice & offering vnto him, to shewe ourselues obedient to him in all points? Yea: & therefore let vs marke well, ỳ we must not doe it, as it were in a pang, as a number of folke do, who are very whot in gods seruice for a two or three dayes, and afterward their mind is altered, & their deuotion is quite gone, & they shew full well ỳ there was no zeale in thẽ. But let vs alwayes beare in mind to serue God as long as we liue. And therewithall let vs also bethinke vs of ỳ which is set downe here ere, where Rom. 14. 9.

where Moſes ſpeaketh yet againe of the heritage that had bin promiſed to ỳ Iewes. For ſeeing that our Lord doth daily put vs in mind of his grace: it is good reaſon ỳ wee ſhould plucke vp a good corage to honour him, & gather new ſtrength to ſay, foraſmuch as I haue liued out this day in the world, & haue ſerued God this morning, ſeeing ỳ I perceiue he cõtinueth his goodnes ſtil towards me, yea, & increaſeth it: is it not reaſon that my zeale & mine affection to ſerue him ſhould be ỳ more kindled, and ỳ my hope ſhold not be abated? That is the thing which Moſes ment in ſaying, Ye ſhall poſſeſſe ỳ land: & as long as ye poſſeſſe it ye ſhal haue a faire mirrour before your eyes to ſhewe you how your God calleth you to him, & mainteineth you in the poſſeſſion of the benefit which he hath once beſtowed vpon you.

And therefore let vs marke, ỳ we deſerue well to be bereft of the grace ỳ God thal haue granted vs, if we acknowledge it not toward him, but forget it, & apply it to another end than he ment it.

Deut. 11. 21. It hath bin ſayde heretofore ỳ the Iewes ſhould poſſeſſe the land, as long as ỳ heauen hung ouer the earth. And yet we ſee how they be put out of it, inſomuch ỳ at this day they poſſeſſe not any part of it, but wander abroad in the world, & are hunted to & fro. And what is ỳ cauſe therof? Surely God had mainteined them in the inheritance which he had promiſed thẽ, if they had not turned away frõ him after ỳ faſhion. For it was not Pſal. 132. 14 without cauſe, that ỳ land was called Gods reſtingplace. As if he had ſaid, ỳ when al the reſidue of the worlde were toſſed & turmoyled, ỳ Iewes ſhold dwel at eaſe & reſt in ỳ land, ſo as if any mã made war vpon them & troubled them, yet God wold ſtabliſh thẽ there. Yea but they haue brokẽ couenant wh him. And therfore at this day (as we ſee) they be baniſhed frõ reſting in any place of the whole world. They be as vagabonds euerie where. And what is the cauſe of it but their own vnthankfulnes in ỳ they haue forſaken gods promiſe through their vnbeleefe and ſtubbornes, and haue vtterly diſanulled it to the vttermoſt of their power? Therefore let vs bethinke ourſelues. True it is ỳ we muſt be as wayfarers in Hebr. 11. 13 16. this world, if we wilbe heires of heauen, as ỳ Apoſtle telleth vs. But howſoeuer the caſe ſtand, if we intend to be bleſſed of our God, & to feele ỳ he is a good defence for vs: let vs hold vs in obedience & ſubiectiõ to him. Otherwiſe let vs aſſure ourſelues, ỳ although al ỳ whole world hold with vs, yet we ſhall finde ourſelues ſo perſecuted and purſued, as we ſhall finde no reſt any where. If a faithful man walke in the feare of God, although he be perſecuted & tormented, yet may hee reſt vpon this point to ſay, yet is God my protector; and he will call vpon him, & by his calling vpon him he ſhall finde cauſe of cõfort. But on ỳ contrarie part, if an vnbeleeuer play ỳ rebell againſt God, although he haue peace to the worldward, and be in fauor of men, yea & alſo dreaded: yet ſhall he euer be vnquiet & agaſt. And the reaſon is, becauſe he ſeketh not to be at peace with God. So then let vs marke that whereas Moſes exhorteth the people heere to ſerue God all their life longs it is to the end wee knowing ỳ God renues his mercie and goodnes daily toward vs, ſhould be inflamed to ſerue him with ỳ greater corage, & that frõ day to day we ſhold alwayes continue therin as though we were at reſt. We ſee ỳ euen ſleepe ſetteth a man in good plight againe, ſo ỳ when he hath wearyed himſelfe with walking or working, he becommeth ready and diſpoſed to retorne to his labour againe the next morning. Euen ſo muſt we take corage at our Lords incouraging of vs, and at his calling of vs vnto him, ſo as it may appeare that we be willing and readie to follow him.

But now let vs come to that whish Moſes hath ſet down concerning the Lords ordinances and ſtatutes. The firſt cõmandement ỳ he giueth the Iewes, is that when they be come into the Land which they were to poſſeſſe for their inheritance they ſhould beate downe all the altars of the heathen, breake and deface their ydolles, burne all the groues where they had vſed their ſuperſtitions, and vtterly roote out the remembrance of them. Here we ſee again how hatefull a thing ydolatrie is vnto God, and that he can not abide ỳ his ſeruice ſhould in any wiſe be corrupted. Let vs marke I ſay, that God accepteth not any ſeruice at our hands, wherin is mingled with any abuſe or folly of our owne heades: but as we muſt ſerue him onely, ſo muſt we ſerue him not after our owne faſhion, but according to his owne will, cõmandement & allowance. Wherein we ſee how a great number of ignorant wretches beguile themſelues nowadayes. For hauing proteſted that their intent is to ſerue ỳ only one God, they put to many peeches of their owne, bearing themſelues in hand that ỳ is not amiſſe. And why? So long as mine intent deuour be to ſerue God ſay they, & that I do it of a good intent; why ſhold it be condemned? Yea, but we heare how our God can not away with any companion, as he declareth euerywhere, and euen in this text we be taught the ſame expreſly ynough: for God will haue all remembrance of ydols vtterly rooted out. For why? As long as ydols haue their vſe; God is defaced & ouercomred that he can not be diſcerned, and likewiſe all things in the world are confounded by it. Therefore it is all one as if mẽ ſhold go about to ſpoile him of his maieſtie & glory. And euen ỳ papiſts themſelues auow the ſame thing in their cõmon byword, when they ſay that God is not knowen for the Apoſtles. And it was Gods will that they ſhould make a common prouerbe of it, to ſhewe that they cut their owne throtes with their own knife, in that they can alleadge no excuſe at the latter day. For they ſay they ment it not: nay but will not their prouerbe proue them liers? Yea their owne wordes ſhall iudge them. Howſoeuer they fare, let vs note that if Gods ſeruice be not kept in the owne pureneſſe, all is marred: ſo that although men worſhip him neuer ſo much, yet hee miſliketh it, as wee ſee by his ſpeaking thereof in his prophete Ezechiell. Goe ſerue your owne Gods ſayth he, for I haue done with you. As if hee ſhould ſay; belong altogether to the deuill if you will: Seeing that ye hold your ſelues all wholly to me, but that I muſt haue companions ioyned with me, and ye make me but as one of the common sort, so as I must bee as good as no body: I renounce you and giue you ouer, ye may goe to the deuill; for I will haue no more to doe with you. So then let vs marke well, that to serue our God aright, wee must yeelde such preheminence to his maiestie, as to depende all wholly vppon his worde and doctrine, without adding any thing to that which hee commaundeth, as shall be declared more at length in the next Lecture.

Nowe furthermore, whereas it is sayde that she [very] remembraunce of ydolles must be rooted out: it is to the end that folke should be the better aduised. Truely God sheweth vs on the one side (as I haue sayde) howe greatly he hateth all ydolatry, seeing hee willeth men to burne the woods & all that euer hath serued to the maintenance thereof, insomuch that hee will haue the very stones beaten to pouder, and the golde and siluer broken, so as all may be quite & cleane done away. Seeing that God doth so condemne the creatures which are good as in respect of themselues, because they haue beene instrumentes of superstition: thereby we see well that hee can in no wise away with ydolatrie. Besides this hee hath alwayes respect to the frailetie of men: for assoone as we meete with any thing, by and by we be miscarried: wee be euer starting one way or other. And what is the cause? Naturally we be inclined to ydolatrie: and because wee bee earthly and fleshly; wee bee euer imagining of God some thing that seemeth good to ourselues, by reason whereof wee turne him into sundrie shapes. If we haue neuer so small an occasion, by and by we be drawen vnto euill. If a flye do but crosse our eyes, we make an ydoll of it. We see then whereat God looked when hee gaue so straite commaundement to beate downe the altars, to heawe downe the groues, to burne vp the woods, to breake the images, and to destroy the puppets vtterly. For had those things continued still among the Iewes; there woulde euer haue been some among them, which would haue giuen themselues to the superstitions of the heathen. Tush, would they haue sayd: what and if a man had deuotiō to it? it is a hallowed thing: like as at this day, such as haue beene nusled in papistrie, are so held to it as long as they see their peking trash, that they can neuer winde themselues out of it, though they would neuer so fain. If a man that hath beene long inured to the Masse doe see a chalice: his minde giues him still that there is some holinesse in it; whereas cleane contrariwise it is as filthie and stinking an infection as any can be, and yet notwithstanding wee can not conceiue it. For why? As I sayde afore, we be fleshly by nature: and besides that, Sathan vseth such slight, that when he setteth such thinges before our eyes to beguile vs with, we be snared by them out of hande; and therefore there is none other remedie, but to make cleane riddaunce of all such thinges as may allure vs to superstition. Truely if their were puppettes among vs as are in the Popedome, it might be alleadged that they could not hurt vs as long as they were not worshipped. In deed it is true that they of themselues could not hurt vs: but lette vs looke into ourselues, and wee shall finde ourselues so weake, that wee shoulde be blinded immediatly by such baggage, and it would turne vs away from Gods pure worde, insomuch that if we had altars still, we should not knowe that the Lordes supper were ministred vnto vs to the intent wee should be partakers of him, and inioy all his goods: but there woulde remaine I wote not what a wicked imagination of y hellish Sacrifice which is done in the popedome; namely of the Masse, wherein men thinke that Christ is offered there to GOD his father for the remission of our sinnes. And so there woulde alwayes remaine some wicked fancie still in our heade. That is the cause why God hath so straitly commaunded to breake the ymages, destroy the altars, and burne vppe the woods or groues where ydolles haue beene serued and worshipped. The Papists in these dayes replie that that commaundement was giuen but to the Iewes, because they were giuen to superstition. Verily as who shoulde say that we were better disposed noweadayes than they were. True it is that GOD giueth not this commaundement to vs as touching the Ceremonie of burning all thinges wherewith ydolles haue beene serued: but yet for all that, his will is that we should make cleane riddaunce of all thinges that may turne vs from the pure religion. If it were of necessitie that all thinges shoulde bee doone away wherewith ydolles haue beene worshipped; this temple shoulde not nowe stande to haue the name of GOD preached in it. It hath beene a brothelhouse of Satans, but nowe must wee apply it to good vse, by taking away the trumperie that hath reigned in it, which was quite contrarie to Gods worde. But howesoeuer the worlde goe, if we looke well vppon our infirmitie, wee shall finde that this lesson belongeth to vs at this day, namely that all remembraunce of ydolles is to bee vtterly rased out. And nowe insomuch as the maladie of superstition is so rooted in vs, there is none other remedie for it, but to take away all obiectes that may moue vs thereunto, that the deuill may haue no more any meanes to intangle vs in his nettes which hee layeth for vs: but that wee may knowe simply after what manner God wilbe worshipped and serued.

Also we may gather further vppon this text, howe mad men bee in their superstitions, accordingly as the prophetes doe speake thereof. For they vse such similitudes as these; namely that men not onely resemble such folke as are carried away with fonde loue, and haue lost both honestie, witte, and countenaunce: but also resemble horses that ney after Mares, and such other brute beastes. Yee see then after what manner the wretched Idolaters are carried away in their superstitions. And this is declared vnto vs, in that wee heare him speaking of woods of high growth, as men terme them, and of Mountaines and Hilles. For there was not that odde nooke where in the Iewes hadde not some peculiar deuotion; after which manner we see howe our ydolaters also haue poysoned the fountaynes, Woods and Hilles with the filthinesse of their superstitions and charmes. Whereseouer was any notable thing, by and by there was reared some Temple, or there was some chappell builded, and all to worshippe some ydol in. There is neuer any ende or measure when men take leaue after that fashion to worshippe GOD after their owne liking. And forasmuch as wee see that, wee ought to brydle our selues the more, that we attempt not any thing without the warrant of Gods worde: For if we hold not ourselues within our bounds, and as it were tye our selues simplye to that which GOD hath commaunded: it can not bee but that Sathan shall leade vs out of the way, so as there will be horrible confusion in our case.

The first reason then is, that such as will needes serue GOD after their owne fancie, doe alwayes goe into such a dungeon as they can neuer gette out of againe, and they fall continually from one superstition to an other. Marke that for one point. And on the other side we see howe greatly it will bee to our condemnation, that we can not finde in our heartes to dedicate our liues vnto GOD, seeing that the ydolaters are so carried away by their foolishe fancies, that they haue neuer doone with them, nor can neuer thinke themselues superstitious ynough. Therefore if we for our parte seeke not to keepe ourselues in obedience to our GOD, what will become of vs? For God hath layde such a yoke vpon our neckes, as is gentle ynough. He hath an eye to our infirmitie, hee giueth vs such strength as he knoweth to be meete for vs, hee beareth with vs as gently as may bee. And yet for all this, hee can not compasse vs, wee bee so nice as is pittie to see. Wee fall to complayning and say; Alas, GOD pincheth vs too sore. And if wee doe him but halfe seruice, yea or but the hundreth parte of our duetie, wee thinke hee ought to holde himselfe contented with it: whereas in the meane while the ydolaters doe martyre themselues out of measure, they indure after a sorte the peines of damned soules, and they are euer readie to increase their superstitions.

Wherefore let vs looke well to ourselues; and seeing it is not lawefull for vs to attempt any thing beyonde Gods will; but it behoueth vs to knowe what he requireth of vs, and to submitte our selues wholely vnto him: lette vs be gentle and meeke minded to beare the yoke patiently which GOD layeth vppon vs, seeing it is neither harde nor greeuous (as I sayde afore). And seeing that the ydolaters doe so followe their geere, and nothing can stay their trotting and gadding, but that they doe as it were flye to the seruing of their ydolles: Lette vs steppe forewarde also, sith wee see that our Lorde sheweth vs the way, yea and such a way as though it be verie harde as in respect of our corruption, is neuertheless verie playne and easie to vs, in respect of the grace of his holy spirit.

Heere is this moreouer, that Moses sayth not heere, that the Iewes shall destroy and breake the ydolles in all places whereseouer they become: but that GOD commaundeth them to doe it in the lande that is giuen them to inherite. Wherein we see that the holy Ghost commaundeth not all the faithfull in generall to pull downe and to breake all ydolles in the worlde: but onely where they themselues haue authoritie. And it is a point well worth the noting. For if we be among ydolaters, it lyeth not in vs to ridde the Lande from the superstitions that reigne in it. What is to bee doone then? Euerie man must reforme himselfe in his owne heart, so as all ydolles may be thrust out from thence. When I see Gods seruice corrupted any where, I must forbeare to haunt that place or to communicate in companie with those ydolaters. I must cutte off all the wicked affections that are in my flesh, and I must know moreouer that I am not minded to forsake my GOD, nor to falsifie the faith that I haue plighted vnto him by defiling my selfe with the ydolatries that are about mee. Therefore euerie man must first and formost reforme his owne heart, and secondly separate himselfe from all things that may defile him. And that is because GOD hath giuen vs a charge of our owne persons, and made vs as it were keepers of his temples, to the intent that euery of vs shoulde looke narrowly to ourselues. That is a thing which it behoueth vs to doe when wee be in the countrey of Idolaters. Besides this, euerie man must purge and clense his owne house from all filthinesse. So as if a man be a housholder, hee must looke well about him that he hold well his children and seruauntes in the feare of GOD and in the pureneesse of religion. For if a man suffer his house to be defiled, and all thinges there to goe to hauocke: he shalbe sure to make account thereof to God. Not that a man can holde his wife and seruants continually eyed to his fingre to turne them to the christian faith when he lysteth: but my meaning is, that he must not suffer any superstition or ydolatrie. For why? Seeing that GOD hath giuen him soueraignte in his owne house; it behoueth him to deale in such wise as GOD bee honoured there, and as no filthinesse be mingled with the pure religion, but that all be ridde quite and clene away. But as for Kinges, Princes, and Magistrates, which haue power and authoritie, they must roote out all superstition and ydolatrie. And seeing that GOD hath armed them with the sworde: it behoueth them to vse it in that behalfe, so as they doe not in any wise suffer or giue leaue, that there be anie vnclenesse to greeue GOD withall, or to abolish or deface his seruice. Those are the thinges which we haue to marke vpon this text of Moseses. And therefore to be short, let vs remember that hee commaundeth euery of vs to keepe cleane his owne body and soule. For why? God hath laide such a charge vppon vs, that he will haue vs to be the Temples of his holy Ghost: and therefore hee will haue euerie of vs to keep his bodie as cleane as we can: Nowe then let vs bee carefull to driue al idolatrie farre from vs, and not to meddle with it in any wise. And agayne, let euerie of vs haue an eye to his household, that there bee no infection in it to mar the seruice of God. And thirdly let those that are in estate of cheefe soueraintie; as kinges, Princes and magistrates, let them I say consider, that sith the Lord hath giuen them authoritie and power, if they suffer his seruice to bee defaced; they shall bee called to accounte for it. For it is saide that when thou art come into the lande: thou must driue out al idolatrie, and vtterly deface whatsoeuer hath serued to any superstition.

And in speaking after that manner, Moses sheweth that the putting away of idols is not all that we haue to doe: but that the cheefe point is the abaunncing, restoring and stablishing of Gods pure seruice. And that is well worthie to be noted. For wee shall see a great number nowadayes, which can wel enough mocke at the follies of the Pope, & at the abuses which reigne vnder his tyrannie. They dare well enough eate flesh vpon fry dayes, and they make no great account of Lent & Saints euens, or of the taking of holy water, or of kissing of Relikes, or of gadding on Pilgrimage, or of anie other such petie trashe. They haue no great deuotion to ỹ masse, or to Shrift, neither passe they for the deade, or for the singing [of diriges and such other pastime] for such as are deceased. Wee shall see a great number that can well enough despise all the superstitions of the Popedome, yea and euen laugh them to skorne and vtterly condemn the. But what? There is no feare of God, there is no Religion in them. Surely it were much better for them to haue gone on still like bruite beastes in their ignorance, than by such contempte to fall to rushing against Gods Maiestie like wilde beastes, and not to perceiue that there is a God which reigneth ouer the whole worlde. Then doeth it not greatly boote to haue abolished Idols, except the true religion bee set vp in the steede of it: Like as when a house is builded a-newe, if it be saide to bee nothing worth, or that there be many faultes in it; it shall be wel done to pull it downe againe, whereas notwithstanding if it were let alone in the same plight, so as a man had leuer to haue some Hoggescote to lodge in; yet for all the ilfauoredesse and faultinesse of it, it would serue his turne after a sorte being let stande still: but if it were pulled downe and raised to the grounde and none other buildded vp in steede thereof, the pulling downe of it were to no purpose at al.

Let vs marke then that here Moses deliuereth vs a perfecte doctrine which consisteth of two rules: Namely that wee worship our GOD purely, and moreouer that all superstitions bee cast downe, so as nothing may hinder the worshipping of God according to his worthinesse, but that men may haue an eye to him alone, & holde themselues alonely to his Maiestie. And first he speaketh of the abolishing of al superstitions. Why so? For if a man intende to sowe a feelde, if the same bee full of bryers, thornes, and noysome weedes, he must first and foremost cleanse ỹ ground, or else he must breake it vp wỹ ỹ plough to kil wicked weedes before he lay his seede into it. Euen so must all corruptions be taken from among vs, ere we can giue our selues ouer to the seruice of God. Well may it be preached vnto vs that there is but one God whome we ought to worshippe: but if wee haue possessed aforehande with fond fancies or imaginations, we shall be neuer the better for it, but our minds shall euer be intangled. That is the cause why Moses beginneth at that ende. But yet hee addeth further, that it is not inough to haue cleansed a peece of grounde, vnlesse it be also tilled & sowed, that it may bring forth fruite, for else it will continue barren still. And what is a man the better then for his plucking vp of the bushes and brambles that were in it alone? That is the thing which is shewed vs here. But first let vs marke, that it is but a flat mockerie, when men will needes set foorth Gods worde, without correcting of the vices that are contrarie to the right religion; after which manner there are a number to be founde noweadayes in the Popedome, which rowe betweene two streames, of which sorte are these hypocrites which haue perchaunce some taste of the Gospell, and can boast indeede of the preaching of Gods worde But howe is that? Whereas they see the wretched worlde as sore blinded and besotted as may be, so as nothing else is minded but idolatrie and superstition: yet they, thinke it enough for them to say, there is but one God whome it behoueth vs to worshippe. They dare not say that he onely is to be worshipped: but let vs worship God, say they. And will not the Paynims say as much? Haue not the Papists alwayes sayd the same? And yet when they haue saide, wee haue Iesus Christ for our aduocate: it is seene neuertheless, that they let him alone behinde them and run gadding after the patrons which the worlde hath deuised; and holde the wretched worlde at such a bay, that (like a sort of traytors to God and his Church) they make me beleeue that it is not euill to be partakers of all the abhominations that are committed in it. But we see howe Gods meaning is cleane contrarie. For Moses saith not onely, You shall serue the Lorde your God: but before hee come to that point, he saith, Ye shal beat downe the Altars, breake the images, burne the groues, and make cleane riddance of all that euer hath serued vnto wickednesse: euerie whit of it must be vtterly done away. And why. For had the people continued still in such infections; it had beene vnpossible that God shoulde haue beene worshipped purely. Then it is not enough for a man to giue some tast of Gods trueth: but if we see that Leasinges haue borne swaye aforetimes; they must be cut off, men must crie out against them, men must be reformed, they must bee brought into the right way, and they must not bee suf-ſered to ſtray ſo any more. But yet therewithall let vs alſo learne, that when men haue cryed out againſt ſuperſtitions, they muſt not ſtay there: but they muſt cheefly proceed to ỹ ſetting vp againe of Gods ſeruice, as Moſes ſpeaketh thereof. For the very cauſe why there are ſo many Epicures in the worlde nowadayes, and why there are ſo manie folke that reſemble ſwine and brute beaſtes rather than men: is that they be contented to mocke at the fondneſſe and ignorance of the vnbeleeuers, and yet coulde neuer skill thẽſelues what it is to worſhippe GOD purely, and as ſtriue to him, and to humble themſelues to his worde. And therefore it is meete that they ſhould be giuen vp to a reprobate ſenſe, & that GOD ſhould giue them the bridle, that they might no more haue any honeſtie, humanitie or aught elſe in them that is good. Wherfore let vs learne not onely to know that Papiſtes are miſerable & wretched creatures, and to condemne them in all their follies & ſuperſtitions: but alſo to be ready to goe vnto God when he calleth vs. And let vs vnderſtand that when he hath bene ſo gracious vnto vs as to teach vs the true religion and doctrine of his Goſpel, thereby he ſhoweth vs that it is he onely whome we ought to worſhip. Thus ye ſee what we haue to remember vntill the reſt may be laide forth more fully.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele thẽ the more feelingly, that being caſt downe and as it were ouerwhelmed in our ſelues, wee may go ſeeke ỹ mercie which he hath promiſed vs for our Lord Ieſus Chriſtes ſake. And ſeeing he hath graunted vs the grace to put away all ſuperſtitions from among vs, let vs beſeech him that his ſeruice may be ſo ſet vp again, as he ſuffer vs not to become heatheniſhe, but that as he hath once ſhewed vs, ſo we may holde out in the ſame, and profite continually more and more therein, vntil we haue finiſhed the courſe of this life. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace not onely vnto vs but alſo to all people and Nations of the earth &c.

On Wednesday the ij. of October. 1555.

The Lxxxj. Sermon, which is the ſecond vpon the twelfth Chapter.

3.4.5 But looke what place ſoeuer &c.

6 And thither ſhall yee bring your burntofferinges, and your ſacrifices, and your tithes, and the heaueofferings of your handes, and your vowes, and your freewillofferinges, and the firſtborne of your kine and ſheepe.

7 And there ſhall you eat before the Lorde your God, and be merrie both you and your houſehold in all things that you ſet your hande vnto, wherein the Lorde your God ſhall haue bleſſed you.

IN the Doctrine that I haue deliuered vnto you alreadie, there are two partes. The one is that God will haue all thinges vtterly rooted out wherewith Idols haue beene ſerued. And good reaſon hath hee ſo to doe, becauſe he ſeeth the frailtie of men: for if we haue neuer ſo ſmall an occaſion, by and by we be miſcaried. For Idolatrie is ſo rooted in our hearres, that wee haue neede as it were to plucke ourſelues from it by force: and what wil then become of vs, when we be drawen to it? Let vs marke wel therefore, that foraſmuch as we be inclined to ſuperſtition, if we intende to ſerue GOD, we muſt put away all things that may turne vs from the right way, & from the ſimplicitie which God commaundeth vs. And men cannot ſtand too much vpon their gard in that caſe. True it is that a number of me do weene themſelues to be ſo ſtrong, ỹ although they be neuer ſomuch conuerſant among ỹ ſuperſtitions of the vnbeleeuers, yet they ſhal not be atteinted with them: But God is wiſer thã we. And therfore let vs remember the leſſon that he telleth vs: namely that we muſt ſhunne all the ſuperſtitions of the heathen and the vnbeleeuers, or elſe his ſeruice will bee marred among vs by and by. But foraſmuch as I haue declared that part alreadie, I wil ſtand no longer vpon it.

Let vs proceed to that which Moſes addeth, namely what mẽ muſt not deale ſo with God: by which ſaying he meaneth, that the Iewes muſt not go about to honour the liuing GOD by building vp the altars, Chappels, or any other of all the filthie things again which they had beene drawen from. As if he ſhoulde ſay, GOD will not be ſerued after the manner of Idols, and therefore vnderſtande not what the heathen haue done, follow them not, neither faſhion your ſelues to their example: but holde you to this one rule, of doing that which your God commaundeth you. And this is well worth the noting: for when we haue condemned Idolatrie, we ceaſe not for all that to imagine that God liketh well that we ſhoulde do ỹ ſame things in honor of him, which were done by the vnbeleeuers: and ỹ appeareth by the buildinges in the Popedome. After that the Goſpell had beene preached to the worlde, men fell to mingling of al maner of ſuperſtitiõs of ỹ heathen with the true ſeruice of God. And what was the cauſe cause thereof? The heathen had their Pilgrimages: and men knewe well it was a diueliſhe abuſe: neuertheleſſe they did not put them quite and cleane away, they did but onely chaunge them. In ſteede of going on pilgrimage to ſuch an Idol, they goe now to our Ladie of Laurette, to the holy handekerther, to Saint Michael, to Saint Iames, and to viſite the holy Sepulchre. Men ſhould haue vtterly rooted out all ỹ things that had beene ſo brought in by Satan, and in ſtead thereof they did but change them. Whereas men ſaw that the heathen made great feaſts, and kept a great number of ſolemne holy dayes in honour of their Idols: O (quoth they) wee muſt no more doe ſoe, for that were a ſeruing of the diuell: but let euery pariſhe make a Churchholyday, to play, to daunce, and to feede in till they burſt againe, and all in the honour of God. Beſides this, let euery one haue their patron, and let them worſhippe him. And ſo in ſteade of the ſolemne feaſtes that were among the heathen, let others be brought in among vs. O ſirs (ſay they) theſe thinges are not doone any more in honour of the Idols, but in honour of Saint Martine. And then let them daunce and playe the drunkerdes, for all is well enough ſo it be done in the honour of God. Againe the heathen were wont to keepe a holy day which they called the feaſt of all Spirits: and we muſt chaunge ỹ word and haue the feaſt of all Soules. Moreouer the heathen had a Temple which was called the Temple of all goddes, and wee doe nowe call it the Church of all Saintes or all Hallowes. See what an act worthie of remembraunce and an Angelicall act the Pope thought hee did, as the Papiſtes can well skill to make their bragges. For he (ſay they) there is a temple called the Temple of all the gods: but what? Wee haue but one God, and therefore it muſt not continue after the faſhion. Wel, we will chaunge the worde, and whereas the heathen had a Temple which they called the Temple of All their gods, we wil haue it the Church of all Hallowes, and we will haue a Churchholyday added to it. Again when they ſawe that the heathen had their ſacrifices: Nedes muſt they alſo haue their Maſſes ſet vp in the roome of them. Moreouer perceiuing that the heathen had their waſhings, they alſo would needes haue their holywater. To be ſhort, whatſoeuer filth and infection was among the Infidels, the Papiſts tooke it to themſelues to keepe. And what was the cauſe thereof? Euen for want of taking heede to this text, wherein it is ſaide that whereas the Infidels haue many deuotions deuiſed of their owne braine; we muſt not couet to doe the like to our God, nor looke that way; but we muſt harken what he ſaith and commandeth. Were this ſaying of Moſeſes vnderſtoode; all the diueliſh deuiſes that haue reigned & doe reigne ſtill at this day in the Popedome, ſhoulde get them away to the bottome of hell. For we ſee here a generall condemnation, whereby GOD ſheweth that he hateth al ſuch things. And why? Becauſe he will not haue men to deale with him as the ignorant doe with their Idols. A thing may ſeeme faire to the worldwarde, & men may clap their hands at it: but behold God ſaith here, I wil not be ſerued after ſuch faſhiõ, or ſuch maner, let not men preſume into my preſence to deuiſe what they think good themſelues. And if it be alleadged, yea, but ſhall ſuch a thing bee euil taken, when I doe it in the honour of God? Shal it be ſaid that I ſerue Idols, when I do ſuch a thing of a good intent, and all to ſerue God? Is it ſo great an euil that men ſhould cry out at it? No, no, men muſt hearken what God commandeth, and ground themſelues altogether thereupon, ſo as they preſume not to adde any thing thereunto. We ſee then that the meaning of this text is, that wee muſt forget al the follies that haue beguiled vs, and not alledge cuſtome or continuance of time, but receiue the doctrine of the holy ſcripture like litle children. A yong childe will not ſay, thus and thus haue I beene taught, for he knoweth yet nothing at all: But he receiueth that which is put to him, and is the readier to learne, becauſe he is not inured aforehande with anie maner of miſteaching. But if a childe haue been miſtaught and nuſled in his fondnes: then if a man go about to amend him, O (ſayes he) I was taught ſo, and a man ſhal not be able to make him pronounce one ſyllable aright, nor to ſpeake one worde to any purpoſe. And why ſo? Becauſe he hath bin trained by an Aſſe, who hath framed him to his owne faſhion, and hee hath learned ỹ right trick of him. After the ſame maner it is with a great number of folke that haue been brought vp in curſed poperie: alwayes they hold ſtil ſome relikes of it, ſaying, Yea ſir, but can ſuch a thing be euil? There is euer ſome replying againſt God. But as for vs, let vs practiſe ỹ which is ſaide in the foure & fortith Pſalme: My daughter, forget thine owne people and thy fathers houſe, and thy husband wil take pleaſure in thee. We know that in that place our ſpiritual marriage with Ieſus Chriſt is deſcribed vnder ỹ perſon of Salomon. And firſt of all we bee commaunded to forget all that euer is of our owne. For by our people and by our fathers houſe, is meant all that euer we haue of nature, all things that we haue loued afore, and al the pleaſures & delights wherewith we haue beene helde backe. Al theſe thinges muſt be thruſt vnder foote, or elſe the ſonne of God wil neuer like of vs, whoſe calling of vs to him is to make vs all one with himſelfe. Alſo we muſt put the ſame thing in vre which I haue alledged heretofore out of Saincte Peter: namely that we muſt be like newe borne babes. For when a child beginneth at his Apſa he is eaſie to be taught and ſuffereth himſelfe to be ouer ruled: euen ſo in al things, let vs learne this leſſõ which God teacheth vs in his doctrine, & let al our wiſedome be to obey him. That is the thing which we haue to marke in this texte where it is ſaid, thou ſhalt not deale ſo with thy God: for God wil not be weighed in the balance nor ruled by ỹ meaſure of Idols, but wil haue mẽ to imbrace whatſoeuer he commandeth, and to reſt vpon it wout gainſaying or replying. For declaration hereof he ſaith, To ſhal reſort to the place which hee ſhall haue choſen to put his name in, and to dwel in. Which ſaying here is expounded of some to bee his habitation, that is to say, his sanctuary or tabernacle. But all cōmeth to one end: Gods meaning is plain & vndoubtful, namely ỹ whereas the heathen had set vp many Altars, builded many Chappels, and gone on many pilgrimages: the Israelites shoulde holde themselues contented with the only sanctuarie. Now if it were lawfull for men to bee ruled by their owne reason, ỹ Iewes might here haue pleaded in this wise against God. What, the countrie is great, and shall there be no Altar in no place of it but onely in one? There are diuerse great Cities; and shall there be neuer a Temple in them for men to offer sacrifice in and to doe their deuotions? There are a great number of countries bordering vpon it, [which doe otherwise;] and shall we in worshipping GOD looke onely vnto heauen? Why shall there be no altar? It might seeme therefore that the Iewes had verie iust cause to refuse this commaundement and to say wee will bee so deuout that wee will haue some signe or marke of Gods dwelling among vs and wee will worshippe him, and doe solemne sacrifices vnto him. But what? In this case men must bridle themselues and holde their owne wits in captiuitie, so as they giue God leaue to speake, and they themselues holde their peace, without attempting to go anie further than Gods mouth permitteth them. Ye see then howe it is Gods will to humble his seruauntes by making them subiect to his word. Wherfore let vs learne that wee must not followe our owne sway nor our owne imagination: but this ought to suffice vs, that our seruice be acceptable vnto God, by ordering of it according to his will: there is no other way but that.

And it is said expressely in the place which the euerlasting, thy God shal choose: as if he shold say, it is not in the choice of ỹ Iewes to appoint God a place or to say vnto him, here wil wee sacrifice. Men must not presume so far. It belongeth to thy God to choose saith Moses. To be short hee will haue Gods authoritie to bee receiued and him onely to be the ruler of his people, so as he may command what he listeth and be obeyed without gainsaying. Ye see then that the foundation of true religion is not to say, it seemeth so to me, I weene so, I would faine haue it so, it is a goodly thing: but to let God speake, and to assure our selues that it is not for vs to doe any thing but ỹ which he alloweth. And so is meant by this saying that obedience is more worth before him thā all maner of sacrifice. And in verie deed can wee doe him any greater honor than to rest vpon his worde, and suffer our selues to be gouerned by it, and to be as poore blinde folkes vntill hee haue lightened vs and shewed vs the way? Now as for those that solow their owne deuotions, they bereaue GOD of his soueraintie and yeeld him no reuerence at al: therefore it is but a building in ỹ aire and an vtter confusion. Wherefore let vs weigh wel this word choose, that we may be fully resolued in our selues that none but God hath authoritie to set order how he should be honoured and serued.

1. Sam. 15. 22.

And he addeth yet further, from one of al your tribes. Here the people might bee tempted to a kind of iclosie, for we know that men do willingly drawe things to themselues, and that is a greefe and a corsey vnto vs when others are preferred before vs. The same might bee among the Iewes. The lande of Chanaan is diuided into twelue tribes, for the Tribe of Ioseph made two, and the Leuites had no portion at all. But yet for all that, yee see there were twelue Tribes, which had euery one his portion to inherite. Now GOD tolde them that his Tabernacle shoulde be set in Ierusalem, and that his Temple shoulde be builded vpon mount Sion. Hereupon the residue might haue quarelled thus. What? Are not we the children of Abraham as well as they? with whome is it that GOD hath made his couenant? Are we not al of one stocke? Why then shoulde the Tribe of Iuda be preferred before vs? specially seeing he is not the first begotten. Doth ỹ birth right belong vnto him? Why then shoulde he bee more honoured than all the rest? Whence hath hee this priuiledge? After that manner might the matter bee debated. Also it might be alledged that the title ought to be remoued euery moneth of the yeere fro one tribe to an other throughout al ỹ twelue Tribes. There are twelue moneths in the yeere, and we be twelue tribes of vs: and therefore we ought to begin according to the order of birthright, so as the eldest haue the carying of the Arke the first moneth, and euery Tribe after in his order. Were it not reason it shoulde be so? Yee see then that the rest of the Tribes might haue made that allegation when they saw the Tribe of Iuda preferred before all the other Tribes. But Moses preuenteth that, saying, it belongeth vnto thy GOD to choose and to commaunded what hee thinketh good. According whereunto it is saide in the Psalme that the land of Chanaan was in deede made holy, and that God had promised it to his seruaunt Abraham. But what? He refused the tribe of Manasses and Ephraim, and rested not there but choose the Tribe of Iuda. And why? because it pleased him. If a man shoulde looke vpon the outwarde apparance, it is wel known that the kingdome of Israell was faire greater than the kingdom of Iuda. True it is that in king Dauids time they were all one kingdome: but when the people fell away, then the Tribe of Ephraim became of greatest honour among them: but yet for all that, God reserued the dignitie to the citie of Ierusalem and to mount Sion, that hee woulde be worshipped there. Seeing it is so, let vs vnderstande that to serue GOD aright, men must vncase themselues of al pride, so as they seeke not to aduaunce themselues, but submit themselues wholy to Gods wil without regarding to bee honoured aboue others after the ambitious maner of the Papists which striue who shall goe foremost to the offering. They pretend to doe it of deuotion, but indeed they doe it of diuelish pride. And therefore if we wil haue God to accept our seruice, let vs learne to come vnto him with humilitie and not to turne our tayles to our neighbours but god vouchsafe to endue any others with greater grace than our selues, wee must not spyte them for it, as wee be warned of it. Wee see that God distributeth his giftes more vnto one than vnto another; What is nowe to bee doone? shoulde wee haue spite at it? Shoulde wee gase aboute vs howe to make our selues iolie fellowes? Alas wee doe but wander away from GOD when we steppe foorth to aduaunce our selues before men. Therefore let vs proceede with all lowlinesse, and not bee so fondly and wickedlie disposed as to haue a will to bee preferred before our neighbours. And so we see what Moses meant to expresse here in saying, God wil choose him out some one certaine place from among thy tribes: and let it not greeue them that are put backe from it. For why? If it bee Gods will to humble them, they shall gayne nothing by their comming to rushe against him. And therfore let euery man holde himselfe contented with his degree and measure, and let him that is litle holde himselfe contented with his litlenesse.

And nowe hee addeth expressely also, that God will choose a place to put his name in. Whereby he meaneth that he is not to be inclosed in it as in respect of his substance. For (as I haue declared afore) there are alwayes two thinges which it behoueth vs to marke well. When we haue an outwarde order or forme of seruing God, wee muste obserue two thinges therein. The one is that forasmuch as God seeth vs to be rude and earthly, hee stoopeth vnto vs, and pleasureth vs so far, as to giue vs things fit for vs. As for example, when wee in praying doe vse these ceremonies of kneeling down, of putting off our cappes, and lifting vp our handes: wherfore doe we so? It is not for that GOD hath neede of it for his part, but for our owne weakenesse sake. Because we bee ouer grosse, we bee faine to be exercised after that fashion. After the same manner wee haue Baptisme, and the Lords holy Supper, all which thinges are for the weakenes of our nature. And so ye see that that is one thing which wee haue to marke on our part. But when as God beareth with vs after that fashion, let vs beware that wee surmise him not to be like our selues, or that wee thinke him not to behaue himselfe after our lust. For men are alwayes in daunger of falling into that extremitie. The thing then in effect which Moses ment to say, is this: The Lord will choose him a place to set his sanctuarie in, there will he haue you to worshippe him: there will he haue you to offer your sacrifices to him, thither will hee haue you to bring your oblations; there will he haue you to honor him w your persons & goods, protesting your selues to bee wholy at his deuotion. But yet must you not thinke that your God is come downe from heauen and shut vp in a cofer or chest. You must not thinke that he sitteth betweene Cherubins after the manner of men: but that it is ynough for you that his name is there, that is to say that he giueth you some token of his presence and power, to the intent yee may be sure that he will heare all our prayers and be mercifull to you. And yet for all that hee filleth heauen and earth, howsoeuer the worlde goe. Therefore ye must not fall to shutting vp of the infinite maiestie and substance of your God, into a cortier, or into a material & corruptible Temple. Beware of such superstition, and be contented with the hauing of his name, that is to say, ỳ your God is there called vpon, that his Law is there preached to you, that his promises are there set before you, that you be grounded vpon his grace, that you neede not to doubt but that he is your father and Sauior, that you may boldly sue vnto him, and that you be sure he is ready to receiue your requests. That is the intent why your God is minded to be among you.

Of this place we haue a good lesson to gather, which is, that seeing God hath ordeyned means agreable to our infirmitie to serue him withall; we ought to vse them, according to this saying, shun shalt seeke out that place. For Moses hauing warned the Iewes of their rudenesse, commaundeth thẽ to benefite themselues by such meanes as the Lord teacheth them: that is to wit, by the ceremonies which he would giue them. Nowe adayes we haue not the like ceremonies to those that were vnder the lawe. But yet doth our Lord beare with vs also, so farre foorth as hee seeth it requisite, and giueth vs such ceremonies as are meet for vs, in respect wherof we haue the meetinges that are made among vs, as I haue saide afore. And why? To the end that Gods worde should be preached to vs, that we shoulde make cõmon prayers as it were with one mouth, that we should confesse our faith, and christendome together, and that ỳ Sacramentes should be ministred in the companie of the faithful. Seeing ỳ our Lord giueth vs such meanes, it behoueth vs to vse them. For whosoeuer despiseth thẽ, mocketh God openly. Let vs marke wel that whatsoeuer our Lord hath ordeined for our behoofe, we must receiue it, & be diligent to strengthen our faith therby dayly more & more. For if I thinke my self to be so perfect, ỳ I passe not to come at ỳ Church, there to benefit my self with others: it is a diuelishe ouerweening; and it were better for me that I were some poore begger that had neither witte nor vnderstanding, (so as in the meane while I knewe mine owne pouertie) than to be so high minded. For it is the next way to cast me downe to the bottome of hell, when I will needes exempt my selfe from the common order. And therefore whosoeuer hath any zeale and affection to serue God, must doe that which is commaunded here in seeking the place that God hath appointed: that is to say, he must not holde skorne of any thing which he hath ordeined for the confirming of our faith. That is one point.

Againe we must alwayes beare in minde, that when God vouchsafeth to plant his name amõg vs, we must not serue him after our owne fashion, and after our owne rude manner: for his seruice is alwayes spirituall, and the thinges that he sheweth vs here beneath, must draw vp aloft to heauen. And hereby a man may see howe the wretched world hath bin beguiled. For ỳ greatest warrant that we haue of our Lorde Iesus Christs presence among vs, is left vs in his holy supper. There he doeth as it were put himself into our handes, of purpose to be incorporated into vs, as the breade and wine become one substance with vs when we haue eaten it and taken sustenance of it. The sonne of God sheweth himselfe familiarly vnto vs. Yet for all this, we must not imagine that he is come downe from heauen, & that wee handle him here betweene our pawes, or that he is inclosed within any certaine place. No: but his comming downe to vs, is to drawe vs vp to him. Therefore when wee receiue the communion, let it content vs that wee haue there a good and sure pledge of the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, and that we be sure of his dwelling in vs, and of our being one with him. And yet for all that, we must not be so fleshly and grosse, as to ducke downe our heades to it, or to worship it: but rather wee must beholde him by faith in his heauenly glorie, & seeke him there. For wee see howe beastly the papistes became: They beare themselues in hande that there was no God at all, if hee were not shutte vp in a boxe: they worshipped Iesus Christ after such a grosse manner, that they became vtterly brutishe and witlesse. Forasmuch then as we see that the wretched worlde hath beene so bewitched by Satan, let vs resorte to the remedy. For the fault grewe of this, that men followed not the rule that is conteined in this text, Where shal you seek your god. And why? For there is his name: Where as it is saide you shall seeke him there: it is not meant that ye shoulde shut him vp there: but that ye should there glorifie his name. True it is that notwithstanding the chosing of that place, yet the people were still taught to serue him spiritually. For God renounced not his own nature, when he appointed a temple to be worshipped in: but his doing thereof was to the end that the people shoulde exercise themselues continually in his spirituall seruice, notwithstanding that the Ceremonies were outwarde: That is the thing which we haue plainely to gather out of that place.

Nowe we haue to marke likewise, that God helde his people a long time in suspence, before hee shewed them the place where hee woulde dwell for euer: True it is, that whersoeuer the Arke was, there the sacrifices were to bee made. Yet notwithstanding the place was not appointed out, that is to wit Mount Sion. Although the Arke were for the most parte at Silo: yet did it wander vp and downe for a great time, and the people were in continuall waytinge where it should rest: and that was a greate temptation. For see what might haue beene saide: GOD promised vs to choose out a place: but hee doeth it not. And why then shoulde wee not choose a place our selues? And why shoulde not hee like well of vs for so dooing? Howesoeuer the worlde goe, it is not lawefull so to doe. The matter stoode not here vppon tenne, twentie, thirtie, a hundred, or three hundred yeares: but yee see the people were faine to tarie a much longer time, euen to the reigne of Dauid. There had beene a number of chaunges, a great sorte of Iudges one after an other, and a great sorte of gouernours: and yet of all that whyle GOD spake not one worde of that matter, whereby it might seeme he had vtterly forgotten & prouided he had made by Moses. But yet must the people tarie his leasure still. And therefore let vs not bee as though wee stoode vppon thornes, when our Lorde listeth to holde vs at a bay. Let vs beare in minde that hee tryeth our obedience. If hee vtter not thinges vnto vs at the first as wee woulde wishe, it is his meaning therein to trie vs the better, whether wee can finde in our hearts to be subiect to him or no, & whether we haue the lowlines and reuerence to walke in the simplicitie of his word. That is the thing which we haue to mark concerning the first point.

Furthermore, wee must vnderstande, that when God hath chosen a place: it is not for vs to remoue to and fro. And yet wee must not be drowned in so brutishe superstition, as to thinke that GOD is tyed to the place which he hath chosen. Indeede it was an excellent prerogatiue for the citie of Ierusalem to bee called the royall citie of GOD, so as he would vouchsafe to haue his Temple there. But we see what befell them for abusing so honourable a title, and for refusing to serue GOD with pure consciences. After that God had patiently wayted for their conuersion, hee withdrewe himselfe from them. When he sawe the Iewes become stubborne; hee tooke away his glorie from that place. Yea and the Prophete Ieremie had vpbrayded them with it aforehande. Goe your wayes to Silo (sayth hee) and see how desolate it is at this day. And yet notwithstanding Silo had beene preferred before Ierusalem. For Gods Arke had beene there a long time, and yet was that place rased to the grounde. Beholde a thing euen at this present that might make your hayres to stand vp vpon your heades. Doe yee boast of your Temple (quoth Ieremie?) Thinke you that God is so much bounde vnto you that hee can not withdrawe his glory from thence? The threatenings were vttered by Ieremie; but the people followed still their wicked trade: and in the ende Gods glorie was faine to departe, as is saide by Ezechiell. For the Maiestie of GOD was shewed him in the Temple, so as hee sawe there both heauen and earth, and thinges that were aboue nature. And yet for all that, hee sawe also that all vanished away as smoke, and the Temple abode emptie and was vnhallowed, because GOD had forsaken it and giuen it ouer. Whereby wee bee done to vnderstande, that when our Lorde sheweth vs fauour aboue others, we must liue the more warely and fearefully; and that if wee will continue in the possession of the benefites that wee haue receyued, wee must not abuse them. Had Rome beene chosen as was Ierusalem, howe proude would they haue beene? For although they boast themselues to haue the Apostolike sea, and that the Pope is the head of the worlde, so as the vniuersall suprepremacie of all thinges is there: yet haue they not one syllable for them in the holy Scripture, but haue vsurped all that euer they chalenge to themselues, and they haue no colour that God liketh of them. But what though there were some text that God gaue preheminence to that Citie? Yet we see that as now it is a very dungeon of hell, insomuch that they haue not onely burst out into all maner of leaudnesse, and by all meanes wrought dishonour vnto God: but also are become as voyd of religion as Sodome, so as the deuils themselues haue more feare and reuerence to Godward, than al those filthy and stinking rable that rule the roste there. Seeing then that there is such contempt of God, and so outrageous wickednesse there, thinke wee that God is so bound vnto them, that he cannot depart from them? He had said of Ierusalem, This is my resting place: but of Rome he neuer sayde any such thing. And therefore wee see what a fondnesse it is to make such bragges as to say, that howsoeuer the Pope doe, yet is hee still the head of the Church. Nay contrarywise wee haue God for our head, and it is not lawfull for vs to change him, except we wil go to destruction with those whome wee see to haue beene so farre ouerseene after that fashion. And nowe sith wee see that this is fallen out in the Popedome, let vs looke well to it when God dwelleth among vs, that we driue him not away, but that we serue him with all pureneſſe, that as hee reigneth ouer vs at the present, so he may continue with vs to the ende, and neuer forsake vs. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in mind when wee looke vppon the examples that befell both to Silo and to Ierusalem. I say, to Silo where the Arke had beene a long time: and to Ierusalem where the place was appointed for the building of the Temple, according to the promise that Moses had made.

And now hee addeth, That they should resort thither to offer their Sacrifices and burnt offerings, their tithes, all their deuotions, and to pay all their vowes. As if he should say, that they might not attempt any thing vppon their owne fonde heads, but hearken vnto God, and be gouerned by his only word. And herewithall wee must call to minde what hath beene touched afore; namely that Gods ordeining of Sacrifices, burnt offerings, vowes, and such like things, was not for any neede that hee himselfe had of them, or for that they could stand him in any stead: but to keepe the people occupied with those ceremonies, and all bicause men are so fraile and earthly. God then did ordaine Sacrifices. And to what purpose? To instruct folke withall. For when the Iewes came thereunto, it was for them to consider this with themselues: Wee be wretched sinners, wee bee not worthie to approche vnto the Maiestie of our God, for he is righteous and the verie righteousnesse it selfe, he is the fountaine of all cleannesse, and wee on our side bring nothing to him but all maner of filth and vncleannesse. Therefore it stoode the Iewes in hand to haue some meanes to wash themselues and to make themselues cleane before God. It stoode them in hand to bee discharged of their debtes, and of the curse wherein they felt themselues to bee wrapped. For the dooing whereof God gaue them the said Sacrifices. When they came to him, they protested on y one side, Alas Lord, wee deserue death, but wee hope that thou wilt heare vs for the blouds sake which is to bee shed for the washing away of our spottes. Besides this, they had washings, wherby they were made to acknowledge thus: True it is Lord that wee be full of filth, but it is in thee to make vs cleane. And so yee see that the Sacrifices were ordeined to instruct the people, as I sayde afore, and wee likewise haue the same order at this day, which God would haue to continue still among the Christians. And therefore let vs referre all to that ende, namely that in asmuch as wee bee grosse and rude, it is for our behoofe to be exercised with some Ceremonies. Yea, but yet must not those bee of our owne inuenting. For wee shall neuer haue doone, if we goe to worke after our owne fashion. Let vs content our selues with the playne thinges that are conteined in Gods woord. For that is all our wisedome.

Finally Moses addeth, There shall yee eate and drinke in the presence of your God, both you and your households. And when yee come thither your God will blesse you. Heere Moses addeth that when the people submit themselues after the manner aforesaid, God will make them to prosper. That is the effect of his meaning heere. And herewithall he sheweth vs, that euen in the matters y concerne this temporall life, wee must dedicate all things to the seruice and honour of our God. And that is a thing well worthy to bee marked. For wee see howe the worlde is desirous to discharge it selfe in such wise to Godward, that when they haue once serued God a little, they woulde haue ruse for a good while after. As how? When the greatest hypocrites in the Popedome haue performed all their ceremonies in their Churches, as the besprinkling of themselues with their holy water, their crossing of themselues, and their much mumbling of their Missa dicas: they beare themselues in hand that all the day after they may turne their backs vppon God as soone as they haue turned their tayles from the Church, and God seeth them no more. For why? He is well payde, and he must holde himselfe contented. After that manner doe men behaue themselues. And why so? It is bycause that although wee knowe Gods seruice to bee spirituall, yet notwithstanding wee consider not that all things which wee doe in this present life must bee referred to the seruice of GOD: like as when wee eate and drinke, it is trewe that the dooing thereof is to sustayne vs in this worlde till GOD take vs out of it. Againe, wee haue other needefull thinges to bee doone, as the applying of euery mans trade, in traueling and labouring for his liuing. True it is that all these thinges are worldly and earthly, and therefore they must not withdrawe vs from the heauenly things, whatsoeuer come of it. Therefore when we eate and drink, our taking of our bodily sustenance naunce muſt bee after ſuch a ſort, as therewith we muſt find ſome further taſte of the goodneſſe of our God, and ioy in him for that hee is our fosterfather, of whom we haue our dayly bread, as wee profeſſe by asking it at his hande. And when we haue taken our repaſt, wee muſt proceede to take ſuſtenance of ỹ good things that are prepared for vs in heauen, againſt wee departe out of this worlde, that wee may haue ſome beginning of them afore hande, and trauell towardes the attaynement of them dayly more and more. That is the thing which Moſes ment plainely in this place ſaying, When yee haue offered ſacryfice to your GOD, yee ſhall make merry there in his preſence. For the people were woont to make feaſtes at their ſacrifices. And what maner a ones? Holy feaſtes: not that God was honoured by their eating and drinking: but for that it was a teſtifying, that it behoued them to beare in mind that they were all their life long in Gods ſight: So as it behoued them not onely to think vppon him at the beginning of the yeere, or a three or foure times a yeere when they came to Ieruſalem to do ſacrifice, but alſo to thinke thus with themſelues continually: Although wee bee farre off from the Temple, ſo as wee cannot bee there to doe our ſacrifices: yet doth not our GOD fayle to regarde vs: for hee watcheth ouer vs, and wee bee in his protection. Therefore whenſoeuer wee eate or drinke, let vs aſſure our ſelues that hee ſeeth vs, and we cannot hide our ſelues out of his ſight, neither ought wee on the other ſide to forget him, as men commonly doe when they be minded to make merry. They friske it out in ſuch ſort, as if they thought they could get away from him. But on the contrary parte, Gods will was to doe the people of old time to vnderſtand, that whenſoeuer they did eate and drinke, they ſhould thinke that God ſawe them. Wee in theſe dayes haue no ſuch Ceremonie of feaſting in Ieruſalem and in the places neere about the Temple: but yet doth the truth thereof continue ſtill to vs: which is, that we be done to vnderſtand ỹ after we haue beene at the Church, and haue mette there together in the name of our God; when euery of vs returneth home to his houſe to dinner, we muſt not let God alone in the Church, and take our leaue of him, but we muſt beare in mind that God guideth vs, and when we be come home to take our repaſt euery man by himſelfe, we muſt behaue our ſelues as in the preſence of our God, & our mirth muſt be after ſuch a ſorte, as he may bee the witneſſe of our gladneſſe. For we know that if our mirth be vnholy, it is curſed of God. Therefore let vs learne to beare alwaies in mind, that our God is our guide euery where, and that he neuer forſaketh vs, to the intent that we on our parte ſhall not be as beaſtes that runne aſtray. That is the thing which wee haue to marke vpon this text. The Ceremonie thereof was in force during the time of the Lawe. But as for vs nowadayes, let vs bee contented with the truth therof, & learne to vnderſtand ỹ ſith our Lord Ieſus Chriſt is come, we neede no more any materiall Temples nor vs that God is with vs. For our Lord Ieſus hath not for naught taken to him ỹ name of Emanuel (as the Prophet Eſay calleth him) that is to ſay, God with vs. And foraſmuch as our Lord Ieſus Chriſt telleth vs ỹ he wil be with vs continually to ỹ worldes end, let vs not feare but ỹ God will accept vs for his childrē, ſo ỹ in paſſing through this tranſitorie life, we haue our eye alwaies vpō him, and goe forward ſtill towards his heauenly kingdom. For then wil he make all the reſt to be dedicated to his honor, ſo as euen our eating & drinking ſhalbe a peece of his ſeruice, & he will take it in good worth & like well of it, ſo that we do wholly worſhip him, looking to be fed at his hand, not onely with this corruptible foode, but alſo with ſuch nouriſhing foode to himſelfward, as wee may liue with him the ſame life that himſelfe liueth.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with aeknowledgement of our innumerable faults, which we cōmit dayly againſt his Maieſtie without ceaſſing, praying him to make vs perceiue thē better than we haue done, and in the meane while to beare with vs, vntil he haue rid vs quite & cleane from all vices, and vnited vs throughly to his righteouſneſſe. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Munday the vij. of October. 1555.

The Lxxxij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the twelfth Chapter.

8 Yee ſhall not doe according to all the things that you doe heere this day, that is to wit euery man as he thinketh good.

9 For as yet you be not come into the reſting place and the inheritaunce which the Lord your God giueth you.

10 You ſhall go ouer Iordan, and dwell in the land which the Lord your God will make you to inherite. And he wil giue you reſt from all your enemies round about you, and you ſhall dwell in ſafetie.

11 And when the Lorde your God ſhall haue choſen a place there, to put his name in: Ye ſhall bring thither all that I commaund you that is to wit, your burnt offeringes, your ſacrifices, your tenthes, your Heaue offringes, and all the choiſe of your vowes which ye ſhall haue vowed to the Lord.

12 And ye ſhall make merrie in the ſight of the Lord your God, both you your ſelues and your ſonnes and daughters, your Menſeruauntes and your Maide ſeruauntes, and the Leuite alſo that is within your gates: for he hath no part nor inheritance with you.

13 Beware that thou offer not thy burnt offeringes in all places which thou ſeeſt.

14 But in the place which the Lorde will chooſe in one of thy Tribes, There ſhalt thou offer thy burnt offerings, and thither ſhalt thou bring all the things that I commaund thee.

ALthough Moſes haue treated of this matter heretofore, yet is it not without cauſe that he goeth to it againe for ỹ better confirming thereof. For as I haue told you alreadie, Men are alwaies deſirous to paſſe their boundes, & cannot ſubmit themſelues to God, to attẽpt nothing beyond his word. Wherfore let vs marke well that God thinkes it not ynough to tell men once for all, that they ſhould behaue themſelues according to his word & ordinance: but he repeateth ỹ ſame leſſon oftentimes, to the intent that men ſhould take ỹ better heede of it, and marke it the better. And biauſe ỹ people had not as yet the law written as touching the Ceremonies; it is ſaid expreſſely, Ye ſhall not doe as ye doe now. For it behoued the people to bridle themſelues thereafter as they were taught. Howbeit, for the better vnderſtanding of this text, it might bee demaunded firſt, whether the Iſraelites did for a time offer ſacrifice at their own pleaſure, without rule, or without being certaine what God required or allowed. The anſwere hereunto is, that they had alwayes ſome marke to ſhoote at, and that they had not the bridle ſo looſe in their neckes, but that they knew how they ought to ſacrifice. And in deede, wee heare how the Apoſtle ſaieth to the Hebrewes, that frõ Abel forth on, there was no ſacrifice accepted but by faith. And fayth importeth alwayes an obedience, ſo as if men deale at alauenture, there is no faith at all in them. But the Apoſtle ſaieth expreſſely that Abels ſacrifices pleaſed God bicauſe of his faith. Whereupon it followeth, that God hath euer ſhewed his will to ỹ faithfull, ſo as they haue not gone to woorke vnaduiſedly, but haue had ſuch certaintie as was requiſit for them. And whereas Moſes reporteth in Geneſis that Noy ſacrificed of cleane beaſtes vnto God; it doth vs to vnderſtand that Noy muſt needes haue had ſome knowledge of the difference of them aforehand: for it paſſed his vnderſtanding to finde out which beaſtes were cleane. Needes therefore muſt it bee that God had imprinted it in him: and that order hath continued for euer. And ſo is it certaine that the Iſraelites neuer had any ſuch lawleſſe liberties, but that they knew which was the trewe way of worſhipping GOD. Alſo it is expreſſed by Moſes that Abraham would inſtruct his poſteritie in the iudgements, Lawes and Ordinaunces of GOD. Whereby he doth vs to vnderſtand, ỹ although there was not as then any law writtẽ; yet notwithſtanding Abraham failed not to haue knowledge of the things ỹ God required & of whatſoeuer elſe was requiſite. For Moſes coulde haue ſayde at one woorde, Abraham will teach his children to liue well and holily and according to the wil of God: but he ſayeth that he will teache them his lawes, ſtatutes & ordinances. To whate purpoſe? I haue told you before, that it was to magnifie God the better, for his well prouiding of all things requiſite to the ſeruing of him, ſo as the faithful could not ſtand in any doubt, but were ſure of their dutie what they ought to doe. Gen. 18.19.

According hereunto therefore let vs marke, that when the people of Iſrael came out of Egypt, their ſacrificing was not after the maner of the Heathen, according to the inuention of man: but after a heauenly order, that is to ſay, according to the order which God had appointed. Yet notwithſtanding it is true that there was not as yet any ſuch particular declaration made of the Sanctuarie, and of all the appurtenances and things belonging thereunto, as wee ſee is ſet downe in Exodus and Leuiticus. Theſe things (ſay I) were not ſo particularly ſet forth: it was not yet ſayd vnto them, You ſhal haue but one altar, which ſhalbe of ſuch a meaſure, of ſuch a heigth, and of ſuch a breadth: you ſhall haue a Tabernacle of ſuch manner of ſtuffe, of thus many peeces, thus long, and thus broade. You ſhall haue fire burning continually in the Sanctuarie: Your ſacrifices ſhall neuer bee offered without Salte: there ſhall alwayes bee lyght and perfumie in the Temple: The cakes that ſhall bee offered in the Temple ſhall bee of ſuch a faſhion: There ſhall be bread continually before the Lord, and it ſhall be renewed day by day: Againe there ſhall bee a hygh Prieſt, which ſhall enter once a yeere into the narrowe Sanctuarie, and there ſhalbe an Aultar of burnt ſacrifices for him to offer vpon from day to day. Theſe things were not yet thus ſet out: & that is the thing which Moſes meaneth in this text whẽ he ſaith, Ye ſhall not doe after the ſame manner as we doe this day. For there was greater libertie before such time as God had set foorth his commandements to bridle the people withal, and to hold them in such awe as they should not attẽpt any thing vpon their owne head, nor step aside to the right hande or to the left; but followe the thinges roundly which were conteyned in his Lawe.

And heereof wee haue to gather, that after as God vttereth his will vnto vs, so are wee the more bound to follow the same. For if we knew not what to doe, and that God had let vs alone in suspence: we might haue some excuse for our doeing of thinges as seemed good to our selues. For why? Our Lord hath not bin so gratious to vs as to say vnto vs expresly, Thus shal ye doe: And therfore we may do according to our owne skill, seeing we haue no expresse word to ỹ contrarie. After that maner might a man reply. But now that God hath witnessed his will vnto vs, we must stoope to it, and it is not lawefull for vs to adde any thing thereto, For that were as much to say, as we would fall to scanning whether God or wee were the wiser. And what a presumption were it, if wee would needes haue better thinges than those which he inioyneth vs? Yet notwithstanding, if men cannot find in their heartes to yeelde to the thinges that GOD commaundeth, they enter into this diuelish presumptuousnesse of purposing to be wiser than God hath giuen them leaue to be. Wherfore let vs learne, that when we haue once assurance what God alloweth, we must rest wholly vpon it. And herewithall we must marke, that God did not without cause giue the people of olde time so many rules to shewe them how to doe sacrifice. When we read the thinges that are conteined in Leuiticus, to our seeming there bee many needelesse thinges. For God might well haue sayd in feawe woordes, I will haue a Temple, and there will I haue you to sacrifice vnto me. But there are such a sort of commaundements as may make a man amazed and out of his wits. And what is ỹ cause thereof? True it is that all thinges were made and doone according to the patterne that Moses had seene in the Mount, as God himselfe declareth. And thereby we be doone to vnderstand that the figures, (although that at this day we know not perfectly in all pointes to what vse they serued) had a spirituall truth, which may bee referred to the thinges which we haue nowadaies by the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ: for hee is the very body and substaunce of all the shadowes that were vnder the Lawe. When wee reade that the highpriest might not enter into the Sanctuarie, but with such attyre as is there described; wee would thinke it straunge to see a man so disguised, with so many thinges about him. And why was that? We must marke that it was to doe the people to vnderstand, that the partie which was to bee the mediator betweene God and men, was not of the common state and sorte of men, but that it behoosed him to haue a speciall kind of holinesse to preace vnto GOD with all. And that was the cause why hee caryed this tytle in his frontlet vppon his head; Hallowed vnto God, or the holinesse of God, Again, hee had other attyres about him, so as hee coulde not goe or stirre, but there went a noyse or sound from him. For hee ware bells vppon the skirtes of his garments; and that was to shewe that all men ought to giue eare, when it is told them that the sonne of God was offered for vs in sacrifice, so as the same may ring into our heartes, to the intent wee may seeke the meanes to be reconciled to GOD. There were other things whereof a man may perceiue the reason. As the twelue precious stones which the highpreest ware on his brest aloft vpon the Ephod: and the names of the twelue tribes grauen in other stones vpon his shoulders. Whereby was ment that Iesus Christ did nothing for himselfe but all for vs and in our behalfe: and that his going vnto God after that fashion, was to bring vs into his presence, according to this saying of his, I sanctifie my selfe to make you all partakers of the same holynesse. Nowe then wee see the reason of many thinges that were commaunded in the law, and we know it was not without cause that the Apostle saith that all things were made according to the patterne that Moses had seene vpon the Mount: after the which maner Saint Steeuen alleageth the same text in the seuenth of the Acts. Nouertheless wee must note, that Gods meaning was to hold his people in awe, that they might be the surer what to doe, and not bee occasioned to transgresse the true seruice of God, by mingling of any inuentions with it. I say it was Gods intent to inure his people to obedience. For if we shew our selues to serue God otherwise, all that euer we doe will bee nothing woorth: nay hurt it will be sinne. If I weene I doe well, and in the meane while stand in doubt and perplexitie, I must needes goe to wreche. For if wee bee not inlightned by certeintie of faith; God alloweth not any of our doinges. And therefore I say his intent was to keepe the people of old time in obedience. And that was the cause why he willed that there should bee light continually in the Temple. It was not to giue light vnto God, or so doe him any seruice, but to do the rude people to vnderstand, that we must not doe things disorderly, and be as blind folkes when we approch vnto God: but that we must haue light to guide vs by, which light is not to be found in our owne braines, but must come from aboue. And for that cause the holy candlesticke had Lampes vpon it, wherein was oyle continually. Whereby was ment, ỹ if men be not guided & gouerned by ỹ holy Ghost, they do nothing but wander vp & downe, & in ỹ end they shall fall into destruction. Again, God willed that no strange fire should be brought vnto his Altar. Whereby is ment ỹ man must not bring aught of their own to the seruice of God: but we must haue the holy fire, ỹ is to say we must pray to God in ỹ Church, & not go beyond his word, or beyond ỹ doctrine ỹ he teacheth vs. Moreouer it is said ỹ no sacrifice should be offered without salt. And why so? For when we offer things to God without warrant ỹ he alloweth them & requireth thẽ, they haue no sauor at all before him.

him. Thus you see in effect how it was Gods intent to cõfort his seruants, & to incourage thẽ, ỹ they might serue him as became them. And again, it was his will to cut off al occasiõ of adding any thing which they had learned of ỹ heathen.
We know ỹ although mẽ haue no incoũters before their eies, yet they ceasse not to forge many fond things, weening to please god by ỹ meanes.
But when we see examples on either side of vs, it is a further prouocation to vs. Besides ỹ tickilish-nes which we haue already of nature, it pricketh vs forward to say, why should not such a thing be good? For ỹ Iewes had seen ỹ fashiõs of Egypt & of other heathẽ folke: & therfore they might haue bin prouoked to fashion thẽselues like vnto them: & that had bin a corruption to ouerthrow ỹ whole seruice of god. To preuent this mischief, God gaue them a remedy, which held them occupied in such sort, as they had ynough to do in ỹ things ỹ were inioyned them, & had no leasure to withdraw themselues or to adde any deuise of their own. And so we see it was not for naught ỹ God gaue his people so many lawes, rules, & ceremonies at their going into ỹ land of Canaan.
For first of al, it was meete ỹ the figures and shadowes should supply ỹ roome of ỹ truth ỹ was yet vnrenealed, vntil Iesus Christ was shewed openly to ỹ world. Secondly it was Gods will to try ỹ obedientnes of his people by ỹ means. And thirdly it tooke away al occasion of intermedling thẽ-selues w ỹ superstitiõs of ỹ heathẽ & vnbeleuers.

And for ỹ cause doth Moses say, You shal go over Iordan, & God wil giue you rest in the land that he hath promised you, & there shall you dwell in safetie, though you haue enimies round about you. And then wil he choose him a place in one of your tribes, and thither shal you bring your sacrifices, burnt offerings, & oblations. And the very true sacrifice (saith he) is to do nothing vpon your own heads, but to obey your God throughly in all poyntes.
Wil he saith ỹ they shall come into ỹ land, it is to her ỹ Gods deferring to giue his law til that time, was to declare more particularly what things he liked of. For it was his will to performe his promise made vnto Abrahã, before he would establish his owne seruice. And thereby he gaue thẽ to vnderstand ỹ the land of Canaã ought to haue led thẽ to a further thing. For had there bin no further matter in it than ỹ land it selfe; it had bin ynough for thẽ to haue bin setled in it, and there to haue had wherew to finde them abundantly. But God setteth vp his seruice, & sheweth thẽ after what sort they should honor him thẽceforth: & al is referred to our Lord Iesus Christ.
We see then ỹ the land of Canaan should haue guided ỹ Iewes to ỹ hope of ỹ heauenly life, so as they should not haue set their mindes vpon ỹ inioying & possessing of the profits ỹ came therof, but haue proceeded on further & considered ỹ Gods meaning was to raigne among thẽ after a spirituall maner. That was ỹ cause why he listed not to giue thẽ ỹ ceremonies at ỹ first, after the maner ỹ they be set down in Leuiticus: but referred the setting of them foorth, vntill the people were come into their inheritance.

And he saith expresly that the Iewes should dwel in quiet & safetie, notwithstanding that they were lefte round about with enimies. Hereby we bee done to vnderstand, ỹ it was not ynough for thẽ so haue conquered the country, but ỹ it behoued God to maintaine them stil vnder his protectiõ. And as the Israelites were warned of it then so doth the same belong to vs at this day. For God telleth vs ỹ if he hath once called vs, it is al one as if he had made vs to passe the red sea. True it is ỹ he could cal vs without making of vs to chaũge our place.
But let vs consider from whence God taketh vs, & whither he draweth vs. He taketh vs out of ỹ bottom of hell. For so long as we be in our owne Eph. 2. 12. nature, we haue none accesse to ỹ kingdome of heauen, nor any acquaintance with him, but are vtterly banished from ỹ hope of life. And whẽ he hath drawen vs out of such confusion, he pulleth vs vp to himself, to the end we might cleaue vnto him: & although we dwel as yet on the earth, yet notwithstanding wee ceasse not to be heires of ỹ heauenly inheritance. This is a farre greater thing thã to passe the red sea. For we haue an enemy ỹ is greater and much stronger than was Pharao & al his people. For what can we do whẽ Eph. 6. 12.
we haue all ỹ diuels against vs, labouring to hinder our saluation, & being so subtle & hauing all ỹ meanes ỹ can be to do it withall? They be called the princes of ỹ aire, & they reigne ouer our Eph. 2. 2. heades, so as they might easily ouerthrowe vs if God deliuered vs not from them. Therfore it is a great power which God vttereth when it pleaseth him to gather vs vnto himselfe. And yet is ỹ to no purpose, except we be preserued still vnder his hand & ruition. For as long as we bee in this world, we shalbe inuironed continually round a- 1. Pet. 5. 8.
bout w enemies. The diuel ceasseth not to trouble vs; he hath wyles & slights ynow to doe it withall: & we on our side are vnarmed & vnpro-uided: & therefore it standeth vs greatly vpõ, to haue God to bee our defender. Nay, the diuell needes not to seeke farre: for we carie such a nũ- Rom. 6. 12.
ber of vices with vs of our owne, as we might be 13. & 7. 23.
ouercome a hundred times without any great a-doe or noise. Let vs mark wel then, ỹ like as God promised to maintaine the Iewes in the inheritance ỹ he had giuen them: so it standeth vs in hand at this day to be maintained by his hand in the faith: ỹ we may persever in his seruice: or else our saluation wil go to wreck euery minute of an hour, so as there wil be no stay nor continuance.

Now afterward Moses addeth: God will haue you thenceforth to serue him in the place which he shal haue chosen to put his name in. Which is as much to say, as that we must not make this our rest, to inuest this or that; but we must hold our selues in quiet, and abide vnder the gouernment of our God. When we be at rest, then is our mind much troubled w vnquietnes, which is cleane contrary to Gods meaning. For if he giue vs respit, so as we be not troubled with feare & terror, to what end is it? Is it not to the end that we should bee so mild as to say, go to my God, if I were vexed or disquieted in minde, I had some cause to bee caryed here and there and to doe some thing or other. I should bee seeking of sundry remedies.
But now that thou vouchsafest to maintaine me in

in quiet rest; it is good reason that I should bee still, and suffer my selfe to bee ruled by thy word, and to bee bowed which way thou listest, without giuing heade to my lustes, for that were a wicked vnthankefulnesse. That is the thing which Moses ment by that text. And the same matter concerneth vs also. For whensoeuer God vouchsafeth to giue vs rest from our enemies, wee ought to bee so much the quietter in our selues. As for example. If we were among the Papistes, wee might bee in such feare, as we should bee driuen to seeke new shiftes euery day, as the poore soules are which bee among them, who may well say, Alas, I haue no liberty to serue God. How may I behaue my selfe in such sorte as I may not defile my selfe with the superstitions of these Idolaters? Thus ye see how these poore caitifes are faine to seeke al the waies to the wood to find some shift to swim betweene two streames. And no maruell though they be in that taking. In deede it is no sufficient excuse; for howsoeuer the world goe with vs, we must bee fully resolued in our selues to serue God neuertheless. But yet are we the lesse to be borne withal, when we abuse the time of quietnesse that God giueth vs. If we be at libertie, then must nothing withhold vs from hauing our religion pure and clean. For he offereth himselfe to vs dayly in his word. And therefore let vs refraine our selues from wandring after our owne imaginations, and let vs bridle our selues in that behalfe. Seeing that God hath giuen vs rest: let vs followe all that he sheweth, without attempting any thing at all to the contrary. But we see the contrary come to passe. For commonly it falleth out that when men be in rest, so as no man trubbles them nor disquietes them; then fall they to bee lustie or sporting like a horse that is broken loose and hath neither bridle nor saddle. And the experience hereof is too common, in so much ỹ those to whom God hath graunted such fauour as to haue his truth in most safetie, doe thinke it better to behaue themselues after another sorte, and to chaunge their state: and what a kinde of dealing is that? It is a diuelishe rage that we be caried away withall, when wee cannot bee quiet in our selues at such time as god hath giuen vs outward rest, and holdeth our enimies locked vp, so as although they be round about vs, yet he suffereth them not to make any chaunge to disquiet vs with all, and yet we our selues cannot abyde to sit in quiet. Wherefore let vs marke wel, ỹ seeing God is so gracious to vs as to grant vs libertie to serue him purely: it is our dewtie to holde our selues quietly vnder his obedience, without attempting any thing at all. But the Papistes haue well shewed in this case, that they cannot find in their harts in any wise to submit themselues vnto God, and that their intent is not to yeeld him any obedience. For first of all they looked not what God ment by the olde figures of the Lawe, and yet they followed the things that Moses commaunded concerning lightes, perfumes, and apparell. And why was that? Bicause they considered not that all those things were referred to our Lord Iesus Christ. They were much more brutish than the very Iewes that had no faith at all. For the Iewes at leastwise held themselues to the rule that was giuen them. In deede they knewe not the right vse of their Ceremonies: but yet had they an expresse commaundement from God, & durst not attempt any thing against the same. But as for the Papistes, notwithstanding that Iesus Christ bee manifested, and haue accomplished all the thinges that were betokened in olde time: yet haue they vtterly ouerthrowen the good and substantial foundation, and set vp his death and passion vnder foote. They fall to making vp of lightes. And what needes that? The holy ghost hath shewed himselfe visibly in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and also ouer the Apostles, to doe vs to vnderstand that we must no more looke for any outward signes, bicause we haue the truth and substance of them. But what? The Papists haue abolished the infinite grace of God, and vtterly made a mocke of it. They will needes offer sacrifice, and haue attyred their priestes thereafter, disguising them as though it were to the playing of an enterlude. And all this geere is but gugawes, for they be not commaunded of God, and besides that they be done as it were in despite of him. All those things doone in the law was of Gods setting vp: & sith men fall to setting vppe of newe fashions such as God neuer spake of. Againe, they place a mortall man in ỹ roome of our Lord Iesus Christ: as who should say that the office of our Lord Iesus Christ were not welynough knowne and apparant, vnlesse it were figured out with newe and straunge toyes. It is all one as if a body should then seeke the picture of a man when the parte himselfe is present, and shoulde saye, Behoulde this picture, and yet the man is there himselfe who can much better shew himselfe what he is than the picture can doe. Euen so doe the Papists in setting forth of ỹ picture of Iesus Christ. He is named the liuely image of God. Although the father be incomprehensible in his owne maiesty: yet hath he so vttered himselfe in the person of his sonne, as wee may behold him face to face, as sayth Saynt Paule in the second to the Corinthians. But the Papistes draw a Curteine before it, and tell vs that wee must be contented with pictures. It is therefore a turning of all thinges vpside downe, and a bringing in of diuelish confusion. Neuertheless, we see that in the Popedom there is no barking after God saies; but all is doone at the appetite of man. Looke whatsoeuer they do, they name it by the name of Gods seruice. Yea but how is God dewly serued? God sayth, ye shall not doe whatsoeuer seemeth good to your selues: seeing that I haue set you downe a certaine order, but contented to bee gouerned by my word. But what say the Papistes? Mee thinkes this is good. This we take to be excellent: euery man calles to his collup, and in all Gods woord a man shall not finde one syllable of al the things which they terme Gods seruice, and which they will needes haue to passe in their account. For let a man search all ỹ things through which are comprised vnder ỹ name in ỹ Popedom, & he shall find the euerychone to bee forged and builded by men, and that God not onely disclaymeth them, but also condemneth them, bicause he hath shewed vs his certeine and infallible truth, which is the thing that we must frame our selues vnto. Wee see then howe all this doctrine hath beene wickedly throwen downe in the Popedome: and that is bicause they haue peruerted the true vse of the figures of the Lawe, and taken inordinate liberty to doe whatsoeuer came in their heades, without hauing any regarde to the witnessinges that God giueth vs, whereby they might haue sayd, These be the thinges which we ought to do. Now so much the more diligẽt ought we to be in marking this place: For were wee still in doube nowadayes what to doe, so as wee knewe not what thinges God alloweth: then might wee haue some fancie to make vs to sway to and fro. But seeing that God hath tould vs what hee requireth at our handes: that ought to be ynough for vs. And now hath hee abolished, the Ceremonies of the law that were of his owne appointing? Yea. And wherfore? To shew vs therby ỹ he wil not haue vs any more intangled in the outward figures. The reason is added; bicause we haue them throughly fulfilled in Iesus Christ. Now then, if we wil not deface the glory of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and ouerthrowe the benefits that he bringeth vs; we must put away the old figures. Marke that for one point.

Againe, wee see that God is contented with few ceremonies. For it is not his will that wee shold haue any more deckings, lights, perfumes, Cakes, sacrificings of beastes, nor other such thinges: but his wil is that in our baptisme we should haue such an assurance of our washing & clensing by the grace that is purchased for vs in our Lord Iesus Christ, as should continue with vs for euer. Haue we that? We must hold our selues contented with it. For God could haue added more, if he had lifted: but he lifted not so to do. And lyke see heere is a bridle which must reine vs backe to gather vs home to GOD, or else he shall neuer be able to weeld vs. Now what haue the Papistes done? Tush, this simplicitie of baptisme pleased not them, they would needs adde this & that to it at their own pleasure. What say they? Should there be but sheere water? What a thing were that yea, but god hath so ordeined it, Iesus Christ who is the infinite wisedome of God his father hath so appointed it. It is said that last of all God hath spoken to vs by his mouth, and that we must stand to whatsoeuer he saith. Now he hath ordeined it in water alone. Yea, but wee must haue a taper (say the Papists) to represent the holy Ghost: we must haue salt, to represent ỹ heauenly wisedome, and the grace of God: wee must haue diuers other things, and we must haue spittle to make infantes and dum folks to speake, and we must haue a number of other gugawes to mocke God wᵗ all, which are so grosse, and fond, as they can serue for nothing but to make Christianity a laughingstock to the Iewes and Turkes: and the diuell plaies his part with them, when ỹ world is sorted after such a sort. We see thẽ that the Papists haue broken and transgressed Gods order, by adding after ỹ maner to ỹ things which he had set downe certaine, and in such measure as he would not haue men to go beyond them.

But there hath bin yet a farre more outrageous disorder in ỹ Lords Supper. For therein our Lord Iesus Christ ment to shew vs, ỹ his wil is ỹ we shold settle our whole trust in him, bicause we be fed wᵗ his substance, & therfore wee must not seeke life any where else thẽ in him: we must not eate there & drink somewhere else; for we haue there ful sufficiance for ỹ sustenance of our soules, we haue ỹ ful perfection of all goodnesse in him. That is ỹ thing which he sheweth vs by his holy supper, & his wil is ỹ we should receiue ỹ bread & wine in witnes therof, and ỹ it should be distributed among vs, to the end we should be knit togither in him, to become members of his body. But on ỹ contrary part, they haue set vp ỹ abhominable Masse, & wil needs sacrifice Iesus christ. And whereof comes that? Euen of ỹ they vnderstãd not ỹ they vsurpe ỹ office which is allotted to him in the holy scripture, according wherunto he hath offered vp himselfe once for al, & behold, mẽ wil needs take vpon them to counterfet him, for by their owne saying, it is all one sacrifice. Yet for al ỹ, they be but Apes to Iesus Christ. For it becommeth them not to take vpon them the office ỹ is not allotted vnto thẽ. Againe they wil needs make a minglemangle of al things: for they not only disguise & falsifie all thinges that were ordained by our Lord Iesus Christ, but by all likelihood are fully bent to fight furiously against his institution. Iesus Christ ordeined ỹ the bread & wine should be diuided among ỹ faithful. But it is ynough wᵗ them ỹ one doe take it all, & eate it vp alone. Yea & when the people come of purpose to cõmunicate with them, (which is but once a yeere) they be faine to content themselues wᵗ the one part of it, & the other part is reserued. Besides this, there is no opening of Gods word, their saying is ỹ they go to receiue their God, & they make a charme & sorcerie of their consecrating of the bread & wine. Thus ye see how proudly they be turned away frõ Christes ordinaunce, so as they could not deuise howe to fight against him wᵗ more violence. Now sith we see these things, we ought to acknowledge Gods grace in drawing vs out of such confusion. And therewall let vs marke, ỹ Gods standing so much vpon ỹ point ỹ his people shold not do what they liked thẽselues, is not wout cause. For why? we see what mẽ are whẽ they once go astray. Whẽ they once take ỹ libertie, they disguise the trueth, and there is no end of their leasings. Therfore let vs beware ỹ we hold our selues short, specially whẽ God hath giuen vs rest from our enemies, & wee dwel in a place where we may worship him purely, let vs keepe ỹ simplicitie ỹ he commaundeth, & alloweth by his word, wout any swaruing aside from ỹ same how little soeuer it be. For we had need to keepe our selues farre off frõ al corruptions, if we be determined to obey our God. And why so? For mans heart is a dreadfull gulfe. And again, euery mã drawes his neighbor into error after him. Therefore it is like an endlesse maze wherof there is no way out again, vnlesse ỹ thing be obserued that is spoken here: namely that men do not what euery man thinks good in his owne eyes.

And let vs note also, ỳ by this saying, al our intentes (as men terme them) are condemned, though they seeme neuer so good to our selues. For we be no competent Iudges; God must tell vs what is good: & if we on our side find any apparant reasõ, it is altogether but smoke. So then for as much as God in this place setteth his own word, and ỳ testimony of his will, directly against all our deuotions, and al that euer seemeth good to vs: let vs assure our selues that it is not lawfull for vs to followe whatsoeuer we think good. For al that is nothing worth: but al ỳ seruice that wee do vnto god, must be grounded vpon his word & his infallible truth. Without ỳ, we doe but build in the aire, that is to say, all that euer we do is but dreaming.

Now Moses addeth ỳ same things again which he had spoke concerning Sacrifices, Burnoffrings, freewillofferings, vowes & tenthes; namely, that all those things must be done & paide in the place that God had chosen out of one of their tribes. This thing was not so soone performed as I haue shewed heretofore. And ỳ reason is, for ỳ god intẽded to proue his peoples patience, & also for ỳ ỳ people were not worthy ỳ God should stablish the order at the first, in such sort as he had promised it. And that is a thing well worthy to be marked. For we see ỳ gods gracious gifts are oftentimes long in coming. And yet God saith, ye shal no sooner haue spoken, but I will be ready to succour you, yea & my hand shalbe stretched out to helpe you before your words be out of your mouths. So doth God promise: & yet notwithstanding he suffereth vs to linger. And why? Bicause we haue hindered the course of his grace by our vnbeleefe, and we be so reckles, that hee maketh no haste to come vnto vs, bicause we for our part come not to him but ẇ great hardnesse, & as it were limping. Yet notwithstanding he doth alwaies surmount all our vices ẇ his infinite goodnesse, as it came to passe in ỳ which Moses speaketh here. God had promised to choose a place for his Sanctuary to rest in for euer. Now, ỳ thing was to haue bin done as soone as ỳ Israelites were entred into the land of Canaan; & yet it was delayed a long time: insomuch as there passed a hũdred yeeres or twaine, yea three or four hũdred before ỳ promise tooke effect. And that was bicause the people were not worthy to be so satisfied, as God had declared, & therefore were faine to abide the punishment of their sin. For they draue not out their enemies as he had commaunded them, but became negligent: and besides ỳ, they themselues turned away & fell into all maner of vices & corruptions. That therfore was the cause why God withdrew his hand, and performed not his promise till the time of Dauid. Neuertheles, although ỳ people were malicious, although they were vnthankfull towards God, although they prouoked his wrath so many waies to ỳ vttermost: yet could they not vtterly disappoint ỳ promise altogether. The reason was, for ỳ it depended not vpon ỳ desert of men. Therfore although men be vnworthy of it, yet doth God in ỳ end performe whatsoeuer he saith. Yet notwithstanding there is a delay made for a time, to the intent that folke should learne to know their own naughtines, and mislike of it, and be sory for it. Wherfore let vs learne hereby, that if God at any time do shew himselfe vnwilling to put vs in possession of his benefites out of hand: it is bicause that we haue procured the delay of them by our own naughtines. But yet had we not be vtterly bereft of them, so we acknowledge our sinnes and be sory for them: but in the end he will reach out his hand again, to put vs in possession of the benefites wherof we had deserued to be vtterly dispossessed. Truly this will not boot the hypocrites at al: but as for gods children, although it liue in suspence for a time; Yet will our Lord shew in the end, that his goodnesse surmounteth all the sinnes of men, and that he will not faile to be faithfull, though all of vs be lyers. Rom. 3.

Sothly (as I said afore) we must not vnder this colour flatter our selues. For if we be stubborne in euil, our Lord wil welynough find the meanes to discharge himselfe of the promise wherof we had haue beene disappointed. But let vs learne to acknowledge our sinnes; & when we haue acknowledged them, let vs learne also to rest vpon the goodnes of our god, not doubting but that his great and infinite, that notwithstanding all the lets which we on our side shal cast in the way of it, yet it will so get the vpper hande, that in the ende we shall find the welfare from the which we had shut our selues out of doores. That is the thing which we haue to remẽber vpon this text. Moses where he saith that god wold appoint a place, euen such a one as he had chosen out from among all the tribes of Israel, where he would haue his name to be called vpon. The residue which is not bee declared as now, shalbe pursued hereafter.

Now let vs fall downe in the presence of our good god with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs perceaue them better than we haue done heretofore, so as we may mislike them more & more, & thereby be brought back vnto him: and that sith wee for our parts bring nothing to him but vtter corruption, it may please him to graunt vs the grace so to reforme vs by his word, as ỳ sacrifices which we shall offer vnto him may be made holy by faith, and he accept them for our Lord Iesus Christs sake. And for as much as we knowe that he requireth spirituall sacrifices: let vs call vpon him ẇ such humblenes, as we may be hard at his hand, & yeeld him praise for all his benefites bestowed vpon vs, and more ouer indeuer to discharge our selues of our dueties euery man towards his neighbor, bicause those be the sacrifices which he receiueth & alloweth. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth; &c.

On

On Tewsday the viij. of October. 1555.

The lxxxiij. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the twelfth Chapter.

12.13.14. And ye shall be merry, &c.

15 Neuertheleſſe, looke whatſoeuer thou haſt a mind vnto, that maiſt thou kill and eate within any of thy gates, according to the bleſſing of the Lord thy God, which hee hath giuen thee; as of the fallowe deere or of the Red deere: both hee that is cleane and he that is vncleane may eate therof.

16 Onely of the bloud shal you not eate, but you shal powre it vpon the ground as water.

17 Thou maiſt not eate the tithes of thy Corne, of thy wine, or of thine oyle, within any of thy gates, nor yet the firſt ingendred of thy kine, or of thy sheepe, nor any of the vowes which thou shalt haue vowed, nor the free will offringes or the liftinges vp of thy handes.

18 But thou shalt eate thoſe thinges in the preſence of the Lorde thy God, in the place which the Lorde thy God wil chooſe to himſelfe. There shalt thou eate thou, both thy ſelfe, thy ſonne, thy daughter, thy manſeruant, thy woman ſeruant, and the Leuite that is within thy gates. And thou shalt bee merrie before the Lord thy God in all things whereunto thou putteſt thy hande.

MOſes going forewarde ſtill with his matter, commaundeth the Iewes here to bee merrie in the preſence of the Lorde. Nowe although this leſſon haue bin laide foorth alreadie, yet is it requiſite for vs to bee put in minde of it againe. For the treating of it heere is newe againe, is not for nought, neither hath the holy Ghoſt ſet down any thing more than needeth, as I haue ſayde heretofore. Men cannot keepe meaſure in their mirth without ſome diſorder alwayes. And the cauſe therof is, for they haue not an eye vnto God in their making merrie. Nay rather (which worſe is) they thinke it is no mirth at all vnleſſe they caſte their backs vpon him. Whereas we ſhould ſette all our welfare in GOD to haue our reſt there: wee beare our ſelues in hand that wee be beſt at eaſe when we bee furtheſt from him. For this cauſe God ordeined the ſayde Ceremonie of ſolemne feaſting when the folke offered ſacrifice vnto him, as it were of purpoſe to put them in remembrance, that God was there preſent, and ſhewed himſelfe vnto them. Not that the doing thereof once a yeere was a ſufficient diſcharge to them; but that euery man ought to make a leſſon & a generall rule of it, that whenſoeuer they did eate or drinke, they ſhoulde referre it wholly vnto God, accordingly as Saint Paule warneth vs to doe. And thereby wee ſee that the truth thereof abideth vnto vs, though the Ceremonie thereof bee done away. Wherefore let vs learne, that in playing and ſporting after the faſhion of the children of this worlde, wee ſhake off God and bereaue him of his honour. And ſurely it is an vnexcuſable vnthankfulneſſe, when we acknowledge not the author of all welfare. If we referre all our mirth vnto God, it will be alwayes moderate. Beſides that it ſhall euer haue a good end, God wilbe ſo hold vs in aw by his Maieſtie, as we ſhall not paſſe our boundes as we ſee the wretched and blind vnbeleeuers do, who haue no more ſtay of themſelues in their making merrie, than wild beaſtes haue. Now then, if our eies be ſo ſet vpon God, we ſhalbe ſober and modeſt ynough. Marke that for one point.

But beſides this, it is the meaning of Moſes alſo, that fathers ſhould teach their children, and maſters their ſeruants, to do the like. For it is not ynough for a faithful man, that he himſelfe ſerue God: but he muſt alſo gouerne his houſhold, aſſuring himſelf that it is committed to him to the ſame end, & that he is to yeeld account of it. And in deede, what reaſon is it that a man ſhould haue ſuperioritie ouer his neighbors that are creatures faſhioned after the image of God as wel as he, and that in the meane while God ſhould be bereft of his right, and not be vſed as chiefe ſouereigne of all? What a preſumption were that? Were it not an vtter peruerting of the order of nature? Then let vs marke well, that heere wee bee warned to rule our houſes in ſuch wiſe, as GOD may bee ſerued both of great and ſmall. Let him to whome God hath giuen children, beware that he bring them vp in the right religion, & let him do the like to his men and his maides, ſo as God may be the common father and maiſter of them all. That was the thing whereof Moſes intended to warne the Iewes, & in their perſons it behoueth vs alſo to bee taught at this day to doe our duties, in the behalfe. And therewithall wee be exhorted to gentlenes alſo. For although the maiſter of a houſe haue preheminence & authoritie ouer his houſhold; yet notwithſtanding his inioying thereof, muſt not be to himſelf alone: but he muſt impart it to al his whole houſhould: for elſe it is a ſeparating of himſelfe from the ſtate of mankind.

kind,& a barring of the common societie which God hath set among men. Therefore there are here two points to be noted. The one is ỳ whosoeuer hath charge of children and seruants, must do his indeuer to lead them to god. And ỳ other is, that all such as are set ouer others and haue inferior persons vnder them in what state of subiection soeuer it be, ought to be kindharted towardes them, and not to reigne ouer them with tyrannie and crueltỳ,but to rule them w al gentlenesse, so as they make them partakers of the benefites and gratious gifts which they haue receiued at Gods hand.

That which Moses addeth concerning the Leuites,serueth for a further confirmatiõ of ỳ which he had spokẽ of their reioycing or making merrie in ỳ presence of God. For(as I haue declared alreadie) God had appointed ỳ townes of ỳ Leuites to be dispersed among ỳ tribes, to ỳ intent there should be good doctrine taught throughout ỳ whole country. We know what the state of ỳ tribe was, namely how it is said in ỳ second of the Prophet Malachie,ỳ lippes of the priest ought to teach knowledge, & that men shoulde seeke for good doctrine at his mouth,& that the Priests were as the messengers of ỳ liuing God. God then had chosen ỳ tribe of Leuie to be cõtinually among his people, to hold them in the true and pure religion. For had they bin placed all together in some corner by themselues, after the same maner ỳ the rest of the tribes were in their portions;all the people besides had bin wout teaching.But inasmuchas there was no tribe where the Leuites had not some towne allotted to them;by that meanes the seede of Gods word was spred abrode; so as the persons whom God had ordained to gouerne his Church & to haue the charge of mens soules; were so dispersed ỳ the land was furnished with them throughout. And now it is said ỳ the Israelits shal make merrie with the Leuites ỳ were mingled among thẽ. And why? For they might holde the people in some awe. Though there had bin some vntruly persons,yet if they had seene the Leuites, who bare their marks,& were specially chosen to the spiritual gouernmẽt of ỳ Church:it would haue bin a bridle to restraine thẽ wal. Thus the Lord seeing ỳ frailtie of his people, gaue thẽ this help to hold them in order & modestie.As if he shold say, True it is that I haue chosen you for mine inheritãce, & you be ỳ people whom I haue dedicated to my self: but yet is there a special holinesse in the Leuites, bicause they preace into ỳ Tabernacle,and are appointed to teach you the lawe,and to keepe you from running into superstition, & from starting aside to straunge gods. Seeing then ỳ I haue committed this charge to my Leuites:let them be in your company, that by your beholding of them you may be ỳ more prouoked to feare mee, and to bee merrie after a holy manner, without defyling of your selues with the lustes of the world as ye see the vnbeleeuers doe, who rush out into all disorder: that seeing I haue appointed my Leuites to bee as messengers from me, and ỳ my lawe is in their mouth,& their office is to beare abrode my doctrine: you may not be so giuen to disorder, but rather consider ỳ I dwell among you, so as the very sight of my seruants may do you to vnderstand,that I am neere at hand,& that you ought not to separate your selues from me. And herby we be put in minde to behaue our selues soberly and modestly,& that we haue neede to be exhorted dayly thereunto by the word of God, for feare of starting out into vnthriftinesse; for we see what feeblenes is in vs. True it is ỳ when we be once entered into a wicked trade, we shall soone be hardened in it:but to be constãt in doing good,we shal haue much ado. Therefore although we haue some good disposition & desire to serue God: yet must he bee faine to quicken vs vp still from day to day. Wherfore let vs take the meane; which is to resort to the doctrine ỳ should be our guide,and to yeeld willing eare to the warnings ỳ are giuen to draw vs vnto God, & to confirme vs in his feare & obedience. Yea and when wee haue bin at a sermon, and haue heard ỳ word that is preached to vs in his name let it serue to keepe vs in awe,& although wee be tempted to vnthriftines, yet let it be as a bridle to reine vs backe vnto God. Thus you see how we ought to vse the meanes & remedies ỳ God hath appointed vnto vs to redresse the frailtie that is in vs. For otherwise we would start away by and by, and wonder that we should be so vterly strayed away from our God. That is the thing in effect which we haue to remember vpon the first sentence that is set downe here.

Leuit.25.8. & Iosua.3.

Mal.2.7.

Now he addeth afterward, as we haue seen alreadie heretofore, that the people should not sacrifice in all places,but only in the place that God should chuse among their tribes. And that is to hold the people in obedience, that they shoulde not attempte to serue God after their owne fansie & imagination. In deede a man might say at the first blush, ỳ there needed nõ rehearsing of the thing ỳ was easie ynough of it selfe. But the case concerneth not ỳ only vnderstanding of it, there is another reason why god setteth down this saying so often which is that men cannot refraine frõ swaruing one way or other,but that although they be fully minded for a time to serue God,yet doe they start aside in the turning of a hand, bicause they be vnconstant & light minded. Not wout eate therefore doth God rehearse here ỳ same thing that we haue seene here before,namely that the people shoulde not offer sacrifice in all places. And why? For thinges in those dayes were very darke,& it was needefull for the people to be restrained,to know ỳ there was but one God. The heathen had euery one their religiõ by himself, & there was no certaintie at al among them.But it behoued the people of Israel to be fully resolued in this wise. The God whom we worship is the maker of heauen & earth: & bicause we be not able to gette vppe vnto him, hee hath shewed himselfe vnto our fathers, so as wee cannot doe amisse,if wee worship him according to his Lawe.It behoued the people of Israel to bee at that point. For had they had diuers altars, and ỳ euery man might haue followed his owne deuotiõ;what a thing had it bin? There would haue bin bin store of inuẽtions: they would haue brought in diuersitie of religions, euery man would haue deuised what he had listed, & the God of Abrahã shold no more haue bin worshipped after his owne maner. For this cause is it saide, you shall haue but one Altar and one Sanctuarie, and God reserueth to himselfe the choosing and appointing out of the place wherin he wil be worshipped & serued. We see then ỳ here all libertie is taken from men, so as they may not take any thing at all vpon them in the seruing of God. Marke that for one point.

Againe, it is shewed vs here moreouer, ỳ forasmuch as we be subiect to this corruption of forging fond opinions, & consequently of false and wicked opinions out of nomber: God ment to hold his people in ỳ true vnitie of faith, and his choosing of one Sanctuarie was as a band of cõcord, to the intent ỳ men should not run gadding euery one after his owne fansie. To bee short, without agreement in ỳ one faith, wee cannot serue God or doe any thing to his liking. And hereby we see that men do themselues no good at all by their foolish deuotions, but rather prouoke Gods vengeance the more, by their straining of themselues to do the things ỳ they haue deuised of their owne braine. For ỳ very ground of religion is to knowe whom we ought to serue, as our Lord Iesus telleth vs in ỳ fourth of Iohn, saying: We knowe what we worship. Nowe he speaketh there of the Iewes, bicause they had ỳ law, & therein the full certeintie howe God was to be serued. But it is said by the Prophets, that at the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ there should be three Altars, one in Egypt, another in Assyria, & the third in Iewrie. Whereby is ment ỳ God shalbe serued euerywhere. For the materiall Altars were beaten downe. As for the things that are termed Altars in the Popedom, they be deuilish abhominations: for their setting of them vp is to sacrifice christ on thẽ. But he hath offred himselfe once for all, according to ỳ office ỳ was giuen him by God his father. And therefore it was high treason & blasphemie against God to haue altars nowadayes among Christians. For Iesus Christ is our onely spiritual Altar: & when we be knit vnto him, then is God duely worshipped and as he himselfe requireth. Wherefore let vs learne ỳ although the ceremonie be disanulled, yet ỳ meaning of it may greatly profite vs: which is, ỳ we must serue God, not by turning aside euery man after his owne conceites, but by linking our selues together in ỳ bond of faith & by agreeing rightly together. And whereupon shal this concord be grounded? Vpon Gods word & vpon our Lord Iesus Christ, who is his very wisdome. For if we resort to him, we shal haue a certaine marke to shoote at, & such a one as cãnot deceiue vs. But as soone as we swarue aside from him, be it neuer so little; by & by we vanish away in our own foolish thoughts. Thus ye see in effect what we be caught as concerning this place.

Mich.5.3 & 2.3.40.

Heb.9.28.

And let vs marke wel that it belonged to God to choose the place, as hath bin told you before, so as ỳ Israelites had not leaue to spie it out thẽselues, & to say, This is the fittest place: but God bare all ỳ stroke alone. Hereby we be done to vnderstãd ỳ it is not for vs to set vp a seruice of god after our own lyking, but ỳ we must herken vnto him, and so receiue his woord as nothing be added thereunto, as shalbe declared yet better in ỳ end of this chapter. And verily when as he saith that he will chose it in one of their Tribes: thereby he doth vs to vnderstand that we must not enuie our brethren, though one of them be more honoured than another. Let it content vs that god accepteth our seruice; & although some of vs be lesser and some greater and excellenter than others: yet must not that breed any hartburning among vs, nor occasion vs to be greeued at Gods graunting of more fauour vnto others than to vs: but euery of vs must doe his dewtie in his owne degree, & seeke no further but to bee receiued at Gods hande all togither, both they that goe before, and they that come after.

Furthermore let vs marke well, that whereas God saith he wil chuse that place to put his name in: it is not ment that his beeing was shut vp in the Sanctuarie: but onely that foolke shoulde there haue a recorde of his presence. And that was to the intent that the Iewes shoulde not busie their heads about grosse imaginations, as we see men commonly inclined to doe. When God stoopeth to imparte himselfe familiarly vnto vs, wee take occasion to make him some Image; if wee could wee woulde tye him to some stone or to some piller, or coope him vp in some corner: and wee thinke wee haue him not with vs, except wee haue some visible signe of him. And this was the cause why men made puppets and Idolles to represent God by. For this cause he telleth them expresly that he himselfe wil choose the place wherein hee will bee worshipped and serued, howbeit not that his being shall bee shut vp there, but onely that his name shall bee there, that is to say, that hee will bee called vppon there. And moreouer the Iewes were to bee put in minde, to looke vp to the heauenly patterne that Moses sawe on the Mount, as oft as they looked vpon the arke of couenant and the other signes that God had giuen them, and thereby to bee led to the spirituall seruice which was figured by those things, wherof Iesus Christ was ỳ very substance. True it is that euen at this day still God commeth downe or stoopeth vnto our rudenesse; insomuch that it is his will wee shoulde haue temples or Churches to assemble in, and thither we come together to make our cõmõ prayers there. Againe, Baptisme is ministred there, for Iesus Christ also is there amõg vs & ruleth ouer vs, & in his supper we haue an assurance ỳ we be knit vnto him, & grafted into his body, so as we haue but one life cõmon to vs all. Yet must we not be held downe by the signes and tokens that God giueth vs for our helpe; but wee must rather bee conueied vp by them, and not bee wrapped in superstitiõ, to worship god after a fleshly maner. Wee must consider that hee filleth all thinges, yea euen abyding in his heauenly glory, and there must wee seeke him by fayth. When wee thinke vpon him, we must not draw him downe hither to haue him here after a fleshly manner, but wee must mounte vp by faith into heauen where he dwelleth, as the scripture speaketh of him. That therefore is the thing which we haue to remember vpon this place besides ỹ thinges ỹ haue beene declared already. For I doe but put you in remembrance of the thinges that haue beene discoursed more at large heretofore.

Exo.25.40; Hebr.8.5.

Col.2.17.

Pſal. 2. 4. & 113. 5. & 123. 1.

Nowe afterward here is leaue giuen by God to his people, to eate flesshe throughout all the Iande of Chanaan, so it be not of any Sacrifices, tithes, burntofferinges, Heaueofferinges, or firſt fruites. It ſhall be lawful then for you to eate of all common flesshe euery where; but as for that which ſhal haue bin ſacrificed vnto me, let it not be eaten of in any other place, than in the ſame which I ſhall haue choſen to ſet my Sanctuarie in. Howebeit, he addeth one worde more here, ſaying: according to the bleſſing which thy God ſhall giue thee. Here wee ſee firſt of all, that it were not lawfull for vs to eate one bit of breade, vnles we were ſure in our minds that God giueth it vs and that wee haue leaue of him to eate it. And that is the cauſe why Saint Paul requireth faith where he ſpeaketh of eating and drinking: ſaying that whatſoeuer is not of faith, is ſinne. And whereof treateth hee there? Euen of the eating of flesshe or of herbes, of bread or of fiſhe, and of all manner of fooder and hee ſaith that it muſt be doone with faith. As howe? Some will ſay that faith is too precious a thing to bee mingled with corruptible meates. Yea, but wee muſt be ſure in all our life, that wee attempt not any thing which may diſpleaſe God, or that is not lawfull for vs to doe by his leaue or warrant giuen vnto vs. Therefore in the foreſaide text, by the worde Fahh, Saint Paul meaneth the recorde that we haue in our eating and drinking, that God ſheweth himſelfe a father to vs, by giuing vs foode to nouriſhe our bodies withall: and that our vſing of the benefites which the earth yeeldeth, is not by ſtealth as though wee woulde robbe him of them; but as it were by receiuing them at his hand. When a father giueth his children euery one his pittance, ſaying, hold here, & eat it: it is no more than God doth dayly vnto vs, when we be certified by his word, ỹ he hath giuen power to ỹ earth to bring foorth corne & wine for our vſe, & deliuered vs ỹ beaſts & all other things to eat of. We muſt aſſure our ſelues ỹ the growing & encreaſing of victuals in the worlde commeth not by haphazard, but of Gods ordinance, who hath appointed them to feede vs through his goodnes. I tolde you this doctrine is verie needeful. For what a thing were it, if we could not eat a morſell of bread without offending God? And yet S. Paul auoweth it to be ſo. And why? For if in my eating & drinking at all times & in all places, I know not that I am beholden to God for ỹ good things ỹ hee hath ordeined for mee: it is al one as if I ſtole it frō him: I do but filch it frō him like a dog or a cat, which taketh that which was not ordeined for her. Yee ſee then that that is one fault.

Againe, it is as it were a burying of God, whē men knowe not that it is he which giueth them the foode for their ſuſtenance. If wee bee not fully perſuaded of that; then is God diſappointed of the honour that belongs to him, ſo as wee acknowledge him not for our father and ſuſtcrer, but become ſo brutiſh that wee minde no more the life which is prepared for vs in ỹ kingdome of heauen. But his taking of ſuch fatherly care of vs in this world, is to leade vs vp higher thereby. And ſo wee ſee that vnleſſe we bee ſure that God giueth vs leaue to eate and drinke according to his bleſſing; wee bee but as brute beaſtes, and much worſe than they. Againe, on the other ſide, who giues vs authoritie to deuoure Gods benefits? Shall wee wretched creatures which offend God without ceaſſing, preſume to do it of our own heads, without conſidering that wee haue thoſe things of his free goodneſſe, and that they belong not to vs otherwiſe than of Gods good will, who vouchſafeth to ſhewe him ſelfe liberall towardes vs? Surely then doe wee rauin all things to vs without any right or title. Therefore are we blame worthie euerie way for our eating and drinking, till wee knowe that GOD is the giuer of all. And hereby wee bee doone to vnderſtande further, that in our eating and drinking wee muſt not obſerue the traditions of men, but content ourſelues with the teſtimony of Gods good will. And thereunto alſo doeth the holy ſcripture referre vs by condemning the fond toyes that men deuiſe of themſelues, as when they ſay, it is not Lawfull to eate flesh vpon ſuch a day, this muſt be done and ỹ muſt be done. And what authoritie haue men to bid and forbidde ſuch thinges? For the Pope and all his rable are not able to make a flye flye: and ſhall they forbidde vs to eate beefe, mutton, or any other of the thinges that were made for our ſuſtenance? What elſe is their vſurping of ſuch authoritie, than a robbing of GOD of his ſoueraignetie ouer vs? Now then let vs haue an eye to the will of our GOD. And ſith wee knowe that hee hath giuen vs all meates without exception: let euerie of vs vſe them ſoberly, and bee contented to bee ruled by his worde: for to him onely doeth it belong to lay Lawes vpon vs, and it is not for any mortall man to preſume ſo farre. If any man take that vpon him which is not due to him, let vs deſpiſe him, yea and abhorre him, as one that goeth about to ouerthrowe ỹ authoritie of God. And ſo ye ſee what wee haue to marke in Gods ſuffering & giuing leaue vnto his people, to eate fleſh in all places, ſo it were not ſacrificed. As if he ſhould ſay: In your eating and drinking conſider well what is lawefull for you. And howe may you diſcerne that? By my word. Giue your ſelues once ouer vnto me; and you ſhal no more be afraide of any thing. If men lay new Lawes vpon you; make no account of it: for it is ynough for you, that ye haue leaue at my hande.

And nowe Moſes addeth expreſly, according to the bleſſing which thy God ſhall haue giuē thee. whereby he doeth vs to vnderſtande, that euerie man muſt haue an eye to his owne abilitie, and thereby rule his deſires. For if the riche man hauing whereof to liue, doe fare according to his abili-

abilitie, and the poore man will needes fare as wel as he: he must needes smart for it. And God liketh not of it when he that hath not wherewith will needes fare as dayntily as hee that is riche. Indeede we must alway beare this lesson of Saint Pauls in mind and put it in practise, namely that he which hath abundance glut not himselfe till he burst, ne giue himself to his pleasures, according to his saying in the xiii. to the Romanes, that we must not haue a care of our flesshe to cocker it too much: For our flesshe desireth not the best things, and our appetites are inordinate: and therefore the following of them were but a confused disorder. Although the richer sort haue great store of all thinges, yet must they not pamper themselues out of measure, so as they shoulde at any time fall into disorder, and not indeuour to bestow of their abundance vppon such as are in neede and pouertie. For Gods meaning is to try the charitie of such as haue wherwith, by giuing them more than they themselues haue neede of, to the intent they shoulde not bee nigardly of the thinges which they haue, but be helpefull to their poore brethren & to such as want. Neuerthelatter, a rich man may fare according to the blessing ỹ God shall haue giuen him, and the poore man must content himselfe with browne breade if he haue none other, and not straine himselfe to eate whytebread as wel as the riche man, but beare his pouertie patiently, and pray to God to nourishe him as it were with Manna from heauen: And although hee haue nothing else but drie bread to feed on, the same must serue his turne in steede of all other vittels. That is the thing in effect, which Moses meant to shewe vs here. And it is a verie good and profitable lesson: for thereby wee bee doone to vnderstande that if God giue vs abundaunce, it is a continuall putting of vs in remembrance that hee dwelleth among vs, that wee bee not as these drunkardes which in a yeare when there is store of wine, do despite God and plaie the very brute beastes, so that if they may not drinke wine till they spewe it out again, and powre it in as it were with tunnelles, they haue neuer enough. Let vs beware of such beastlines: and let vs beare in mind that we be in Gods presence. And surely if wee beare him that reuerence, we will bee ashamed to cram our selues like dogges or swine, and to deface his image in vs by vnmeasurable eating & drinking til we burst againe. Lo what we haue to beare in minde. Likewise on the other side, if the yeare be barren, so as there be small store of wine, and corne is deere: This text teacheth vs to thanke God for it, and to cut our morsels the smaller, and to bridle our selues. For why? It is saide that our eating must bee after as our God hath blessed vs, so as we must haue an eye to the abilitie that God hath giuen vs: and accordingly as we haue wherewith, so must euery of vs learne to rule himselfe, and not play the vnthrifts ỹ are led away by their lusts, which put all into the platter (as they say) to satisfie their bellies withal. Some are so delicate of their diet, that rather than they wil forbeare when God sendeth them scarcetie, they will sell their cotes, yea and their dishes and platters too. Such folke might consider, that it were good for them to keepe somewhat in store, for afterwarde, to the intent that if they fel into sickneſse or any other necessitie, they might haue wherewith to releeue them. Had they anie honestie or any stay of themselues, to thinke that it is Gods will to deale sparely with them at that time: Had they anie consideration at all I say: they might say, Lord thou hast all good thinges in thine hand, and that so plentifully, as thou couldest wel giue vs much more: but thou intendest to try our patience. Vouchsafe therefore to blesse the little that thou hast giuen vs, so as it may suffice vs. Let it be as the Manna to vs, that we may perceiue thy fauor towards vs, euen thereby though there were none other thing. But what? All our minde is vpon the filling of our bellies, yea euen without regarding how far God giueth vs leaue to goe. So much the more therefore ought all men both rich and poore, to mark wel this text. Let ỹ man of wealth say in himselfe, it is the blessing of my God: & sith it is so, I must yeelde him account of it, and I must looke verie well about me howe I may vse these thinges aright according to his ordinance: so as I giue not my flesshe whatsoeuer it liketh or lusteth for, but that I behaue my selfe soberly howsoeuer the worlde go, and also imparte my ouerplus to such as haue want or neede, and releeue them with mine aboundance. Let the rich deale after that maner. Againe on the otherside, let the poore bethinke them thus: Wel, God giueth vs not wherewith to finde our selues, and therefore it behoueth vs to beare our poore state patiently, and not giue head to our lustes: for then shall we but prouoke Gods wrath, by following our deintie desires & such other like thinges: wherefore let vs be well aduised to content our selues with the little that he giueth vs.

Thus ye see that although the rich enioye their ease & haue wherewith to maintaine their delights for the present time: Yet they must bee of such mind, that if God list to bereaue them of all things the next morrowe, they must not repine to giue ouer al, but so humble themselues as they may say, Lord I will liue to day according to the blessing which thou hast giuen mee: and if thou list to impouerishe mee to morrowe, doe thy good pleasure: onely graunt mee the grace to learne to content my selfe with anie other state of liuing than I liue in to day. Whereas to day I fare according to mine abilitie; if thou list to bring me downe to browne breade, let mee abide to be brought thereto, and let my necke be pliable to receyue thy yoke. That is the effect of the thinges which we haue to marke vppon this sentence of Moseses, where he declareth that euery man must moderate his dyet and fare according to gods blessing, that is to say, according to the abilitie that God giueth him wherewith to doe it.

And wee bee further warned to beware that we deuoure not all that euer wee can get by pilfry and wicked trades: for that is no blessing of God. When a man hath raked other folks goods to him by fraude and Leawde dealing, can that be called Gods blessing? True it is that riches come alwayes from Gods hande: but yet whosoeuer he is that inricheth himselfe by rauin & fraude, is reiected of God, and vtterly misliked of him. So then, let vs marke that although a man coulde by wicked shiftes gaine wherewith to feede himselfe fat, yet must he not take such libertie to him. For why? In this place we bee restreyned backe to the blessing of God. Were this point wel marked, we should not see so much naughtinesse in the world as there is to be seene nowadayes. For all the care is howe to gette wherewith to maintaine vs: but as for whether the meanes be Lawfull and reasonable, no man entereth into the examination of that: but so he may scrape and catch, he neuer takes any further care at al. We see what rauening there is, we see what deceitful and leawd dealing there is: in somuch as there is not anie state or trade of men in ỹ world this day, which is not so peruerted as wold irk a man to think vpon it. Euery mans seeking is to pul to himself ỹ goods of other men, & commonly all is fishe that comes to net. For why? We haue no regard of Gods blessing, but we winde them in vnto vs, some by lying, and some by faire glosing. And to what ende? Forsooth to finde our selues withal. Beholde, God calleth vs all, & telleth vs that his blessing shall light vpon vs if we followe his worde simplie: & that he will not faile vs in any thing, at leastwise if we indeuour to doe what we can. Indeede we may hap to fare hardly nowe and then, so as God will not feede vs so full as we woulde wish: but yet howe soeuer wee fare, hee promiseth to giue sustenance to as many as resort vnto him. But wee disappoint our selues of it by our owne leawdnesse. For first and formost we be troubled and tormented with distrust: secondly our vnordinate lustes doe tempt vs and tickle vs: & thirdly the diuell doeth so blinde vs, that wee make no conscience of pilling and polling, of deceytuing and beguiling, and of giuing our selues to al naughtinesse, so we may bee fat fedde, and liue deintily: as for all the rest wee make none account of it. And therefore let vs remember this worde Blessing, as whereby God sheweth vs that we must resorte wholy vnto him, accordingly also as our Lorde Iesus Christ teacheth vs by bidding vs to aske our dayly breade of God his father, where by wee protest that wee holde all thinges of his blessing.

Finally he addeth, That as well the cleane as the vncleane may eate thereof. Our Lorde doth not here giue leaue to the vncleane, to eat the fruits of the earth with an euill conscience: but his meaning is that there is not so great streitnesse to be vsed in the receiuing of the cõmon meats and drinkes, as in eating of the sacrifices. For ỹ eating of the Sacrifices, was to another purpose. In those holy feastes aforementioned, it behoued them in any wise to be cleansed afore hande according to the ceremonie of the lawe: so as it was not for any man to come to the Temple and to eate of the Sacrifices, vntill hee hadde first cleansed himselfe; and water was set readie at the comming in of the dore for the same purpose. But here it is saide that there was no such straite bondage to bee obserued in their common eating and drinking. That is the verie meaning of Moses. But yet must wee marke also therewithall, that all that euer we touch is defiled by our vncleanesse, if wee our selues be not dedicated vnto God, according to this saying of Saint Paules, that all things are cleane to the pure and cleane, which haue their consciences right before God, and cleansed by faith. Tit. 1. whereas on the contrarie part, the vnbeleeuers and such as haue no feare of GOD, defile the breade and wine by their touching of it, and do but make all thinges vncleane, so as Gods creatures are infected by ỹ filthines that is in them.

This must wee holde for a rule: and specially in eating and drinking wee must haue the saide cleannesse of dedicating our selues vnto God. Neuertheless wee must note that we cannot at all times be so well disposed in our eating and drinking, as when wee come to the Church: there we must bee of an other minde. True it is that euen in our laboring, and in our looking to our household, wee ought to haue God alway before our eyes; and that when we eate and drinke, we ought to doe it in his name, according to the lesson that I alleadged out of Saint Paule. But when wee come to the Church God is yet neerer vs and more familiar with vs. For our Lorde Iesus Christ assureth vs that he is there among vs when we come together in his name: and by our holding vp of our hands towardes heauen, wee shewe that our comming thither is to present our selues in the sight of our God. And therefore wee must haue a more singular and earnest affection when we bee come thither, than when wee bee doing of our common businesse. Ought there not to bee a difference put betweene the Lordes supper and our common eating and drinking? True it is that whensoeuer we receiue our ordinarie repast, we ought to call vpon God and to giue him thanks, or else wee bee defiled. But yet when wee come to the holy supper, wee must be rauished after an other fashion, as though wee were no more in this worlde: Our mindes must not runne vpon the feeding of our bodies, but vppon the sonne of GOD, who calleth himselfe our life, telling vs that his flesh is our foode, and his bloode our spirituall drinke. And therefore it is meete that it should be separated from the thinges that belong to the common order of this earthly life.

Wee see then that the meaning of Moses in this place where our Lorde giueth vs libertie to eate and drinke, is that wee should call vppon him: and that although there be infirmitie in vs, yet must not we therefore forbeare ỹ libertie and leaue that GOD giueth vs to vse the foode which he hath appointed to our vse: which thing wee may doe with a quiet conscience, not doubting but that GOD doeth well like of it, seeing hee hath giuen vs such warrant, & hath dispensed with vs of his owne

free goodnes. And specially that when we resort vnto him, we must retyre & call our selues backe from al earthly cares, ỳ we may mount vp wholy vnto heauen. As for example, when we be to receiue the holy supper, or when wee see ỳ Christ assureth or warranteth vs by Baptisme, ỳ we be made cleane by him, and newly reformed, so as he accepteth vs and taketh vs for his members, to the intent that his fathers iudgement seate shoulde not be terrible vnto vs: when we thinke on these thinges I say, it becommeth vs to bee drawen to the heauenly life, and to be as it were secluded from our earthly cares, that wee may the better sticke vnto our God, and fare the better by it all the dayes of our life.

And nowe let vs fall downe in ỳ presence of our good God w acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs perceiue thé daily more & more, & to reach vs so to serue him, as we may abide continually in the pure simplicitie of his worde, without adding aught to it or taking aught frō it, vpon our own head. And seeing we know our selues giltie before him of so many sins committed against his maiestie, let vs flee for refuge to his mercie, and not doubt but that seeing hee hath vouchsafed (not to haue a visible Sanctuarie among vs, but) euen to knit himselfe to vs in the person of his sonne Iesus Christ, wee may assure our selues that he alwayes hath cōpassion of vs, to receiue vs, notwithstanding that we be so wretched creatures as we bee well worthie to bee cut off from him, and to bee vtterly thrust out of his kingdome. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Wednesday the ix. of October. 1555.

The Lxxxiiij. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the twelfth Chapter.

19 Beware that thou forsake not the Leuite of all the time that thou shalt be vpon the earth.

20 When the Lorde thy God shall haue inlarged thy borders as he hath saide, and thou sayest, I will eate flesh: if thy mind be desirous to eat flesh, eat thou whatsoeuer flesh thou hast a mind vnto.

21 If the place which the Lord thy God will choose to put his name in, be farre from thee, thou shall kill of the Oxen and sheepe which the Lord hath giuen thee, as I haue commanded thee, and thou shalt eat of it within thine owne gates, according to thine owne hearts desire.

22 As the Fallowdeere and the Reddeere are eaten: so shalt thou eate them. The cleane and the vncleane may eate therof alike.

23 Onely take heede that thou eate not the bloud: for the bloud is the life, and thou mayest not eate the life with the flesh.

24 Therefore thou shalt not eate it, but shalt powre it vpon the earth as water.

25 Eate not of it therfore: that it may go wel with thee and with thy children after thee, when thou shalt haue doone the thing that is right in the sight of the Lorde.

26 But as for the halowed things that are in thy custodie, and thy vowes, thou shalt take and carie them to the place which the Lorde hath chosen.

27 And thou shalt offer thy whole burnt offerings both the flesh and the bloud, vpon the altar of the Lord thy God. And of thy Peace offrings thou shalt powre the bloud vpon the altar of the Lorde thy God, and thou shalt eate the flesh.

28 Take heede and hearken to all these words which I commaund thee, that it may go well with thee and with thy children after thee for euer, when thou shalt haue done the thing that is good and right in the sight of the Lord thy God,

WE sawe yesterday why God appointed the Leuites to haue cities here & there throughout the land of Iurie: namely for the maintening of the true & pure religion among his people. For if any of them would haue turned away to superstition, or idolatry, those whom God had appointed to his owne seruice, might haue amēded them by good admonitions. So by ỳ meanes was ỳ seed of good doctrine sowen euery where. now pursuing ỳ same matter Moses addeth. That the peo-

people should bee so vniuste that they defrauded them not of their right. And not without cause. For as I haue told you before, God had appointed them of purpose to serue him, and the greater part of them also to teach his people, that his lawe might be knowen. Seeing it was so, it was good reason that they shoulde haue wherewith to find and maintaine them. For in very deede a part of the inheritance belonged to them, because they were descended of the linage of Abraham. But GOD had put them from it, to the ende they shoulde not bee troubled neither with tilling of the grounde nor with any other businesses, but onely giue themselues all wholly to the doing of their office. And it is not without cause that Moses plainely exhorteth ỹ people to doe their duetie in this behalfe: for wee see the vnthankfulnesse of the worlde. The Idolaters can finde in their hartes to maintayne their priestes, and they spare for no cost: but as for them that serue God purely, there is commonly no account made of them, as hath beene seene in al times. We see how God himself complaineth that he was defrauded both of his first fruites and also of his offeringes, and of all the residue which he had appointed to himselfe in his lawe. But if a man had inquired howe the heathen behaued themselues towardes their idols: he should haue founde that they were willing to spende the most part of their substaunce in their superstitions. We see then as I haue told you alreadie, that the worlde is so thankeles towardes the liuing God, ỹ if men be not throughly quickened vp, they let slippe al that euer God commaundeth, and coulde bee contented that such things should neuer be spoken of. Specially as for those whom God hath ordeined to preach his word, men can find in their hearts, not onely to set light by them, but also to forsake them vterly. And why? It is because god rebuketh vs for our faults, but we wold he were further off from vs, & that he would lay the bridle in our neckes, so as euery man might do what he listed: & therfore it greeueth vs to be touched by Gods word. But yet for al that, if those ỹ haue that charge committed to them do their duety; they must be importunate in calling vpon vs, by rebuking, exhorting, and reprouing vs, that they may ouercome vs by their liuely rebukes & sharpe threatnings. Now, that is not ỹ thing which the world coueteth & desireth. Nay ỹ world had leuer to maintaine such as shoulde neuer speake worde of it, than to haue a preacher that woulde rebuke sin liuelyly. And if it were in ỹ worlds choice, it had alwayes leuer to maintaine a whole couent of Munkes & Chanons to houle out with ful gorge, than to find one preacher that would speake as he ought to do. Men can be contented to haue Organs. And why? For they put men to no griefe by rebuking their sins. But as for such as preach Gods worde to the quick, men could find in their hartes that they were rid out of the worlde, if it were possible. And therfore it is not without cause ỹ our Lord saith he will not haue them forsaken, which beare abrode ỹ true doctrine in his name. For by that meanes folke bereaue themselues of the foode of life, in that they refuse to maintayne those that bring them the doctrine of saluation, which is all one as if they meant to starue themselues for hunger. And that is the cause also why Saint Paul standeth so much vpon ỹ matter. Certaine it is that he sought not his owne profit. Insomuch that he forbare to take his due wages in some places, because he sawe that men grudged at it. And he chose rather to take it of other Churches, where he serued not, than of ỹ Corinthians, because of the vnthankefulnesse which he sawe among them. Nay, he chose to labour with his owne handes, rather than hee woulde giue them any occasion to speake ill of him. Thus haue we a man that is not giuen to his owne profite, but rather forbeareth willingly euen that which God had granted vnto him, and yet he ceaseth not to tel them, that ỹ preachers of Gods worde ought to be found & mainteined. And why is that? Because wee see the diuelles subtletie, who desyreth nothing so much as that the Churches shoulde bee destitute of good shepeherdes. Againe Saint Paul hath an eye to the spitefulnesse of the worlde. And that is the cause why he standeth so much vpon the said point, That those to whome God hath committed the charge of the preaching of his world, should be faithfully mainteined. It is a great matter (saith he) that we for bringing you ỹ spirituall goods vnto you, should haue wherwith to sustaine our bodies. It is a very faire recompence. And yet if ỹ mislike you, you shewe great malice, and that yee set but litle store by this inestimable treasure sent you of God. Now we see to what purpose Moses commendeth here the tribe of Leuie vnto them. It was not so much for the profite of those that were to be maincyned by the offrings, first fruites, and tithes; as for the common benefit of the whole people. For it was to the end they should be maintained altogether in the true vnion of faith, & that they might alwaies haue men to put them in mind to liue in obedience towardes God, and that the Religion might be preserued in ỹ purenes therof. This is not for ỹ peculiar benefite of ỹ Leuites, but for ỹ general welfare of the whole Church of God.

Now hereupon Moses repeateth ỹ same thing again which I haue expounded heretofore: that is to say, That the Iewes might eat fleshe throughout all the land of Iurie, conditionally that the sacrifices were reserued for the sanctuarie, & for the temple: and the time were come that it were builded. I haue told you already that the cause why God gaue such leaue, was to the end that men should learne to refraine frō the attempting of any thing which they were not sure to be lawfull for them to do. And howe shall we knowe that the things which we doe are acceptable to God? By hauing his word which he giueth vs. For it is not for vs to be further of his counsell, than he discloseth vs to vs. To be short, it is shewed vs here, that in all our life wee must not stirre one finger, except we be sure that GOD hath giuen vs leaue. Now he for his part leaueth vs not in doubt, but hath giuen vs a sure and vnfallible rule, so as we may alwayes discerne the certaintie at leth-

wise if wee will holde our selues contented with the thing that God alloweth, without adding any thing to his doctrine and his lawe. For there he hath vttered his wil in such wise vnto vs, that if we want any thing nowe, it is because we list not to harken to him that hath all dominion ouer vs. As for example, all the doubtes that are among the Papistes proceede of nothing else but of a foolish curiositie which they haue to do better than GOD commaundeth them. O (say they) I woulde be so holy as nothing might passe from mee which shoulde not be good. And is it not enough to obey GOD? Yes (say they), but I would do yet more. He ỹ passeth those bounds, shall but torment himselfe, and dwell in vnquietnesse al the time of his life, as wee see these hypocrites are, which are alwayes tossed and turmoyled with some doubt. And what is the cause thereof? It is a reward which they deserue verie well because they will not rule themselues by Gods worde. But (as the Prophet Esay saieth) if we walk purely and simplie according to Gods word, we shall haue rest in our soules, and wee shall be free from all these troubles and debates which the wretched vnbeleeuers make: for they wote not at which ende to beginne, neyther knowe they where to make an end. Therefore let vs marke well howe it is not without cause, that GOD speaking of eating and drinking, doeth giue here expresse leaue to his people, to the ende we shoulde not aduenture anie thing, but in his name, and to doe vs to vnderstand that he hath such a care of vs, that hee will guide al our steppes, and therefore we must liue as in his presence.

Esa. 33.

Furthermore let vs learne to receiue the libertie which GOD hath giuen vs, that we may enioy it so far forth, as is expedient: for we know ỹ this libertie of ours ought to carie a restraint with it. S. Paul telleth vs ỹ al the things which are lawfull, are not alwaies behoueful, bicause they do not always edifie our neighbors. But yet howsoeuer the case standeth, we must haue our consciences free, so as wee may vse the thinges that GOD hath graunted vs by his worde. And therefore both in eating and drinking wee may giue him thankes with a cheerefull hearte, as they that knowe howe it is hee that feedeth vs, and that we doe receiue all thinges at his hand. Moreouer we bee continually put in mind hereby, ỹ he is neere at hand with vs, and ỹ his prouidence extendeth euen to ỹ least things. For it may well seeme that eating and drinking are no such thinges as are worthie that God shoulde haue regarde of them. But yet it is Gods will to beare sway in that behalfe, to the ende that we shoulde knowe the fatherly care that hee hath of vs, not onely in respect of our soules, but also in respect of our bodies, though they bee transitorie and corruptible.

1 Cor. 6. 12. & 10. 23.

Hereunto Moses addeth, that the people shoulde refrayne from eating the bloude of beastes. Whereby he doeth vs to vnderstande, that wee must so vse Gods creatures, as we abhorre all cruelnie. For at the first sight it seemeth an vnnaturall thing to kill the beastes to whome GOD hath giuen life, by knocking of them downe and by cutting of there throtes. It seemeth to be a chaunging of Gods ordinaunce, and an vtter peruerting of all thinges, when men take leaue to doe such thinges. Yet notwithstanding our Lorde sayth that men may lawfully eate the flesshe of beastes, and that hee hath created them for mans vse. Neuertheles to the intent to inure his people to meekenesse, hee willeth them to abstcyne from bloude. But that serued but for the time of the Lawe and the ceremonies. For as wee haue seene alreadie, our Lorde gouerned the people of olde time as little babes. And wee knowe that men teach young children all thinges that are good: but for asmuch as they haue not yet the capacitie to vse thinges as they that are come to mans estate: men holde them in awe, and suffer them not to haue thinges at will which are lawfull of themselues. As howe? Men beate a childe for handling a knife, because hee cannot tell yet howe to vse it. So then GOD vsed a childishe kinde of instruction and as it were rudimentes, or euen as wee say, the A, B, C, to enter that people withall which was yet rude and weake; but yet wee knowe what the ende and intent of the Lawe was, in commaunding men to abstcyne from the bloud of beasts. For Gods will was that men shoulde abhorre all cruelnie. And the same exposition hereof is set downe by Moses himselfe in the ninth Chapter of Genesis. For after the floude God declareth that men may well eate the flesshe of beastes, so they forbeare to eate of their bloud. And why is that? Because it is to bee considered, that the soule or life of euerie liuing thing is after a sorte represented by the bloude. And I forbidde you all manslaughter (sayth GOD:) beare well in minde that men are created after myne owne image: and therefore yee muste not worke any outrage one to an other. For whosoeuer sheddeth mans bloode, shall haue his bloude shedde by man. Wee see (I saye) that the respect which our Lorde hadde, was not of the brute beastes: but rather that his meaning was to holde vs together in brotherly loue. And therefore hee gaue the people of olde time a figure, whereby to put them in minde that they shoulde not offer any outrage to the reasonable creatures. That is the very effect.

Gen. 9. 4.

Gen. 9. 5.

Gen. 9. 5.

Nowe as touching the Ceremonie, that is no more in vse: it was meete that all such thinges shoulde bee doone away at the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ: but yet doeth the substance of it continue with vs still, so as GOD commaundeth vs to liue peaceably one with another. For seeing it is tolde vs in his Lawe, that it was not lawfull to eate the bloude of beastes: howe much the rather ought wee to spare the bloode of men? For men are not sette in the worlde to make meate of; but GOD hath prynted his marke vppon them, and made his owne image to shine foorth in them, to the ende that wee by our sparing of them, shoulde shewe what reue-reuerence we beare towards GOD. There are two thinges which we ought cheefly to regarde in maintaining concorde and friendship among men. The one is that wee bee all of one kinde. Esa.58.7. Thou shalt not despise thine owne flesshe, saith the Prophete. And in deede, we see that euen the wilde beastes do through a naturall instinct keepe companie together, and euery of them liues quietly with others of the same sort. Needs then must wee bee more peruerse and lesse reasonable than the brute beastes, if wee fall to deuouring one an other, and play the cats and dogges, as they say. Neuertheless, considering the inordinate vnrulinesse that is among men, howe there is neither vprightnesse nor indifferent dealing among them: surely there needeth none other iudge to condemn them of their cruelties, than the very wilde beastes.

But there is yet a further thing, which I saide to bee the seconde point: and that is, that God hath set his image in vs. Therefore when I doe any outrage to my neighbour, it is all one as if I shoulde deface the image of GOD, and so am I guiltie of high treason. Wherefore let vs beare well in mind ỹ our Lord maketh great account of the maintenãce of peace & agreement betweene men: the meane whereof is that no man offer any violence or wrong vnto his neighbour. And surely wee knowe howe greatly God misliketh manslaughter. For the lawe was made Deut.21.1. so straite in that behalfe, that if a bodie were founde deade by chaunce, and it was not knowen who killed it, the elders shoulde meete about it, and after great search for the matter, they shoulde take a solemne othe that none of them was guilty of the murther: thereupon they shoulde offer a sacrifice, to witnesse that the land shoulde be as it were defiled if God punished not so heynous an offence, thoughe the murtherer were not founde. And what shall then become of vs when our handes are imbrewed with bloode, and the murtherer is knowen, and we be full of cruelties towardes our brethren? Thinke we to scape the hande of ỹ Iudge vnpunished, when as he hath pronounced such sentence? Yea and euen when manslaughter is committed in battels, although the same be permitted when the warres are Lawfull: Yet notwithstanding the scripture telleth vs there is a kinde of defiling in it, to the end ỹ euen when men are compelled to slaie their enemies 1.Chro.22.8 in the maintenaunce of iust quarels, they should consider thus with themselues: Alas, I must be faine to deface here the creatures that are shaped after the image of God: and thereupon be sorie and loth to doe it. Nowe then let vs marke that aboue all thinges it is Gods will we shoulde liue quietely among our selues, without offering of any violence or outrage one to another. But truely, murthers are aboue all thinges most horrible in Gods sight: and yet must we marke therewithall, that by that meanes all other outrages are forbidden. And that was the cause why the Prophete Esay vpbraided the Iewes, Esa.1.15. with the blouddinesse of their handes. It was not for that they had robbed by the highwayes sides, or for that they had so beaten or stricken foolke, as they might haue beene indited for it before earthly Iudges, but it was for the pilferies and extorsions which they had committed secretely, and for their wrongfull coueting of other mens substaunces. Although then that there bee no open murther committed nor any such outrageous act done as may be condemned by ordinarie iustice: yet doth not God accept that as sufficient, except wee bee free from all rauin, and wrongdealing, and haue liued so vprightly among our neighbours, as we haue done nothing to them which wee would not haue done vnto our selues.

Moreouer we haue to note howe Saint Iohn 1.Iohn.3.15. in his Canonicall Epistle saith that he which hateth his neighbour in his heart, is a murtherer alreadie before God. Although this hatred of ours be not knowen, although wee shewe no outwarde token to the worldewarde that we be caried with desire of reuẽge, although there appeare no such thing as may discouer our malice vnto men: Yet are we guiltie of murder before God, if we haue any hartburning at all within vs. For euen that were a giuing of place vnto Satan, as Saint Paul telleth vs here where he Ephes.4.26. warneth vs that the sunne shoulde not go downe vppon our anger. He saith that the partie which hath his heart so infected with hatred and rancor giueth Satan the possession of him to reigne ouer him. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in mind.

I tolde you euen nowe, that the vse of this ceremonie hath ceased euer since the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And therefore we ought to bee the more incouraged to serue GOD, sith wee see that wee bee not ruled in with so rough a bitte, nor held so short as the Fathers of olde time were. Yee see howe at this day, GOD giueth vs leaue to eat the bloud of beastes, which thing was not graunted to the Iewes. Wee knowe what is tolde vs of it by the Apostles themselues. For they made not a decree of it, as the Papistes vnderstande it, neither chaunged they any thing in Gods word, (for that had beene high treason to God) but forasmuch as they knewe that our Lord Iesus Christ, had by his comming abolished the Ceremoniall lawe: they shewed that it might bee lawful to eate bloude, so it were done without offence to others. For their forbidding of it in the fifteenth of the Actes, was but for a Act.15.20. time; and thereby they shewed that it was free to euery man according to conscience, to maintaine peace and concorde withall. In deed they counselled men to absteyne from it, howbe it that was but for a time (as I said) vntil the faithfull were better seeled in the doctrine of the Gospell.

And nowe let vs applie this doctrine to our owne vse. I haue told you alreadie, that first and foremost it behoooueth vs alwayes to bridle ourselues, assuring ourselues that nothing is permitted vs which breedeth offence. And why? Because God bindeth vs one to another. But yet for al ỹ, we haue our consciences at liberty so as wee knowe that the thinges are free to vs, which were not permitted to the fathers of olde time. Nowe then ought not this to moue vs the more to serue God, which sheweth himselfe so freehartted towardes vs? For if we were vnder the bondage of the Lawe; wee ought to abstaine from manslaughter, seeing that the bloude of beastes were forbidden vs, which at this day is permitted vnto vs. And therefore let vs beware wee abuse not such goodnesse of our God: but rather the more that hee graunteth vs, the more let euerie of vs bethinke him to holde himselfe in his obedience & subiection, that we play not the loose Colts as the prouerbe saith. That is the effect of the thinges which wee haue to note vppon this text.

Now as touching the Vowes and Oblations whereof Moses speaketh so much; let vs remember what hath bin saide heretofore; namely howe it is not Gods will that his people should eate and drinke, without hauing some recorde that all commeth of him. As for example, whereas at this day he giueth vs leaue to eate and drink, euerie man according to his abilitie; his meaning is that wee shoulde giue our neighbours part with vs, and shewe by our almosedeeds that we doe homage vnto him with the things that he hath giuen vs, as belonging vnto him alone. There is not nowadayes the like order that was vnder the Lawe of Moses, concerning oblations, firstfruites, and Sacrifices: but Almosedeedes are the sacrifices that God liketh of, as is shewed vnto vs, specially in the Epistle to the Hebrewes. And it is a doctrine that is verie rife in the holy scriptures. But there it is saide expresly, that wee must not forget the brotherly loue which wee ought to haue in succouring our neighbours that are distressed: for they bee the sacrifices which God requireth and alloweth. Sith it is so then, let vs marke well, that if a man haue wherewith to maintaine himselfe honestly, hee must not exempt himselfe from doing seruice vnto God therewithall. And after what manner? Euerie man must streine himselfe to the vttermost of his power to succour and releeue such as haue scarcetie & want of worldly goods. Thus yee see howe the right vse which our Lorde appointeth to all his creatures, is to offer them vp vnto him, to shew that we holde all of him. That is the very meaning that was intended in all the first fruites of olde time. And although the Ceremonie continue not at this day; yet ought the truth thereof to reigne still among vs. Wherefore let vs learne to cherish our selues in such sort, as wee forget not other folks: and specially let vs beare in minde, that our vnthankfulnesse will defile all our good fare, if wee acknowledge not God to bee the giuer of all thinges vnto vs. Wee heare what our Lorde Iesus Christ saide to the hypocrites that tooke greate paines to make cleane their vesselles that there might bee no spotte in them. Make cleane the insides of them too, quoth hee. And afterwarde hee addeth, that the right way for men to make themselues cleane, is to giue to the poore, and not to busie themselues about a sort of pelting trifles as the worlde doeth continually, who thinke to dally with God, and woulde giue him rittleratttles to play with as if hee were a babe, but they cannot beguile him so. Therefore according to Iesus Christes exhortation, if wee meane that the meates which we take shoulde be sanctified vnto vs, let vs looke that God bee honoured by them, and let vs beare well in minde howe it is of his onely freegoodnesse that wee bee nourished by them. And forasmuch as wee can neither doe him good nor harme, neither hath hee needе of any thing: let vs shewe our good will towardes his poore seruauntes: For they bee his bailifes whome hee sendeth to vs, to receiue the fines and other ducties that wee owe him for all his benefites. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to gather vppon that saying.

Nowe it is saide further, that if the people doe the thinges that are right and iust before God, they shalbee blessed, both they and their children. Hereby wee bee still warned, that if wee will direct our life aright, wee must not followe our owne good intents as they cal them, but hearken what God sayth vnto vs, and rest simplie vppon his will, as shalbe declared more at large to morrowe by Gods will. Neuertheleſſe Moses warneth the people here as he doth in manie other places, that they must not demeane themselues after their owne fancies, but in any wise giue eare vnto God. If thou doe that which is good and righteous saieth he; And in whose sight? In the sight of men? True it is that we ought to liue in such sort as wee giue no cause of offence to any bodie, so as if any speake euil of vs, they may haue their mouthes stopped. But yet must not men bee made iudges of their liues; that authoritie must bee reserued vnto GOD. And that is the cause why the scripture meaning to betoken an angelicall perfection, saieth that such a man hath walked before God. For if wee shoulde fashion our selues after the worlde, what a thing were it? Wee see howe the greatest multitude liue out of all order, and so shoulde wee make euill custome a Lawe. When whoredome, drunkennesse, outrage, violence, and blasphemie reigned; wee woulde beare our selues in hande that such thinges were permitted vs. And why? Because they be growen into custome.

Nowe therefore, if wee shoulde followe the guise of the worlde, wee should bee caried quite away. Againe, euen they that pretende to bee fullest of deuotion, may chaunce to vse some pelting trash and baggage in the seruing of God: they may happe to make a number of geugawes and rifferaffe: but all such thinges are nothing worth, they bee but flatte mockerie. So then, it behoueth vs to walke before God; & although wee see thinges vtterly out of order, and all brought to confusion, yet must wee holde the right way still which GOD sheweth vnto vs. If wee see men goe astray, and deuise neuer so many fonde deuotions, let vs leaue all such thinges, and be contented to follow Gods ordinance. Surely although the worlde like neuer so well of our doings, yet shall wee not faile to bee condemned: but if God allowe of vs, then haue wee a good warrant. As for example, because that nowadayes wee vse not the gewgawes of the Papists, we haue not any puppets here, wee haue no decking of altars, wee haue no tapers nor such other stuffe: they laugh our plaine dealing to scorne, and they thinke there is no seruing of GOD among vs. But howsoeuer wee fare, wee haue heere a good recorde, which is, that wee doe the thinges that are good in the sight of our God. And it is not for once onely that Moses speaketh heereof. Wee haue seene other textes heretofore tending to the same effect: but here this saying is set down twice within tenne lines: and it is no more than needeth, considering howe frowarde wee bee to doe the thinges which the worlde liketh, insomuch that wee couet to bee soothed, and will needes alwayes iustifie our selues to the worldwarde. Moses therefore bringeth backe to that point. No (saieth hee), be contented to doe whatsoeuer our Lorde inioyneth you. For if hee allowe of your doings, then is it perfite righteousnes: and therfore hardily laugh all the world to scorne. So then, that is one point which we haue to beare in minde, when Moses telleth vs that wee must doe that which is good before God.

And nowe to giue the people the better corage, hee addeth immediately a promise, saying: To the intent thou maist prosper, both thou and thy children for euer. Here first of al we see that which hath beene touched alreadie; that is to wit, that our Lorde prouoketh vs to serue him with the better courage, by profering vs reward. Truely hee is not bounde to vs in any case: insomuch that when we shall haue serued him, yea though it bee a hundred thousande times more than wee doe; yet are wee still indetted to him neuertheless: for wee be his. And wee must Luke.17.7. marke our Lorde Iesus Christes similitude, howe that if a man haue a seruant that is as his slaue, when his seruaunt hath laboured all the day long, and commeth home at night, his master will not rise vp to giue him his supper, but commaunde him to waite vppon him still at his table. Nowe it is certaine that wee owe much more vnto God, than men owe one to another. Let vs streyne our selues to the vttermost of our power, yea and aboue al our power, and yet shall wee not bee able to discharge our selues of the hundreth parte of our duetie towardes him, and what rewarde then can wee deserue at his hande? Neuertheless, of his owne freegoodnesse it is saide that wee shall not lose our labour in seruing him. So then let vs marke that Gods meaning is not to place any worthinesse in our workes by promising vs rewarde: but onely to incourage vs the more to them. And indeede wee bee too slothfull, if the regarde therof moue vs not. Beholde, God might commaund me, and exact at my hande whatsoeuer he listeth, for I am bounde to him in all cases and all respects: and yet to the ende that no sloth shoulde holde me backe, hee telleth me that if I serue him hee will prosper mee; and in his so doing there passeth as it were a couenant, whereby he bindeth himselfe vnto vs. If this moue vs not, must it of needs bee that we bee more harde than stones? Yet notwithstanding, wee see that the wretched world cannot be wunne by any meanes. When the promises are set before vs, that God will blesse vs, though wee bee minded to giue our selues to his seruice, yet do we not cease to yeeld to all euill, and wee beare our selues in hande that wee shall benefite our selues greatly by prouoking his displeasure. If wee spie any likelihood of gaine; wee runne gadding after it, and euery of vs is rauisht in loue of it. And what commeth of it when we go about to inrich our selues after that fashion by craft & wicked practises? When wee will needes attaine to some ambition or dignitie, what will bee the ende of it? Our Lorde will curse it euerie whit. It seemeth then that we intende to prosper euen as it were in despite of God. And wee bee so caried away by our affections, and so driuen by the headinesse of them, that God cannot holde vs backe, neither by bridles, nor by ropes, nor by cheynes. Loe here a greate mischiefe, that although our Lorde allure vs neuer so sweetely to him, & labour to win vs to him by promising vs rewarde, yet notwithstanding we bee so full of malice, that to our seeming, all his promises are vaine & nothing worth; they moue vs not a whit. But as for the allurements of Sathan, they draw vs to thē, insomuch that we beare our selues in hand, that although God bee against vs and our enemie, yet wee shall not faile to prosper, & the worlde laugh vppon vs, and that there bee some likelihood of aduancement. Marke that for one point.

Furthermore, wee see that euen the wickedest faile not to stande in their owne conceite. As for example, wee see nowadayes that in the Popedome men make a shielde of these words, to shewe that God is beholden to vs, that our workes are deserfull, and that wee bee able to purchace Gods grace, yea and euen euerlasting saluation; so as not onely God must needes prosper vs in this worlde, but also the heritage of the heauenly kingdome becommeth as a conquest vnto vs. The world (say I) beguileth it selfe in this behalfe. And who bee they that speake so boldly of it? Euen the greatest despisers of God. As for example, ye shall see a sort of these Friarly flatterers dispute of deserues with full mouth, and yet for all that, they bee men without God, without religion, wicked out of measure, and scorners of God. Also let vs take the greatest pretenders of holinesse among them, and yet shall finde them full of pride and statelinesse, full of malice and enuie against their neighbours, and burning with couetousnesse. They make a faire outwarde shewe of holinesse, but inwardly, there is no soundnesse at all. Their life bewrayeth that they bee ranke rebelles against God, and that they doe but turne the best side outward in al their deuotions: and yet in the meane while, all their talke is of Mercy, Mercy, riter. And what manner of deserts? Looke vppon their liues, and you shall see what they be. But first and formost, howe can our workes deserue, but by Gods accepting of them of his owne free goodnesse? For it standeth vs in hand, not only that he bind himselfe vnto vs, as he doth notwithstanding that hee neede not except hee listed; but also moreouer, that hee accept our works in good worth, forgiuing the faults & blemishes that are in them. For we cannot bring any one work vnto him which is not defiled with some imperfection, so as there is alwayes some fault to be found in it. Now then we shoulde bee found blameworthy in all our vertues if God listed to examine them with rigour. And so what becommeth of the promises, which tell vs that our works are deserfull? Nay, let vs marke that after our Lords binding of himselfe so freely vnto vs, hee yeeldeth vs rewarde for the seruice that we haue offered vnto him, and then accepteth our workes of his owne freegoodnesse. As howe? By putting all the blots and blemishes of them out of his remembrance, so as hee imputeth them not any more. And that is the way for vs to prosper all kinde of waves, through his only freegoodnesse. But yet by the way let vs call to minde the matter that wee haue touched afore: namely that we be verie wretched, seeing our Lorde allureth vs to him so gently and with so great courtisie, saying, Go to my childre, I desire nothing else but to maintaine you in prosperitie, doe you no more but followe mee: and yet notwithstanding, after this choice of prosperitie offered vnto vs, wee forsake our GOD, and runne gadding after the vanities of this worlde, Sathan carieth vs away with his trumperies, and wee shut our eyes wittingly, and wilfully, as though all our seeking were to bee deceiued that wee might perish: and yet for all this, wee cease not to complaine when wee see the miseries and aduersities of this worlde light vpon vs. And in what a time are wee? Wee see nowadayes howe there is war on ỹ one side, and dearth on the other; all thinges are so farre out of order as it is pitie to beholde, and euery man mourneth, but no man hath an eye to the cause of the mischiefe. For if wee thought vppon it, wee coulde not but perceiue Gods hande to be vppon vs, yea and that in such wise, as it woulde make vs to bethinke vs after this manner: Alas, wee haue forsaken the fountaine of all welfare, and therefore it is good reason that wee shoulde nowe feele thirst. For God is readie on his part to giue vs our fill, hee is not nigardly, his power is not diminished, he hath the fulnesse of all good thinges in him: and therefore if wee be destitute, of whom is it long? When a man runs gadding heere and there, and forsaketh a fountaine, and goeth on wandering into desert places where hee is in daunger to die for thirst, so as hee beareth out his tongue halfe a footelong, and findeth not a droppe of water to refreth himselfe withall: is hee not worthie to die for thirst, seeing he hath so forsaken the fountaine? So then let vs marke that God withdraweth his blessings from vs, because wee haue forsaken him, and it is a iust rewarde whereof wee bee well worthie. And yet by the way wee be warned therewithall, to returne to our God: for his will is not that we shoulde pine in such sort, as he should not bee ready to receiue vs againe. True it is that wee bee driuen to feele our harmes in good earnest, that wee may bee moued with hartie desire to returne vnto him: But yet notwithstanding, for all his rough chastising of vs, and for all the long continuance of our misetie, wee misse not to come into his fauour againe, and to be made partakers of his benefites, when we cease to shrinke away from him, and be fully minded to put our selues againe vnder his obedience.

So then, let vs learne to put this doctrine of Moseses in vre, namely of doing that which is good and rightfull in the sight of our God. And let vs marke howe it is not onely for a day or two that God saieth hee will bee mercifull and fauourable to his people: but that he will holde out to the ende, yea euen after the decease of those that shall haue serued him. And heerein wee haue a confirmation of our hope of the euerlasting life. For if God holde on in doing vs good euen after our decease, in the person of our children: it followeth that hee will not forget vs, but that when wee haue finished our race in this worlde, we shalbe gathered vp vnto him, to inioy the benefites fully and perfectly, whereof hee hath giuen vs but a tast by hope. Therefore must wee marke that point; and sith we bee so naughtie and frowarde, that wee cease not to go astray and to runne gadding here and there: let vs runne backe againe to him, and consider that his vttering of his will vnto vs by worde of mouth, or his writing of it in paper or parchment, is not ynough for vs: but that hee must bee faine to write in it our hearts also. Seeing then that wee bee so frowarde as to rush out into naughtinesse, and to turne aside from the right way: let vs pray our good God to holde vs so in by his holy spirite, that although wee see things in horrible disorder nowadayes, so as wee bee moued at the beholding of the present state of the world: yet notwithstanding we may not cease to holde our selues still vnder his hande, and gouernement: which thing if wee doe, surely wee may defie all that euer the vnbeleeuers doe practise against vs. For if they despise vs, if they shake vs off, if they abhorre vs: what for that? Yet are wee sure that God hath not giuen vs his worde in vaine, but that if wee sticke thereunto, wee may bee well apaide though men finde fault with vs, for wee shall bee acquit and iustified before GOD and his Angels, though the worlde haue condemned vs. Thus yee see howe wee may walke in such certainetie and hope, that although wee see stumbling-blockes rounde about vs, yet shall wee neuer bee thrust out of the right way, and therewithall wee shall bee well assured, that our Lorde will holde vs vnder his protection, so as when Satans vnderlinges haue wrought what they can, and the diuell himselfe hath streined all his force to the vttermost to ouerthrowe vs; yet notwithstanding forasmuch as wee bee shrowded vnder the shadowe of our God, and haue his blessings printed in vs, wee needе not to feare but that hee will continue the same from day to day. And although wee see neuer so many changes and backturnings in this world: yet are wee sure that we cannot light vpon our feete, so long as our Lorde bee our vpholder and stocke to leane vnto.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we may bee led to true repentance, and not onely craue forgiuenesse of the sinnes which we haue committed, but also obtaine such increase of his grace in vs henceforth, as he may bee glorified by our whole life, when hee hath brought vs backe againe to his holy Lawe. And so let vs all say, Almightie God, Heauenly father, &c.

On Thursday the x. of October. 1555.

The Lxxxv. Sermon which is the sixth vpon the twelfth Chapter.

29 When the Lorde thy God shal haue rooted out before thy face the nations which thou goest to possesse, so as thou hast them in possession and dwellest in their Lande:

30 Then beware thou be not snared by them, after that they be ouercome before thee. And enquire not after their gods, saying: Howe did these nations serue their gods? I wil doe so too.

31 Thou shalt not doe so to the Lorde thy God. For they haue done all such things to their gods, as the Lorde abhorreth and hateth. For they haue burnt euen their sonnes and daughters in fire to their gods.

32 Therefore whatsoeuer I commaund you, looke that yee doe it, and put not any thing to it, neither take any thing from it.

WHen we heare that Moses warneth the Iewes that they turne not away from the right seruing of God after his setting of them in possession of their inheritance: we may thinke they were a very malicious people, & right hard to be gouerned. For what is it that Moses requireth of them? That they should not forget the partie that had redeemed them, and afterward giuen them his lawe, but that they shoulde holde themselues at a stay, and not defile themselues with the superstitions of the heathen. And they had two thinges to hold them to the seruice of God. For they ought to haue borne in minde after what maner he had deliuered them from the bondage of Egypt: and did not such a gracious goodnesse well deserue that they shoulde haue persisted continually in the acknowledging of their redeemer? Againe they had very faire lookingglasses set before them for example, in that they sawe that Gods rooting out of the inhabiters of the Lande of Chanaan, was a token that hee coulde not away with any of all their abhominations: and ought not the Iewes to haue fared the better by their beholding of such examples? But nowe that wee knowe the naughtinesse of that people, let vs come to our selues and bee well assured that wee bee not better than they were, but haue needе of the warning that is giuen heere. And for proofe hereof God doth dayly renew his gracious goodnesse towards vs. Had we felt his goodnesse but once all our life, it ought to serue vs for a bridle to hold vs vnder his obedience. But he ceaseth not to increase his benefites still dayly, and yet we forget it in the turning of a hand, and wee neuer think vpō it any more, to benefit our selues by it. To bee shorte, it seemeth that all our indeuour is to burie Gods benefites that hee bestoweth vpon vs, that we might haue no occasion to honor him. Lo how our vnthankfulnesse bewraieth it self too much on ỹ one side. Yet notwithstāding we see how God giueth vs sufficient warnings, by chastising others ỹ haue doone euill before our eyes, and by sparing vs: and ought wee not to bethinke vs better of the commandementes which hee executeth, after that fashion? Yes: for they bee no thinges doone in a corner mudder, there is no more for vs to do but to take heede to them. But it should seeme that wee play the blinde buffardes wilfully, and labour not to knowe any of the thinges which are nowe too apparant and notorious. Therefore whether it bee that God do drawe vs to him by the great number of benefites which he bestoweth vppon vs, or that hee teache vs to feare him by punishing offenders in our presence: al this booteth vs not, for we be vnthankfull, and the time is but lost in doing vs good, insomuch that although though wee see howe hee hath shewed himselfe iudge against such as haue offended him, yet wee thinke not vppon it, but let it slippe. Can wee cast our eye any where nowadayes, but wee must needes see a great number of manifest examples, whereby wee ought to take warning to liue warely and aduisedly? Wee see howe whole Nations and Countries are not spared, and wee see the like in priuate persons: all is full of sighing and crying, and it is all one as if God should sounde a trumpet to the punishing of some offender, that euerie man might bee warned to take example by him. Wee see these thinges: but howe doe wee benefite our selues by them? Let vs not thinke then that in this place Moses speaketh but onely to the Iewes: but let vs vnderstand, it was Gods will to shew vs by them, that euen after wee knowe him to be our father and Sauiour, and euen after hee hath powred out the infinite riches of his mercie vppon vs; yet haue wee still neede to bee warned to liue in his feare: for otherwise wee will turne our backes vppon him. Againe, when hee hath warned vs by many examples; that is not ynough vnlesse hee quicken vs vp to set our minds vpon it, so as wee may perceiue wherein it was his will that we shoulde fare the better by it.

But there is yet another point; which is, that when wee bee so taught by other mens harmes, and by Gods bearing with vs in that hee listeth not to punish our faultes: we shoulde reciprocally preuent his anger, and seeing there are so manie that suffer, yea and which suffer to serue for our instruction, the same shoulde serue as a schooling vnto vs; that when wee see our Lorde vtter his rigour after that sort, and shewe himselfe to bee a Iudge; wee shoulde not tarie till hee smite vs on the heades, but come meekely vnto him, acknowledging our faultes, and taking good heede that wee wrappe not our selues in his curse with those against whom he hath shewed himselfe such an enemie and aduersarie. That is the thing which we haue to beare in minde.

And Moses saieth expresly, Beware thou fall not into the snares after them. As if hee shoulde say, If yee bee not starke blinde, yee must needes shunne these people and not followe their example, seeing that God hath punished them after that fashion. For if yee meddle with their corruptions, God can make you to fall into the same pitte wellynough. Yee see into what case they bee falne: and therefore take heede to your selues, or else it will be an open tempting of God, as though ye sought your owne destruction euen in despite of him. Nevertheless, wee see howe men playe the beastes in that behalfe. For when wee haue seene GOD correct a man for some offence, by and by wee faile not to prouoke his wrath in the selfesame sorte, that they did which were punished. Indeede wee haue witte ynough to condemne them that suffer the punishment; O it is good right say we, they haue well deserued it, they bee worthie of such correction. Wee can skil to talke after that fashion: but in the meane while, when wee plaied the Iudges towardes other men, wee cannot finde the fault in our selues, and therefore must wee bee double condemned at Gods hande, because our hypocrisie blindeth vs, and wee looke not into our selues to correct our own misdoings.

Moses therefore speaketh heere expresly of the snares that the Cananites were falne into. As if hee shoulde say, whatsoeuer you see in any vnbeleeuers, is all one as if God warned you long aforehande, to beware that yee fall not into the like curse by following their steps; and therefore shunne them. For wee must vnderstande that as oft as our Lorde punisheth those that haue offended him, and wee knowe it, and hee will haue it so; it is all one as if hee shoulde make some signe to vs, or rather arrest vs with his owne hande and say, Take heede to your selues, proceede no further, goe not on still; for if yee doe, yee bee vndone, yee bee forlorne. Seeing that our Lorde giueth vs such warning, may it not bee saide that wee bee worse than madde if wee proceede on still? What excuse will there bee for vs, when God shal haue shewed vs the ditche and bidden vs beware that wee fall not into it, and yet we bee so wilful in wickednesse, that he cannot winne so much at our handes, as to make vs turne backe againe from it?

Moreouer wee see by this text, that it is but a simple shift to say, Other men doe so as well as I: and yet a greate number of sillie soules beguile themselues with it euen at this day. If a man warne the Papistes of their superstitions, to bring them to Gods trueth; O (say they) I am not alone, there be many others in the worlde. They beare themselues in hand that they may by and by disappoint God, with the multitude of their partakers. But Moses telleth vs heere, that all shall bee tyed together in one bundle, and one of them shall not helpe to acquite another or to diminishe anothers fault, but that all of them shall bee rooted out together, according to this saying of our Lorde Iesus Christ, If the blinde leade the blinde, they shall both fall into the ditche. What shall I haue gained by it, when a great number of people shall haue perished with mee? Then let vs not thinke our faults the lighter for the greatenes of the number of them that offende with vs: but rather let vs marke on the contrarie parte, that there is not a worse thing than euill custome: and it is the thing that wee had neede to beware of as long as wee liue in this worlde. For wee see verie fewe of that sort of men which guide vs the right way; but on the contrarie part the multitude is infinite of those that thrust vs out of the way: so as if wee leane vnto men, wee shall scarsely finde one among a hundred, which walketh aright, but all of them doe go astray. Also when the Prophet Esaie speaketh of the disorders that reigned euerie where, hee saieth no more but that euerie man had turned aside after his owne wayes. Whereby hee doeth vs to vnderstande that we neede not to be beguiled by others, for euerie of vs beguileth himselfe too much. Therefore when men followe their owne imaginations, then are they quite and cleane out of the way of saluation. And sith it is so that we shal finde verie few that can amend vs, and all the rest doe but draw vnto euill: what shall become of vs if we grounde our selues vpon custome? If wee say, O, there be thus many and thus many that take this or that to be good: yea, but God misliketh it, and it makes no matter what men doe, for wee see they bee all giuen to naughtinesse, and are corrupted in their vnderstanding. Againe, their hearts are ful of malice, so as they dragge cleane backe from that which God hath shewed them. And if wee alledge, It is not nowalaze that this thing came vp, it hath beene vsed of custome in all ages long agoe: verily it is all one as if wee shoulde say, the worlde is hardened in naughtinesse. But yet hath it not gotten so sure-holde that it can displace God from being Iudge, that he shoulde not condemne them as they deserue. And therfore let vs marke wel howe it is shewed vs here, that if we followe the steppes of such as haue gone astray; when God hath punished them, wee also must come to account after them. Yea and wee deserue double punishment, when wee fare not the better by the corrections that God hath shewed vnto vs: for it is all one as if we resisted him wilfully. The matter in effect which wee haue to gather vppon this saying where Moses speaketh of the snares that are laide for vs, is; that when our Lorde hath once warned vs, and we haue seene the verie examples themselues before our eyes; we should set our minds vpon them, that wee intangled not our selues in the curse that is prepared for the despisers of Gods word.

And it is saide further, that men shoulde not inquire after their gods. Heereby hee doeth vs to vnderstande, that men are oftentimes turned away from well doing, by their fooliſh curiositie. For when wee bee once instructed in the pure simplicitie of Gods worde, if wee holde our mindes imprisoned, that is to say, if wee holde our selues contented with Gods trueth; then are wee sure that our Lorde will confirme vs more and more, so as though all the worlde were on a broyle, yet shoulde wee bee knitte still in good agreement of faith. But our wittes are so fickle, that they bee alwayes rouing: wee cannot holde our selues from inquiring of this and that: not for any benefite that wee reape by it, for wee wote not what is the reason thereof: but yet our desirousnesse so tickleth vs, and so prouoketh vs, that wee cannot holde our selues in quiet to say, let vs obey our God. Therefore Moses meant plainely to condemne the vice that reigneth ouermuch in men, and is too deepe rooted in their nature: which is, that in steede of soberneſſe to holde our selues in simple obedience to Gods worde; wee bee continually turmoyled with vaine fancies, and all our seeking is who did this and who did that, that wee might bee cunning in inquiring thereof. As for example, wee see a great sort that woulde faine knowe al the Religions of the worlde. And to what ende? It seemeth vs them that they bee not sure of the Christian faith, vnlesse they knowe Machomets Alcoran; and al the diuelishnesse that hath reigned among the Paynims and Papistes; and fraught their heads full stuffed and besotted with all the dotages of the Iewes. Thus doe they play the beastes through their wicked curiositie, and it appeareth well that there hath beene nothing in them but vtter vanitie and hypocrisie. Wherefore according to that which Moses hath declared heere, let vs learne not to be too inquisitive of the thinges that are not good for vs. We see that euen in reading Gods worde, wee must vse this modestie of forbearing to seeke things needeleſſe which serue not to edifying: & what will come of it if wee disguise Gods worde, by ripping vp the thinges which cannot but infect our mindes, and corrupt them, and turne them from the pure trueth? True it is that such as vse to make warres are faine to be inquisitive of the force and policy of their enemies, that they may beware of them: but when wee be so eager, that without any occasion or needs, wee will needes knowe that which doeth not touch vs nor concerne vs; is it not a tempting of God? is it not a casting of our selues into the snares which we see that Sathan hath laide for vs? Therefore when men haue beene taught the Gospel purely, let them abide quietly therein, let them be contented with this, that they are approued of God; who cannot deceiue them, and let them refuse all manner of trumperies, which can serue to no purpose but to intangle them in vaine disputations without profite, or without any inherance to their faith. Wee see what hath happened to some, I meane of these wilfull headed fellowes that woulde needes be inquisitive of all thinges, and there was not any sect or opinion, but they woulde needs know it and haue skill to dispute of it. Verie well: but what wonne they by so doing? God gaue them vp, so as they were destitute of vnderstanding, and there was lesse wit and discretion in them than in little children. Where things were in quiet they would needes set all on a broyle, yea euen without any time or reason, so as they sawe not a whit euen in the thinges that were so visible and apparant, that they might haue picked out their eyes with a knife. Seeing then that GOD doeth so punish these troublesome heades that cease not to trouble themselues in their owne vnquietnesse, and cannot bee satisfied but that they must needes be inquisitive of the thinges that are not for their profite: wee ought to bee the more mindful of Saint Paules lesson, which is that wee must not bee ouer wise, but wise according to sobrietie. Let vs bethinke vs of our slendernesse, how rude and grosse witted wee bee, and let it suffice vs that GOD can well skill to teach vs, if wee take him for our master and teacher. And seeing we haue his worde, let euerie of vs keepe himselfe within the boundes thereof, and not play the colts that are broken loose.

Nowe after that Moses hath spoken after ỳ manner, he saith Thou shalt not do to the Lord thy God, as those nations have done to their gods. As if he shoulde say, we must not looke vpon men, when we intend to serue God aright; but Gods only will must bee our rule, as he wil adde for a conclusion in the end. Let vs marke well then that there is not a worse thing, than to fashion our selues after the customes of men in causes that concerne the seruing of God. For that hath bin ỳ very cause of so manie mingle-mangles and of so great confusion of all things in Christian religion. A man needeth but a litle Leuen to sowre a whole batch of dowe. But there hath bin so much Leuen brought in, that it hath marred all the righteousnesse whereunto GOD calleth those that are his. For as I haue declared heretofore, men haue thought it good that in steede of the fashions that were vsed by the heathen, there should bee some such fashions brought in as had some resemblance of them.

As for example, the heathen worshipped such an idol, or helde such a high feast on such a day: and therefore must wee also appoint a feast to some Saint vpon the same day. Yea, but that was but a changing of the name of the idol: and the neerer they came vnto it, or tooke ouert vnder it, the more did they falsely abuse Gods name and defile it. Thus made they an exchange of the ydols of the heathen, and in their stead tooke vp Hee saints and Shee saints and made ydols of them. Nowe seeing that this manner of dealing hath bin the cause of the peruerting of all things; it standeth vs the more in hand to take heede to the things that Moses telleth vs here, to witte, that God requireth not that we should do as the wretched and ignorant infidels doe to their Idols: but that if wee will walke rightly wee must keepe vs from counterfeiting the thinges that wee may happen to see any where. True it is that forasmuch as wee iudge fondly, wee will thinke the thinges that are done by men to bee very godly: but what shall wee gaine in this case, by bringing our owne weights and balances? For God will haue vs to conforme vnto him; and shall not wee then make a faire bargaine, to say I weene I doe well? All such stuffe is nothing woorth, it must bee striken off, euerywhit. That is the cause why Moses in this text expressly presupposeth that God wil not haue the thinges done to him which the wretched infidels did to their idols.

And yet to perswade vs the better in all these things, he addeth that they had done such thinges as God abhorred, as namely the burning of their children in fire. Here vnder one kind, Moses sheweth that the wretched Paynims rushed out into so beastly dealings, as woulde make a man to abhorre their cruelrie to thinke vppon it. For how is it possible that they should bee so destitute of all reason, as to forget euen naturall kindenesse, when they meane to serue their Gods? What a thing was it, that they should goe burne their owne children? Beholde, the fathers which ought to haue considered, that when God had giuen them children, it was a singular blessing, forasmuch as hee had ordeined them to bee in his owne stead, to the end there should alwayes bee some seede in the worlde to honor him and serue him: euen the fathers themselues (I say) did cast their owne children into the fire, and became murtherers of them. Whereby wee see that idolaters may well bee caryed away with some deuotion; but the same is but as a fury, they bee out of their wittes, and the diuell doth so possesse them, that they haue neither wit nor discretion any more. And shal wee allowe of such doinges? Wee see then whereat Moses amed in declaring here that the wretched Paynims burned their owne children, by meanes whereof they became starke diuels, and there was not a more horrible thing than was their deuotion, though they commended it neuer so much. If it bee obiected that GOD commaunded Abraham to doe the lyke; wee see the ende thereof. True it is that GOD meant so farre foorth to try Abrahams fayth, by commaunding him to kill his owne sonne: but that was a singular example for a speciall purpose, and not a common rule. On the other side, GOD prouided for it, and shewed that hee desired not to haue mans bloud sacrificed vnto him: for hee preserued Abraham from dooing it when it came to the point. Therefore there is greate diuersitie betweene the obedience that Abraham yeelded to God in going about to sacrifice his sonne Isaak: and the madnesse of these blinde wretches in purposing to honor their idols by murthering their owne children. Gen. 22. 2. 12.

Hereby let vs learne generally to marke well, that whensoeuer wee see the wretched vnbeleeuers rushe out into disorder lyke brute beasts, we must learne to haue the more stay of our selues that wee followe them not. As for example; whereas it is sayd nowadayes in generall, that wee must not followe the steppes of the Papistes, because that all the thinges which they learne by the name of Gods seruice, are but a heape of vaine fancies, such as euery man listed to forge of his owne brayne, and a horrible hotchpotch of thinges confounded together, for the dooing whereof they haue not so much as one syllable in Gods woorde to allowe it, and yet they martyr themselues exceedingly in the doing of them: besides this, they become so brutish, as wee ought to be euen ashamed of them. For proofe whereof, what a thing is it that they should goe kneele downe before puppets, as though GOD were present there? They say they worship not the images; but men see what reuerence they yeeld vnto them, and it is the first lesson that is taught in their Synagogues. And surely what excuse soeuer they make, when they kneele downe before the image of S. Barbe which neuer was, (for yee must vnderstand that men haue made a God of such a creature as neuer was in the world) or when they goe to S. Catherin, or Saint

Christo-

Christopher which are things of the same stamp and say nine Paternosters and an Auemarie to them: to whome speake they? Is it not a flatte mocking of God, or rather a villainous blaspheming of him? The heathen therefore had much more than the Papistes, wherewith to colour their abhominations when they did thinges so farre out of square as was pitie to see, and yet thought they pleased God in so doing. When they drinke til they be drunken vppon the holy-day, they thinke that God is content therewith. Againe, when they be well apparelled, they suppose it is a good seruice of God. To bee short, they haue such fond toyes and gewgawes, as are woorthie to bee spit at as often as a man heares them spoken of. And whosoeuer hath but one drop of good vnderstanding may perceiue the fondnesse that is in them. Insomuch that when wee consider the matter, wee thinke it vnpossible that men should bee so brutishe as wee see they haue bin. But it is Gods owne dooing, who executeth this threat, made by the prophets, that hee woulde powre out the spirit of giddinesse and blockishnesse vppon the world, to blinde it withall, because that such as haue forsaken the pure doctrine of God, and turned away from the holy scripture, are worthie to be so caryed away, to the committing of such vnreasonable thinges as we ought to bee ashamed of and vtterly to abhorre. And this is tolde vs to teach vs to shun their companie, and euen that is the meaning of Moses when he sayth, Marke what is befallen vnto them. Now then, let vs beware that God punish vs not after ỹ same maner, by giuing vs ouer to a reprobate sense. Wherefore let vs receiue the light of his worde, and followe the way while hee sheweth vs it, suffering our selues to be held altogether in obedience vnder him. For step we once aside one way or other, in deede wee shall not at the first dash fall into so great confusion as wee see the idolaters are, but in the ende wee shall bee payed home to our smart. For how became they so brutish? Had they neither wit nor reason? yes: but God punisheth them because they submitted not themselues to his word. Let vs therefore stand in feare of the lyke condemnation: for it is certeine that the lyke shall fall vppon vs, if wee followe their steppes. And wee heare how Saint Paul speaking generally of all such as list not to obey Gods will, sayth that they must needes haue their eyes stopped, so as they may not bee able to discerne any more, but bee trayned in all thinges to other mens lures. And this threate pointeth at vs. And therefore let vs keepe good watch, and bee wel ware that we set not one foote forward, without the direction of Gods worde; for there is not any other way that is certeine.

Esa.29.14.& 29.10.

Ro.1.25.28

Now let vs come to the conclusion that Moses addeth. Looke thou doe all that I commaunde thee this daye, without adding any thing to it or taking any thing from it. Heere hee sheweth vs the remedie to preserue vs from all stumbling, and from all the wiles of Satan and al his snares, and from all occasions that are ministred to thrust vs out of the way of saluation: and that is, to bee contented with the rule that GOD giueth vs, and to followe the same, and to bee so pliable to it, as wee alwayes haue our eares stopped against all other sayinges whatsoeuer, reiecting all thinges elsse, that none but only GOD may haue dominion ouer vs. And so let vs marke well, that wee shall neuer haue the witte to keepe our selues from superstition, and from Satans sleightes; except our Lord remedie the matter by his word. True it is that wee ought to giue good eare to the counsell that is giuen vs, and not to followe the follies and errors of the world, nor intangle our selues in such a sorte of fond toyes; but to bee slowe to eschewe all the foolishe deuotions that men haue deuised of their owne heades; wee ought well to marke that. But yet is not that enough. For there is none of vs all which hath not a storehouse of many errors in his own head, in so much ỹ euery of vs is a prouocation to himselfe although we be not furthered by others. What remedy then? There is none other way, but to suffer our selues to be gouerned by God. And that is the cause why Moses, after all his exhortations, telleth vs that if wee followe our Gods worde, wee shall euer bee intangled in many wicked imaginations, whereby the deuil shall finde a gappe open, or as it were a hooke to win vs by. Therefore if wee purpose to put Satan backe, and to bee preserued from all vncleanesse of superstition: let Gods worde haue his authoritie among vs.

And first of all Moses sayth; Doe whatsoeuer is commaunded thee. Whereby hee meaneth (as I haue declared in other places) that it is not enough for vs to obey GOD by halues (for he can away with no such partnership) but that wee must submit our selues to his commaundementes in all cases and all respectes without any gainsaying. And that is a thing very worthie to bee noted. For euen men can well enough finde in their hearts to confesse that it is good reason that GOD shall bee serued, yea euen according to his owne wil as he himselfe requireth: but yet they will not to take exceptions still, and to say, The lykes mee not, such a thing woulde doe better. To bee shorte, for all their promise of obeying GOD, and although that in many respectes they yeelde to the thinges that are spoken to them; Yet doe they beare themselues in hand, that they may let the rest alone. But contrariwise, GOD admitteth not any exception, but sayth that whatsoeuer hee commaundeth, must be done: and that wee must not enter into disputation with him, to make him amendes in one thing for missing in another; but that his Lawe must be obserued, yea euen according to the common and substaunce thereof. For if I should receiue some couenant or some publike instrument or writing made vppon it, and yet say, as for this poynt or that article, I will not admit it: what a thing were it? It were to disanul ỹ whole. Sodeinly let vs marke, that to honor God and to yeelde him him obedience, his worde must beare the whole sway, so as wee submit our selues wholy vnto it. Marke that for one point.

Againe whereas Moses sayth This day; it is a summoning of the people to follow without delay when God calleth them. For is it a small matter that God communicateth himselfe so familiarly vnto vs? Then is it not for vs to require space to deliberate: but as soone as God openeth his mouth, by and by wee must giue eare to him, and bee conformable to his worde out of hand without delay, by submitting our selues thereunto. And not onely this place serueth to warne vs how forward wee ought to bee to followe his Lawe: but also wee heare how it is sayd in the Psalme, To day if you heare his voyce: so that our Lord generally meaneth that as soone as men heare him speake, they should by and by followe his saying, and fashion themselues thereafter. And the Apostle in the third Chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrewes, sheweth vs what is meant by this worde To day: Namely the very same times wherein our Lord is so gracious as to send vs his worde, whatsoeuer these times bee. Therefore let vs not delay till to morrowe, for it were too great a mockerie: and it may bee that the gate shall be shut against vs. Seeing then that God speaketh vnto vs to day, let vs giue eare vnto him readily and without any delay. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in minde. And therefore when we come to a Sermon, or reade the holy scripture by our selues, as soone as wee haue heard a sentence, let vs enter into our owne consciences: and if wee finde any sloth there, let vs waken and quicken vp our selues, and thinke thus: what? It is no dalying with god in this case, it is not for vs to defer to come vnto him when hee calleth vs, but wee must answere him with such readynesse, as the thing that is commaunded vs here by Moses may bee performed, so as we burie not Gods word, ne suffer it to hang in the hooke; but receiue it into our hearres at the full, that it may take good roote there, and bring forth fruite. Thus yee see what wee haue to marke vppon this worde This day, or To day.

Now let vs proceede to that which Moses addeth. Without adding aught to it, (sayth hee) or without taking aught from it. And this is an excellent text to shewe vs how mens lyues may be well ordered. I haue tolde you before, that it is a good tryall of our subiection vnto God, when wee receiue his worde, and that his commaundements beare such sway with vs, as wee bowe downe our neckes to receiue the yoke that he layeth vppon them. But that were not sufficient, vnlesse wee had that which Moses addeth here, which is, that it is not lawfull for vs to adde any whit to ỹ thinges ỹ God commaundeth, nor to take any whit from them, as the Papistes doe in these dayes, who beare thẽselues in hand that they cannot doe amisse in mingling their owne follies with Gods word. And why so? For wee doe as GOD commaundeth vs, say they. Wee deny not but that wee ought to keepe God Lawes; but what harme is it for vs to doe more? If we vse some deuotion of ouerplus, will not God take it in good worth? If I doe more than I am bounde to doe, why should not God accept it in good part? I may well doe whatsoeuer hee appointeth: yea, & I will adde somewhat more to serue him withall. When the Papistes get such a shrowdingsheet, they beare thẽselues in hande that all their matters goe very well, but in the meane while they consider not ỹ God will haue none to be counted wise but himselfe, nor none to haue the authoritie to bee our Lawegiuer but himselfe. The Papistes then doe blaspheme GOD two wayes: first in taking vppon them to bee holyer than hee would haue them to bee. For when wee deuise meanes of our owne head to please God withall after that fashion; it is all one as if hee had not bin well aduised in the matter. Behold God sayth that all our wisedome must consist in hearkening vnto him. Wee haue seene it in the fourth chapter & also in ỹ tenth, where it is sayd, O Israell, what is it that thy God commaundeth thee but only to sticke to him, & to be wholy his. Hereby wee see how it was Gods intent to comprise ỹ summe of al holynesse and righteousnesse in his Lawe, so as it is a full perfection whereunto nothing can bee added. Neuertheless men thinke and suppose that they themselues can doe yet much better. And what is that to say? Is it not a blaming of God, as who should say hee had forgotten himselfe, and foresawe not all thinges? Verily that is a cursed and diuelish blasphemie. Therefore, let not the Papistes boast of their seruing of God: for the diuell is their founder, and God disauoweth all that euer they doe. For hee may alwayes reply against thẽ and say, Who required these things at your handes? And not without cause: for their so doing is all one as if they charged God with enuy towardes men, as who would say he had not faithfully taught them all thinges that were for their behoofe to doe. And I pray you is that blasphemie tollerable?

Psal. 95.8.

Heb. 3.13. & 4.7.

Deut. 4.6. & 10.12.

But there is yet another point which I glanced at. For those two may bee put both into one. The other point then is, that they vtterly deface the soueraigne dominion that God hath ouer vs. For thus doe they alledge: Very well. God hath ordeyned by his lawe, that we should keepe his commaundements, Statutes and Ordinances: but yet is it not amisse to adde moreouer what I my selfe would haue done. But if a priuate person shoulde fall to mingling of the inuentions of his owne braine, with the statutes that are set foorth by publike authoritie, shoulde he not trouble the whole order of the Common weale? And as for such as took part w̃ him, shold they not shewe thẽselues to bee rebels to their superiors? Now our Lord saith by his prophet Esay ỹ he himselfe wilbe knowen to be our onely lawgiuer. That is a title which he chalendgeth to himselfe. Seeing then that God will bee our onely Lawmaker, what shal we say when men doe thrust themselues into his place? Is it not more than to confounde heauen and earth together? And surely Saint Iames expresseth

Esa. 33.22.

Iam. 4.4.12 expresseth yet better the same thing that was sayd by the Prophet Esay. For he sayth that there is but onely one Lawegiuer which is able to saue and condemne. When men are set vp in state and authoritie of making Lawes to gouerne our soules by, I meane as touching the spiritual gouernement; (for wee treate not here of ciuill Lawes, but of the seruing of God;) when men (I say) are so highly exalted or take so highly vppon them: it is all one as if they bereaued God of the title of Sauiour and Iudge. For if hee be not the onely Lawemaker, Saint Iames concludeth that he is not the onely Iudge, nor the partie that hath power alone to condemne vs or to saue vs. And what a presumption is it that the creature should proceede so farre, as to father our saluation vppon wretched carkesses and earthwoormes, which is to be fathered alonely vppon God? So then let vs marke well, that whereas Moses hath tolde vs heere that it is not Lawefull for vs to adde any whit to the thinges that God commaundeth in his Lawe: thereby hee condemneth all the deuotions that euer were inuented by the world. It will seeme strange why God hath so streitly forbidden men to adde any thing to his Lawe: but ought not the reasons to suffice which I will aleadge? Verily the world condemneth it selfe by his owne mouth. Hath this prouerb bin inuented in our time? Hath it not bin euer a common saying among the Papists to say, Thou art the deuils seruant, for thou doest more than thou art bidden? This manner of speech hath bin vsed a hundred yere before we were borne: it hath bin a common byword. And what haue the Papists done? They haue let the commaundementes of God alone, to runne gadding after their owne inuentions, and newgawes: And yet neuertheless they say dayly still, Thou art the deuils seruaunt. If a Master bee angrie with his seruaunt for leauing the thing vndoone which he had commaunded him; to do the thing which he had conceiued in his owne imagination, and he thinketh to content his Maister in saying: I haue done better than you were aware of: thou art the diuels seruant (will his Master say) for thou hast done more than was commaunded thee. And I pray thee, what art thou? Thou doest the lyke to God. For thou wilt needes serue him after thine owne fashion, without regard what he hath commaunded thee. And therefore let vs beare in minde, that forasmuch as GOD is robbed of his honor, and the creatures set themselues in his iudgement seate, when they take vppon them to make Lawes for the stablishing of a spiritual gouernment: God declareth that he Esa. 29.14. wil take horrible vengeance of it, & deale terribly with them. And why so? Euen because they haue serued him after the commaundementes of men, and not held themselues to his simple worde, and therefore hee will blind the wittes of them, so as they shall be destitute of all reason, and become so brutish that they shal not be able to discerne any thing at all. Is not this enough to make the hayre stand vp vppon our head? What is to bee done then? Let vs followe this saying: That obedience is better than sacrifice. Loe here a sentence that needeth no glose. The Papistes shew themselues to be farre past shame in these dayes, in that they will needes maintaine the tyrannie of that idoll, and still continue in their wilfulnesse of folowing their owne fond deuotions, which haue not any foundation in Gods word. Behold, our Lord requireth but obedience, that is to say that men should submit themselues to his trueth, and be contented with that which he commaundeth. And the declaration hereof is deliuered vs here by Moses in two wordes; that is to wit, that they shoulde neither ad nor diminish aught at all to Gods worde; but that when God speaketh, they should receiue his sayinges with quiet obedience, saying: Yea Lord, all this is iust and righteous full, there is not any thing to bee gainsayed in any one poynt. Againe, thou Lord hast set vs boundes within the which it behoueth vs to holde our selues and not presume to say, this is good, or I will doe this more than is commanded me. No, but wee must assure our selues that our true wisedome and perfect soundnesse is to submit our selues meekely to thy word. If wee haue that, let vs not doubt but that God alloweth our whole lyfe. And if wee swarue neuer so little from it; wee shall not onely bee vtterly misliked of him, but also prouoke his vengeance against vs.

But now let vs kneele down in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs to perceiue them better, so as it may bring vs to a true and liuely repentance. And because wee bee so much inclined to followe our owne inuentions, it may please him not to suffer such hardnesse of heart in vs, as may make vs to turne away from his commandements, but rather that euery one may submit our selues to his word, and frame our selues wholy thereafter, that being voyde of all ouerweening of our owne wit and discretion, we may suffer our selues to bee guided & gouerned by his hand: and specially that when he sendeth vs preachers to shew vs his wil, hee vouchsafe vs such grace, as wee may submit our selues thereunto, so as wee may not onely receiue his word when it is preached by the voyce of men, but also haue it written in our hearts by his holy Ghoste. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth. &c.

On

On Fryday the xj. of October. 1555.

The Lxxxvi. Sermon which is the first vpon the thirteenth Chapter.

IF there rise vp among you a Prophet that is a dreamer of dreames, which giueth the signe or a myracle;

2 And the signe or myracle which hee hath tolde thee, commeth to passe: and he say vnto thee, let vs walke after other Gods which you haue not knowen, and let vs serue them:

3 Thou shalt not hearken to the words of that Prophet, or dreamer of dreames; for the Lord your God trieth you, to weete if you loue the Lorde your God with all your heart and with all your soule.

HEERE godsheweth what steadfastnesse of faith ought to bee in those yhaue bin taught by his word natnely euē such as may bee able to withstād all the lyes and sleightes of Satan, so as they bee not hindered by any false doctrines or errors; but may continue alwayes in the trueth. For if wee receiued his worde when it is preached vnto vs, and yet it had no hold in vs: but that wee should turne aside from that which we had learned so soone as we perceiued any thing to the contrary: what a thing were it? It is sayd that faith must be the victorie whereby to ouercome the whole worlde: for so doth Saint Iohn speake thereof in his first Epistle. And if wee yeelde to euery winde, so as euery blaste of vntrueth is inough to withdrawe vs from GOD: our faith will soone bee ouercome; and where is then our victorie? Therefore let vs marke that when GOD graunteth vs the grace to bee taught by his worde; it is not onely to the end wee shoulde learne the thinges that are spoken, and beare them in minde for a while; but also to the ende wee shoulde staye vppon them, and bee so grounded vppon them, that if all the troubles of the worlde shoulde rise vp against vs, wee shoulde still holde our owne, and continue stedfast and inuincible. If this were sayd to the people of olde time, which had not so large instruction by a great deale as wee haue: much more dooth it belong to vs nowadayes. God gaue the Iewes sufficient instruction, so farre foorth as was requisite for their welfare. That is true: but yet did he teach them vnder shadowes and figures, which maner of teaching was darkesome in comparison of that which we haue nowadayes. For in the Gospell wee haue the sunne of righteousnesse shining as it were at nooneday. So then, Gods worde must serue vs, not onely to shewe vs the right way, but also to inable vs to withstand all the temptations of Satan and his vpholders. We must (say I) be so armed, as we may fight and put backe all errors and falsehood, so as after we haue once knowen God, we may stick to him stedfastly to the vttermost. And that is the cause why Saint Paul treating of the vse of the Gospell, sayth that we must not be lyke little babes which are drawen too and fro, so as we should no sooner see any trifling toye to beguile vs, but we should by and by be gadding after it: and what a thing were that? But we must (sayth he) be so setled in the fayth, that if there come any cosiners that goe about to leade vs by craft, and to deceiue vs, wee may bee fenced against them, and not bee shaken by them ouersoone. True it is that we must needes haue a begetting in our Lord Iesus Christ, and that at the first our faith may be so weake, that we shall be lyke little babes: But we must growe still, and dayly gather new strength, vntil we come to mans estate that we be perfect to meete with our Lord Iesus Christ. Thus yee see what force the doctrine of trueth ought to haue, when it is taught vs. That is to wit, we must not onely count it good in consenting to it; but also be so well assured of it, that the diuell, doe what he can, may not be able to remoue vs, by reason of the certeintie which wee haue, whereby wee bee inabled to beare backe whatsoeuer shall be set against vs. And doubtlesse wee see by the example of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that such as haue bin faithfully taught, may well repulse all the wiles of Satan. For when Iesus Christ was tempted, wherewith armed he himselfe but with the holy Scripture? Wee see that if there rise vp neuer so many false Prophets among vs, yet if wee be throughly well grounded in faith, & setled in it as we ought to be: we shal cōtinue stedfast, & the diuell shall win nothing at our handes. True it is that now & then we shal find some impedimēts; (for Gods seruauntes shall bee sure of trouble, that serueth to humble thē:) but yet whatsoeuer it be, their faith is alwayes the better prooued by errors, heresies, & such other lyke thinges, whereby our Lord sheweth that we haue profited well in his schoole, & that wee can neuer be led away vnto wickednesse, whatsoeuer betideth. Also we heare what Saint Paul sayth, when hee armeth vs against all spirituall battels that may befall vs: hee giueth vs the sword of Gods word, hee deliuereth vs the shield of faith, and hee giueth vs the helmette of hope. And thereupon hee inferreth, that wee shall not onely be inabled to withstand all the assaultes that Satan can make vppon vs, but also bee defended from his fiery dartes when there is no lykelyhoode for vs to escape from his subtleties. Now therefore, whensoeuer the Gospell is preached vnto vs, or that wee reade the holy scripture, let vs learne not onely to receiue the thinges as true which are told vs out of the mouth of God, but also to bee so fully resolued of them in our selues, as we may not be trayned vnto wickednesse nor turned aside from the right way when the diuell stirreth vp any heresies. And so ye see what is told vs in this text. For our Lord thinkes it not enough that the faithfull should serue him and hold them to his trueth when they bee in quiet & without temptation, but also hee will haue them to yeeld such trust vnto his worde, that if the diuell fall to sowing of his darnell to marre al, and wicked men rise vp to deface the truth by al the meanes they can, and to turne it into lyes: such as haue learned what the true religion meaneth, should not change nor be fickle and vnconstant, but shewe that the thinges which they know are of God, and an abiding trueth, so as it is not for men to swarue or start from them in any wise.

Eph. 6. 12. & 16. 17.

Now thé, let vs beare this warning wel in mind, and euery of vs examine himselfe, and when we haue once vnderstoode ỹ things ỹ haue bin told vs, and are necessary to our saluation: let vs not imagine our selues to haue a perfect and right faith as is requisite, vnlesse wee bee so constant and fully resolued in the thinges that our Lorde hath shewed vs, that we abide by it and followe our course still, whatsoeuer come of it. For whosoeuer fleeteth or starteth aside at euery matter, sheweth that hee neuer knewe Iesus Christ as hee ought to doe. And therefore Saint Paul in another place vseth two similitudes to shewe of what force Gods word ought to bee with vs, to hold vs fast vnto him in his obedience. Hee saith that wee must be throughly grounded and rooted. For many haue a kinde of faith: but that is but in outward shewe and appearance: as for inwardly it hath no liuely nor deepe roote. For if a man haue but a faire braunch couered with flowers, to what purpose is that? One blast of wind will deface it. But if a tree bee well planted, the roote of it will hold it fast in the middest of all stormes. Euen so must wee bee rooted in our Lorde Iesus Christ, and we must be throughly well grounded vppon him, so as men may perceiue not onely that wee haue knowledge, but also that our hearttes doe yeeld record of our playnedealing. And marke here the cause why so many men are so greatly hindered, and indeuour no further but to purchase themselues credit among men. When they come to a Sermon where the Gospell is preached, for the most part they thinke they haue well profited, when they can skill to talke of it and there are very fewe that haue a care to be so grounded in it, as to lay it vp in their hearts, that GOD may be witnesse of it: there are very fewe that indeuour to attcine to that holinesse. And therefore doth God abhorre that fooolish vainegloriousnesse, wherebymen seeke but onely to win themselues estimation, by setting a faire face and countenance vppon the matter.

And therefore let vs marke in fewe wordes, that Gods word ought to serue vs to double purpose. First to teach vs his will, that we may submit our selues simply vnto it: so that when wee haue the grace giuen vs to haue the doctrine purely taught vs, then euery of vs shall agree thereunto, and hearken to the voyce of our sheepheard, and followe whatsoeuer is told vs, without gainesaying. The thing whereof we must doe when wee haue order in the Church, so as there be no sectes nor troubles in it, but Gods trueth is purely preached: is, that there must bee true concorde and brotherly loue among vs, to answere our God all with one heart and one mouth, that his trueth may be aduanced among vs. The second vse thereof is, that when it falleth out that Satan indeuoureth to turne vs away, and there spring vp heresies, false doctrines and errors among vs: wee must withstand all such things, and shew that Gods truth is strong enough to hold vs still vnto him, according to my former saying that our faith must put the vpper hand of all the world, so as we bee starke deafe in hearkening to any of all the wiles that are put to vs to intice vs from God and his pure trueth. Thus yee see in effect what is told vs in this text.

And let vs marke well Moseses maner of speache. If a prophet steppe vp among you, saith he. Hereby hee sheweth that wee must not only withstand the open enemies that fight against Gods word, and pretend not at all to be of the flocke, or to haue any partnership or neighboorhoode with vs: but also resist our household traytors, insomuch that if there rise vp any deceiuer among our selues, that is to say if any such one maketh pretence to be of the fellowship of the faithfull, and to be as it were of the very household of faith, step vp: we must not be troubled at it out of measure. And that is well worthie to be noted, for if the christian faith be impugned by the wicked, which pretend not to serue the God, (as by the Turkes, Paynims, and Iewes) so as they blaspheme with open mouth: howmuch as they be vtterly cut off from the Church lyke rotten members, their resisting of the Gospell, and their striuing to abolishe the Christian religion, is no great woonder to vs. For why? Wee be as it were hardened with such examples. Therfore when the open enemies set themselues against God & his word, it is a signe that that will easily bee ouercome. But when those that are knitte vnto vs, and are as it were of our owne bodie, doe fall to tearing of the vnitie of our faith in peeces, to peruert Gods trueth, and to marre it in such wise as it shoulde bee disfigured: that is such a perplexitie and griefe to vs, as wee wote not where to become. And that is the thing that troubleth so many simple folkes nowadayes. What shall wee doe, say they? For wee see so much disputing in the Church, and so greate diuersitie of opinions, that it were better to aske no question of any thing, insomuch that a great number become careless, for feare to bee intangled in wicked matters and to bee beguyled, and therefore they let all alone, and will not in any wise come neere vnto God. Wee see a greate sorte of men of that stampe. Otherssome let loose the raynes of the brydle, and take libertie to maintaine one while one mans saying and another while another mans, and are neuer fully perswaded of any thing; but are in one mynde to day, and in another minde to morrowe, and chaunge at euery minute of an houre.

Wee see a number of wild heades nowadayes which haue no stay at all, but thinke that all things are lawfull. And why? For I see there are diuerse opinions, say they. But such men do proue that they neuer tasted what Gods trueth is. The first sort doe well bewray a cursed vnbeleefe. For our Lorde promiseth that such as seeke him with a lowly heart, shall not be disappointed, but hee will shewe him selfe to them. Let vs knocke, and the doore shalbe opened. If wee desire reuerently to be guided by God, surely he will not faile vs. Let vs distrust our owne infirmitie and rudenesse; and our Lorde will giue vs the spirite of discretion, so as wee shall not bee beguiled. To be short this saying of Saint Paul which I haue alleaged alreadie heretofore shall euer be performed; namely, that heresies shall serue to the true tryall of our faith, and not bee able ouerthrowe it. For as touching those that are so fleeting without cause; they shewe that there was nothing in them but a false pretence, and that they did but play the hypocrites in making a countenance to sticke to Gods truth; for had they beene well rooted in it, as I sayde, they woulde haue continued stedfast in it still.

To conclude, let such examples prouoke vs to put this lesson the better in vre. And when wee see the troubles that are nowadays in the world, let vs not be ouercome by them, neither let our faith be defaced. But the more the diuel laboureth and inforceth himselfe to vndo it, the more let it aduaunce it selfe and get the vpper hande of such assaultes. And when wee see false prophets step vp among vs, let vs not ceasse to yeeld this honour still to God, that wee hold our selues to his word, and start not from it by any meane. And very necessitie constraines vs to it in these dayes, because wee see that such as call themselues Christians and take that title most vppon them, are the worst enemies of God that a man can finde. For the Turkes & Iewes are not more fierie and venemous at this day against God, to deface the whole doctrine of saluation; than are the Papistes. And therefore let vs arme our selues with the warning that is giuen vs heere: which is, that when wee see false prophets step vp in the sheepefold and in the middes of Gods house: yet notwithstanding wee must not faile to hold on stil, nor make a stumbling blocke of it to step aside or start away, but ouergo it through the power of faith. Yea, and to come yet neerer the matter, when wee see these varlets that had pretended to be at oddes with the Papistes, and had mingled themselues among vs, do thereupō fall to inuenting of false opinions: let vs not bee ouermuch amazed for all that. True it is that wee be not senseless, & that we haue neede to be waked: but yet must wee alwayes conclude thus with our selues: How nowe? Our Lord hath beene so gracious to vs as to open his owne holy mouth to giue vs the certeintie of faith by his Gospel: and shall wee nowe turne away at euery push? After that manner (say I) must wee withstande all the temptations that may befall vs, when deceiuers and false fellowes step vp amōg vs, of purpose to deface by their suttletie the pure doctrine that hath beene preached to vs, & wherein we haue beene trayned vp.

Now first of all it is said, Thou shalt not hearken to the Prophet when he sayth vnto thee, Let vs go and serue other gods which thou hast not known. It behoueth vs to wey well all these woordes of Moses: For here he speaketh to al beleeuers. He speakes not only to the great doctors that haue beene at the Vniuersitie all their life long, but also to the vnlearned. Although then that we be no clerks, yet let vs learne that we must haue this constancie of faith, of not following the wyles of Satan to bee withdrawen from our God when he hath beene so gracious vnto vs, as to communicate himselfe to vs. Wee must not say, Alas, I haue no learning, nor fineneſse of witte, to be so cunning; euery man hath not like measure. I graunt that euery man is not of abilitie to enter into disputation against sophisters, and against such as are full fraught with malice to deceiue ỹ simple: but yet, all men from the moste to the least ought to haue this inuincible stedfastnes of sticking vnto God and his trueth when they once knowe it. There is no excuse in that case. For it is not in vaine that God hath set downe this generall law for all his Church. And it is certaine also that he will giue vs power, so wee resort to him, and seeke to him for succour. For what is ỹ cause why so many folke are seduced, but onely their own fond presumption, or their negligence, or else their contempt of Gods worde? For yee shall see some stand so much in their owne conceits, as (to their own seeming) no man is able to ouermatch them: and yet for all that, they are but sillie beastes. Our Lorde therefore doth blow away their pride, as men may perceiue: and experience sheweth that God punisheth many folkes pride, which had too great an ouerweening of themselues. Now thē, what is to be done? Let vs humble our selues & pray God to gouern vs so by his holy spirit, & to giue vs such wise dōe, as wee may not bee taken tardie when the diuel goes about to make a breach into vs to enter at. If we goe y way to worke, let vs assure our selues that God will guide vs, and that wee shall neuer be caught in Satans snares. But there are many that keepe on their race without care, as though they were priuiledged from all dangers. But let vs for our part keepe good watch, and haue such a care to warde our selues, as the deceiuers (whé they come) may not finde vs asleepe. And that will so bee, if wee beare such reuerence to Gods worde, as wee acknowledge it to bee the preciousest treasure that we haue. For if a man make so little reckening of a thing, that he leaue it at al aduenture: the first that commeth may robbe him of it: but as for him y locketh vp his goods, (specialy those that are the chiefe and which he counteth to bee most worth:) he cannot bee so bereft of them. And therefore let vs put our faith in good custodie, and be so warie in the keping of it, as [it may appeare] that we haue it in such estimation as it deserueth; for it is an inestimable treasure. Thus yee see what wee haue to note here, where Moses speaketh to all such as had tasted what Gods lawe is, exempting no man from standing stoutly in battaile and defence against the lyes and sleyghts of Satan.

Nowe hee addeth, If he say vnto thee, Let vs followe strange gods, which thou hast not knowen. This serueth to shewe vs who bee false prophets. For God telleth vs that wee cannot withstande the wyles of Satan, without the knowledge of the trueth: that is the onely meane. And no marueil though the wretched worlde nowadayes be allured to destruction: for Gods worde is as it were buryed: and when men are destitute of that light, it is certaine that they bee in horrible darkenesse, so as they cannot but stumble & stray here and there, because they haue no certaine aime at any thing. But here our Lorde declareth that wee must bee instructed in his worde; and thereunto also is this saying after a sort referred. For hee presupposeth that wee bee in a good trade alreadie, and that wee knowe the way of saluation: accordingly as Moses wil protest hereafter; saying, I haue shewed you the way of life and the way of death. Nowe therefore, whensoeuer wee will resist false Prophets, and their lyes, let vs take to vs the doctrine of trueth. And that is the cause why it is saide, The gods which thou hast not knowen. For in this case wee must match the liuing God whome wee haue knowen, against all the ydolles which the worlde hath forged to it selfe. For God speaketh not to such as neuer heard nor vnderstood any thing of him before: but to such as he had giuen his lawe vnto, whome hee had set in the right way, and to whome hee had giuen an infallible rule. When hee hath so fenced men aforehande, then saieth hee vnto them, Beware that yee followe not the gods whome yee haue not beene acquainted with.

Deut. 30, 15 19.

To be short then, it is shewed vs that this doctrine concerneth such as haue beene duely instructed in the faith. Will wee beate backe all Satans deuices? Let vs haue the skill to say, It is God that hath certified vs, hee is a faithfull witnesse to vs, wee needs not to be in doubt or vncertaintie any more, or to cast doubts, or to say, What? Which way shall we goe? We may well assure our selues that this is the way, that is the thing which wee must stay vppon. That in effect is the order which wee haue to keepe, according as it is shewed vs in this text.

But let vs marke also, that wee must haue our eares so stopped, as we may vtterly mistike whatsoeuer may cause vs to swarue to the contrarie of those things which we haue learned by Gods worde. For as soone as wee giue care to them, by and by wee be halfe corrupted, according to this similitude which Saint Paul alleageth in the seconde to the Corinthians, that when a woman giueth eare to a bawde or a Ruffian, although shee consent not to him out of hande, yet is shee alreadie peruerted, and it is already an euill token. For if a woman bee chaste and shamefast, shee will in any wise shunne all such messages as may be brought to her to inueigle her to follie, and to make her to breake wedlocke. Shee must eschewe such manner of things. Nowe Saint Paul sayeth, that as long as we byde in the simplicitie of the Gospell, we be as a chaste wife that keepeth her faith whole to her husbande, and that our Lorde Iesus Christ who hath made such couenant with vs, to choose vs to bee of his bodie, taketh and receiueth vs for his owne. But if wee heedeth the lyes and trumperies that are brought vnto vs; and wee refuse not to learne what Diuel is: it is an euill signe, and wee bee corrupted readie. And therefore let vs beare well in minde, that wee ought so little to credite false prophets, as wee shoulde not in any wise giue eare vnto them, but shunne them a farre off, as soone as wee perceiue that they goe about to deceiue vs and to enuyce vs to naughtinesse. And to say the trueth, this curiositie hath beene the cause of many mens destruction. For it seemeth to many high minded persons, that all thinges should passe the tryall of their wit: and that when they haue sifted things after their owne imagination, they may followe whatsoeuer they themselues thinke good, for they bee able ynough to discerne the trueth of all thinges. But when our Lorde findeth such ouerboldnesse in them, hee punisheth them to confusion. The trueth is, that they would so inquire of all things, as nothing might escape them: in so much as they could finde in their hearts to mingle Mahomets Alcoran, and all the dotages of the Heathen, and all the superstitions of the Papists with the puritie of the Gospell, and to make a medly of them, that when they had well clowted them together in their owne brayne, they might saye, This is the thing that is good. But our Lorde (as I saide afore) cannot abyde that men shoulde trust so to their owne wittes. And againe on the other side, hee cannot abide such iniurie to bee done to his worde, as that it shoulde bee matched with the wyles of Satan, so as it might bee sayde, now will I choose what liketh mee best.

It is too high a mounting for men to make themselues iudges and vmpers of Gods trueth, which the Angels do honour with all reuerence. Needes therefore must such men fall into horrible destruction. And therfore let vs beware that wee lyddle our selues, so as our mindes wander not out into fond curiositie. And as soone as wee perceiue that ỹ diuel goes about to falsifie Gods pure trueth, let vs stop our eares, and not harken to any such thing, but vtterly abhorre it.

Now moreouer Moses sayth, That although the false prophets shewe some signe or myracle, & the same commeth to passe, yet must not mans eare geue vnto it. Here he sheweth that we must haue such constancie and stedfastnesse in our faith, as it may not bee ouerthrowen though there bee neuer so great occasion of stumbling. As for example, if there bee such an illusion of Satan, that a false-prophet say vnto vs, such a thing shall come to passe, and it commeth to passe in deede: then are wee at our wittes end, and it is ynough to ouerthrowe our whole building though it were neuer so well builded, vnlesse God worke on our side aboue the power of mans abilitie. But yet howsoeuer the world go, Gods trueth must be of such force wich vs as to holde vs backe against al such temptation, so as if the diuel bring any illusion, he may not gaine any thing at our handes, nor preuaile against vs.

And let vs marke, that before that Moses saith so he giueth vs a sure declaration of false prophets, that is to say, of such as go about to turne vs from the true God, whome wee haue once knowen, and would wrap vs in wicked superstitions wherin there is no reason. If any such thing befall vs, no maruel though our Lorde will haue vs to resist all that euer the diuel putteth to vs to bleare our eyes withal, yea, euen though there bee false miracles, in so much that although all that the false prophet or deceiuer foretelleth, do come to passe; yet must wee not be led away by it. We see then in effect what the meaning of Moses is, that we must be so well fenced by gods worde, that although the diuell rush against vs with neuer so great violence, and worke all the meanes he can to beguyle vs; yet we must not be ouercome, but our faith must be as a wel garded fortresse, that notwithstanding any assault, or any batterie made against vs, yet it may warde all blowes, and bee able to saue it selfe from beeing vanquished by any enemies.

And now let vs marke, that if God sende such false miracles; it is not to intrap those that are his; but to punish such as haue not beleeued the Gospel, as Saint Paul speaketh thereof in the seconde to the Thessalonians. And therfore doth Moses also adde, Then is it Gods will to try thee whether thou louest him with all thy heart & all thy soule or no. It is a saying that deserueth to be wel marked. For first Moses doeth vs to vnderstande, that such thinges happen not without the ordinance of God: and secondly hee sheweth the ende or reason wherefore: namely that the faithfull may haue wherewith to bee confirmed, knowing well that God will giue them constancie to holde out, though the temptation be neuer so rough and violent. Those are the two thinges which wee haue to remember here. First, it is sayd, God tryeth thee. Hereby hee sheweth, that Satan hath no power ouer vs, nor can sowe any wicked weedes, further foorth than God giueth him leaue. And that is a verie needefull thing for vs to marke. For were wee perswaded that the doore were open for Satan, and that all errours might spring vp at all aduenture, and that God ouer ruled them not: alas what a thing were it? For wee see howe mad the diuel is to ouerthrowe all trueth: wee see with what furie hee goes to worke when hee is to fight against the kingdome of our Lorde Iesus Christ: and we see what spite hee beareth to our saluation. And therefore things would go too much to hauocke if God wrought not to hinder Satan of his full scope, that hee might not set vp his lyes among vs. Wherefore let vs vnderstande, that whensoeuer there is any trouble, diuision, or diuersitie of opinion in the Church, the same happeneth not at all aduenture, but God worketh from aboue, and ouerruleth the whole matter, according to this protestation of Moses, Thy God tryeth thee. Yee see then that by knowing that God holdeth vs vnder his hande, wee bee assured that no errours or abuses can haue accesse vnto vs, vnlesse so farre foorth as our Lorde giue them accesse. And marke it for a speciall point, to the ende wee thinke not that the diuel reigneth at his owne pleasure, and doeth all thinges as it were whether God will or no: for hee must bee faine to haue leaue of his master.

And nowe let vs come to that which Moses addeth concerning the ende and reason why God doeth it: For wee may thinke it strange. What? That God shoulde trye vs? That errors shoulde bee saide to come so of God? Then is hee the author of lying. Againe, doeth God stirre vp the diuell vnto euill? Then might wee take occasion of stumbling at it. Yea, but in as much as Moses addeth that God doeth it for iust cause, the stumbling blocke is taken away. Hee sayth that God tempteth vs, that is to saye, that hee tryeth vs. After what maner? Whether we loue the Lorde our God or no. And hereby hee sheweth, (as I haue declared heretofore) that if wee haue a right meaning and pure heart, and haue receiued his trueth without hypocrisie, he will helpe vs at our neede, and we shalbe vpheld by his power, so as Satan may well straine himselfe to the vttermost, but the victorie shall alwayes go on our side. And this is the thing that I haue touched out of Saint Paul where he sayth, that all the false miracles which befall vnder the reigne of Antichrist, (as many haue been seene) are all reuengements of God, to punish such as woulde not obey his trueth. And it is good reason that Satan shoulde driue them to destruction, sith they woulde not open their eyes at such time as God woulde haue enlightened them. And seeing they haue thrust all good doctrine vnder foote; it is meete that they shoulde bee deceiued by lyes.

But let vs come backe againe to the wordes of Moses. He sayth that wee be tryed, as wee if wee loue the Lorde our God. Heereby hee sheweth, that God putteth a difference betweene the hypocrites and such as serue him in soundnesse of heart, at such time as heresies spring vp and that there is trouble and disagreement. And why? For it is certaine that such as loue God are preserued by the power of his holy Ghoste, & that the troubles which they susteyne are a good proofe and sealing vp of their faith, whereby the same is made autendicall. God sheweth by effect howe hee hath wrought in them, and that they bee in verie deede of the number of those whome hee hath chosen. So then let vs vnderstand, that all the errours and heresies which the diuell shall haue sowed among vs, shalbee turned to good ende to all Gods children. So farre off is it that they bring vs any hurte or harme, that they serue euer to make our faith shyne the brighter, and to warrant vs that God hath succoured vs, and that hee will haue the same knowen to the whole worlde, so as he may bee glorified for it. And we also haue the more cause to rest vppon him with the greater certaintie of faith, and to trust that hee will neuer faile vs.

For as much then as wee see that our Lorde worketh in such wise as hee turneth darkenesse into light, and deadly poyson to our health: haue wee not whereof to reioyce? and ought wee not to bee patient albeit that troubles doe vexe vs for a time, and that wee haue much adoo to resist? Yet ought not our hearts to quaile, seeing that God giueth it so happie an issue. Thus much concerning the first poynt; that is to witte, that if wee loue God with all our heart, that is to say, roundly and soundly and without counterfayting: hee will not suffer vs to bee beguyled: but whensoeuer Satan comes to sowe troubles and heresies, wee shalbee confirmed still better and better, and profite in such wise, as wee shall neuer bee ouercome. And therewithall wee shall haue the better proofe that wee bee of the number of his seruauntes, and of those whome hee hath committed to the custodie of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and that wee shall see this saying fulfilled, that hee will neuer suffer any of the things to perish, which his father hath put into his hande. Wee see then howe our Lorde Iesus Christ is the keeper of our saluation; & that wee finde the thing by experience which Saint Peter sayeth; namely that our saluation is kept in heauen by faith, and that wee our selues also shall get the vpper hande of all the temptations which the diuell stirreth vp against vs, by sowing such cockle and darnel to the preiudice of Gods trueth.

1.Pet.1.4.5.

But let vs marke also, that such as are windeshaken, doe shewe that they neuer wist what it is to loue God with all their hearts, and that there was nothing in them but vanitie and hypocrisie. And therefore when wee see men seduced, let vs not wonder as though God were cruell to them. For it was meete that their hypocrisie shoulde bee discouered. They meane to mocke God, and vied a kinde of vernishing and painting to make a shewe of that which they were not: and God bewrayeth what they were in deede. Nowe therefore, whereas wee see the wretched worlde so carried nowadayes into darkenesse, superstition and idolatrie, wee must not thinke that they doe it of meere simplicitie, as though they were innocent and sinnelesse, and that God had giuen Satan the bridle without cause: but wee must rather consider that God with iust vengeance punisheth the vnkindnesse of such as had neither purpose nor desire vnto him.

Trueth it is, that a man shall see some outwarde shewe of holinesse in a number of those that are seduced in the popedome and elsewhere. But yet for all that, they bee double hearted, and God perceiueth what they bee in secret. So then, let vs vnderstand that God is iust Iudge, and let vs glorifie him for his punishing of such as loued him not soundly in their heartes as they shoulde haue done. That is the thing which wee haue to note.

And in deede, experience shewes it in such as turne backe and fall to naughtinesse after they haue once knowen the Gospell. We haue seene here that when Satans vnderlinges haue come hither to set troubles in the Church, those that haue beene seduced by them haue known them welynough of olde, and not nowe of late, for I speake of the space of eyghteene yeere. Since the troubling of this Church diuers sorts haue beene seene, and still God hath beene fain to shewe and to poynt these out with his finger, which had nothing in them but dissimulation & hypocrisie, howe faire countenance soeuer they did make. And I say that this hath beene knowen nowe these eyghteene yeres; insomuch that euen they that haue pretended to bee great vpholders of the Gospell, are well knowen to vs howe they haue behaued themselues, & I could rehearse their doings if neede were, but it is ynough to giue men an incling of them, that others might take example by them. When the Anabaptistes came hither to infect all, there was great cheere made them in the towne, and this was about an eyghteene yeares ago. True it is, that men were constrained to repeale their doctrine openly: but yet in the meane while they were still chocke vnder the chinne, & in steed of resisting them lustily, scarfes were made to entertaine them with. And since that time, wee haue seene in our owne dayes, (and that not long ago) howe other heretikes haue beene fauoured at their comming hither, and specially howe that horrible blasphemer was supported. And by whom? By such as had so long despised God, that in the ende their shame was of necessitie to bee discouered. They proofed sufficiently that their desire was to haue the Gospell: but that was the gospell of Mahomet to turne all thinges vpside downe, and to bring all things to confusion. For the worlde hath seene howe farre they ouershot themselues; insomuch that they tooke parte against God and his word. Nowe sith wee haue such examples, let vs learne to liue in feare and warinesse, and alwayes come backe to that which is tolde vs here, that is to sir, that it is not without cause that our Lorde sayeth, that hee tryeth and examineth such as were disguised afore: and that when hee suffereth false prophets to bee stirred vp by Satan, to sowe their darnell among vs, it is to trye vs whether wee loue him with all our heart or no. And therefore let vs proceede more and more in the feare of our God, accordingly as it is said here, that wee must serue him and obey his holy commaundementes, not douting but that hee will make vs to get the vpper hande in al assaults and conflictes wherewith wee be assayled, so as wee shalbe sure of the victorie, because hee will fight for vs.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as wee may not proceede to prouoke his wrath through our vnthankfulnesse; but that seeing he hath giuen vs the infinite treasure of his holy worde, whereby wee haue full assurance of our saluation; wee may imbrace it with all reuerence and liue in such pureneſſe of heart before him, as hee may bestowe his riches more and more vppon vs & make vs partakers of them, and that wee may walke the whole race of our life after such sort in his obedience, as wee may moreouer resist all our enemies, and by the power of the spirituall sworde of his worde, and of the shield of faith, beate backe all the assaultes that shalbe made vppon vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Saturday the xij. of October. 1555.

The Lxxxvij Sermon, which is the second vpon the thirteenth Chapter.

2.3 And the signe or miracle, &c.

4 Yee shall walke after the Lorde your God, and feare him, and keepe his commaundements, and obey his voyce, and serue him, and sticke to him:

5 But that Prophet or dreamer of dreames shalbee put to death: for hee hath spoken to turne you from the Lorde your God (which hath brought you out of the lande of Egypt, and deliuered you from the house of bondage) and to thrust thee out of the way which the Lorde thy God hath commaunded thee to walke in. And so shall you ridde away the euill from among you.

WEe sawe yesterday wherefore God giueth the brydle to Satan, in such wise, that hee soweth many errours and corruptions, not onely in the worlde, but also in the Church. For it is good reason that our faith should be tryed, to proue whether we liue in vprightnesse, soundnes, and loue before our God, or whether there be any fayrednesse in vs. And there is not a meane to try all thereof, than when wee come to the encounter to know, whether Gods trueth ought to bee inuincible against all errours and leasings. And therefore let it not offende vs when wee see him sowe darnell: but let vs bethinke vs of that which is sayde here, namely, that our Lorde will search vs to the harde bottome, whether wee beare reuerence to his worde in good earnest and vnfeynedly or no. Not that hee knoweth not verynough what wee bee; (for it is not for himselfe that hee doeth it:) but to the ende that our faith should shewe it selfe, and that there shoulde be true record thereof.

Nowe moreouer it is tolde vs, that wee must follow Gods worde and hearken to him, that wee may serue him and sticke to him. And this is still to shewe vs that which I haue declared afore: namely, that wee can neuer bee at any stay, vnlesse wee knowe well what God it is whome wee worship. For if wee bee in doute, there needeth nothing to shake vs downe, as wee see by experience. Therefore let vs learne to profite so in our Gods schoole, as wee may not bee remoued by false doctrines, but may haue wherewith to withstande the sleightes of Satan, as was declared more at large yesterday.

But let vs goe backe againe to this saying, that although the false Prophet haue giuen some signe or foretolde some wonder, and the same thing is come to passe: yet notwithstanding wee must hold our owne still. Here it might be demaunded whether the diuell can prophesie or no. I stande not much vppon that, it is not materiall: but I haue aunswered before, that GOD is aboue him, and that it is his will that his Church shoulde liue in warrefare, to the ende that the faith of all his might be exercised. Then if a deceiuer foretell a thing, and the same fal out in deede: it is not to bee laide, but that GOD hath giuen him the brydle. Therefore it is not for vs to trouble our selues greatly, to knowe whether Satan foresee thinges to come or no. For it is very certaine that notwithstanding all the craft and subtletie that is in him, yet knoweth hee not any more than our Lorde imparteth vnto him. And all is to deceiue the vnbeleeuers according to their desert: or elſe to ſhewe, that doe what he can, yet ſhall hee neuer get the vpper hande of the choſen, as is ſayde in other places of the ſcripture.

Let vs then leaue theſe needeleſſe queſtions, whereby many folke haue deceiued and intangled them ſelues, to wit, whether the diuels doe knowe more than men doe: for it is nothing to the matter as I ſayde afore. But rather let vs vnderſtande this iuſtice of GOD, that it is his will to puniſh the vnbeleeuers, becauſe they bee neuer contented with the ſingle trueth, but will needes bee ſtill wandering here and there, and therefore are they woorthie of ſuch payment. Beſides this, the faithfull alſo are exerciſed by incounters; and that is alwayes to their benefite, and to their welfare. For God doeth ſo preſerue them, as it is not poſſible for them to be deceiued.

But as yet there remayneth one queſtion more: for it is ſaide in the eyghteenth Chapter, that a man may diſcerne a true Prophet from a deceiuer by this ſelfe ſame marke. If a Prophet (ſayth Moſes) haue foretolde a thing, and the ſame is come to paſſe: yee ſhall vnderſtand that that Prophet hath ſpoken truely and in the name of God. But if he be founde a lyar in the thinges that hee hath ſpoken, it appeareth that he was puffed vp with pryde and preſumption, & that he tooke too highly vpon him: and therefore let him be driuen away and rooted out from among you. It may ſeeme at the firſt bluſh, that here is ſome contrarietie: but wee muſt marke that in ſo ſaying, Moſes intendeth to declare, that God deceiueth not his ſeruauntes as the ydols are wont to doe, that is to ſay, as the diuels haue vnder the title of ydols deceiued the ignorant wretches that did put their truſt in them. For they foretolde lyes: and the people founde them ſelues diſappointed in giuing eare vnto them. And that is the cauſe why it is ſayd by the Prophet Eſay, that the gods of the Heathen can do neither good nor euill. But our Lord ſeparateth himſelfe there from all the gods that had beene inuented by mans deuiſe, and telleth vs ſaying: It belongeth to mee onely to ſhewe what is to come. And why? For I order all things, and I haue the worlde in my hande; and therefore I can well tel what ſhal come to paſſe. But as for ſ ydols, they haue no power at all: and therefore howe can they declare any thing to ſuch as ſerue and worſhip them? This then is true in general. And according hereunto, the Prophet Ieremie ſpeaking to Hananiah in his eyght and twentith Chapter, confirmeth this ſaying of Moſes which wee ſhall ſee in the eyghteenth Chapter of this booke of Deuteronomie. I wiſhe (ſayth hee) that the thing which thou haſt foretolde may come to paſſe. For, that lyar did ſoade the people with vaine hope. When Ieremie told them

Ier. 28. 9.

ſayings you haue offended your God too much, and haue continued in your wilfulneſſe vnto this daye; I haue often times warned you to come to amendement, but you would not heare mee, and therefore wee bee come now to the laſt caſt; thinke not that GOD will beare with you any longer, but prepare your ſelues to beare the yoke and burthen; for yee muſt bee caryed away to Babylon, where your ſtate ſhalbe miſerable; Becauſe you haue forſaken your God, hee hath giuen you ouer to bee a praye to your enemies, and therefore there is no more remedie but to diſpoſe your ſelues to patience, that this aduerſitie may tame you, and your GOD ſhewe pitie vnto you at the ende of the terme which hee hath ſet you: Hananiah ſetting himſelfe againſt him, ſaide no, feare not that any ſuch thing ſhall befall you. And therewithall hee went and put a yoke vppon his neck, in skorne of Ieremie who had worne beades & lynes about his necke. Beholde (ſayes hee) I come to breake the thing that Ieremie hath ſhewed you for a ſigne that you muſt bee priſoners in Babylon. Very well (ſayde the Prophet Ieremie:) I woulde it were ſo; I wiſh not any harme to my countryfolke: but yet muſt not thou on the other ſide abuſe them with vayne hope as thou doeſt. Moreouer, thou ſhalt finde whether it bee ſo or no: and experience ſhall ſhewe whether thou bee a true Prophet or no: for whoſoeuer foretelleth a thing and the ſame commeth to paſſe; yeelds proofe that hee was ſent of God, and that hee ſpake out of Gods owne mouth. But if it come not to paſſe, it appeareth that all was but a lye. In that place Ieremie had an eye to the ſaide text which wee ſhall ſee hereafter. You ſee then howe it is a generall rule for all of vs to holde, that it belongeth onely to God to foretell thinges to come, and that ſuch as declare thoſe things truely, do by that token ſhewe and proue themſelues to be true Prophets. Notwithſtanding, it may well bee that ſometime GOD will permit a deceiuer to foretell ſome thing to come. And yet doeth not that ſtaine the generall rule. For why? when our Lorde foretelleth things to come, it is to frame al men to his lawe: And the falſe prophets what by they? In abuſing the people, and turning them from God, they promiſe them that all ſhall go well with them: whereas contrariwiſe Gods ſeruauntes doe alwayes matche faith and amendement of life with their admonitions: and they vſe a kinde of teaching that hath a good foundation to buylde vppon: but the ſpeaking of the other ſort is altogither in the aire. Now wee ſee howe deſirous the worlde is to be beguyled, accordingly as it is ſayde in the Prophet Micheas, that the vnbeleeuers doe like of thoſe but ſuch as bring them good tydinges of a good vintage or of a good harueſt. For ſo ſaith hee expreſſely, when it is ſayde vnto them, Yee ſhall bee farre fedde, and GOD ſhewereth you, take no thought, make good cheare. Thoſe are the thinges which the worlde deſireth. Neuertheleſſe GOD will

that

then permitte the deceiuers to speake trueth: but that is but in some peculiar case, and then doe they builde without foundation. Therefore is that no impediment to the continuall trueth of this rule, that when Gods prophetes foretell thinges to come, it is a proofe to warrant their doctrine, so as men may thereby knowe of whome they bee sent. For in verie deede although there appeare some trueth at the first blushe in the false prophetes: yet notwithstanding there is no holde of it. Marke that for one speciall point. Againe all the matter lyeth in the falling out, which in the ende sheweth it selfe cleane contrarie to that whiche was surmised. For in the turning of a hande all thinges goe backewarde, and the vnbeleeuers finde that it was but a blearing of their eyes to make them the more blockishe; and that their hasing of some trewe signe was but a baite to beguyle them, whereas in ỹ meane time they ceased not to hoorde vp Gods wrath & vengeance still against themselues.

Then let vs beare well in minde, that whereas it is sayde in this text, that a prophete may fore say some thing that shall come to passe afterwarde, and yet neuertheless not haue the more warraunt to bee taken for a seruaunt of GOD: the reason is, for that his matter hath no grounde in the worde of GOD, as I haue sayde afore: And secondely, that it is but as a heate, and a peculiar case, whereof there is no holde to be taken; like as when God suffereth Satan to transforme himselfe into an Angell of light, it is to harden the vnbeleeuers as they deserue to bee. And because they woulde not enioy the light, therefore must the darkenesse be made the thicker for them, and the deuill must haue all manner of effectualnesse of errour, as sayth Saint Paule in the seconde to the Thessalonians, insomuch that GOD not onely giueth him leaue to deceiue, as a point belonging peculiarly to his office, and as wherein hee is his owne minister: but also giueth him suche efficacie of errour, that is to saye such force and power, that men are blinded by him beyonde all measure. Thus yee see what wee haue to note. And therefore wee bee warned in effect, to pray GOD to giue vs the spirite of wisedom and discretion, that wee may not be snarled by Sathans lyes, what colour or couerte of craftinesse so euer he vse. Marke this for one point, that men must in any wise beware of presumption. For they be not so well able to iudge as were requisite. But let vs resorte vnto God, and hee will make vs to discerne betweene whyte and blacke.

Againe on the contrarie part, we must vnderstande that whensoeuer any good is promised vs, or any euill is threatened vs, wee must take Gods doctrine for our foundation, assuring ourselues that Gods will is not to separate his blessing and grace from his Lawe; And therefore that it is in vaine for vs to hope for fauour at his hande when wee haue offended him. For seeing wee haue prouoked his wrath wee shall finde that his threatening of vs is not in vayn; seeing that hee sayeth in his Lawe, that hee will persecute all such as sette themselues against him; it must needes bee performed. Therefore let vs first lay the foundation of faith and repentaunce; and then shall wee not be deceiued as in respect of the particular prophesies, but that this rule shall alwayes holde trewe, to witte, that such as speake the trueth are sent of GOD. Yet notwithstanding Sathan will not leaue off to haue leaue after a certaine sorte to deceiue the vnbeleeuers as they bee worthie: but that trueth is no trueth (as sayeth Saincte Paul): such miracles are but illusions to deceiue those that trust to them, and the ende that they tende vnto is but to seduce the wretched world. After the same maner also doeth our Lorde Iesus speake of them. And therefore let vs marke wel that although the deceiuers haue a showe of trueth in some particular case, yet is it nothing woorth: for there is no holde of it: and it is so farre off from any substantial trueth, that in the ende it appeareth to bee vtter vanitie and vntrueth, to deceiue the wretched vnbeleeuers withall, which are turned away from God. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to marke vpon this text. But howsoeuer the worlde goe, if we put the thinges in vre which are spoken here by Moses, that is to wit, if we followe the Lorde and walke in the way which hee sheweth vs: wee neede not to feare but that we be out of all danger of being deceiued by the wylinesse of our enemie. Although the deuill be the father of lying, and doe forge an infinite number of illusions against vs, and although wee on our side be neuer so roughly assayled by him: yet will GOD preserue vs, so wee abide continually in the obedience of his worde, and be willing to harken to him in all cases.

But nowe let vs come to that which Moses addeth. As for the prophet (sayeth hee) or the deceiuer which shall haue dreamed and deuised suche, to make them turne away from the Lorde their God; Let him be put to death, and he shall be taken from among you. Here our Lorde will haue vs not onely to beware that wee harken not to false prophetes, but also to roote out such pestilent persons vtterly. And therein he sheweth how earnest wee ought to be in the maintayning of his honour. Therefore to the ende wee shoulde abide in the pure singlenesse of faith, he had sayd afore, Beware that yee harken not to the false prophete. And not without cause hath our Lorde forbidden all his to giue eare to the bringers in of newe learninges. For why? Sith wee haue the worde of GOD, that ought to content vs well ynough: and if that will not suffice vs, what an vnthankefulnesse is it? For if wee will needes intangle our selues in false doctrines, is it not a yeelding of our selues to bee a pray to Satan? Doe wee not well deserue that God should leaue vs destitute of vnderstanding, to be drawen into all errours like brute beasts? But it behoueth vs not onely to shunne false prophetes and to giue their subtilties no entraunce into vs? but also (as Saint Paul sayth) to bee diligent in purging of Gods Churche from them, that such a plague be not nourished among vs. And truely if wee knewe our owne frailtie, and considered well on the other side what Sathan is able to doe against vs: it is certaine that wee woulde stande more vppon our garde than we be wont to doe. Trewe it is (as I haue sayde alreadie) that wee woulde fayne repose and staye our selues vppon GOD, so as we might not minister any occasion to Satan to beguyle vs; and surely if wee through our owne fonde desire of seeking lyes, did not cast ourselues into Sathans snares, wee shoulde be sure that GOD woulde alwayes preserue vs. But forasmuch as we bee too too weake, and Sathan needes no more but to holde vppe his finger to vs, to carrie vs out of hande from the right way of saluation: in respect thereof wee ought so much the more to seeke the remedies whereby to preuent the mischiefe. Againe let vs consider what Satan is able to doe: He is the prince of this worlde, and therefore wee shall soone be ouertaken by him, the rather if wee be slothfull, careleſſe, or negligent. Then is it not without cause that our Lorde warneth vs to take so good order, as such a plague may not lurke among vs; that is to wit, that wee may not haue deceiuers to beguile the simple, and to marre them by turning them from the pure trueth. For it is a likelihoode that wee woulde faine bee turned away from GOD, when wee giue the mischiefe such scope. If there were a breach in our towne-wall, and our enemies were at hand or that wee were alreadie beseeged, so as wee looked for the assault euerie minute of an houre; would we not prouide for it? Now the case standeth so with vs, that our enemie is not onely at hande, but also is entered in already. When wee heare his lyes, and withstand them not, ne make account of them; we may seeme to be wilfully disposed to perish, as wee bee worthie. And as touching vs that are shepheardes, it standeth vs in hande to haue a double voyce. For wee must gather together the sheepe as much as is possible: and when they bee in the flocke, wee must keepe them there quietly. But if there be wolues also, and theeues that woulde inuade the flocke: against those we must crye out aloude. And yet besides this, such as haue the sworde in their hande, must prouide for it also, and euerie man to his power must streine himselfe to keepe Gods Church from infecting with suche poyson, that the deuill may not haue his full scope to falsifie the pure trueth, to aduaunce himselfe against GOD, to ouerthrowe the right religion, and (at a worde) to turne all thinges vpside downe: but we must let these thinges as much as we can. Wherefore let vs marke, that it was Gods will that falseprophetes shoulde be rooted out from among his people. Nowe at the first sight this Lawe seemeth to bee ouerstreite: for is it meete that a man shoulde bee punished so sore for speaking his minde? Verily it is a wonder that we can abide that one shoulde be punished for speaking against a mortall man, and that when a man shall haue blasphemed the liuing GOD, we coulde finde in our hearte that he shoulde scape vnpunished. It appeareth what zeale is in them, which woulde haue such rigour abolished. If a Prince be misused, man will thinke that death is too small a thing for the offender, and that the fact can not be sufficiently reuenged, insomuch that whosoeuer speaketh against the princes authoritie shall bee punished, and no man will speake against it. If a man be founde so wicked as to procure a rebellion, or to rayse an insurrection among the people, verie well, he must loose his heade for it, and no man will say that such a Lawe is vniust or wicked. And why? Because it serues for the mainteynaunce of the state and common weale of the Countrey. And yet for all this, whereas GOD hath the soueraigne dominion of all, a woorme of the earth shall seeke himselfe against him, and goe about to robbe him of his honour, and to deface his maiestie and authoritie; and yet all this shall be as nothing, it shall be let slippe, and because it is but words, there is no reason why such punishement shoulde ensewe of it. But they that say so, doe well shewe that they haue no loue at all towarde GOD, but (which worse is) that they coulde finde in their heartes that all thinges were confounded together in a hotchpotche, so as man might scoffe at GOD and at his maiestie, and turne all religion into a mockerie and scorne. To be shorte, whosoeuer he is that speaketh so he is not to be taken for an ignoraunte person, seeing hee woulde that false doctrines shoulde be vnpunished: but rather hee is to bee counted a despiser of GOD, and an vphoulder of the deuill, which seeketh nothing else but the vndoing of all thinges vpside downe in the world. For our parte, lette vs learne to haue Gods honour in such estimation, that whereas we reuenge the wronges doone to men, wee thinke it much more reason that the partie shoulde bee punished which violateth the maiestie of him that hath created and fashioned vs. And the matter concerneth not onely the honour of God, but also the saluation of our owne soules: for they be thinges inseparable. And that ought well to whette vs on the more, not to beare with the errours and deceites of false prophetes.

Gal. 5. 9. 12. & Tit. 3. 10.

Iohn 12. 31.

See howe GOD witnesseth the infinite Loue that hee beareth vs, in that hee matcheth our saluation with his owne glorie, so as men cannot touche the one without hurting of the other: insomuch that if a man deface the honour of GOD, the saluation of man is ouerthrowen therewithall. In respect whereof GOD sayeth vnto vs, Suffer mee not to bee mocked among you, nor your selues to bee inticed to shrinke from my obedience: But if there be any wicked man among you, that goeth about to egge you away, beware yee nourishe no such a plague. Doeth not our Lorde in so saying shewe, that wee can not serue to his honour, nor maynteine him in his estate, but that in so doing wee procure our owne welfare? And therefore these dalyers and mockers that would woulde haue vs to beare with all manner of false doctrine, and that it shoulde bee Lawefull for euerie man to spewe out whatsoeuer hee lyſteth, (beſides that they shewe themselues traitours to GOD, and vtter defacers of his maiestie if it lay in them to doe it:) doe also bewraye themselues to bee enemies of mankinde, and desirous to bring their soules to ruine and destruction, so as they bee worse than murtherers. Let vs marke then that if Gods honour bee precious in our sight, and that the saluation of our owne soules bee deere vnto vs; we must not nourishe heresies, nor abuses, nor any other of Sathans trumperies; but euerie of vs in his owne state and calling, must procure the purging of Gods Churche from all euill, that wee may worshippe him with one common consent, that his doctrine may bee receiued, and that there may bee no diuision among vs.

But this was sayde to the people of olde time. Yea, and Gods honour must not be diminished by vs at this day: the reasons that I haue alreadye alreadie doe serue as well for vs as for them. Then lette vs not thinke that this Lawe is a speciall Lawe for the Iewes: but let vs vnderstande that GOD intended to deliuer vs a generall rule, to which wee must tye our selues. In deede it is alleadged that when our Lorde Iesus Christ came into the worlde, he aduanced not his doctrine by the sworde, but rather both he and his were persecuted, and therefore that the right way to maynteine the true religion, is not to punishe such as set vppe themselues against it: but rather to holde our selues contented with the spirituall swoorde, and to vse that in our fighting against Satan, so as our vpholding of the trueth, bee alwayes by sufferance and patience, if the worlde doe persecute it. But lette vs see whether our Lorde haue excluded and banished Princes and Magistrates and Officers of Iustice out of his flocke, so as they may not be Christians. No surely. For when he speaketh of the kingdome of our Lorde Iesus Christe, hee sayeth expressly; Yee kinges stande you in awe; and yee Iudges of the earth, humble you your selues, and all of you kisse the sonne. Moreouer, before hee spoke to priuate persons, hee willeth expressly that Kinges, Iudges, and Officers of Iustice shoulde doe homage to our Lorde Iesus Christ: then they bee called to the knowledge of the Gospell. And in deede, according hereunto it is sayde in the Psalme, that kinges shall come to submitte themselues to him that was to bee sent to be the redeemer. And againe that they shal be as foster fathers to the Churche, and that Queenes shall giue her sucke; that is to saye, that such as haue the sworde of Iustice in their hande, shall take Gods Churche into their protection to maintaine it in the pure doctrine, and in the same Religion that is set downe in Gods worde. Sith it is so, it is to be concluded, not only that it is Lawefull for all Kinges and Magistrates, to punish heretikes and such as haue peruerted the pure trueth: but also that they be bounde to doe it, and that they misbehaue themselues towardes GOD, if they suffer errours to rouse without redresse, and employ not their whole power to shewe a greater zeale in that behalfe than in all other thinges. For is it reason that he which sitteth in the seate of Iustice, shoulde punishe a theefe for doing wrong but to the valewe of fiue shillinges: and in the meane while let a traytour to GOD goe vnpunished? Gods name is thereby blasphemed, his 2.Cor.3.18.
trueth whiche is his image is trampled vnder foote, and it is much more than if a man should rende some [princes] Coccarmour in peeces. In so dooing the liuing image of GOD is skorned, and as it were spitted at, and the saluation of mennes soules hindered: and shall the Magistrates sit still at it like ydolles? They must punish a theefe for the valewe of fiftreene pence, and beholde, this is such a traytour as goeth about to confounde heauen and earth together, and must the same go vnpunished? What a dealing were that? Doeth not euen nature teache what is to be doone in this behalfe? And as for those that say that we should let the euill weedes growe still, doe they not shewe themselues to be growen out of kinde like monsters, and that they bee more intollerable than if they were starke madde? For it shoulde seeme that their meaning is to defie the whole order of nature, and men see that they not onely speake against GOD, but also poyson mennes soules, and bewray themselues not to haue one droppe of setled discretion. Nowe then let vs marke, that sith God hath declared that in the reigne of his Sonne, euen kinges shoulde bee called to the knowledge of the trueth, and become a parte of his Church: It behoueth them to giue example to their people, and it is good reason that they shoulde employ their whole power and authoritie to maintaine the good doctrine, and to cause GOD to be honored and serued, and to driue away all ydolatrie and superstition, and to see that it bee not Lawefull for anie man to spewe our blasphemies agaynst GOD. That is the thing which we haue to marke vpon this place.

And whereasit is alleadged that Iesus Christ vsed not the materiall sworde to aduaunce his doctrine withall: that is true, and wee also bring not the sworde in our hande into the pulpit to prooue the things that wee preache. But lette vs learne to put a difference betweene offices, and let vs consider howe our Lorde Iesus Christe came to preache his worde, when hee woulde that such as receiue it should euerie man in his owne state and calling, followe whatsoeuer is ordeined for him. Nowe it is true that in the time of our Lorde Iesus Christ, the great men of the worlde claue not to the Gospell, no more than we see them doe yet still at this day: but the little ones and weakelinges were faine to be chosen, thereby to beate downe the pride of the worlde, as Saint Paule auoweth in the first to the Corinthians. Ye see (sayeth he) that 1.Cor.1.26 there bee not many noble men, men of power, or wise men among you. And why? For men are but too much giuen to the aduauncing of themselues: and if God had begunne at the great ones, the litle ones shoulde haue seemed as nothing. But God ment to beate downe all pride, that men might learne to chalendge nothing to themselues. Notwithstanding howesoeuer the case stand, when the great ones are called to the seruice of God, then must they imploy themselues in the thinges that belong to their charge. For the thinges that I alleadged out of Esay, Dauid, and diuerse other Psalmes, belong to the reigne of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and to the state of the Christian Church. Therefore must we needes conclude, that our Lorde will haue Princes and magistrates to vse the sworde that is giuen them, to the mainteynaunce of his honour, and of the vnitie of faith and good agreement; so as if any man rayse vp trouble or goe about to sowe darnell, he may be rooted out. But is not that punishment too rigorous? [Yes:] for some will well ynough graunt (as constrained thereunto) that it is good that heresies shoulde be repressed: but that it were too great an extremitie to proceede so farre as to punishe them with death. Yea, but (as I sayde afore) wee must esteeme Gods honour as it deserueth. For if wee woulde that deceiuers shoulde be reprooued, so as they might not haue their mouthes open, and yet that they shoulde not bee vtterly suppressed as were requisite: it were all one as if we shoulde say, In deede we ought to please God, but as for to put a man to death for blaspheming him, what a thing were that? Loe at what point we be.

But God for all that, will not faile to be had in estimation as I sayde afore: yea and that to our cost, if wee goe that way to worke. For the very cause in deede, why we see the worlde infected with so many troubles and errours, is our lasines in that wee haue neither zeale nor disposition to beate downe the leasinges of Satan. Nay rather (which worse is) there are a great number which maintaine them willingly. And yet in the meane while men crye out that all thinges are confounded, that all thinges goe to hauocke, and that there are so greate troubles as is pitie to beholde. And what is the cause thereof? Euen the princes that are willing to maintaine errours, and further them by all the meanes they can, so as it may seeme that they bee of Satans setting vp, as it were to vpholde his part against God and his worde. Their people likewise desire nothing so much, as to be fedde with lyes; that is al their seeking, and God sendeth it them. For (as I haue shewed afore) it is a iust rewarde for them. Why then should men cry alas, or why should they be greeued at the matter, when all men both great and small seeke the vtter defacing of Gods trueth, and to giue scope to all manner of leasinges? Therefore let vs learne in any wise to haue the zeale and affectiō which our Lorde commaundeth vs: or else it wil come to passe that heresies and errours shall in the end picke out our eyes, if we feede them still as wee be seene to doe. Let vs take the forementioned example of Ananias, and Ieremie. Ieremie taught in the name of God, and it was prooued sufficiently that hee stepped not forth on his owne heade: and yet for all that, the people woulde haue hadde him to let them alone, that euerie man might haue followed his owne wicked lusts, they could not away with him. God his threatninges were to corrasiue, and therefore euery man sought to withstande Ieremie. Yea (quoth they) shall this fellowe trouble vs thus continually? Nowe hereupon God sent a deceiuer that went about to make Ieremie a lyer before all the people assembled in the Temple: and no doubt but a great number were assembled at it specially such as might consider, or say thus: What? We haue heere the Temple of God, as he himselfe appointed, and it is the place where he will be worshipped; wee haue the Lawe, we haue Gods promise that he will dwell among vs for euer. And yet nowe beholde, heere are two prophetes, of whome the one sayes, ye shall go into captiuitie, and the other sayes, it shall not be so. Besides this the deceiuer fell to bobbing of Ieremie as it were to shame him, and giueth him the lye, so as Gods prophet was faine to stande there as abashed at the sight of such trouble. By reason whereof many might be remoued as I sayde afore. But what? Let vs a little consider the state of that people. For when the gouernours were assembled, (which ought to haue mainteyned the pure religion, and had the prophet Ieremie as it were in their keeping) they to shewe themselues voyde of all ielousie, did not onely sette themselues against Ieremie, but also (which worse is) affirme him to be worthie of death. Thus yee see howe Gods prophet was condemned both of great and small: insomuch that euerie man ranne vpon him. For they were fully bent to giue themselues to all wickednesse, and to bee no more threatned in the name of GOD. If wee see the like nowe adayes, let vs vnderstande that we bee worthy of such payment. For without going anie further, for all the preaching of the Gospell among vs, howe is it receiued? what reuerence yeelde wee to it? All men rush out into disorder, and we needde not speake any more of the popishe superstitions: for there is to double wickednesse to bee seene, that euen such as haue beene counted the simplest cloynes, are fraught full of blasphemies to spyte GOD withall, and to laugh his worde openly to skorne. You see what murmuring there is, specially when vices are rebuked. To be shorte, whereas our desire is to haue dumbe dogges, such as may haue no authoritie at all to speake, and ydle people, drunkardes, glutrons, Leacherers, and I wote not what else. At a worde, men would haue either dogges or swine in the pulpit. This is the thing that they seeke for; And this is mennes desires in most places; who in steade of good and faithfull seruauntes to GOD, doe choose dogges and swine. And if a man seeke the remedie and the redresse of it: Hee must goe to the newefounde yles, for there is no man heere that will meddle with it. Sith we see such dealing, let vs consider what manner of obedience and feare of God there is in such folke. So much much the more therfore doth it ſtand vs in hand to beare ỹ exhortation wel in mind which I haue ſet downe alreadie: namely ỹ Gods working of our ſaluation is alwayes matched with his owne glorie. And therefore whenſoeuer he perſwadeth vs to maintaine his honour, it is all one as ifhe ſayd, Ye wretched people, if ye make reckening of the ſaluation of your owne ſoules: yee muſt prouide alſo that I may beare ſway among you, and that I may be honored: and therefore ſee that yee lay for it. Gods meaning then hereby is to ſhewe vs that he will haue his honour maintcined by making vs furtherers of his caſe, and that he will haue vs to ſette it foreward as much as in vs lyes, or elſe we ſhalbe a pray to the deuill. Seeing that hee vttereth ſuch loue towardes vs, it is no reaſon that wee on our ſide ſhoulde be negligent: but it behoueth vs to indeuour that errours and hereſies may be rooted out from among vs. For if we doe not, we muſt looke for the rewarde that I ſpake of, and God giueth vs too much proofe of it. On the other ſide when wee followe the order that is ſhewed vs heere, we muſt vnderſtande that it behoueth vs to haue Gods honour in ſuch eſtimation, as all other thinges may bee nothing with vs in compariſon of that. Which thing will come to paſſe, if wee ſticke ſtedfaſtly to his worde, and holde our ſelues to it though wee bee aſſaulted on all ſides; and ſpecially if wee reſiſt the miſchiefe by looking to it aforehande, ſo as it neſle not among vs. Therefore let vs take heede that we bende our ſelues to it euerie man in his calling; and then wee needе not to doubt but that GOD will ſtrengthen vs and ſtabliſh vs in the faith which wee haue receiued of him, ſo as we ſhal continue ſtedfaſtly therein vnto the end, and be throughly well fenced againſt all the aſſaultes of Satan and his vnderlinges.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs perceiue them better, And therewithall foraſmuch as wee ſhould ſoone be ouertaken by falſe teachers, let vs flee for ſiccour to our God, and yeelde him thankes for his ridding of vs from the hereſies and errours wherein wee were snarled, and for his giuing of vs the foode of life; praying him to make vs to taſt thereof in ſuch wiſe, as wee may neuer be turned away from it, but wiſely diſcerne the way of life and the way of death aſunder, to the ende that our ſaluation may bee kept ſafe in his handes, and we in the meane while eſchewe the wyles that Satan worketh againſt euerie of vs particularly, ſo as wee may put them from vs luſtily, and they haue no acceſſe vnto vs: but that wee may ſticke ſo ſtedfaſtly to our God, as our whole ſeeking may be to acknowledge him for our king, and wee behaue our ſelues as his people, that hee alſo may alwayes auowe vs to be ſo. That it may pleaſe him to grant this grace not onely to vs, but alſo to all people and nations of the earth. &c.

The Lxxxviij. Sermon which is the third vpon the thirteenth Chapter.

6 If thine owne brother the ſonne of thy Mother, or thine owne ſonne, or thy daughter, or the wife that is in thy boſomme, or thy neighbour that is to thee as thyne owne ſoule, goe about to intice thee, ſaying ſecretly, Let vs goe and ſerue other gods which thou haſt not knowen, nor yet thy fathers:

7 That is to wit, any of the gods of the nations that are about thee, whether they bee neere thee or farre off from thee, from the one ſide of the earth to the other:

8 Conſent not to him, neither giue eare vnto him: neither let thine eye fauour him, ſhewe him not any pitie, neither conceale him.

9 But thou ſhalt put him to death, thy hande ſhalbe the firſt vpon him to put him to death, and afterward the hand of all the people.

10 And thou ſhalt ſtone him with ſtones and ſo he ſhall die: (for he hath ſought to thruſt thee from the Lorde thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage:)

11 That all Iſraell may heare and be afraide, and not doe ſuch a wicked thing among you any more.

Had

Pſal.69.10. HAd we the zeale in vs that is ſpoken of in the Pſalme, that wee tooke the reproch which is done vnto GOD, as if it were offered to our ſelues: this lawe here were in a manner needeleſſe. For euerie of vs woulde willingly of his owne accorde indeuour to maintaine Gods honour. But nowe inaſmuch as manie men thinke it to be too exceſſiue rigour to put the troublers and peruerters of religion to death: thereby it appeareth that we deſpiſe Gods honour and make no greate account of it. For euerie of vs would faine haue his owne honour maynteined, and if anie man haue ſtormed againſt vs, wee thinke the time will neuer come ſoone ynough for vs to bee reuenged. If a man doe vs any wrong or iniurie, wee woulde that euerie man ſhoulde ſette himſelfe againſt it in our defence: but if Gods honour bee trampled vnder foote, wee ſette it ſlippe. Wee ſee then howe colde and vnluſtie wee bee, but this vnluſtineſſe of ours deſerueth a more ſhamefull name. For if a man ſuffer his father to bee ſcorned, folke will ſay hee is not worthie to liue in the worlde, becauſe he doeth againſt his kinde. And beholde, GOD is as it were torne in peeces by wicked mennes aduauncing of themſelues to rend aſunder the vnion of the fayth wherethrough it is his will to bee knowen, and whereby it is his will to reigne among vs: and that is borne withall. And is not that a token, that if it lay in vs wee woulde neuer haue any remembraunce of GOD at all? But foraſmuch as there is ſo litle zeale in vs; therefore is this Lawe giuen vs. And GOD declareth that hee is not vnmindefull of his owne maieſtie, but that hee will haue the defacing thereof to bee puniſhed. Naye rather hee ſheweth that hee diſclaymeth vs for his people, if we haue not a ſpeciall regarde of this caſe of his.

Wee haue hearde heeretofore what hath beene ſayde concerning falſe prophetes: namely that if anie man troubled the Churche of GOD, hee ſhoulde bee ſtoned to death without ſparing. Nowe God expreſſeth yet better the thing that he hadde ſpoken: which is, that we muſt put all affections of nature vnder foote, when his honour commeth in queſtion, ſo as the father muſt not ſpare his ſonne, nor the brother his brother, nor the husbande his wife, nor the friend his friende, yis as deere to him as his own life, yhe be not put to death. And good reaſon. For doe not all the friendeſhippes in the worlde proceede of that order of nature whiche the creator hath eſtabliſhed? Then if wee will not ſette the carte before the horſes, wee muſte alwayes beginne at GOD. And Saint Paule Eph.3.15. doeth not without cauſe ſay; that al kinred commeth from thence, and iſſueth out of that fountayne.

Alſo when there is any friendſhippe betweene man and man; it muſt alwayes bee referred to this marke, that GOD haue ſtill the cheife preheminence, and that wee be ioyned together in him. And curſed be al alyaunce that ſeparateth vs from our maker, in whoome conſiſteth all our life, welfare, and ioye. Then if a husbande loue his wife, without regarde of GOD, hee is woorthie to bee thruſt out amonge the brute beaſtes. In like caſe is the father, which ſtandeth not at the ſame marke in louing of his children. If wee be ſo linked together, and haue ſo plighted our faith and trothe one to an other, as wee may ſeeme after a ſorte to haue as ye would ſay but one ſoule in two bodies, and in the meane while GOD be lette alone vnthought on: doo yee not ſee that it is too ſhamefull a beaſtlineſſe? Then is it not without cauſe that GOD hath tolde vs expreſly that his honour is to bee preferred before al worldely or naturall conſiderations. And lette vs marke well the wordes that are ſette downe heere, for they bee of great weight.

Moſes coulde haue ſayde ſingly, If thy brother, thy wife, thy ſonne, or ſome friende of thine make thee, and goe about to allure thee to worſhippe, but hee addeth (which is of much more vehemencie) If thy brother the ſonne of thy mother which laye in the ſame bellie that thou thy ſelfe diddeſt. And to what ende is this doone of GOD, but to ſearche the bottome of our affections, by entering euen vnto our bowels, as if hee ſhoulde ſay, I will ſee whether yee loue me better than yee doe theſe carkeſſes? For what is thy brother? Hee is but a mortall creature and I will ſee whether thou ſette more ſtore by him than by mee. Naye (ſay wee) but he and I laye both in one bellie. That is trewe, (ſayth GOD:) but is it not meete that I ſhoulde alwayes haue the vppes hande and higheſt preheminence? The ſame caſe is it when hee ſayth, thine owne ſonne, thine owne daughter, thy wife that ſleepeth in thy boſome. Hee coulde haue ſayde ſingly; thy wife: but hee ſayeth, No, thou muſte forgette and quite and cleane ſhake off all the loue which thou beareſt to thy wife, if ſhee goe about to plucke thee away from me.

Agayne, If thou haue a friende (ſayeth hee) which is as deere to thee as thine owne life: thou muſt lay thy hande vppon him alſo to ſtone him: thou muſt not onely bee his accuſer and giue euidence againſt him; but thou muſt alſo laye hande vppon him without ſparing: all mercie and pitie muſt bee put away in that caſe. Heereby wee ſee in effect, as I ſayde afore, that Gods will is to trie vs, whether wee truely loue him. And for that cauſe doeth he ſette downe vnto vs whatſoeuer might holde vs backe, or hinder our deſire from ſhewing ſuch zeale as wee ought to haue to the maintenaunce of his honour: declaring vnto vs that if any thing bee an impediment to our continuall keeping of the vnion of fayth aboue all things, in ſuch wiſe as it is contayned in his woorde: wee bee traytoures and falſe hearted towardes him, and hee will ſhake vs off; and in ſtede of taking vs for his children, hee will giue vs ouer and baniſhe vs from his kingdome and his Churche: for hee will haue that order obſerued obserued among those that are his. Marke that for one point.

And herewithall it behoueth vs to consider of whome hee speaketh. Hee sayeth not onely, if a man goe about to abolish all religion, as wee see some worldlings doe, which couldle finde in their heartes like a sort of dogges and swyne, that men shoulde make a mockerie of all the seruice of God; hee speaketh not of such kinde of men: But his saying is, if a man go about by superstitious meanes to turne thee from mee to the serving of idolles; although it bee of the gods that are moste renowmed in the worlde, in the serving and worshipping of whome, the people that are about thee doe thinke themselues to do well: If any man labour to turne thee from my worde, to make thee followe after those gods: let him bee rooted out.

Nowe then, wee see, that God punisheth, not onely those that woulde abolish all religion: but also those that woulde corrupt his trueth. And therefore for the better vnderstanding of this lawe that is giuen vs heere, let vs marke at a worde, that it is not for vs to saye, There is no God, it is but folly for men to trouble themselues about any deuotion, for wee shall gaine nothing by it: but [wee must consider,] that if a man bee neuer so deuout, and thinke to doo neuer so well, yet if hee turne himselfe to the superstitions of the Heathen like a renegate, and knowe not the true God: hee is condemned. And it is a distinction which wee ought to knowe well inough. For our Lorde sheweth vs, that hee will haue vs to bee contented with his worde, and to rest wholly vppon it, that wee may bee ruled by it, and not attempt to alter any thing, seeing hee hath once declared with his owne mouth what hee alloweth.

And hee saieth expressely, the gods which our fathers haue knowen. By this saying hee doeth vs to vnderstande that it behooueth vs to bee well assured of our religion. For to put a man to death without hauing knowen whether it be the true God, were but a frantike zeale, as we see the Papistes doe at this day, and the Heathen haue beene wont to doe at all times, yea, and euen the Iewes also, who haue put this lawe in execution (howbeit amisse) against the prophets. And vnder the same pretence were our Lorde Iesus and his Apostles driuen to suffer persecution.

As for the Heathen, when they made lawes for the obseruing of the manner of religion that was established among them; they had a good grounde and foundation for the thing they did. For it is not ynough for Magistrates to make lawes to represse robberies, murther, and violence; but they knewe also howe it was meete that God should haue the forehande. Nowe if nature taught them so much; what excuse will there bee for vs that professe Christianitie, if we by it is ynough for men to represse robberies, adoueries, murthers, and other such violent and outragious doings that tende to the hurt of priuate persons: and in the meane while make none account of God? What a dealing were that? The Heathen then had a good grounde in that they knewe that in a well ordered Common weale, religion ought to bee obserued, and that if any man attempted ought to the contrarie, he was to be punished: in so much that it was a matter of life and death among them, and it was obserued throughout all the worlde in all ages.

The Iewes did not amisse in beeing zelous in punishing false prophets after that God had giuen them this lawe. Likewise in these dayes, whereas the Papistes say that Heretikes are to bee punished; that is true, wee confesse that they bee worthie of it. But therewithal they ought to come to the poynt that is set downe heere, namely, that it behoooueth vs to knowe which is the GOD whome wee serue, and that wee bee sure that our religion is not a thing set foorth at all aduenture, but that wee holde the infallible trueth of Gods owne sending, and that it is preached vnto vs in his name & by his authoritie: so as it is hee on whome our faith is grounded. It woulde become vs (say I) to come to that poynt. But the Papistes play the beasts in that behalfe, bearing themselues in hand that so they shut their eyes, they may execute their rage and furie vppon innocents.

And after the same manner haue the Heathen ouershot themselues. For, because religion was to bee maintained, they not discerning what they did, not perceiuing whether it was good or euill: did set themselues against the seruauntes of God. Likewise dealt the Iewes with the Prophets. Yee see then here is a point which it standeth vs in hande to wey well all our life long: and that is, that wee must haue knowen the true God, so as wee may iustly and without grudge of conscience condemne the errours which men woulde drawe vs to. Which thing will come to passe, if wee haue the light of Gods worde to shewe vs the way: for thence it is that all good discretion commeth.

Nowe then, to the intent wee may benefite our selues by this text, let vs marke first of all what loue wee ought to beare to our Lord God, when hee hath vttered himselfe vnto vs. Namely that wee must beware that in any wise hee may bee serued without gainsaying, and that the rule which hee hath giuen vs bee vnbroken, and that nothing bee chaunged in his worde, but that we make much more account of the doctrine which wee haue receiued of him, than of our liues. And therefore let vs not bee plucked backe from the saide zeale for any worldly respect as wee see the worlde is, which fauoureth more his owne fleshly affections than God. But howsoeuer the case stande, yet must wee fight against all impedimentes and distresses, vntill the saide zeale doe get the vpper hande in vs, so as wee will rather cause them to dye which seeke the defacing of the true Religion, than suffer such a plague to preuaile in the Church, to the infecting and marring of our selues or of any others.

And hereof wee may gather a good exhortation, which is, that when wee see Gods honour impaired any manner of way, it must greeue vs at the heart, according to the generall saying of the Psalme, concerning all reproches. I say wee must not beare with any thing whatsoeuer it be, whereby Gods honour may be impeached or defaced. But what? Little (in deede) is this doctrine imbraced nowadaies. For blasphemie hath his ful scope euery where; and if a body be to be reproued for so doing; though a dosen persons bee at the hearing of the blasphemie; yet shall not a man finde so much as one witnesse. In this case God ordeyneth all both small and greate to bee his aduocates, and hee will haue euery man to doe him seruice in it. For it needes not to bee sayd to a man, Haue a care to bewray blasphemie when ye heare it: No for hee is knowen to haue beene present; and yet if hee bee asked of it, hee doeth but wring his groyne like a swyne, and saye, I heard him not. Such folke are well worthie, not only that God should plucke their eares from their head, but also vtterly ouerwhelme them. They bee monsters that can heare the name of their maker blasphemed, and yet couer such filthines and suffer it to abyde vnpunished. Is it not reason that God should shew how it is hee to whom they be to yeeld accompt for it? And though he winke at it, yet let not vs thinke that they which forsweare themselues so vntrustily, shall scape scotfree, but that in the ende GOD will shewe howe it is not without cause that hee hath pronounced, that to fauour euill is worse than to doe euill. For it may bee that hee that doeth the euill is carried to it by choler or by some other affection: but as for him that cloketh it, he is not onely a partaker of it, but also a wilfull iustifier of it as it were in despite of GOD: and that is an vtter peruerting of the order of nature. And therefore lette vs learne by that which is tolde vs heere, that euerie of vs must beare such zeale to the mainteinaunce of Gods honour, as not to spare anie kinne or friende, if they steppe vppe to sette themselues against him to whome wee belong, and to whome wee owe all seruice, going about to ouerthrowe his seate, and to disappoint him that hee may no more reigne among vs. And therefore whensoeuer Gods honour is darkened or diminished among vs, let euerie of vs in his state looke to it that we be so zealous as to redresse it to the vttermost of his power. This is y first point which we haue to marke heere.

Psal. 69. 10.

And moreouer, if any man shoulde goe about to alter the Religion, so as GOD shoulde after a sorte bee driuen from among vs; it were meete that our zeale shoulde in that case be kindled yet more. For if wee bee nice in hauing our owne honour touched: what ought wee to be when Gods kingdome is in daunger of vtter dispatch? If there be some wicked practise in a Citie, so as some treason, insurrection or alteration of the state is a bruing, and one hauing but some secret incling of it tolde him in his eare, doe conceine it; shall hee not bee taken as necessarie, and bee adiudged woorthie of punishment? If it be proued against a man that some wicked treason was a practising; and hee heard of the matter and yet discouered it not; he shall be punished as a traytour, and men will say hee was well worthie of such punishment. And shall we bee holde excused of our silence, when an insurrection is made against GOD, and men goe about to ouerthrowe his holy temple, that he might not dwell any more among vs, so as they indeuour to deface his maiestie, and furthermore to cast vp the saluation of mens soules as a pray to Satan, and wee say nothing to it? Doeth not our dissimulation import both treacherie and periurie against GOD? Yea notwithstanding there be some so farre past shame, that they demaunde at euerie turne, Who is he that findeth faulte with mee? Whome haue I wronged? Behoulde, hee hath played the blasphemous and wicked wretche, in finding out some matter so vglye against GOD, as hee ought to be rooted out for it; and yet hee sayes, Who complaines of mee? If hee had taken but fifteene pence, he shoulde be whipped: and for the seconde or thirde offence, he should go to the gallowes: and like a Churcherayser hath trampled Gods maiestie vnder foote, and in hee hath doone worse than the theefe that cuttes a trauellers throte, in a wood; and yet his owne seeming he is iust still. And whereof commeth this, but of the foresaid lasinesse, that no man bethinks himself of his duetie in that behalfe? GOD doeth vs the honour to make vs mainteyners of his trueth, as though he made vs a solemne commission of it.

And is not that such a preheminence, as of duetie ought to make euerie of vs to driue himselfe (yea euen beyonde his power) to haue a constant and inuincible zeale in causing men to serue and honour GOD? For if a prince imployed a man in his affaires, and did put him in commission; hee woulde straine himselfe to farre, as he woulde euen hazarde his life; and hee woulde thinke that what paine so euer he tooke, though he did much more, yet all were too litle seeing hee hadde so honourable a charge.

Beholde, the liuing GOD taketh vs as if wee were his defenders, and willeth vs to represent his owne person: and yet for all that, we despise all those thinges; when Gods name is blasphemed wee make no reckening of it; the partie himselfe that hath taken the office to conceale no such thing, shall playe the traytour first. And therefore it is no wonder though wicked folke take such libertie, and when they bee conuicted, they alleadge that no man complaines of them, & that they haue done no man any wrong.

For were wee the true children of GOD, surely wee woulde tender the wronges that are doone to him, more than the wronges that are doone to our selues, and wee would take them much forer to hearte.

Je

For if wee our selues bee offended, is it any great matter? But when Gods holy name is lightly esteemed, and reproched; then wee ought to bee verie tender hearted. And because wee thinke not of it; when wee haue blasphemed God, wee say wee haue done no man any wrong.

Furthermore, let vs consider (as I haue saide afore) that if wee must endeuour by all the meanes wee can to haue swearing redressed: much more reason is it that wee shoulde not suffer any man to step vp to trouble the Church, and to make any rebellion, but vtterly roote out such a pestilent fellowe out of hande. But yet before all other thinges, let vs looke that wee knowe Gods trueth afore hand, that wee may be able to maintaine the same: for without that, wee shall goe lumpishly to worke, and our zeale shalbee but as the rage of madfolkes, as I haue already shewed by the examples of the heathen men, Iewes, and Papistes. The Papistes haue a faire colour, in saying that if a man deface the maiestie of a Prince, hee shall not scape vnpunished: and therefore it is much more reason that men shoulde bee punished for setting themselues against God. Yea: but in the meane while they wote not what GOD they worship: for they bee carried away with their owne wicked and diuelish superstitions. Let vs marke then, that wee must not take this lawe here at aduenture; but that to begin well, wee must lay this foundation, that wee bee sure that the religion which wee holde is of God. As for example, wee haue the holy Scripture; and there our Lorde hath shewed vs his will. Hee protesteth by his Prophet Esay that hee hath not spoken vainly nor couertly, nor meant to beguile men in bidding them to seeke him. Then haue wee certen declaration of Gods trueth, so wee obey his worde by faith, and receiue it without gainesaying.

When wee bee at that poynt; wee may well with good conscience and safetie punish such as seeke to turne vs away from the trueth. But if we be doubtfull and wauering, and go to it but by weening: what will come of it, but that wee shall punish innocent persons, as wee see the Papistes doe by persecuting our Lorde Iesus in his members? It were better for them nowadayes that they killed one another without cause of iustice, than to persecute the children of God after that fashion. For the matter standeth not vppon the punishing of men by taking away their liues, or by sheading of giltlesse blood through wicked crueltie: but vppon the making of warre against the liuing God, and vpon the suffering againe of our lord Iesus Christ in his members.

And let vs marke, that whensoeuer wee falsly pretende the name of God for a colour; our fault is doubled in so abusing it, and we become so much the more blame woorthie. As for example, when the Papistes nowadayes doe persecute the faithfull, and vse such excessiue crueltie as they doe: they can welynough say, it is the zeale of God that driueth vs to doe it. If a man haue slayne one or robbed one; very well, hee shalbee layde vppon the wheele. And what shalbee done when Gods maiestie is defaced? Shoulde the partie scape vnpunished? So will they alleage. Yea; but first they shoulde inquire of the cause. For like as sometimes men punish giltlesse persons accused of false crymes: so may it well bee (and wee see it by experience,) that Martyres are persecuted in steede of heretikes. Therefore were it meete to looke well to the matter.

But nowadayes if a man say that wee ought to call vppon none but onely God in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and that wee shoulde not fetche any further compasses after the imaginations of men, by praying to the virgine Marie or other Saintes deceassed to bee our patrones and aduocates; but that wee ought to holde our selues contented with Iesus Christ, to whome that office is giuen by God his Father: By and by they crye out, to the fire with him. And howe so? It is the pure doctrine of the holy Scripture. Yea, but the church of Rome admitteth it not.

If a man say, wee must worship God after a spirituall manner, without making any puppets to him, and that the breaking of the rule which our Lorde Iesus Christ hath giuen vs, is vtter abomination: our vppon it, thats a foule heresie, at leastwise by the iudgement of the popedome. But yet for all that, the Scripture beareth it. If a man say wee haue no freewill to doe good, but that wee bee vtterly corrupted; and that if there bee any goodnesse in vs, it proceedeth of Gods meere grace and mercie, so that our going forwarde towardes the marke, is because wee bee renewed by his holy Ghoste, and yet neuertheless that wee bee weake, and had neede to flee continually for refuge to the forgiuenesse which GOD promiseth vs, and whereby wee bee reconciled vnto him, whereunto wee attaine not by our owne deserues and satisfactions, but must bee faine to bee purged by the bloudshed of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and by that meanes wee obteine saluation: if these thinges (say I) bee alleaged: by and by hee must bee haled to the stake. And why? Because all this is condemned by their Synagogues.

Yea, but it were meete for them that they shoulde giue eare vnto God. For did hee forgo his authoritie when hee sayde that we should neither ad too nor diminish from the thinges that hee hath spoken, as wee haue seene alreadie heretofore? For thereby doeth he shewe at what ende it behoueth vs to beginne. Then is it a hellish kinde of dealing, when men stay not vppon the thinges that GOD commaundeth, and that are conteyned in his worde, and yet notwithstanding doe take vppon them to burthen other men with what lawes they list. Deut. 12. 32

If a man say that wee must serue God according to his commaundementes, and not depend vpon those that take vpon thē to enioyne lawes to mens soules, and that all such inuentions are foolish: What? Shall the traditions of our mother holy Church bee so reiected? That were a deadly and intolerable cryme. If a man speake of the Sacraments, & say that baptisme ought to be ministred in a knowen tounge, that men may vnderstande to what ende our Lorde Iesus ordeyned it, what fruite it yeeldeth, and how to vse it aright: and moreouer that men may perceiue that baptisme sendeth vs to our Lorde Iesus Christ, and hath no power of it selfe further than God worketh by his holy spirite, which appeareth when wee haue an eye to him that is the verie substance of baptisme: and that all the trifling toyes ought to bee put away wherewith men haue mocked God eo the full, namely, the ceremonies of their owne inuenting which are but vtter corruptions of baptisme, as their spittle, their salt, & all their other maygames which they play withall: If a man talke so of their stuffe, he must be put to death for it out of hand. And why? Fye vppon him, hee is a ranke heretike, he is not to bee borne with. Yea, but they shoulde see first whether it bee an heresie or no. For by that meanes they make God him selfe an heretike for want of due examination; and what a dealing is that? If a man say that our Lordes supper ought to bee receiued according to the rule which hee him selfe did giue vs, that is to wit, that wee shoulde communicate togither, so as the bread might bee a warrant to vs that wee bee truely become partakers of his bodie, and the wine a warrant that wee bee partakers of his bloud, and consequently that the Masse is an abhomination of the diuels owne deuising, for that therein the Christians are so farre off from communicating together, that one man separates himselfe from all the rest of the company: beholde, then must excommunication serue as a sauce for all meates.

Againe, if a man come at Easter to receiue the Lordes supper, hee must haue but a morsel, and hee must holde him contented with the one halfe of it: and moreouer, contrarie to Christ his institution, which sayes: take and eate: they woulde beare God in hand that he shall receiue; wee giue it thee, say they. Besides this, if a man intende to bee reconciled to GOD, the Masse must serue as a new sacrifice, and although they say it is the same that Iesus Christ himselfe offered, yet doe they oftentimes reiterate it. If a man open his mouth against such abhominations, O that is an vntolerable cryme. The aire must ring of the great outcryes that shalbe made against it. How now, say they? What ado haue wee here? Hee hath spoken against the decrees of the holy Councels. Yea, but before that God commaunded the punishment of Renegates that shoulde goe about to trouble the Church, and to set diuision in the faith; he saide, Thou shalt not doe what seemeth good in thine owne eyes; but thou shalt submit thy selfe obediently to my sayinges, and not step aside from my worde, but yeelde your selues to it both great and small; and therefore that order ought to bee maintained.

Deut. 12.

But wee see that all thinges are turned vpside downe. And therefore let vs looke that wee bee well informed, (as I saide afore) and that wee bee well assured that wee haue Gods certaine trueth, and that wee bee throughly resolued of it, so as wee may bee able to say, It is God that hath spoken it, we haue beene taught it in his schoole, and wee renounce all imaginations of men: for wee knowe there is nothing but vanitie and vntrueth in men. God then must bee the author of our faith, and allowe it, before wee can say, This is the trueth. And when wee bee so resolued, then may we obey this commaundement here.

But wee must marke therewithall, that it is not ynough for men to excuse themselues by saying, as for mee I meane not to abolish all religion; and yet if I like well of this thing, why shoulde it not bee lawfull for mee to haue it? Moses sheweth vs that although a man pretend the title of some god, yet is that nothing: for wee must haue the liuing GOD; and that when wee haue once the knowledge of the true Religion, that must suffice vs, and that if we goe astraye, it is through our owne fault, and there is no excuse for vs. That is the meaning of Moses, and it is a doctrine well worthie to bee noted. For many men might finde starting holes in this behalfe.

May not a man bee ouerseene through simplicitie? Yes: but when wee haue once knowen God, wee cannot bee separated from him, but our malice must needes bee vtterly inexcusable. And therefore let vs take courage to benefite our selues: and when Gods worde is giuen vs freely and preached vnto vs purely, let vs bee so confirmed in it, as wee bee not any more like wauering reedes, yeelding to euery wynde, nor as little children whoome euery man may beguyle: but let vs vse wit and discretion. And in deede our Lorde giueth vs his worde, not onely to the intent wee should say, Lo, this or that is good: but to the ende that every man shoulde keepe himselfe from euill, & bee fenced and armed against all temptations of Satan, so as wee might haue wherewith to resist him when hee goeth about to thrust vs out of the way.

Nowe, Gods worde is termed a spirituall sworde: and therefore wee haue wherewith to outstande all assaultes, so wee haue profited in Gods worde as wee shoulde doe. And hereby it appeareth what diuels they bee, which would nowadayes leaue all things in dout. For there are fantasticall persons which say, What? If a man will punish Heretikes, hee must do it continually; because all thinges are out of order. True it is, that men ought to serue God. And if any man woulde saye there were no diuine maiestie in heauen, there is no GOD; there ought to bee no religion in the worlde, O that were not to bee abidden. But as long as men holde this grounde, that there is a GOD, it is ynough.

And although the heathen keepe still their images, although the Iewes be wilfull in maintaining their false exposition of y lawe, although the Turke

Turkes holde still their Mahomets Alcoran, although the Papistes bee still intangled in their superstitions: all is one, so they holde fast this principle, that there is a God. Yea, but Moses sayeth here expressely, that although a man pretende an intent to serue God: yet must hee bee stoned to death, if it be knowen that hee meant but onely to ouerthrowe or disguise the true religion. And what more then? For (as I haue sayd) wee must not onely pronounce with our mouth that there is a God: but wee must also discerne him from all the abuses that men haue inuented of their owne brayne. For otherwise it is but a mocking of all the holy Scripture. I shall say I worship God, and in the meane time I worship a puppet. And what is my God? It is a fansie that I haue deuised in mine owne head: it is not the liuing God, hee disclaymeth all such dealings, & so am I but a forger. For (as Saint Paul speaketh of it in the first to the Romanes,) such as haue wandred away after their owne imaginations, haue transformed the maiestie of GOD, though their intent was to worship the liuing God, as the Papistes doe, which protest that they worship God the maker of heauen and earth; and likewise the Turkes, who say the same thing; and so also doe the Iewes, notwithstanding that they abhorre Iesus Christ.

And it is sayd in Saint Iohn, that hee which beleeueth not in the Sonne beleeueth not in the Father which sent him. Nay he that turneth away from Iesus Christ, doeth vtterly renounce God. For where dwelleth the fulnesse of the Godhead but in Iesus Christ? When the Turke in their Mahomet in the place of Gods sonne, knowing not that God hath manifested himself in the flesh (which is one of the chiefe articles of our faith): what a dealing is it? So then, how many things soeuer men terme by the name of God, they bee but diuels of their owne deuising and forging vp, if they keepe not themselues fast ioined within the boundes of the holy scripture. And therefore let vs marke well, that wee must holde vs to the pure Religion; and when wee bee well assured of that, then must we come to this lawe whereof Moses speaketh here. And whosoeuer shall inuenteth himselfe against it, let him bee rooted out.

Nowe if the man that woulde drawe vs to the seruing of strange gods, deserue to bee put to death: what is to be done to these dogges whose whole endeuour is to turne all vpside downe, and to beleeue the whole worlde, so as men may not knowe any more what religion is? And in these dayes wee see this kinde of weede to rise thorough the whole worlde, a sorte of heathenish people, which serue to no purpose but to scoffe and iest at all thinges that are spoken of GOD. Also what shall become of those that commit so open blasphemie, as they may seeme to make but a mockerie of all the holye Scripture, as though it were nothing else but fables? Nowe then, sith wee see that Moses speaketh so: what doe they deserue which do so trouble and defile the holy things?

Beholde there comes mee an hypocrite that woulde deuise a newe Religion, as it were to set vp a popedome here againe, or to bring in the Alcoran of Mahomet: nowe ought such a one to bee put to death without forbearing, for so hath God ordeyned. And if any man say, it is cruelnie; let him finde fault with God for it, and wee shall see if he can preuaile.

On the other side, if wee may well spit in such mennes faces, notwithstanding that they saye that their so doing is to maintaine Gods honor, what is to bee doone to such as will needes after a sort deface it quyte and cleane? But let vs come backe againe to the matter. There is a man that goes about to peruert the truth thorough fonde deuotion; and to turne it into vntrueth: the same man ought to dye. There is a Royster that casteth forth lewd scoffes against the holy Scripture, as doeth that diuelish fellowe which is called Pantagruell, and all his filthie and ribauldly writings: and this sort of men pretende not to set vp any newe Religion, as though they were deluded by their owne foolish imaginations: but like madde dogges they belke out their filthinesse against the maiestie of God, and their meaning is to ouerthrowe all religion: and shoulde such bee spared? Why not? for they haue the Cardinalles for their vpholders, they bee fauoured and maintained by them: in so much that the names of these Lord Cardinalles are blazed in those goodly bookes, which serue to mocke God as well as Mahomet. All is one, all may bee abidden, so the Cardinalles bee carryed, it is welynough, and it doeth them good to bee so registred: whereby a man may see that they not onely mocke at all Religion, but also coulde finde in their hearres to abolish all religion quite and cleane.

But herewithall let vs also see howe wee may apply this to our owne vse, for wee must not onely condemne those that haue shewed themselues such as I haue spoken of: but wee must also fare the better by their example, to the end wee may knowe howe it is too wicked eyes, and too diuelish a thing, that when men go about to make some backeflyding or to set some trouble among vs, and much rather to driue away all feare of GOD, and bee fauoured or fauoreded, or harkened vnto, or haue any gappe left open to them, or be let alone vnpunished; it is the next way to vndoe and marre all. And yet wee haue seene examples of such as haue maintained so cursed thinges, yea, and of such importance as the verie Papistes themselues coulde not endure them. For it is certaine that the two heretikes that were here, did wrest the holy Scriptures much more than the Papistes. As touching this Tristlemaker, who was the first of them; hee maintayned free will, & destroyed Gods election: and are those thinges maintained among the Papistes? Nevertheless wee see how he was fauoured, & hee was held vp by the chinne as it were in despite of God.

Againe, as touching the seconde, wee knowe how he was so horrible a blasphemer, that al men abhorred his leawde opinions: and yet for all that, had he not his maintainers and defenders? Yes: for men shewed them more fauour than if they had beene the neerest of their kin. And yet was it not enident that they conspired continually against God and his trueth, to wage battel against him? Therefore let vs looke neerlyer to our selues, & to conclude let vs vnderstād that when God hath giuen vs the grace to haue the certeintie of faith, so as we be grounded vpō his worde; wee must holde vs to it after such a sort, that whensoeuer we see any bodie go about to trouble the order which God hath set, wee may all set our selues against it, and not tary till al agree in one, but that whosoeuer of vs doth first perceiue the mischefe, the same doe discouer it out of hande, and euery of vs do his duetie in such wise, as such plagie persons bee not nourished among vs. For (as I haue declared alreadie) wee see there is such frailtie in vs, that a verie little leauen will sower our whole batche of dowe; and as soone as wee giue eare to Satans iuggling trickes, by and by wee bee ouerthrowen and so intangled, that in the ende wee bee carryed quite away from our God and from the true religion.

1. Cor. 5. 6. & Gal. 5. 9.

God therefore beeing acquainted with our frailtie, meant to prouide for it by shewing vs that it behoueth vs to cut vp the wicked weedes out of hand. Accordingly also as the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes sayeth, that wee must not suffer any euill weedes to growe: for they will marre the good corne, and if the time bee foreslowed, it wilbee too late afterwarde. Then must wee not driue off till to morowe, but euery of vs must quicken and stirre vp himselfe, following the exhortation that is made vnto vs heere.

Hebr. 12. 15.

Moreouer, seeing wee bee commaunded to plucke vp whatsoeuer is contrarie to the maiestie of God, and whatsoeuer may peruert or put away the true religion: let euery of vs see that hee so offer and dedicate himselfe to our God, as wee may not thrust one another out of the right way. If any man goe about to thrust mee out of the way: beholde, God commaundeth mee to rise vp against him; and though it were mine owne brother, my sonne or my wife, yet is it sayde that I ought not to spare them. Now then, if I my selfe thrust others out of the way, is it not a farre more heynous crime? I shalbe taken for an accessarie if I doe but conceale another bodies misbehauiour, and I shewe my selfe a traytour to Godwarde: Nowe then, if I my selfe bee an author of euill, howe deepe am I in? So then, if wee will correct other folkes misdeedings so roughly, let vs beare in minde that wee must in any wise holde our selues in the feare of God, so as in cases concerning his honour, wee bee not a stumbling blocke to driue wretched foules to destruction; but rather indeuour to gather home the stray sheepe into the flocke, & to bring back the wanderers into the right way, and to maintaine and further such as are in the good way alreadie, and all of vs lende our helping handes one to another, that wee may all serue our God with one common accord.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to receiue vs into his fauor, and that although wee be wretched sinners and vnworthie to come in his sight; yet notwithstanding it may please him to accept of vs, and to reformе vs in such wise by his holy spirite, as all our life may bee imployed to his glorie, and our whole seeking hencefoorth may bee to aduaunce the kingdome of our Lorde Iesus Christ his sonne. And so let vs all say, Almightie God, heauenly father, &c.

On Munday the xxj. of October. 1555.

The Lxxxix Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the thirteenth Chapter.

12 If thou heare say, that in any of the cities which the Lorde thy God giueth thee to dwell in,

13 Some wicked men are gone from among you, and haue seduced the inhabitants of their cities, saying, let vs go and serue other gods whome yee haue not knowen:

14 Then shalt thou search, and inquire, and examine the matter throughly, & if it be true & certaine that such abhomination hath beene doone among you:

15 Thou shalt roote out the inhabitants of that citie with ỹ edge of the sword, and vtterly destroy the citie, and all that is in it, and the verie cattell thereof with the edge of the sworde.

16 And thou shalt gather al the spoyle thereof together into the midde of the citie, and burne vp the citie and all the spoyle thereof with fire to the Lorde thy God: and it shalbe a heape for euer, and neuer be builded againe.

17 And

17 And none of the cursed thinges shall sticke to thy handes, that the Lorde your God may turne away the fiercenesse of his wrath from thee, and giue thee mercie, and haue pitie vpon thee and multiply thee, as he sware to thy fathers,

18 Because thou shalt haue obeyed the voyce of the Lorde thy God, in keeping all his commaundementes which I commaund thee this day, to the ende thou mayest doe the thinges that are right in the eyes of the Lorde thy God.

WE haue seene heretofore what manner of zeale wee ought to haue to ỹ maintening of Gods true seruice & the pure religiõ: that is to wit, that we must forget al ỹ friendship of the world, and shewe that we make more account of the honor of our God, than of all those that are as deare to vs as our owne soules. But now Moses proceedeth further, and sayth that wee must vse such rigour not only against particular persons, but also against whole cities. Now if a whole Citie ought to be rased for breaking ỹ seruice of God, what shalbe done to any one man? Should he be borne with? Here then we see how Gods honour ought to be preferred before the whole worlde. And because he had set downe a right and pure order to ỹ people of Israel how to do it, his mind was that it should be kept to the vttermost, and that if any man transgressed it, he should be cut off, insomuch that if it were a whole people that had done it, they should be dele withall after the same maner. Now then we see yet better, howe carefull wee ought to be for the preseruation of religion in his purenes. True it is that we ought to be alwayes mindefull of ỹ which we haue sayd already, namely that is serueth not to excuse ỹ doers whe they be so inraged with zeale without discretion. For we must be sure a forehande, that the religion which we holde is holy, & that God alloweth of it, so as it is not a doctrine forged at the pleasure of men, but Gods owne will vttred vnto vs of his owne free fauour, whereof wee haue good and infallible record, that if any rise vp against it, he must be cutte off: yea though it were a whole Citie. So litle ought any priuate person to be forborne, that euen a whole citie ought to be destroyed for it.

But to the intent this doctrine may be ỹ better vnderstoode, let vs marke the order which God commandeth here to be kept. If it be sayde, that is to say, if the report go, that some wicked persons are gone from among you, and haue led away the inhabitants of a Citie: make good inquisition of the matter, & search it out diligently and vnfeinedly: to the ende that if it be found to be so; ỹ whole Citie be vtterly destroyed with the edge of the sworde, and so forth. Now first our Lordes will is, that when any bruite goeth of an euill deede, we should first inquire how ỹ case standeth. And hereby he sheweth that such as haue authoritie of the sword, & sit in the seate of Iustice, must not be retchlesse, in suffering thinges to passe before their eyes, without making any countenance to see them. Is there then any brute of a thing? Inquisition must be made of it. For if it be let passe, we shew that our intent is to nourishe the euill: and the parties that haue so concealed it, must in ỹ ende abide their payment, which is that it must light wholly vpon their owne heads, as we see it commeth to passe. And it is a iust punishment of God, that when such as are in office to remedie & redresse euill, doe beare with it, they themselues should abide the paine of it. And when they suffer it, it happeneth not by hap hazard, but God yeeldeth them the iust wages which they haue deserued. Therefore we must marke this text, that God will haue vs to be doing aforehand as soone as the brute is reported or giuen forth; & not to tary till the thing be apparaunt, without setting hand to it or without making inquisition of it: but he will haue the Iustice to inquire of it betimes, specialy when there goeth any brute of it. And by the way, to the intent there be not a slight inquirie made of it as it were but for fashions sake, he vseth here three wordes: and afterwarde he addeth that it must be done throughly, so as there be an exquisite care vsed in the matter. For diuers times, informations are taken when some coplaint is made, and that the euill is knowen, yea and ỹ in suchwise as they be ashamed to cloke it altogether, and so witnesses bee called. But they will not seeke to vnderstand the pith of the matter, they doe but vse a kinde of forme for fashions sake, as who should say ỹ matter is not buried, because there hath bin some seeking to knowe the trueth of it. But what? This is no proofe: that is to say, we will not search how the case stands in deede. For the witnesses are dispatched ere they haue tolde halfe their tales: and that which they haue spoken is let slip, so as wee see not the thing that is as apparant as the nooneday.

Now to the end that men should not daly after that sort with God: it is sayd expressly that inquisition should be made, that the matter should be examined, and informations duely taken. And therfore let Iustices vnderstand, that they shall not go quit, but that God will hold them giltie, for neglecting their duetie, if they do not what they can to bring matters to light, when they heare any complaint or any brute of them. Neuertheles our Lordes meaning is not that me should iudge as aduenture, but that the crime should be duly proued whether it be so of a truth in deede. He vseth two wordes to shew that a Iudge ought not to be led by bare suspition to conclude what hee listeth. For wee must be faine to beare with the euill when it is not knowen, because God hath not yet brought it to light. As for example, there be some sinnes (sayth S. Paul) which make haste to come to their condemnation; and we see that God doth so thrust and driue some wicked men forward, that they runne a head into mischiefe.

For sometimes it is Gods will to humble vs by making our offences knowen, that we may feele them and be sorie at the heart for them. Yea & [sometimes againe] a man knoweth not at what end to begin, but is letted that he cannot punish, because he findeth no mean how to do it. Therfore a Iudge must be discreete and milde, that he giue not sentence vpō bare coniectures, but that he first of all do see the matter substantially proued. Now then, here are two notable thinges: the one is that we must not be reckelesse, but diligent in searching out of thinges, that ỹ euil may be discouered & not nourished. The other is, that we should not iudge rashly, but that the matter should be wel knowen and throughly brought to light, before we come to giue diffinitiue sentēce of it, so as our iudgement may be ripe & settled.

Now this being so, it is sayde, shew shalt destroy the inhabitants of that Citie with the edge of the sword. Wherby God sheweth (as I haue declared alreadỹ) what affection wee ought to beare vnto his seruice. For if we consider what a thing his glory is, it ought to be more deere to vs thā all ỹ whole world. What see we either in heauen or on earth but litle sparks of ỹ power, righteousnes, goodnes & wisedome which are infinite in God? They be not to be measured: we haue but only some litle signes and tokens of them in heauen and earth. Therefore it were better that the worlde should perish ten thousand times, than that Gods glory should be defaced. But it falleth out that his glory is conueyed ouer vnto ydols, yea & bestowed vpon Satan, when his seruice is corrupted. And therefore it is not for vs to fal asleepe or to cocker ourselues in this case, as we haue bin wont to doe, making sale of Gods honour, and letting it passe as though we seemed to count it as a thing of nothing. But contrariwise we see here how he putteth all cities to destruction, if they haue defaced his honor. So then let vs vnderstand that it is not for vs to rowe any more betweene two streames as we haue bin wont to, if we intend to keepe our religion vnappayred: but we must see that all Churchtreasons, that is to say all outrages that are doone to the maiestie of God, may be punished. Seeing we know and nature teacheth vs that robberies, murthers, thefts, and all manner of pilfries ought not to bee borne with, what shal we do when gods name is blasphemed, all religion turned vpside downe, and the pure doctrine falsified, to thrust folke out of the way and to breake the vnion of faith? Such thinges are not to be winked at: for they be too heynous crymes.

Yea and it behoueth vs to marke how it is said heere, that if any wicked men be risen vp, and haue seduced the inhabitants of a Citie. For it may seeme that this circumstance should somewhat abate the fault, forasmuch as the whole citie went not away of their own accord, but were carried away by certain wicked persons, as in deed a few such firebrandes of hell are ynough to set all thinges out of order. Yea, but yet are not they to be born with, which haue giuen eare to such deceiuers; they must be punished for it neuertheles: yea and ỹ not with stripes of roddes onely, but euen with death. And in deede, how trifling an excuse is it for a man to say, I was vndermined, I would neuer haue done amisse if I had not bin induced to it, ye may see what ill counsell is. Yea, but yet notwithstanding thou haddest bin taught by the voyce of thy God, thou knewest his will, & wast ascertained of it. Beholde, a man whome thou knewest to be wicked came to seduce thee, and thou gauest more credit to his leawdnesse and to thine owne wit, than to ỹ infallible truth of thy God. Thou knowest ỹ thy God speaketh for thy benefite, and thou leauest him, thou giuest him deafe eare, thou art loth to giue him any hearing, thou refusest all that he telleth thee: and is that to be excused? Nay rather, shouldest we not spit in the faces of such men as will needes make a shield of other mens inticementes? Yea: and for that cause doth not God hold a whole Citie excused, when the people of it haue bin deluded by wicked persons. Both great and small (say I) must be punishable: and God is not cruell in punishing them all, as wee see hee hath ordained heere.

Furthermore, let vs marke well ỹ God meaneth to do vs to vnderstand what it is to haue wicked persōs in a citie. For (as saith S. Paul) a little leauen soureth a whole lump of dow. Nowe then, whosoeuer deceiuers be, there are the people by them infected. God speaketh so thereof plainly, to the intent we should not suffer euil to harbor among vs. If there be any poysoninges, we are all afraid of them, and it troubleth vs to prouide how to saue our selues frō them. ô (say we) such a plague must not abide among vs. Now it is certaine there is not a worse nor a more deadly plague, than the stepping vp of vnruly persons, despisers of God, and wicked men, which seeke to turne all thinges vpside downe, and to bring all to confusion, corrupting all thinges to the intent to haue the more libertie to doe euil. When such fellowes rise vp, & be borne withall, it is good reason that all should be guiltie of their fault. And we see also that God punisheth those ỹ beare with euil doinges when they both should and could correct them: insomuch that the common prouerbe is verified in them, that when a man is lased from the gallous, he could finde in his heart to see him hanged ỹ deliuered him from it. And good reason it is that they should haue such reward, for their corrupting of Iustice, and for their impeaching of right. Therefore when we see men goe about to turne all thinges vpside downe, we must represse them aforehande: and not tarie till ỹ end, for that is a cursed patience. True it is (as I said afore) that if God giue vs not the meanes to put away euil so soone as we would; then must we be sory for it & haue patience. But when things are euident, & there is none other let than faint hearts of cowards: then if we be cold and lasie, and shut our eyes because wee be loth to suffer displeasure; [as if a man shoulde say,] I will not be too forwarde, least I bee left in the byers, for fear least I pay for the shot when I haue entered into such a quarell, for I see that such fellowes are full of reuendge and may easily be euen with me: when we vse such cowardlynesse, then must we abide the penaltie of it. And surely it is a great grace of God to haue power to redresse a mischiefe that hath bin knowen of long afore: and therfore it must not be let slip without prouiding for it in time conuenient.

Moreouer we must heare what a simple shift it is to alledge pitie, when men marre all thinges by giuing cause of offence. For what kinde of pitie is it to spare two or three to cut y throtes of a whole nation? On the contrarie part, if they that be so wickedly bent, be represſed that they may no more haue their own swinge, but rather be vtterly rooted out: it is a purging of the whole nation, it is a healing of a common sore. So then if wee loue the welfare of all men, lette vs not giue head after that sort to such as intice men to forsake the right way. But wee must goe backe againe to the matter which I haue spoken of alreadie, and which Moses goeth forwarde withall still in this text: to wit, that the worst corruption which can befall a nation, is to haue despisers of God that falsifie the true religion, or to haue vpholders of Satan that leade men into superstition and ydolatrie, to abolishe the pure doctrine and the trueth which they haue receiued. True it is that if there bee whoremongers, drunkardes, whooremongers, and such other like folke, it is an infection that is wel worthie to be feared, & meet to be redressed out of hande, least the mischiefe growe too strong: but as for those that put all thinges out of order, shewing themselues to be bent to spite God, and to make men to yeelde no more reuerence to his maiestie: it is as a gathering of all sinnes together into one heape, and a packing of them vp in one bundle. For there can be nothing pure when Gods seruice is taken away, and when men walke not in his feare, all other thinges must needes be out of order. For the knowing of God and the worshipping of him as he deserueth, is the verie brydle that holdeth men in all holinesse and honestie. But if men turne their backes vppon him, they must needes play the beastes, and their life must needes become so lose and lothsome, that a man shal see as it were a gulfe of hell among them. And therefore not without cause are we so straitly commaunded in no wise to beare with men, when they become wicked and goe about to inueigle folke to doe seruice to ydolles. Let vs marke then, this if we be desirous to liue as wee ought and in good concord; we must aboue all thinges haue Gods seruice in estimation, as the thing wherein it behoueth vs to vse seueritie and rigor, or els all will go to wrecke and confusion. That is the thing which we haue to gather vpon this place: and would to God that it were better in vre now adayes. For as I haue touched heretofore, men are moued at the thinges that concerne and touch themselues. Insomuch that if we perceiue that the suffering of an offence will turne to our hurte or losse, euerie of vs cryeth out to haue it punished. And why? Because wee haue no regarde but of our selues. But if GOD his honour bee impeached, that is let slippe, and we fay it is not so great an euill. And why? For our purses are not pinched by it: and therefore it seemeth to make no skill at all. Nowe see heere on the contrarie parte, howe GOD punisheth vs as we deserue. For thinges become so farre out of order among vs, that wee wote not which way to turne vs. And good reason it is that it shoulde come so to passe, euen because we haue forsaken GOD, and beene more mindefull of ourselues than of his maiestie, so as we haue not yeelded him his dewe honour whereof hee is worthie, and which hee requireth at our handes. Thus much concerning this text.

And it is sayde, that all thus ouer is in the Citie must be brought together in a heape, and set on fire, & be taken as a curſed thing, and be made a ſacrifice vnto God. Heere Moses sheweth howe hatefull a thing ydolatrie is, and consequently whatsoeuer ouerthroweth the true seruice of God and the pure religion: and that is done to moue men so much the more. But [you will say, that] when such a fault is committed, the Citie it selfe, the cattell, and the houses are not to be blamed for it. And why then will GOD haue all to be destroyed? It is to the ende that folke shoulde learne to abhorre ydolatrie the more, that wee might vnderstand that the wicked folkes whom Satan dryueth to giue themselues to ydolatrie are so little to be borne with, that we must euen abhorre the verie place where they haue dwelled, yea and the verie sight of them, and thinke with ourselues, beholde, this is a place wherein Gods wrath hath beene prouoked, and that was ynough to haue soonke vs all to hell. Wee see then wherat God aimed. For hee knewe that we see nowe with our eyes, namely that we haue not such zeale to maintaine his glorie, as wee ought to haue, we passe not for it, euerie man is occupied about his owne gaine, and about the thinges that concerne himselfe. Nowe because we be so colde, God on the other side quickneth vs vp, and telleth vs that the corrupting of his seruice is a great misdeede, yea and so horrible a thing, as might make the hayres to stand stiffe vpon our heades. That is one point which wee ought to marke.

And herewithall we haue to marke also, that the rigour of this Lawe, is not to be obserued of from point to point as it is commaunded heere to the people of Israell. But yet the substance thereof abideth still in force, as I haue declared heretofore intreating of ydolatry, where I told you that wee were commaunded to put away all places that haue serued to superstition. Nowe then, we in these dayes be not in such thraldom, but that we may vse a Church that hath beene one of Satans brothelhouses. Ydolles haue bin worshipped heere, and GOD hath beene blasphemed heere: and yet for all that wee bee nowe come heere together in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ. This place then is newe dedicated, according to the saying of Saint Paul, that all thinges are sanctified vnto vs by faith and by calling vpon the name of God. And therefore if a place be put to such vse, that God is honoured there, it is a kinde of hallowing of that place. But vnder the Lawe God helde the people in greater and more slauishe bondage, commaunding them to make cleane riddaunce and vtter dispatch of all thinges that had beene vsed in the seruice of ydolles. So is it in this text, where GOD commandeth that the whole Citie shall bee rased, and neuer inhabited anie more. And the straitnesse of this bonde serued for the time wherein the fathers were gouerned like litle children. But yet doeth the substaunce thereof abide with vs still: and wee haue to gather of this text, that our Lorde abhorreth ydolatry aboue all thinges; and that if other offences bee to be punished, this is not to be indured in any wise, but that we ought to abhorre it. And because wee be too colde in that behalfe, we be warned to quicken vp our selues, and to take the meanes which wee knowe to be fit for it, to the ende wee may bee the forwarder in causing God to bee serued purely among vs, and open no gap to deceiuers, ne make any way for superstitions and ydolatrie, that might bereaue vs of the pure trueth and drawe vs vnto lyes. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vpon this text,

Col. 4. 12.

But heere a man might aske a question, howe Moses may say that all the thinges which shalbe founde in such a Citie shalbe accursed; and yet they must bee put ouer vnto God as an offering or sacrifice? Yet doeth GOD speake after that fashion in manie places, and not without cause. For it is an offering of sacrifice vnto him, when we protest that only he ought to be worshipped, and when we make as it were a solemne homage vnto him. And againe when other appurtenances come in place: as when men sacrificed vnder the Lawe, they protested that they were worthie of death, and yet notwithstanding they had a warrant of their reconcilement vnto God, by the sacrifice that was to bee offered. Also men offered of their goods vnto GOD, as who shoulde say, Lorde, all that I haue commeth of thee, and it is alwayes at thy commaundement. Yee see then that sacrifices were blessed: and yet neuertheless there was a kinde of cursednesse in the sacrifices that were offered for sinne. In the Firstlinges, Tenthes, and such other like things, there was nothing but the prayse of God and giuing of thankes vnto him: but as for the sacrifice that was offered for sinne, it behoueth Gods curse to be thereupon, as who shoulde say, Loe this is hee that shall answere for all. To the ende that men may bee acquit and deliuered from death, this sacrifice must answere for them. And therefore those sacrifices were called sinnes: and the same name is attributed to our Lorde Iesus Christ, because he bare our curse in his person. But heere is an other kinde of cursednesse; namely that GOD is honoured, and homage is doone vnto him by rooting out the thinges that hadde defaced his honour before. Therefore when a Citie is destroied that had erst beene a denne of ydolatry, and all the spoyle thereof is set on fire: it is a sacrifice that God liketh verie well of. And why so? Because it is a protesting that wee be not willing to suffer any thing that impeacheth the honour of him at all mens handes, and that all men shoulde submit themselues to him, and his maiestie be knowen as it ought to be. Now then we see howe it is not without cause that Moses commaunded sacrifice to be done vnto GOD with the vtter destruction of all thinges that had beene infected and defiled with ydolatrie.

Leuit. 7. 2. 2. Cor. 5. 21.

And hee sayeth expressly, so shal ende shal the wrath of God bee not vpon shee. Whereby he confirmeth the matter that I haue touched already, which is that we must beware that wee wrap not ourselues in other mens sinnes. For they that correct not euill dooinges when they may, and when their office requireth it; are giltie of it themselues. As for example, if a preacher winke at the vices that reigne: surely he is a traitour and vnfaithfull: for he shoulde keepe good watch, and waken such as are in daunger of vndoing. Then if I beare with the euill wittingly or through negligence: I am the first that shalbe condemned. Likewise if they that holde the sworde of Iustice, execute not the rigor which they ought to redresse mes misbehauiours: surely the wrath of God is vpon them continually, yea and vpon y whole country, because no man is found, that complaineth of this, that the mischiefe was so borne withall. One good zealous man is ynough to turne away the wrath of God, for hee will inforce others that were negligent. But when no man beginnes the daunce, but all men drawe backe, and euery man sayes, What nowe? If all the rest put not to their hande, what can I alone doe? Surely none of them all can exempt themselues from condemnation before God, when euerie one of them speaketh so. Not without cause then doeth Moses here wrap vp a whole Countrey vnder condemnation, if a wicked deede bee borne with, or not punished when it commeth to knowledge. And herby we be put in minde, to be more diligent than we are wont to bee, in ridding away of all filth and vncleannesse from among vs. For it is all one as if we shoulde lay wood vppon the fire that is kindled ynough [and too much] alreadie, so as we shall all of vs be consumed with it in the ende, and yet wee doe so euen wittingly and willingly. Why then doe wee not open our eyes, seeing our Lorde sheweth vs the daunger so euidently, and warneth vs to prouide for it aforehande? Why doe wee not thinke vppon it? Nay, wee be well worthy to perish, and to be vtterly confounded, because wee haue not vouchsafed to receiue the counsell that God hath giuen vs.

After that Moses hath thus threatned vs, he addeth a promise, that God will blesse his people, if they obey his voyce, & doe the things that are right before him. Our Lord indeuouring after his manner, to winne vs to him alwayes by gentlenesse and friendely dealing: when hee hath doone threatning of vs in this text, doeth also attempt the contrarie way saying: If ye finde me meaning to haue my seruice purely maintayned, I will be with you; yee shall finde that my seeking is but to increase the benefites which I haue begonne already to bestowe vpon you, yee shall inioy the Lande that I haue giuen you to inherite; ye shall perceiue that my promising of my fauour and mercie to your fathers is not in vaine. And let vs marke, that heere it is our Lordes intent to drawe vs to a willing seruing of him. True it is that yet for all this, wee must not forgette his threatenings, seeing we be so slowe in resorting vnto him. Then lette vs be afrayde of them, and consider that wee shall not scape his vengeaunce except we maintaine his seruice. But yet howsoeuer the worlde goe with vs, lette vs not doe it by constraint, but let vs goe to worke with a free courage. And howe may that bee doone? Euen by beeing drawen by the gentlenesse that Moses sheweth heere vnto vs: as if he shoulde say, goe to, happie will our state bee if we serue our GOD, and euerie man endeuour to drawe his neighbours with him, and suffer not any man (as farre as lyeth in vs) to peruert or trouble our state when it is well setled. If we doe so, our Lorde telleth vs that hee will be among vs, blessing vs in such sorte as wee shall prosper more and more, and that he will stablish vs in the possession of all the benefites which he hath giuen vs. Seeing the case standeth so; too too leude were wee if we woulde not submitte ourselues to him, seeing that his desiring to haue vs, is altogether for our benefite and welfare. Let vs learne then on the one side to quicken vp our selues with Gods threatninges; but yet on the other side let vs be moued and allured to serue him with a free and pure affection, voyde of inforcement or constraint. Let vs goe to worke of our owne goodwill, assuring our selues that wee be bereft and dispossessed of all good thinges, if wee serue not our GOD. And why? Because wee can not prosper but by his fauour. And let vs not delude ourselues: if we see that he make vs to prosper this present time, lette vs not fall asleepe, but let vs consider that wee haue neede of the continuaunce of his benefites and free fauour towardes vs. And this is a very needefull warning: for we see howe men take libertie, as soone as they haue any respitte. So long as GOD sheweth vs his roddes, or as wee feele his stripes; wee make countenaunce still to serue him. Yes, but that is but hypocrisie, according to this complaint which the Lord maketh by his prophete. As long as I afflicted them, they turned vnto me; but either the same day or the next morow they became like themselues againe. Therefore let not vs doe so; but although GOD let vs alone in rest, and wee perceiue no harme at hande; yet let vs looke for it afarre of, and forecast that there will come a suddeine tempest which wee looked not for, if we swarue aside from his seruice. Wee see howe that in summer the wether chaungeth in a minute of an houre: euen so may it fall out in respect of Gods wrath: and therefore let vs not welter in our delightes. When God prospereth vs, let vs not fall to frisking as abusers of his goodnesse and patience: but let vs remember howe Moses sayeth, that when he hath giuen vs a Lande to inhabit, he must be faine to maintaine vs in it, and to stablishe vs in the possession thereof. For I haue tolde you heeretofore that vnder this worde The Lande of Chanaan, all the benefites that GOD bestowed vppon his people, were comprehended, as all in one particular. Nowe then, let vs looke to our selues, and if we purpose to continue in the perpetuall inioying of the benefites belonging both to our bodies and to our soules which GOD hath bestowed vpon vs: let vs looke that wee continue stedfastly in the seruing of him, without swarueing one way or other. And moreouer lette vs labour that there may be one common accord among vs, and that euery of vs hearten vp his neighbour to doe well, so as we may doe as hath beene declared alreadie, and as we haue seene heeretofore; that is to wit, that it is not for vs to demeane ourselues after our owne imagination and fancie as wee see men doe in bearing with themselues, not onely when they doe as ill as may be, but also when they doe their duetie by halues, and yet they beare themselues in hande that they haue doone ynough, and that there is no fault to bee founde in them, GOD can require no more at their hande. And though a man point them to a thing with his finger, as if he shoulde say, This is a generall rule, and wee must not goe to it by halues; but God must haue all that belongeth vnto him, or else hee will accept none of all the thinges that can bee doone: they shut their eyes at it. O (say they) it makes no matter, wee must haue a respect of our infirmitie, we must be well aduised by wisedome and discretion. Yea, but for all that, shall we swarue from that which GOD hath ordeined? Lette men vse as much discretion and gentlenesse as can be: but yet howsoeuer the case stande, let him look wel to it, y Gods honour be not troden vnder foote, and that mennes sinnes bee not so bolstered, that any body come to aduance himselfe against the sacred maiestie of him that made vs and fashioned vs, which also maintaineth vs, by whose power wee bee vphelde, and without whose grace we could not continue one minute of an houre. Let this bee well considered, and let men doe the thinges that are right in the eyes of the Lord: for hee will not frame himselfe to our dyet. Imagine we our selues to doo thinges neuer so well, to the contentation of men, yet wil not GOD be contented with them, because hee measureth not himselfe by our weyghtes and balance. He will haue vs to harken to his worde, and to haue an eye to the thinges y he liketh, so as we may say, Lord, thou shalt haue the gouerning of vs. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vppon this text, if we entende to eschewe the curse which GOD denounceth against all such as haue suffered the peruerting of the true Religion and the corrupting of his seruice, and to haue him not onely to blesse vs, but also to increase y benefites which we haue receiued at his hande, and also to continue them towardes vs to the ende.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele thē y better, so as we may be able to shewe that his instructing of vs in his worde hath not beene in vaine, but that we may yeelde him such reuerence, as our whole seeking may bee to haue him purely worshipped among vs, and y the same may be done with one accorde, and all stumblingblockes bee cut off frō among vs, so as we suffer not ourselues to bee deluded wittingly, nor the ignoraunt to be led to destruction, but that we may looke to the drawing of them backe: and that hauing such zeale to amende other folkes misdeedes, euerie of vs may beginne at himselfe, and not giue vnto ownie flesh such libertie, as that it should cause vs aside and alienate vs from our God, but rather our selues short, fearing his threates and also in respect of his blessinges and promises which hee maketh vs for that it is his will to maintaine vs in his house as his children. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth. &c.

On Tewsday the xxij. of October. 1555.

The XC. Sermon which is the first vpon the fourteenth Chapter.

YE be the children of the Lorde your God; Therefore you shal not cut your selues, nor make any shauinges betweene your eyes for the dead.

2 For thou art a holy people to the Lorde thy God. And the Lorde God hath chosen thee from all people that are vpon the face of the earth, to be a peculiar people to himselfe.

3 Thou shalt not eate any manner of lothsome thing.

4 These are the beastes that ye shall eate of: namely, the Oxe, the sheepe, and the Goate:

5 The Red deere, the fallow deere, the Bugle, the wilde Goate, the Vnicorne, the wilde Oxe, the Chamoyse,

6 And all maner of beastes that deuide the hoofe and cliue the hoofe into two clawes and chaweth the cudde also: among the beastes them shall ye eate.

7 But as for these, yee shall not eate: among those that chawe cudde or deuide but onely deuide their clawes, that is to wit, the Camell, the Hare and the Conie. For inasmuch as they chewe cudde and yet deuide not the hoofe, they shalbe vncleane to you.

8 Also the Swine, (because he cliueth the hoofe, and yet cheweth not cudde) shal be vncleane to you. Yee shall not eate of their flesshe, nor touch their dead carkesses.

9 These are they that you shall eate of all that are in the waters: namely, whatsoeuer haue finnes and scales.

10 And whatsoeuer hath not finnes and scales, yee shall not eate thereof, but it shalbe vncleane to you.

11 Of all cleane birdes yee shall eate.

12 But these are they of which yee shall not eate: namely the Eagle, the Ospray, and the Fawcon:

13 The Gleade, the Kite, the Vultur after their kinde:

14 All manner of Rauens after their kinde:

15 The Estrich, the nightcrowe, the Cuckowe, and the Sparehauke after their kinde:

16 The Skritchowle, the great Owle, the Swanne,

17 The Cormorant, the Pellicane, the Dopchicken,

18 The Storke, and the Heronsewe in his kinde, and the Lapwing, and the Backe.

19 And all creeping foules shall be vncleane vnto you, and yee shall not eate of them.

Wee

WE haue here two cõmandements to expounde, which God gaue vnto his people: The one is that when a man died among them, they shoulde make no extreme mourning and lamentation for them in disfiguring their bodies, after the ceremonies and fashions of ỹ heathen. The other concerneth meates: for it was not lawfull for the Iewes to eate of all meates indifferently: there was a difference set them betweene cleane beastes and vncleane beastes. Nowe as touching the first, Moses telleth them, that they be a people chosen of God to be separated from all other Nations of the world. Wherevpon hee concludeth, that they must not then disfigure themselues: for inasmuch as God had set his marke vppon them: they ought not to do any wrong or violence to their owne bodies. And therewithall this commaundement is so moderated, that if a man haue forgone any kinsman or friende of his, hee must not lament for him out of measure as wee see men doe, who are wont to be too excessiue in their passions. When a body is deade, we see what sorrowing is made for him, yea euen with grudging against God, so all is out of order and there is no reason at all in their dealinges. Moses therefore commaundeth the Iewes to be patient, when it pleaseth God to bereaue them of their kinsfolke or friendes. And therewithall he telleth them it is shame for them to disfigure themselues after the manner of the heathen, for asmuch as it was a defacing of Gods image which was in them because they were made holy from among all the people of the worlde. Nowe as touching the first point, for as much as this inconuenience reigneth as well nowadayes, as it did at anie time heretofore; that is to wit, that men are too excessiuely giuen to making of sorrowe: this is not superfluous for vs. In deede this ceremonie of rending folkes hayre, and of scratching their faces to disfigure themselues is no more vsed: but yet wee see howe God is grudged at in ỹ greefe that men take for ỹ death of their friendes, insomuch as they martyr themselues without regard of submitting themselues to God. There is no dealing with them to comfort them, they bee caryed with such rage, as God cannot bee heard, whatsoeuer yee say to them they bee deafe. Nowe then, seeing that this misdealing commeth still at this day, wee must vnderstande that this doctrine concerneth vs also.

And here we haue to marke first of all that if the heathen and the vnbeleeuers, and the poore ignorant soules which haue not beene trayned in the worde of God were not excused for this vice: wee on our side offende God much more greeuously and without all excuse. For he hath separated vs from all the worlde. Yet notwithstanding men may well sooth themselues: for there is not any thing where God tryeth our obedience more, than by the liuing and dying at his pleasure, so as wee knowe that our liues be not in our owne handes, but that it belongeth to him to dispose of them: and euerie of vs is readie to departe out of this worlde, whensoeuer it pleaseth him to call vs: Or if hee take away our kinsfolke or friendes from vs, we be well contented with it. And indeede, why pray wee dayly that his will shoulde bee doone, but to protest that we bee willing to holde all our affections in captiuitie, and to keepe them in awe? Sith it is so: surely they that vexe themselues with immoderate lamenting for the decease of their friendes, are sufficiently conuicted by the onely order of nature, that they striue with God and rebell against him. Neuertheless, (as I saide afore) if the fillie ignorant soules torment themselues after that fashion, they bee to bee pitied. For they knowe not that our dayes are determined, and that God reserued the authoritie and priuiledge of calling vs vnto him, when hee sent vs into the worlde. They knowe none of all this: and therefore it is no wonder though they vse such excesse in their mourning. Moreouer, they haue not wherwith to comfort themselues: for none of them hath euer had any vnderstanding of the euerlasting life. To their seeming, if a man bee once deade, all is lost, hee is vtterly forlorne, hee is quite and cleane come to nought. And that is the cause why they conceiue so excessiue and vnmeasurable greefe. Othersome goe at aduenture: and although they haue some imagination of the endlesse life, yet are they not assured of the saluation of the parties, and therefore they cannot comfort themselues with the fauour of God. But as for vs, wee knowe that death is but a parting of the soule and bodie asunder, to the ende that God may shewe his inestimable power in raysing vs againe. And we knowe also that hee is a faithfull keeper of our soules when hee hath receiued them: and therefore that wee may well put them into his handes, assuring our selues that our Lorde Iesus Christ dyed not for vs in vaine.

Rom. 14. 8. 9

Seeing wee haue such comfort, is it not too great an vnthankefulnesse to torment our selues after the maner of the heathen and the infidels, when God taketh any man away from vs? Yes: And therefore when Saint Paul exhorteth the faithfull to haue patience in the departure of their friendes, he saith expressely, Sorrow not as the vnbeleeuers doe. In deede Saint Paul saw well that we can not bee senseleese: for in verie deede it were no patience if wee felte no greefe. If wee were starke blockes, it were no vertue at all. If a man shoulde laugh at the death of his wife or of his father, it were a beastly brutishnesse. Therefore it behoueth vs to feele the inconuenience and to be touched with it, so as it pinch vs and greeue vs: But yet muſt God aſſuage it againe, becauſe we know that he hath all ſuperioritie ouer our liues, and wee muſt ſuffer him to diſpoſe of vs as hee thinkes good. Againe we muſt goe boldly vnto him, being well aſſured of his goodnes and mercie, and we muſt not doubt but that death ſhall bee to our ſaluation, and that whether we liue or die, al ſhal without fayle turne to our benefite and welfare ſo we be in Chriſt Ieſus. Thus yee ſee what we haue to beare in mind.

To be ſhorte, that we may benefit ourſelues by this leſſon of Moſeſes; let vs vnderſtand, firſt of all, that vntill God brydle vs, our affection wil euer be inordinate whether it be in mirth or in mourning. If wee haue proſperitie, by and by it makes vs to forget our ſelues what we be, ſo as we thinke not our ſelues to be mortall men. And wee ſee howe all men fall to flinging as it were in deſpite of God when they haue their eaſe and delightes. Likewiſe on the contrarie part, if our Lorde afflict vs whether it be by the death of ſome kinſeman or friende of ours, or by ſome other aduerſitie: we be piteouſly forlorne, wee cannot meaſure our greefe, wee be ſo ouerwhelmed with ſorrowe as is pitifull to beholde, and finally our heart is full of bitterneſſe and poyſon. Wee ſee howe a number doe ſpewe out blaſphemies againſt God. Let vs conſider all theſe vices in our ſelues, and ſeeke the remedie of them as it is ſet vs downe here. Let vs beare in minde (I ſay) that our Lorde commaundeth all of vs to holde our ſelues as in captiuitie, that if our nature be faultie in that behalfe, we ſhoulde not nouriſhe the euill, but withſtand it aſmuch as is poſſible. This cannot be doone except we vſe force in ſubduing our ſelues to the obeying of God, and euen ſtreyne our ſelues to the vttermoſt. And one of the cheefeſt ſacrifices that Leuit. 23. 32. God requireth of vs and whereof he liketh beſt, is that wee conſider that wee muſt not ſorrowe out of meaſure, when we be afflicted, but flie vnto God praying him to giue vs the grace to ſubmitte ourſelues wholly to his wil ſo as if the husbande be bereft of his wife, he may beare it patiently. And why? Becauſe he knoweth it is Gods will to trie his obedience in that behalfe. Let the wife doe the like by her husbande, and let euery body ſubmit themſelues to this order of Gods, that wee may bee able to ſay, that like as he hath ſet vs in the world, ſo alſo it is good reaſon that hee ſhoulde take vs hence againe, not at our pleaſure but at his. For it is not without cauſe that he hath limited the race of our life, &
Pſal. 31. 5. 6. it pleaſeth him to take away one rather than an other. We be mortall before we come into this worlde: for a yong babe may die as well in his mothers wombe as after hee is borne. Sith it is ſo; aſſoone as God giueth vs diſcretion, let vs applie our indeuour to vnderſtande that death beſeegeth vs euerie minute of an houre, and that we muſt not promiſe our ſelues life till the nexte morrowe, nor ſet any terme to God: for his daylie prolonging of our life is but ſo much reſpiting of vs. But howeſoeuer wee fare, let vs bee mindfull of our owne frailtie, and let the ſame leade vs to conſider that if GOD take vs out of this worlde, ſooner than wee looked for, it is meete that he ſhoulde haue vs at commaundement, and that euerie of vs ſhoulde offer vp our owne bodies to him in that manner of ſacrifice, in ſuffering GOD to ſeparate vs aſunder; that what friendſhippe or bende of kinred ſoeuer there haue beene betwixt vs, yet wee may not faile to glorifie God when he taketh away our kinſefolke and friends, nor vſe this beaſtly impatience, in pulling our ſelues by the hayre of our heades, and in ſcratching and diſfiguring of our faces, as though wee knewe not what it were, to liue in the obedience of God, and to die in the ſame holy

And moreouer as well in this as in all other thinges, let vs take heede to that which is tolde here to the Iewes by Moſes: namely that when God is ſo gratious as to dedicate vs to himſelfe, and to gather vs together to bee his people, we muſt giue our ſelues ſo much the more earneſtly vnto him. True it is that in reſpect of nature we differ nothing at all from the reſt of ignorant & vnbeleeuers. For our being of Chriſts Church befalleth vs not by the right of inheritaunce. Indeede the promiſe extendeth to a thouſande generations: but yet for all that, it is of his free goodneſſe, that we haue the prerogatiue to bee of his houſe. Sith it is ſo, let vs acknowledge the honour that he doeth vs, in ſeparating vs from the heathen and vnbeleeuers though we were forlorne and damned as well as they; and let vs benefite our ſelues by that grace, that it periſhe not through our owne wickedneſſe. Thus ye ſee for what purpoſe Moſes ſaid, Thou art a people ſhooled out to thy God, haue a care to maintaine thy ſelfe in thy calling: acknowledge the good that is doone vnto thee, & goe not about to bereaue thy ſelfe wilfully of ſuch fauour. Let vs thinke vppon it (ſay I.) and that in ſuch ſort as God may be glorified in vs accordingly as hee hath vouchſafed to call vs.

And Moſes ſpeaking here expreſſely of God his election or choyce whereby hee had choſen the Iewes, addeth Thou ſhalt bee a holy people. For God gathereth not the ofſkowrings of the worlde to keepe them in his Church; his intent is not to haue his Church to bee as it were a Swine ſtie, ſo as there ſhoulde bee nothing but filth and infection; but hee purgeth vs from all vncleaneſſe. Nowe then whereas God calleth vs vnto him, it is with condition that we ſhould worſhippe and ſerue him in all puritie. True it is that he findeth vs as it were drowned in the depth of all leawdneſſe, ſo as by nature we haue nothing but vtter vncleanneſſe, and we be altogether ſo defiled that we be euen loothſome to him: but yet doeth hee purge vs and make vs cleane by his holy ſpirit, and it behooueth vs to lead a holy converſation al the time of our life. And ſo yee ſee howe hee woulde that men ſhoulde ratifie their free election, as Saint Peter ſpeaketh of it. And that is a thing which wee haue to marke in this ſaying of Moſes wherevppon wee haue to conclude that it is not lawfull for vs to take example at the vnbe-

ners and such as haue not beene brought vp in Gods schoole. And it is a verie necessarie doctrine for vs, considering howe wee euer shroude ourselues vnder the causes of offence which we see in any body giue vs an euil example, we beare our sinnes in hande that we bee excused before GOD, and that such a person is a shelter to vs. But contrariwise Moses telleth vs here, that we must bee a people sanctified vnto GOD, so as if the wretched vnbeleeuers doe playe the vnthrifters, we must not marueil at it. When wee see a sillie blinde soule stumble or stray out of his way, we pitie him because he is in darkenes, but we thinke it no straunge thing. Euen so is it with those that neuer knewe the trueth of GOD: they be sillie blinde soules that goe in darkenesse. But GOD inlighteneth vs, and sheweth vs the way of saluation. If we rushe against stinges, or if wee wander out of the way; whence commeth the fault? Are not wee our selues to bee blamed for it? Yes, and therefore let vs euer beare in minde the greatnesse of the grace which we haue receiued of GOD, that it perish not through our owne leawdnesse and negligence. And aboue all things, let vs take heede to that which is spoken here concerning the moderating of our sorrow & heauines. And this shall be doone, if wee be not troubled and grieued out of measure for the death of any of our kinsefolke or friendes, or for any other affliction that befalleth vs, but that we suffer God to liue as hee listeth, to dispose of them according to his good will. Thus yee see in effect what we haue to remember vppon the first point that is conteined heere.

Nowe as touching the second, Moses saith, that the Iewes must vse care of all manner of meates, in that they must haue a care to discerne betweene the cleane beastes and the vncleane. And afterward hee nameth the beastes, whereof it was lawful for them to eate & also the seuerall kinds which it was vnlawful for them to touch. And to be short, he saith that the beastes which chew Cud, (that is to say, which keepe in their mouthes ye last of their meate, & chaw it againe) are cleane, so as they might eat of them, conditionally that they deuide the hoofe. Now, to seeke here for nice points, as what this should meane, that ye hooues should be clouen, or that they should chawe the cud, were no matter to be greatly stoode vppon. And as for them that haue pried into the matter to search the new & the old Testament out of ye bottes cleauing of their hooues, & haue told vs ye we must needs put a difference betwixt them; & moreouer, that we must chew our cud, ye is to say feede vpon the doctrine againe and againe, that we may the better digest it, because it is ye foode of our soules: it is too too curious. For if it bee so, what do the scales of the fishes betoken? There will be occasion of seeking euerywhere, and wee shal fall into many fond speculations. And therefore let vs be aduised to vse modestie in this case. Some hold opinion that God had no further respect but to the health of mens bodies, when he forbade the eating of such beasts as he reckoneth vncleane, & they thinke that God plaide ye part of a Phisition. But that is too colde & too barren stuffe, & the scripture sheweth vs the contrarie. In deede a man may wel think that our Lord had regard what was good and conuenient for mens bodies: but to thinke that he had a further consideration, than to spy out what meats were best for mans health; that is too childishe a matter. And (as I said afore) it is no matter for vs to scan vpon, seeing the holy Ghost hath told vs plainely, that god aimed at a far other end. Let vs mark wel then, that this commaundement is no such order as is wont to be prescribed by a physition for the preseruation of a mans health: but a ceremoniall lawe that serued for Gods people in the time of the lawe, to holde them in obedience and to leade them vp higher and higher to the cleannesse of the minde: for it was Gods wil that the Iewes shoulde alwayes haue as it were lookingglasses before their eyes, to make them see that they ought not haue to doe with the defilements of the world, but to applie their whole indeuour to keep themselues in such wise as god might be glorified in thē. That is the first point, which we haue to marke. For when the Apostles treated of meats, they alleadge not that GOD meant to do the office of a Physition. And that is a very short solution. When S. Paul declareth ye the false Apostles and couseners troubled the Church, going about to holde men in bondage to the olde lawe: he sheweth that this difference of meates was a part of that childishe doctrine, vnder the which GOD led the people of olde time, because there was more rudenesse, and infirmitie at that time than there is now adayes. Not that we be better, or stronger in faith, or that we be any perfecter in our selues than they were: but because that God hath set vs further forward, by giuing vs the doctrine of the gospel. For the lawe was as an Apsie in comparison of ye doctrine that is preached vnto vs at this day. It is not to be marueiled then though there were many Ceremonies for that people, and that we haue not those Ceremonies in vse nowdaies, which serued but onely for that time. If a man replie then and say, that the preaching of the is vnto vs is more than needeth: wee see the contrarie. For although the figures be past & vtterly abolished by the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ: Yet doeth the substance of them continue still with vs, so as it behoueth vs to knowe still for what purpose God would haue ye Iewes forbeare the meats that are forbidden the here. Seeing then that the same reason and force remaineth common to vs which serued for them, it is not vnprofitable for vs to haue ye same things shewed vnto vs. Moreouer although the Sunne doe driue away all darkenesse with his light: yet is it not vnexpediente for vs to thinke vppon the night in the daytime, and vpon that wonderfull order which God hath established, sith that in winter we thinke vpon sommer, and in sommer thinke vpon winter. For we see how God setteth foorth his wisedome therein. And if there were no such varietie, we shoulde haue no such occasion to wonder thereat and to glorifie our God. Again, on the otherside, wee bee assured of the grace that is brought vs by our Lord Iesus Christ: for we be preferred before the holy fathers and Patriarkes which were worthier to haue beene preferred than wee, and yet notwithstanding God kept them vnder like litle children, whereas nowadayes hee dealeth with vs as with perfect men of full age and grouth. Seeing then that God vseth such goodnesse and liberalitie towards vs, haue we not the more cause to honour him?

1.Pet.1.10. & Gal.4.1.

But nowe let vs come backe againe to the matter which I was in hand with afore, and shew yet further howe all the saide thinges may redounde to the benefiting and profiting of vs, as well in faith as in the feare of God. I haue tolde you alreadie, that whereas God did put a difference betweene beastes, declaring some to be cleane and some vncleane, it was to accustome the Iewes vnto the spirituall cleannesse, euen in eating and drinking. True it is that God inioyned them soberneſse and temperaunce therein: but he had yet a further respect, which was that in all thinges they shoulde haue a care to be vndefiled, and to haue such a stay of themselues, as they might not bee steyned with the vncleanneſse of the worlde. Gods intent then was to giue them as it were a kinde of exercise, to keepe them the better in vre. We knowe howe men do take too large scope in eating and drinking. For whereas the rest of their life doth put them in minde to pray vnto God, and to take paines, and to discharge themselues of their dutie: when they take their repast, they giue them selues to mirth and reioycing. And it is lawefull for them so to doe, so they keepe measure. But what? They so ouershoote themselues in the turning of a hande as a man might wonder to see their excesse of mirth. This was the cause why God woulde haue his people put in mind of the soberneſse which we ought to vse in our eating and drinking al our life long, that it might be as a bridle to restraine vs, for after as our diseases bee, so doeth God giue vs medicines for them. Now (as I saide afore) there is more disorder in eating and drinking, than in all our life besides. And therefore it was requisite that our Lorde shoulde exercise his people in that behalfe. And for the same cause did he deliuer them instructions, to warne them that they ought to behaue themselues purely in all things, and to put them alwayes in minde thereof. Ye see then that the first point which wee haue to remember vppon this text, is that God telleth the Iewes that forasmuch as hee had chosen them to be his owne inheritance, they ought to dedicate themselues to him euen in things that concerne the outward conuersation, and to abstaine from worldly corruptions, not intermedling themselues with the vices of the heathen after our common maner which we knowe to bee alwayes tending vnto euill. Gods will was to holde them in that awe. And nowe wee see howe it is no more than needeth. For why? True it is that the ceremonie continueth not nowadaies: for our lord Iesus Christ hath set vs in greater libertie than the fathers were vnder the law: but yet is not the pith of it put away, that is to wit, that we shoulde liue soberly vnder the feare of our God, casting off all corruptions, and abridging our selues of all libertie of hauing to doe with the lustes of the worlde. What though the vnbeleeuers doe beare with themselues too much? shoulde we doe so too? Seeing that our Lord telleth vs that wee be his temples, so as he dwelleth in vs by his holy spirite, and that he woulde haue vs to be as sacrifices vnto him, so as we shoulde offer vp both our soules and bodies vp to him dayly: is it lawful for vs to cast our selues into the vncleanneſse of the worlde, without anie regard how to represse it? Then let vs marke well that although the ceremonie be no longer in vre, yet the lawe in it selfe is not doone away, but that God inioyneth vs the same sobrietie as this day, whereto he meant to leade the people of olde time by the meanes that were agreeable to that time. Againe sith we see what priuiledge God giueth vs, let the same moone vs the more to yeelde our selues freely vnto him. If we compare our selues with the fathers of olde time, we shall finde that God led them but as yong babes and yet were they as Angels among mortal men. If we look vpon the life of Abraham, what a perfection of holinesse shall we find there? As much is to be saide of the rest of the Patriarkes and Prophetes: and yet neuertheleſſe, yee see howe God held them in darkishnes, giuing them but a small taste of his grace, insomuch that his shewing of Iesus Christ vnto them, was but a farre off. But we in these dayes haue much further preeminence: for God sheweth himselfe fully vnto vs, and we haue the spirite of adoption, whereby we may crie with full mouth, that God is our father, euen wee that come of the heathen, and had no acquaintance with God, but were vncleane, and (to be short) were by nature accursed, & had none other heritage than death and damnation. Nowe then is it not an inestimable priuiledge, that God hath brought vs so neare to himselfe? What is to be doone then? Seeing that God allureth vs more freely than he did the fathers, let vs be the more earnestly minded to serue him. He dischargeth vs of the burthen of concerning the shadowes and figures: what is to be doone therfore? We must haue this willingnesse of giuing our selues to the spirituall seruice which he requireth continually now stil as well as he required it then. Therfore let euerie man bethinke himselfe, and inasmuch as God giueth vs leaue to eate of all manner of meates freely without exception, (that is to say, of all such as may serue for our sustenaunce:) let vs haue this consideration with our selues, Alas my God, yet must I not abuse thy goodnes. How manie waies doest thou shewe thy selfe liberall to me? Therfore doeth it become me to bridle my selfe of mine owne accorde and to cut off all the wicked affections that reigne in me.

Col.2.14.

And first of all let vs put the doctrine in vre which Saint Paul setteth down in the thirteenth to the Romanes, which is, that wee bee not carefull for our flesshe, at leastwise to fulfill the lustes thereof (for that is a guilt that can

theuer be filled) but onely looke to the susteyning of our bodies, so farre foorth as they may bee maintained in good plight, & so vse Gods creatures, as wee defile them not. For although Gods creatures are permitted vnto vs; yet doe we not cease to defile them by our vnbeleefe, intemperance, gluttonie, or other abuses which we commit. GOD sheweth that as now we may eate both of the Hare and of the Connie, as wel as of the sheepe or of the Goate. Yet notwithstanding if wee glut our selues with them, the meate that is cleane of it selfe becommeth vncleane vnto vs, because we bee vnthankefull to GOD, in that we consider not to what end he giueth vs sustenance. One man rusheth foorth into all excesse, and yet is neuer the more mainteyned in strength of bodie by it: for he is readie to burst, and maketh himselfe altogether vnweeldie. A drunkarde playeth the Swine or some other brute beaste, and the wine so ouercommeth him, that he hath neither wit nor reason. And although wine be a creature that God hath blessed, and haue no vncleanneſse at all in it selfe: yet is it defiled by such misusing of it. Othersome neuer remember to giue GOD thankes, nor to call vppon his name. And that is an other kind of defiling our foode. Againe othersome abuse it to vaineglorie and deliciousnesse, and growe so farre out of order, that they can no skill to serue GOD. Othersome are so giuen to daintie fare, that it maketh them to put their consciences in ieoperdie, insomuch that they will not sticke to make them bondslaues to all lawdnesse and wickednesse, so they may haue good cheere. Othersome are afraide of want, and fall to snatching, to filching, to catching, and to al that can be deuised, to get somewhat by hooke or by crooke. And thus doe all of vs defile Gods creatures, which of themselues are cleane. And that is the cause why I saide, that sith our Lorde hath giuen vs greater priuiledge, and set vs more at libertie, to the end that the bondage of the lawe shoulde not haue dominion ouer vs: therefore wee ought to bee the willinger to restraine ourselues in absteining from all vncleanneſse, and to consider that the cause why God hath giuen vs the free vse of all kinde of meates, is that wee shoulde vse them purely, and not be defiled on our side, so as we might not bee blamed for defiling of the things which haue no manner of vncleanneſse in them selues, in respect of God and in respect of the order that hee hath set among vs. And we must haue this regarde not onely in respect of meate and drinke, but also in respect of our whole life in general. Considering then that God nurtured the people of old time, by forbidding certaine meates, to the ende that they shoulde thinke thus with themselues; well then, seeing that our God hath forbidden vs the things that are lawfull for the heathen, and which they take leaue to doe; let vs vnderstande that it behoueth vs to liue in all manner of pureneſse, and that seeing God will haue vs to bee pure in smal thinges, hee will much rather haue vs to bee so in great thinges. Let vs nowadayes consider to what purpose this ceremonie of the lawe may serue vs, to the ende that euerie of vs may enter into himselfe. As for example, if a man be led with ambition, so as hee wil needes aduance himselfe and clymbe too high: or if he be caried away with couetousneſse, so as he burne therewith: or if hee be an vnthrift and leade a lawleſse life: or if hee bee a whorehunter and giuen to beastly lust: let vs bethinke ourselues thus: howe nowe? Our Lorde abhorreth euerie little vncleanneſse euen in eating and drinking: and what will come of it then if our soules be defiled, sith they be the thinges wherein he will haue his glorie to shine most cheefely? True it is that our bodies also are the Temples of the holy Ghost: but yet hath God set his owne image in our soules: and what a thing were it then to defile them after that sort with all diueliſhe and worldly vncleanneſse? Thus ye see whereunto it behoueth vs to applie this doctrine to vse it wel. 1. Cor. 6, 15. & Eph. 4, 23 24.

And by the way let vs marke, that Gods wil was to holde the people of olde time in obedience that they might knowe howe it is not for men to take such libertie and licence as they list, but that they must receiue it at his hande. To bee short, let vs not attempte any thing in al our whole life, except wee knowe it to be acceptable to our God. When wee haue leaue of him, then may we well goe forwarde: but if hee say it not, then let vs be still. And indeede although this prohibition were not put in writing; yet had God put a difference afore betweene cleane beastes and vncleane beastes, as we may easily perceiue by that which is written of Noe. God commaunded him to make sacrifice after the fludde. And whereof? Was it of all beastes ingenerall? No: Neither had hee reserued so great a number of the vncleane beastes as of the cleane, and that was by reason of sacrificing. Then was there a difference alreadie euen at that time. And whereof proceeded that? Had men deuised it of their owne braine? No. And therefore let vs marke howe God reserued to himselfe the prerogatiue of putting difference betweene the beastes that were cleane and the beastes that were vncleane, to the intent that men shoulde know that it is not for them to liue as they list, & to haue y bridle loose in al things; but that it behoueth them to looke vpwarde to harken what God giueth them leaue to do. And when he giueth them leaue; then let them vse their libertie, or else let them keepe themselues still. Ye see here a doctrine that is as profitable as that which we haue touched alreadie: for wee see howe men burst foorth into such disorder, & with so great headinesse, that they haue no mind at all to vse Gods benefites according to his meaning. Ye shall not finde one among a thousande that will consider with him selfe whether God giueth him leaue to doe a thing or no. But men rushe out into all disorder, as though they had leaue to doe what they list. Nowe then seeing wee be so leawde and vnkinde that wee fall to thrusting our groynes into thinges like swine, and consider not from whence the benefites Gen. 8, 20.

come: good cause haue we to remember this doctrine, wherein it is shewed vs that euen from ỹ beginning of the worlde, GOD did put a difference betweene the cleane beastes and the vncleane. And let vs vnderstande, that although the ceremonie continue not any longer nowadayes; Yet notwithstanding the same ought to serue vs for a warning, to lift vp our mindes on high in our eating and drinking and in our vsing of all the rest of Gods creatures, that wee may know howe farre God hath giuen vs leaue, and simply submit our selues thereunto.

Again, if he giue vs libertie, let it always prouoke vs to glorifie his name & to giue him thãks: for it is one of the sacrifices which he requireth of vs, that wee shoulde doe him homage for all his benefites as holding them from him. But that cannot be done, except wee bee first put in minde that we cannot so much as eate one bit of breade, without it be giuen vs from aboue, not onely for that he hath created all thinges, but also for that it behoueth vs to receiue all things as at his hande. Therefore whensoeuer we eat or drinke, we must not onely call to minde that God hath created all things for mans vse; but also that hee feedeth vs, as a father that cutteth out meate to his little children, so as our hauing of thinges is as it were by his deliuerance, as if he should say to vs, I doe the office of a father, I haue a care to nourishe you. If wee knowe not this, it is vnpossible for vs to thanke God hartily and vnfainedly. True it is that euen they that haue no such thought will say grace; but that is but for fashion sake and in way of hypocrisie. Wil wee then magnifie Gods goodnesse truely: then must we bee fully resolued, not onely that God hath created all thinges for mans vse: but also that he stil sheweth himselfe a father, and giueth vs assurance that he will susteyne our bodies, and maintaine vs in this transitorie life. Sith it is so, is it not an incouragement vnto vs to yeeld him the thankes as he deserueth? Yes: For it is not without cause that hee listed to put a difference betweene the ceremonies of the Lawe, and the thinges that we haue at this day. But although this prohibition was done away by the cõming of our Lorde Iesus Christ; yet cease wee not to come backe still to this point, that forasmuch as our Lord Iesus Christ giueth vs leaue to vse all his creatures indifferently, we must vse them in such wise as he may be glorified by them, so as wee referre all to him, and take all as at his hande.

Psal. 50. 14. 23.

And herewithall we see what priuiledge we haue, in that we may quietly and with safe conscience eate the thinges that God giueth vs. For as for the wretched papists, which behaue themselues after the maner of the worlde, in forbearing certaine meates that are forbidden them, whereas they think themselues to serue God in making but small meales vppon some certayne dayes, and absteyning from egges and white meates on some other dayes; and beare themselues in hand that their so doing is great deuotion, and that God is greatly bound to them for it, and yet in ỹ meane while suffer themselues to be led like silie beastes by the tyrannie of men: in what case are they before God? They can not eat one bitte of breade without doubting because they knowe not who it is that giueth it vnto them. But sith we see that our Lorde hath set vs at libertie, so as we may vse all manner of meats with thanksgiuing: let vs consider that it is such a priuiledge as cannot be esteemed sufficiently, and therfore let vs acknowledge it in our eating and drinking. Sith we perceiue ỹ God hath such a care of vs, as to stoope so lowe, as to be carer of our food: [let vs assure our selues ỹ] although our bodies be but carions; yet notwithstanding God wil giue them sustenance to maintaine the. Seeing wee haue such a certeintie & knowledge (which cannot be without faith,) that is to say that we be sure what God hath graunted vnto vs: we ought greatly to magnifie his grace, and therewithall to vse all his creatures with such sobrietie, as we may yeeld him good account of them at the last day, & glorifie him in al points as long as he keepeth vs in this world.

Now let vs kneele downe before ỹ maiestie of our good god ỹ acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, by touching vs to the quicke, so as we acknowledging him to bee the author of all good things, may learne to seeke him in all our life, and cleaue wholy to his will: and that for the bringing thereof to passe, it may please him to graunt vs the grace to forsake all our corruptions, and to fence vs so from the wiles and suttleties of satan and the world, as nothing may keepe vs from being truely vnited to him that is the fountaine both of life, of ioye, and of al happinesse. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Wednesday the xxiij. of October. 1555.

The XCj. Sermon, which is the second vpon the fourteenth Chapter.

21 Ye shal not eat of anie dead bodie, but thou shalt giue it to the Straunger that is within thy gates, that he may eat it: or else thou shalt sell it to a straunger: For thou art a holy people to the Lord thy God. Thou shalt not seeth a kidde in his dammes milke.

22 Thou

22 Thou shalt giue the tenth of all the increase of thy seede which groweth yeerely on thy Land:

23 And in the place which the Lorde thy GOD will chooſe to put his name in, thou ſhalt eate before him the tythe of thy grayne, and of thy wine, and of thine oyle, and the firſt borne of thy kine, and of thy ſheepe, that thou maiſt learne to feare the Lord thy God alwayes.

YEſterday I tould you the cauſe why God forbad the people of olde time to eate of ſome certaine kindes of meats. For in as much as we be fed & ſuſtained by his hand, it is good reaſon ẏ we ſhould vſe his creatures purely, and that we ſhould haue leaue of him, ſo as euery man take not leaue to doe what he liſteth, but what Gods word permitteth vs to doe. Therewall I ſhewed alſo, ẏ although the ceremonie be no more vſed nowadayes, nor we any more bound thereto as the fathers of old time were which liued vnder the law: yet notwithſtanding the doctrine thereof ceaſſeth not to be profitable for vs. And hereby we be doone to vnderſtand, that it is not lawfull for vs to eate or drinke without faith, (as S. Paul ſpeaketh of it in the xiiii. to the Romanes) that is to ſay, vnleſſe we be ſure that God giueth vs the thinges which wee receiue for our ſuſtenance, as if a father ſhoulde feede his children. On the other ſide, wee haue farre greater libertie nowadayes, than was vnder the Lawe. Wee ſee how liberall GOD is towardes vs: and wee haue the more cauſe to yeeld him thankes. Moreouer the thing that was ſet downe in figures to the Iewes in olde tyme, is vttered as nowe vnto vs without figure: that is to ſay, that in all caſes & all reſpects we muſt bridle our ſelues, ſo as we medle not ẇ the defilements of ẏ vnbeleeuers, but ſeparate our ſelues from them, ſeeing ẏ our Lord hath gathered vs into his flock and ſheepefold. And this figure of the old time, is a warning for vs nowadayes. For although we be no more bound to the keeping of it; yet notẇſtanding it ought to moue vs ẏ more to ſerue our god purely, ſith we ſee he hath giuen vs a greater priuiledge than he gaue to ẏ Patriarkes & Prophets. After ẏ ſelf ſame maner is it ẇ the things ẏ Moſes addeth here. For yeſterday he treated of the meats ẏ were foule and vncleane in thoſe dayes. And hee ſorted them into their ſeuerall kindes. You ſhal eate of ſuch beaſtes, ſayd he: but in any wiſe beware ẏ ye touch no ſwine, nor any ſuch like thinge. Nowe he treateth of ſtrangled meats, as of fleſh ẏ dieth alone ẇout killing and ẇout letting of it bloud. And no doubt but ẏ his ſetting downe of this, is to ſhew that in ſo doing there is a double abhomination according to ẏ lawe. For firſt & formoſt when a beaſt died ſo alone of it ſelf, it was vnholy aforehand, & the very only touching of it was able to make a mã vncleane. And ẏ was the cauſe why God did ſo forbid his people to eate therof. Again, the bloud of it was ſetled in it, & we haue ſeene already how it was not lawful for ẏ Iewes to eate bloud, & that was bicauſe ẏ in the bloud wee haue as it were a liuely image of ẏ ſoule & of the life: & Gods meaning was to teach his people to abſtaine frõ all crueltie. And hereof we haue ẏ reaſon expreſſed in Geneſis, at ſuch time as Noe and his ofspring were forbidden to eate bloud; where it is added ẏ we muſt ſpare men, bicauſe a man is ẏ image of God, & whoſoeuer doeth any outrage vnto him, ſhal not ſcape vnpuniſhed. Now then, Gods care was not for the beaſts when he forbad ẏ Iewes ẏ eating of their bloud: but his intent was to teach them by ẏ meanes to abſtaine from all crueltie, ſo as they ſhould be loth to do any outrage, and ſpecially any murther. But as for vs in theſe days we bee not in ſuch bondage. For our Lord Ieſus Chriſt hath freed vs by his death and paſſion. Neuertheleſſe, howſoeuer we fare, ẏ groundwork abideth ſtill; ſo as a man may forbid a little child to handle a knife, leaſt he ſhould hurt himſelfe ẇ it: and yet an elder body alſo is to be forefended from hurting of himſelfe, wheras yet notwithſtãding, the handling of a knife were not euill for a child but in reſpect aforeſaid. And therfore God who tooke ẏ Iewes as little children, forbad thẽ ſtreitly the things ẏ are permitted vs at this day. Howbeit, the finall end is all one both to them & vs: inſomuch that we muſt conſider, that if Gods wil was to haue the Iewes kindharted, & to know ẏ the ſhedding of bloud is a deteſtable thing: the ſame ought alſo to be regarded of vs at this day, although the figure therof be aboliſhed. True it is (as wee reade in ẏ xv. of the Actes) ẏ the Apoſtles forbad ẏ Gentils to eate bloud or any thing that is ſtrangled: but ẏ was not for any ſin ẏ was in ſo doing. It was to auoide occaſion of offence, bicauſe (as it is there alleaged) Moſes was read openly, & the law was publiſhed abrode in all Cities, ſo as they heard it there forbidden. The Iewes could not abide at ẏ firſt, to ſee them eate bloud, which named themſelues Chriſtians: for ẏ was a lothſome thing to them. Therefore men were faine for a time to forbeare ẏ libertie that God giueth nowadayes to al the faithfull, accordingly as S. Paul ſpeaketh therof, ſaying that the things which are lawfull for vs are not alwayes expedient: for they edifie not. We haue in deede our conſciences free before God: but yet if I ſee my brother offended, it behoueth me to beare ẇ him, if his ſo doing be through infirmitie, and in any wiſe I muſt haue a conſideration, whether a man be already throughly inſtructed in the faith or no. The intent of the Apoſtles then was not to make a grounded law wherewith to tie mens conſciences, & to hold thẽ in bondage: but only to auoide al occaſion of cauſing folk to ſtumble. But this hath bin ill marked of a great ſort of ignorant perſons. For they haue thought it to bee deadly ſinne to eate ẏ bloud of any beaſt, as wee see it mainteined still at this day: and that was a foolish & beastly superstition. For (as I said afore) our Lord Iesus Christ hath cancelled the obligation of the Lawe of Moses, so as we be no more bound vnto it. But yet for all that, it behoueth vs to liue in concord one with another, and to haue a regarde what our neighbours are able to beare. There is not the like reason for vs noweadayes to forbeare the eating of flesshe vppon frydayes: for it is a meere deuotion, and it was forged and inuented without any likelyhoode of reason, yea and it was matched with a kinde of Idolatrie, for as much as the Papistes haue furnished themselues to serue God by that meanes in forbearing to eat flesshe vpon certaine daies, which was too grosse a folly. Nettertheless, if a christenman should come among the Papistes, and goe about to teache them that are yet altogether blinded, the point ỳ he should begin at, must not bee the eating of flesh vpon frydayes, for that would scare them quite away; bicause they neuer heard that it is lawful to do it, and therfore could neuer conceiue the truth of it, and besides that they should see him go about to breake a law which they take to be most holy, without informing them of the true meaning of the whole. Such dealing therfore should be contrary to Gods meaning, and to Christen liberty. And therefore order and measure are to bee obserued in those cases. But by the way, let vs remember that wee haue cause to giue thankes to our God, for exempting vs from ỳ bondage that our fathers were subiect to vnder the law: & that we must also benefite our selues by those figures, by learning to liue friendly with our neighbors, abhorring all murthers and outrages, not onely actual murthers but also hatred, which is likewise condemned for murther before God, though it be neuer so secret and close kept, as saith S. Iohn. That is the thing which we haue to note when it is sayd vnto vs that God vttereth his will without any shadow, and not in darke speeches as he did to the fathers, but as one that speaketh with open mouth: and therefore let vs hold our selues contented therewith.

Col. 2. 14.

1. Ioh. 3. 15.

Now after this commaundement, Moses addeth that wee must not seeth a Kidde in his dammes Milke: but woorde for woorde, it is but in Milke. It hath beene commonly vnderstoode, that a man shoulde not seeth a Kid in his dames milke, or make sawce with Goates milke to eate Kiddes flesshe withall. And thereuppon, the Iewes (who will needes bee alwayes adding of somewhat to the pure worde of God) haue made a Lawe that it shoulde not bee lawfull for a man to eate cheese made of Goates milke after he had eaten kiddes flesh, vntill he had first well scoured and washed his teeth, for to their seeming, that woulde haue bin a defiling of the man. But when al things are wel considered, the meaning of this text is ỳ men shoulde not rost a kid as soone as he were newyeaned, but ỳ they should let it sucke for a time, ỳ it might be flesh meete to bee eaten. And this was doone to the ende that folke should not inure themselues so much to the following of their owne appetites, as to fall into any beastly cruelties for from the one, men come to the other. Let vs alwayes beare in minde howe it was declared yesterday, that GOD was well willing to giue his people leaue to eate of all maner of good & conuenient meates, sauing that he meant to holde them in awe for the trial of their obedience, and yet notwithstanding ment not onely to set them downe some order of diet or fare like a Phisition. For it were too grosse an imagination to thinke that God prouided but onely for the diseases of his people, as though all his Ceremonies had tended but to the feeding of their bodyes. For the putting hereof among the olde figures and shadowes was not for nought. Then let vs conclude that God had a further regarde when he forbad the eating of a kidde in his dammes milke. And in deede we see how in another place hee forbiddeth men to catch an olde birde sitting vpon her yong ones, for it is a kind of cruelty. If a man finde a nest of Partridges or other birdes, and catch the dam sitting vpon the yong, God condemneth it, that is to say, he condemned it in olde tyme in the Lawe among the Ceremonies. And why so? Bycause it is against nature. For wee see howe the seely birdes are so carefull for their young, that the damme will rather starue than forsake them. Whereby wee bee put in minde to doe the like. Seeing then that the seelie birds, to discharge their naturall duetie, doe forget themselues so farre that they passe not what miserie they indure, nor what care they take for the cherishing of their yong ones, in so much as they suffer themselues to bee taken with hand, and yeeld themselues as it were into bondage for them: were it not an acte of extreme cruelty for a man to goe kill them? Good cause therefore had God to forbid it, to shewe that men ought not to passe their bounds, and take leaue to doe what they list, but to restraine themselues to some kind of humanitie. And so whereas in this text God forbiddeth men to eate a kid in his dams milke; it is as much to say, as men ought not to deuour a yong beast as soone as it is come into ỳ world, vntill it haue sucked a time: neither can the flesh of it be kindly and good to eate. Nay, moreouer it importeth a kind of barbarous ouerfiercenes, when men are so greedie ỳ they will needs take the beastes at the first fal of them, and not tarie till they may come to their full season to be eaten, as some haue bin seene to be so beastly, ỳ they haue ripped ỳ dams bellyes to take out the yong ones. It hath beene seen that a glutton hath not bin contented with the creatures which God hath brought forth into the world, but he must also go rip vp a Hinde to haue the Calfe for the satisfying of his appetite. It is sayde that the earth is full of infinite riches, and ỳ god hath powred out such treasures as are able to amaze vs: & yet for al ỳ ye see how some man wil play the detestable monster. Whe he hath pãpered his belly with ordinarie foode, he fals to deuising I wote not what: in so much ỳ if it were possible he wold create a new world, to feede his paunch wal. And although he be not able to make a flie, yet falleth he to imagining ỳ will

will go ſlit a Hinde or a Doe, and take out ſ vnciuely fruit out of her belly to feed vpon. And is not ſ too great a wickednesse? No doubt but that ſuch desires haue beene in all ages; but behold, God telleth vs that wee muſt vſe ſuch temperance and ſobernesse in our dyet, as wee may alwayes haue a regard to the maintening of humanitie. Wee muſt preſcribe a rule our ſelues, and our eating and drinking muſt not bee ſo barbarous; that it ſhould be a meane to harden our hartes & make vs to forgo all humanitie, which is a thing diuers times quite forgotten; but that we ſhould liue together in good quietnes, & abſtaine from all iniurie and euill dealing.

And as touching the Ceremony whereof I am to ſpeake, which the Iewes obſerue and whereof they haue made a very ſolemne law: we ſee therby how the world will needes pay God alwayes with petie triſles: And ſ is it from whence ſuch ſuperſtition is come. It is all one with that which we haue ſeene heeretofore, where God forbad his people to diſfigure themſelues at the death of any of their friendes. But the Iewes conſidering not to what end ſuch prohibition was ſet downe: obſerued it according to the letter. Well then, they muſt not diſfigure themſelues: but yet they had not an eye to gods meaning, which is, men ouerſhoot themſelues too far in making too much ſorrowe at ſ deceaſſe of their friends, tormenting themſelues out of meaſure, blaſpheming the name of God, and fretting inwardly. And therfore God intended to repreſſe ſuch corruption. Yea and as though mens ſins prouoked not Gods wrath ſufficiently of themſelues: they thinke it not ynough to be impatient, but they do alſo prouoke themſelues to it ſtill more & more. For we ſee there is no meaſure in mens ſorrowing, but they inforce themſelues to weepe, and doe many other thinges to increaſe their greefe and beſinesse, kindling the fire ſtill more and more, which is great ynough already of it ſelfe: diuers the ſame maner deale they in all other thinges. But what doe the Iewes ſtill in this behalfe? They may not diſfigure themſelues: but in the meane while they rend their garmentes. And ſo the meaning of the Lawmaker, which was ſimple, is diſfeated. For to their ſeeming, when a friend of theirs is dead, they muſt not be without ſorrowe for him; for that were a diſhonouring of him, and therefore they muſt rend their garmentes for him. And beſides that, they muſt make ſuch Countenances, and ſuch Ceremonies, ſo as they muſt not eate that day in their owne houſes, but ſpend that day abrode in mourning, and in doeing this and that. When they haue finiſhed a hundred pelting toyes, they beare themſelues in hand that they haue well pacified God; and yet notwithſtanding that they may diſpiſe him all their life long. And heerein we ſee as in a lookingglaſſe, how greatly our nature is inclined to ſuperſtition; and ſecondly that alwayes we will needes haue ceremonies to content God withall, and to diſcharge our dewties towardes him. Our nature (I ſay) is ſo bent to ſuperſtition, that if God forbid a thing, in deede wee dare not doe it with intent to reſiſt him, but wee ſeeke ſome other byway, ſo as GOD ſhall bee diſappointed, and neuer haue the thing that hee demaundeth. As for example, the Chriſtians which beare that name, take not vpon them the very ſuperſtitions of ſ Idolaters as they terme them; but yet they followe the ſelfe ſame in deede with a little diſguiſing of them, and ſo they beare themſelues in hande that god eſpies them not at all. The Idolaters caryed bread and drinke to the graues of the dead, bearing themſelues in hand that the ſoules were fed therewith; and they caryed thither lightes to the intent to glad them. Nowe the Papiſtes haue thought this to be too great an abſurditie. But what for that? They offer vp bread, & wine, and candles, and monie at their Maſſes, and the ſoules departed (ſay they) ſhall finde releaſe by it. Verily if it bee replyed that the ſuperſtition of the Papiſtes is not all one with the ſuperſtition of the heathen: in deede there is ſome difference betwixt them. But to what ende do they ſo, but to content GOD with ſome newe exchaunge? For (as I ſayde) it is a thing rooted in mans nature. And wee ought to marke it well: for wee woulde ſoone fall into it, if wee were not reſtrayned by Gods woorde, as by a ſhort and rough brydle. And all commeth from out of this ſpring, that wee will not ſerue GOD as he requireth, but by a ſorte of Ceremonies I woote not what. And when wee haue once made ſome ſhewe of deuotion; wee beare our ſelues in hand that he is well appeaſed, and that he ought not to preſſe vs any further. And thus ye ſee that the cauſe why men in all ages haue toyled themſelues ſo much in the ſeruice of God, and haue inuented ſo many triſling things: is that they will needes paye him in ſuch coyne, becauſe they were loath to deale vprightly and faythfully with him. God requireth our hearts: & if he poſſeſſe not them, all the reſt is nothing worth. Now we bee full of hypocriſie, and wee bee not willing to diſcouer our backhookes which are full of diſſimulation, malice, and rebellion, but would alwayes keepe them ſtill to our ſelues. And yet in the meane ſeaſon wee pretend a maruelous holynesse with our eyes, our feete, and our handes. Therefore let vs learne that this miſchiefe hath reigned in all ages, to the intent we may rid our ſelues of it; and let vs aſſure our ſelues that God will not be ſerued at our handes by outwarde Ceremonies. True it is that all our whole life ought to beare witneſſe that the feare of him is well rooted in our hartes. Faith is a dead thing if it vtter not it ſelfe by good fruites. Moreouer if we intend to haue our ſeruice accepted of God, let vs aſſure our ſelues that we muſt begin at the ſoundneſſe of hart, and that all Ceremonies are to no purpoſe, except they ſhewe ſ our hart is right, pure, and vnfeined. Thus much concerning the ſuperſtition and abuſe ſ reigned among the Iewes and ſtill reigneth at this preſent.

We muſt alwayes come backe to this ſaying of our Lorde, that the thinges which goe into a mans mouth defile him not, but the thinges that come out at his mouth, as all maner of wicked affections. One is full of ambition and pride, another burneth in couetousnesse, and a third practiseth spitefullnesse and treason. Euery man hath his vice himselfe, so as one is a glutton and another is a whoremonger. These are the things that infect the man, yea and they infect the whole world. Therefore let vs learne to clense our selues from all such filthinesse: and as for Ceremonies, let vs knowe that wee ought to vse them so farre foorth as God requireth them for the vttering of our faith: but yet must we vse them simply, and not bee wedded too much to them. For wee see that the deuill will by and by haue a towell ready to blindfould our eyes withall, so as wee shall no more consider the principall, but forget it vtterly and abuse our selues to thinges of nothing. To the intent then that we may not haue our eyes so bleared: let vs follow God that way which hee calleth vs: that is, to serue him in all pureneſſe.

And now as touching the principall point of this sentence, where it is said that a kid must bee eaten in his dammes milke: let vs vnderstand that God will haue vs to vse honestie and sobernesse in our eating and drinking: that is the thing in effect, which wee haue to remember in that text. Truely as touching the figure, we be no more tyed to it, as I haue said aforetime but as for Gods meaning, that is durable. When men doe giue themselues to their leawde and outrageous appetites, it is all one as though they ment to ouerthrow the order of nature. Yee see how drunkardes (when they bee so full that they be ready to burst) doe inuent such shamefull thinges, that an honest man would bee ready to cast vp his stomacke to heare the things spoken of which those swine doe. When they be as full as their skinnes can holde, they whet their stomacks, & take shooinghornes (as they term the) to drawe on a cup of wine, and such other like things, so as wee may see that men cannot content themselues with any measure, but although God shewe himselfe liberall towardes them, yet notwithstanding they wil needs follow their inordinate lustes still, declaring ſ their desires are vnsatiable, & neuer at rest, till they haue brought themselues to shameful disorder, without regard of any modestie. Sith we see such things, we may well perceyue howe it is not without cause that God hath warned the Iewes to vse a kind of honestie in their liuing and feeding: which thing belõgeth much more to vs at this day. Although we haue not the Ceremonie any more; yet will God haue vs to liue honestly, & to vse a sobrietie in our eating & drinking, so as we may alway lift vp our eyes & say, Lord, we haue receiued foode at thy hand, & we know ſ thou shewest thy selfe a father towards vs. But if we make a hotchpotch of al things wout discretion, surely it is no taking of them as at Gods hand, but wee shall finde at the last, that we rauened them vp like beastes. And therfore let vs learne to refraine our selues. Thus wee see howe the doctrine that is conteyned heere, is not vnnecessarie at this day, so wee can applie it duely, and with discretion of the holy Ghost to our instruction.

Now after this, he sayth concerning beasts that are strangled, and are dead in their blood, that they should giue them to strangers: or else sell them. It seemeth heere at the first sight, that God should as well condemne those beastes for the strangers as for the Iewes. For if it be not lawfull for me my selfe to doe a thing; why should I bee an occasion to my neighbour to doe it? Am I not giltie of sinne in so doing? Here we haue to consider the reason that Moses addeth: Thou art a People holy vnto thy God. Heere he sheweth that God had shooled out ſ Iewes from all other nations of the earth, and therefore hee would not haue them to defile themselues with any kind of meate. Now if it be demaunded, and why then had they leaue to selor giue the things to strangers, which were abhominable as in respect of themselues? The reason is this: That god hauing named the beasts which he would haue his people to eate of, did leaue all beastes without difference for all other men to feede on which were not instructed in his Law. True it is that he had forbidden al mankind to eate the blood of any thing, and consequently to eate of any beast that was strangled or died alone. But the most part of the world was already gone astraye, so as they knew not the law any more, & we see how ſ euen in the life of Noe, his posteritie intangled themselues in a nomber of superstitions & idolatries, and had forgotten god who had preserued them so wonderfully: so as there was no more but the linage of Sem, which was but a very small portion, that held themselues to any puretie in the seruing of God. By reason whereof ſ whole world grew into such a licentious liberty, that all was mard. God therefore reſcrueth a people to himselfe, & bringeth them backe to the first law, saying. Seeing I tel you that I haue chosen you to be my household: I set you downe a speciall order, ſ you may haue my badge whereby to be knowen from al ſ vnbeleeuers of the earth. After ſ maner doth god deale. But men runne gadding on their own head, & follow alwaies their own affections, & cãnot find in the ir harts to subiect themselues simply to Gods law as he requireth. Truely the thing of it selfe were not euill, if there had bin no law against it. And this law was giuen to ſ Iewes, for the two reasons which I haue alleaged afore. The first was for the tryall of their obedience, ſ they should shew themselues to be subiect vnto God. And the second was, ſ thereby they might be quickned vp to keepe themselues from al corruption. But as for the heathen, they might haue eaten of all meates, so they had acknowledged the giuer of them and the creator that had made all thinges to their vse, worshipping him purely and abstaining from al cruelty & outrage: but they liued in ſ world like beastes. They had in deede a kinde of Imagination that there was one God, & they forged a great nomber of gods and yet for all that while euery man had an idol by himselfe, the liuing God was forsaken of all men. For as much then as the heathen had not the Law appointed vnto them: the Iewes might well leaue those kind of meates vnto them.

And verily ther by they were done to vnder-

stand, ỳ the thing of it selfe was not euill. Seeing ỳ God gaue them leaue to sel or giue vnto ỳ heathen the flesh of such things as were not ordinarily slaine; thereby they might perceiue how it behoued them to looke yet further. And why so? As touching murther, bicause it is forbidden of it self, if it be not lawfull for me to kill a man, neither is it lawfull for mée to lend a sworde to kill him withall, nor to vse any maner of treacherie. Now then, in things ỳ God condemneth of thémselues, & which are euil of théselues: it is certaine ỳ all men ought not onely to abstaine frō them, but also to beware ỳ he giue not any occasion to my other body to do thē. And so it is to be concluded, ỳ sith the Iewes might without offending God giue or sel the flesh of strangled beasts: God shewed thereby, that ỳ thing of it self was not euil, & that his forbidding of it was but to hold thē vnder awe, & thereby to leade them yet further, intending to make thē vnderstand, ỳ they ought to liue in al maner of purenes, bicause they were a holy people. This is ỳ which we haue to remēber vpon this place. Nowe, whereas he speaketh here of straungers, he meaneth all the heathen which were not of ỳ line of Abraham, as if we in these dayes should speake of ỳ Turks & Sarazins, we might say they haue no fellowship w vs bicause they weare not ỳ badge of Baptisme, and desire ỳ God whom we worship. For Gods lawe speaketh to all men alike, at leastwise the morall lawe as they terme it, that is to say, the lawe ỳ rulth our life: but the lawe ỳ belongeth to ỳ Gospel speaketh to none but to ỳ Church of God. As for example ỳ Turkes and the Sarazins haue not to do with the supper of our Lorde Iesus Christ, neither can they any skill of Baptisme. True it is that they haue washinges, and they wash themselues oft ynough: but al ỳ euer they haue is no better than ỳ holywater of the Papistes. As for ỳ thinges ỳ are peculiar to vs, & which God hath giuen to vs as to his children and housholdfolk, thése belong not to such as are altogether estranged from ỳ Church, & the holy scripture. And therefore let vs marke well, ỳ whereas God doth here giue the heathen leaue to eate al maner of meats: it is bicause he was not so gratious to them, as to giue them the instruction that was peculiar to ỳ children of Abraham, & to the holy lande which he had chosen from ỳ whole world. Nowe notwithstanding all this, if the Iewes had complained ỳ God held them in more subiection than he did the heathen, and ỳ their owne estate was worse than theirs: might we not say ỳ it were too great an vnthankfulnes? If a Iewe should say, How nowe? Seeing ỳ God hath chosen vs for his children, why doth he not giue vs as great liberte at the least, as he hath giuen to those that belong not vnto him? Is it meete ỳ we should be inferiour to them? If a Iew should speake after that maner, we would be his iudges, and euery of vs would say, fie on him wretch, he sheweth himself too vnhoneste & churlish. For seing ỳ god hath chosen them for his people, & instructed them in his pure doctrine: should they finde fault with him for his holding of thé vnder ỳ obedience of his law? But nowe let vs apply this to our selues. For in as much as God hath gathered vs togither into his house, he wil haue vs to walk more carefully and warely, than the sillie ignoraunt soules that are strayed from the way of Saluation. If wee say that that were too rough and seuere a dealing, wee our selues are too vnthankefull. It is said that we must liue as childrē of the light: & no marualle it is though such as haue not learned Gods word do stut and stumble, & go astray; for they be like blinde wretches in the darke. But wee haue Gods worde, which is as a lampe to giue vs lyght, and again we haue beene inlightened by the holy Ghost, so as wee knowe the will of God. And shall wee nowe rinne astray as though wee had neuer knowen any good doctrine? Nowe then whereas God hath tyed vs shorter than he hath tyed the ignorant; if we thereupon wil needes shake off his yoke and fall to checking at him, as though wee had leuer to haue the licentious libertie of the vnbeleeuers, than to bee held vnder the obedience of God our father: we were worthie to bee rooted out of the world. For it were too great a defacing of Gods gracious goodnesse, to doe so, when GOD hath chosen vs to himselfe and giuen vs his badge, as if hee should say, I wil raigne among you, let it appeare that yee haue beene in my schoole, let not my shewing of my selfe to haue beene your father and Sauiour bee in vaine. So then, let vs marke well, that whereas God calleth vs vnto him, it is with this condition, that wee shoulde not liue any more after the manner of the ignorant wretches which woote not howe to order their conuersation: for they doe followe their owne beastly lustes. It is ynough (saieth Saint Peter speaking to the heathen that had beene conuerted to the beleefe of the Gospell,) it is ynough (saith hee) that yee haue done heeretofore, ye haue giuen too much heede to your wicked affections already, see that none of you take such licentious libertie any more, but submit your selues to Gods yoke, and sith it is gods wil to haue the gouernment of you, suffer your selues to be guided by his hand, and obey his worde in all thinges, vtterly forsaking your owne wicked lustes.

Psal. 119. 104. Eph. 1. 17. 18 & 5. 17.

1. Thess. 5. 6

1. Pet. 4. 3.

Nowe then, whereas in these dayes we see the worlde to bee altogether corrupted: let vs not alledge other mens crosse dealinges in defence of our own, neyther let vs make a shield of them to say, why shoulde wee bee held more in awe than other men? Alas, is it to bee marualled at that those shoulde goe astray, which haue no lyght? But seeing that GOD hath sent vs the Sonne of righteousnesse, let vs assure our selues that it will bee no excuse for vs, though the ignoraunt wretches doe goe astray after their owne imaginations. Surely this is yll put in practise. For our whole seeking nowadayes, is nothing else but to heape together all the offences in the worlde, to make a confused hotchpotch of them. If it bee sayde that there bee a nomber of men which are giuen to fraude and guyle, and are full of suttletie and deceite: wee rest vppon that and are contented to counterfet their vices, & to alleage them in sport.

As

As for mens vertues, wee let them alone, and make none accounte of them: but as for their vices, wee make a barre of them against God. O say wee, ye see howe such a man doth so, another doeth after that fashion: this is a common custome euerywhere: and wil ye haue vs to be holyer than al other men? Besides this, it is alledged thus also. What I pray you, doe not the Papistes so before vs? Yes: but the Papistes haue shaken off the yoke of our Lord Iesus Christ, they haue withdrawen themselues from him and from his Church. True it is ỳ they haue baptisme which is ỳ signe of Christianitie: but they haue vtterly abolished the true vse of baptisme, and we see how they haue no skil at al either of God or of his word. As for our part, forasmuch as we haue the Gospel, and that wee are thereby connicted ỳ it is Gods trueth, and we be preferred before those that were at leastwise as good as we in respect of the world, & seeing he hath chosen vs after that fashion, are we not too much to blame, if wee come not to offer our selues wholly vnto him, saying, Lorde gouerne thou vs, and let vs not looke at other mens dooings to bee caryed away by their misexample; but let vs alwayes bee gathered together as it were vnder the shadowe of thy winges? Thus ye see what wee haue to marke vpon this admonition of Moseses, Know ye (saith he) that the Lord your God hath separated you out from all other nations of the earth.

After this, he cometh to the tythes wherof he had spoken afore, & saieth, Ye shall tythe the first of all your fruites which ye shall haue gathered, as well of Corne, Wine, and Oyle, as also of the first borne of all your Cattell. The repetition which our Lord vseth here is not more than needeth. For (as we haue seene heretofore) men are so wedded to their owne profit, ỳ their duetie cannot be had at their handes, but by force, and they must bee faine to haue their eares beaten dayly, or else (if it bee possible) they will doe what they can to exempt themselues from dooing their duetie, specially when it commeth to the Lawe of God and to the things that he requireth at our hand: for we wil be ashamed if wee yeeld not our duetie vnto men. Whē a man hath misbehaued himselfe towards mē; ye shal see him ashamed to lift vp his head. True it is ỳ faults shal not faile to be committed, & that there wilbe a thousand deuises to defraude men by theft, robberie, extortion, and other wicked practises: but yet will men alwayes looke the warelyer to themselues, bicause they be restrained by shame. But as for to Godward, men are quite past shame, and set all at randon as though they would pul out his tongue, or forbid him to speake, when they haue taken from him ỳ which belonged vnto him. And so yee see what is the cause that God hath spoken so oft of tythes which he would haue offered vnto him, & likewise of ỳ first fruits. I haue tolde you already ỳ the tythes were allotted to the Leuites, bicause God reserued them to do him seruice: & it behoued them to liue vpon ỳ Altar, bicause they were dedicated therunto. The same reason is in force at this day towardes vs. Not that we be bound to the same maner of tything that the Ieuites had, furtherforoth than ciuill order requireth: but that wee must alwayes come backe to this saying of Saint Paul, that lyke as the Leuites liued vpon tythes bycause they were dedicated to the seruice of GOD: so nowadayes they that haue the charge of teaching in the Church, ought to be maintained with liuing likewise; & God hath made an euerlasting law thereof. 1. Cor. 9.

But yet moreouer, we haue to note, that the tithes were allotted to the Leuites as in recompence of their inheritance whereof they were deprined. For God had promised the Land of Canaan to all the linage of Abraham, by reason whereof the children of Leuie ought not to haue beene bereft of their portion. Yet notwithstanding, God bereft them of it. And why did he so? To the intent they should not toyle themselues in tilling the ground as other men do, but giue themselues wholly to his seruice as became them. In respect whereof it was good reason that they should bee recompensed after another manner. Truly this matter cannot be discoursed at large as now, and therefore wee will delay the going through with it till to morrowe, taking the breefe summe of it for a conclusion, that the Lordes meaning in this place, was to set downe a Lawe for the maintenance of his seruice. And for that cause it was his minde that the Leuites should haue whereon to liue: for they were the parties that had the charge to maintaine the pure religion: and for that purpose were they dispersed throughout the whole land of Canaan to the end they should keepe the people in the pureneese of Gods seruice, as we see the prophet Malachy speaketh of them, saying ỳ they ought to be expounders of gods law, as at whose mouth men ought to seeke what is good and lawful. The cause then why GOD hath not only set downe this lawe but also repeated it, is for that he will haue his seruice maintained. And howsoeuer men are negligent in yeelding him his due, he hath vouchsafed to repete the law against which he had set downe before; and besides that, his intent was also to put vs in minde to honour him with al the goods which he bestoweth vpon vs in this life. For surely if men eate and drinke without yeelding any honor vnto God, they defile ỳ things which they receiue. For ỳ true meate to sanctify meates, is by faith & praier saith S. Paul. Without faith and prayer, all things become vncleane to vs. And now ye see here how god disposeth men to offer vnto him their first fruites and tenthes. And why is ỳ? Bicause that by ỳ meanes folke were prouoked to say, True it is ỳ the earth bringeth forth her fruites, wee haue a good harueest and vintage, we haue store of Oyle and victelles; & who is he that giueth vs all these things? Hath the earth a soule to determine with it selfe to nourish vs? No, it is God our father that doth it: and therfore it is good reason that wee should haue regard of him, & consider how much we be bound vnto him. Thus ye see how ỳ in the tithes and first fruits, there was a solemne protestation ỳ whatsoeuer we haue we receiue it as gods bil, & therfore we ought to do him homage & feafice therewith. Which thing is then done, when we pray vnto him to bleſſe them all, and when wee ſhew effectually by our almesdeedes and ſuch other like thinges, that we be willing to offer all things vnto him which hee hath put into our handes, and to vſe them in ſuch ſorte, as wee may haue a care to follow meaſure, and to frame our ſelues to the ſobrietie which hee hath commaunded vs.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchſafe to behold vs with pitie, and not to impute vnto vs the great number of offences whereof wee bee guiltie before him, but that it may pleaſe him to rid vs cleane from them, euen by forgiuing them: and moreouer to drawe vs ſo vnto him by his holy ſpirite, as our whole ſeeking may bee to dedicate our ſelues throughly vnto him, continuing throughout in his holy calling, to the end. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almightie God heauenly father &c.

On Thurſday the xxiiij. of October. 1555.

The XCij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the fourteenth Chapter.

24 And if the way be too long, ſo as thou canſt not bring them, becauſe the place which the Lord thy God ſhall haue choſen to ſet his name in, is too far from thee: and that the Lord thy God haue bleſſed thee:

25 Then ſhalt thou make it into monie, and take the monie in thy hande, and repayre to the place which the Lorde thy GOD ſhall haue choſen for himſelfe.

26 And thou ſhalt giue the monie for whatſoeuer thy heart deſireth; whether it be oxen or ſheepe, wine, or ſtraunge drinke, or any other thing which thy heart liketh of. And there feede thou on it in the preſence of the Lord thy God, and bee merie both thou and thy houſeholde.

27 And thou ſhalt not forſake the Leuite that is within thy gates: for he hath no portion nor inheritance with thee.

28 At the three yeres end thou ſhalt gather together all the tythes of thine encreaſe of that yeare, and lay it vp within thy gates.

29 And then the Leuite which hath no part nor inheritance with thee, and likewiſe the ſtraunger, the fatherleſſe, and the widowe which are within thy gates, ſhal come and eate, and be refreſhed, that the Lord thy God may bleſſe thee in all the workes of thy handes which thou doeſt.

Forasmuch as Moſes, in ſpeaking heretofore of firſt fruites and offeringes, and freewill oblations; had commaunded that they ſhould be offered in Ieruſalem, or elſe in the place which God was then to chooſe: now hee addeth, that if a man dwelt too farre off from that place, hee might make money of the thinges that were to bee giuen for an offring vnto God, and after the ſale thereof, buy the like thinges againe, which ſhould be wholy dedicated to God whatſoeuer they were. Now I haue told you already, how it was not for naught that God would haue one certeine place, wherein to offer ſolemne ſacrifices vnto him and to worſhip him: for it ſerued to maintein the vnitie of faith. Inſomuch that if euery trybe, or at leaſtwiſe euery citie had had an Altar by themſelues; it had bin enough to haue made hauock of all, and men could not haue continued in concord and brotherly loue. Therefore it behoued the Temple to bee a meetingplace for Gods people, to the intent they ſhould altogether acknowledge themſelues to be but one bodie, and vnderſtand that they were bound all to one rule, which is the lawe, and all of them obey the ſame, without any diuerſitie of opinions, or ſtraunge maner of dealinges, or ceremonies among them. And in the ſame reſpect alſo were they commanded to offer in the Temple, to the end that euery man ſhoulde not behaue himſelfe after his owne deuotion as they terme it. For when men will needes ſerue God after their owne fancie, there will be nothing but corruption. Wee muſt alwayes beare this ſaying in minde, that obedience is better than all the ſacrifices in the worlde. And therefore they were forbidden to offer ſacrifice in any other place than onely one which was appointed for that purpoſe, to the intent they ſhould not euery man muſe vppon fooliſh ſuperſtitions, but hold themſelues to the order that was ſet down, without attempting any thing raſhly and fondly vppon their owne heades as I ſayd. And this is ſpoken expreſly vnto vs. For although wee haue not the ſelfeſame order of religion which was among the auncient fathers vnder the Law: yet doth this ground ſtand ſtill, that God will not be worshipped after our opinion, but according to his owne will. Therefore let vs bee well ware that we inuent not superstitions (as the Papistes haue done) vppon surmise that they will be accepted of God; for they will doe nothing else but prouoke his wrath, insomuch that when men turne away from Gods trueth, the more they inforce themselues foreward; the further off doe they still stray from it. Will wee then keepe the right way? Gods word must ouermaister vs. And this thing is yet the better confirmed to vs, by Gods reseruing of the place to himselfe wherein he woulde be serued. For he could well haue sayd by Moses; Choose what place you your selues lyke best, and when yee haue so done, God will giue you leaue to come euery man thither, and there to doe him seruice. Al this might wel haue bin sayd. But God sayth, it belongeth to mee to choose, I will not giue the choyce to men. Herein wee see how hee reserueth the right of souereintie to himself, to the end that the faithfull shoulde the better knowe, that it is not for them to enterprise aught at aladuenture, but that it behoueth them to haue warrant from aboue, so as they may say, God accepteth all that euer wee doe; for we doe nothing but what he commaundeth vs, none of vs dealeth vppon his owne head in this behalfe. Wherefore let vs marke well, that God hath here done vs to vnderstand, that he wil not haue his seruice mingled with our inuentions, but that wee should simply followe the thinges that are conteined in his worde. And so yee see that as concerning the thinges which I haue sayd already, God was to bee worshipped solemnly no where else than in the Temple of Ierusalem after it was declared: and that vntill that time, it behoued the Iewes to resorte to the Arke and to the Sanctuarie. But now let vs come backe againe to that which is set downe here in writing.

If the place (sayth Moses) bee too farre from thee, thou shalt sell the thinges which thou wart minded to offer, or the thinges which thou oughtest to offer. For it behoued them to offer the first borne of all their cattell. Nowe they that dwell in the vttermost coastes of Iewry should haue had much ado to driue thither their Lambs, Sheepe, Goates, and Calues. Therefore they were to be borne withall: and God being no oppresser of his people, giueth them here a remedie, to the intent they should not be greeued too much. As for those that dwell neere to Ierusalem sayth hee, let them bring thither as wel the first borne of their cattell, as also all their freewill offerings, and whatsoeuer other thinges they haue dedicated vnto God. For otherwise the Citie of Ierusalem might bee famished. If all that had come thither should haue bought their sacrifices there: what a thing had that bin? Therefore it was Gods will that men should bring thē thither from al the countries, vnlesse the places were ouerfarre off. And in that case hee saith it should bee Lawful for them to sell the thinges that they had dedicated, namely such as were due by commaundement of the Lawe: as the first borne thinges, in remembraunce that God had smitten the firstborne of Egypt, and spared the firstborne of Israell, whereof he would haue the memoriall to continue for euer. Then shalt fold it (sayth he,) & put vp the mony, or folde it vp (for so doth the word signify which he vseth.) Folde vp the mony in thy hand (sayth he) that is to say, consider with your selues that that mony is none of your owne, but that it must bee put vp alone by it selfe as a holy thing. And when thou commest to Ierusalem, thou shalt buy thine offrings after thine owne lyking, and after that the same hath bin offered in the Temple, the Priestes shall take their dues therof, & then shall you eat and drink before the Lord as soone as you haue made your oblation therof, and you shall be merry in eating of your sacrifices, as farre as euery mans portion will extend. That is the thing in effect which wee haue to remember in this text.

And here wee see (as I haue sayd afore,) that although God held his people vnder very straite bondage, yet notwithstanding hee layde no more vppon them than they were able to beare, but so mitigated the rigor of the Lawe, as no man could say it was vnpossible to doe the thinges that hee had inioyned. Sith wee see it is so; Let vs assure our selues, that if our good GOD doe in these dayes lay any burden vppon our shoulders, that may bee too heauie for vs; hee doth also giue vs abilitie to beare it, so as wee bee not borne downe by it, at leastwise if wee commit our selues to him; so as we haue no cause to complayn of him as though he did vtterly ouerwhelme vs. True it is, that the righteousnesse which God requireth of vs in his Lawe, dooth farre surmount all our ability, yea and we come so farre shorte of the performing of all that hee hath commaunded vs, so as wee bee not able to stirre one finger wardes it; nay, wee cannot so much as thinke one good thought towardes it: GOD must be faine to giue vs euerywhit. But when he assisteth vs with his holy spirit, then wee finde his yoke sweete and easie, specially, when hee layes it vppon our neckes by the hand of our Lord Iesus Christ. And that is the cause why Iesus Christ protesteth that his burthen is not so heauie, nor his yoke too hard. But how commeth that to passe? It is because God giueth vs both the will to serue him, and also the abilitie to put the same in execution. And therewithall hee addeth a second grace, which is that hee beareth with vs when wee haue done amisse. For wee of our selues are ouerfoule, wee cannot throughly performe the things that hee commaundeth vs, & therefore he pardoneth our infirmities & forgetteth them. But howsoeuer the case stand, yet haue wee good cause to serue him freely & with a franke hart, forasmuchas we see that hee on his side deferreth no more but to guide vs as the father doth his children, as hee auoweth by his Prophet Hosheah.

But now let vs marke, that whereas Moses sayth, Let them buy whatsoeuer they haue a mind vnto: his meaning therein is not to giue men leaue

to play the gluttons at their pleasure, as though there were no measure nor modestie to bee obserued. A certeine sect of Heretikes called the Manichees, which skorned Gods Law & the Prophets, alledged this present text & such other like, to shew that the God of the olde testament as they blasphemously termed him, was a God of disorder, and such a one as kept no good rule. For why, sayd they; hee layd the bridle vpon his peoples necke, and bad them eate whatsoeuer they lyked, and so his meaning was to make them drunkardes and gluttons, by incouraging them to eate and drinke after that fashion. But the true God (sayd they) will haue folke to bee sober, whereby a man may see that the Lawe was not giuen from heauen. But we see how this text was corrupted by their malice, yea euen by their shamefull malice, in blaspheming without any colour of truth, seeing that the lustes of men were restreined afore by the same Lawe. I tolde you yesterday how it was Gods will to bridle his people, by restreining thē from the eating of all sortes of meates without exception, wherein hee meant to haue a tryall of their sobrietie. Sith it is so: it is a foule shame to alledge this text as a placarde for the setting of all lustes at libertie. The worde Lyking, Longing, or Listing, ought rather to bee restreyned to the thinges that were Lawfull, and which God had giuen them leaue to deale with. As if it had bin sayd, Those that haue a minde to eate of any kinde of meate which is Lawfull for them to eate, let them buy it and make an offering thereof vnto God. And when the Priestes haue taken their rightes thereof, let them eate the residue themselues.

So then let vs marke that here are two things conteined. The one is, that our Lorde sheweth himselfe liberall towardes his people in that hee sayth, Go too, although I coulde withhold my blessing from you; yet notwithstanding I giue you leaue to make your owne choyce of your meate and drinke, howebeit with this exception, that yee take heede that you touch not any meate that is not pure and cleane to you: for it behooueth you to be exercised for a time in the indeuour of dedicating your selues vnto me, that yee bee not tangled in the defilementes of the infidels. Therefore let that protestation stand for euer, so as yee alwayes take good heede to vse your libertie in such sorte, as yee may haue no cause to blame mee as though I helde you too streit. For I leaue you to your owne likinges, so they be well ruled. Now then let vs vnderstande, that heere our Lorde beareth with vs, in that hee vouchsafeth to giue vs the vse of his creatures, not onely for our needs without other desire to them, but also euen for our pleasure: and yet notwithstanding, that wee must alwayes take good heede, that our mirth be not excessiue, but rather well moderated. And for that cause is it sayd, Thou shalt eate there in the presence of thy God, which saying hath bin set downe already heretofore. Nevertheless it is not for naught that Moses repeateth it here againe. For wee see how men are wedded to their owne sensualitie, and how they forget themselues in their eating and drinking, so that it is very hard to keepe such measure as God bee not offended, yea euen ere wee thinke of it. I say that euen such as are not giuen to gluttonie and drunkennesse, and which haue a care not onely to the health of their bodies, but also the sober vsing of the things which God giueth them for their repaste; euen they (I say) faile not to commit some fault or other. So then, let vs beare well in minde what is sayd here, where God commaundeth men to eate and drinke in his presence, specially at their solemne feastes when they came to Ierusalem: namely how that thereby he did warne all the faithfull to haue an eye to him in their eating and drinking when they were at home in their owne houses.

Therefore when men sit downe to the table, they must in any wise beware that they take not their repaste without minding of God. For why? First it is a defiling of all our meates and drinkes when wee begin not at the calling vppon his name. Of whom shall we receiue our foode, if we seeke it not at Gods hand? Then must wee beginne at prayer and that is as it were a dedication, to the ende that our meates may become cleane and holy vnto vs, as Saint Paul speaketh of them. But yet besides this, we must come againe to the thing that is sayd here; namely that we must come eate as in the presence of our God. Were it wel printed in our mindes that our God is present at the table w vs surely wee would vse another maner of modestie than wee doe. And out of doubt, the putting of this lesson in vre, that God is among vs, is a true proofe of our Christianitie. But it is a wonder to see what an insensibleneese there is in these dayes among Christians. For it was Gods wil that euen among the Infidels there should remaine stil some confused tokens of that which is sayd here. Because the heathen were of opinion that their Gods were alwayes attendant at their meales; they termed their Tables holy. And why so? It is certeine that they vnderstoode not the reason of it: for al things were become vnholy among them, by their misusing of all thinges against their kinde. Yet notwithstanding, God to make them vnexcusable, did leaue this marke still among them, as if he should say, whensoeuer men doe eate and drinke, I am present at it, so as all things done there must needes come to account before me. Now then, if wee knowe lesse hereof than those blind wretches, what a thing is it? So much y more therfore ought we to marke wel this lesson, where God commaundeth the people of olde time to eate and drinke in his presence, to the intent that the same might holde them in awe, and make them to consider that whensoeuer they did eate or drinke, God gouerned them and beheld their doinges. And now although we haue not the ceremonie that was vnder the law; yet let the trueth thereof haue his force among vs: which is that we neuer come to the table, without considering that God is present there, and that as he vouchsafeth to haue a care to feed vs, so wil he also haue vs to take our foode with al reuerence & honest behauiour, like as if a childe be at the table with his father, and his father sitting at the vpper end doe looke vpon him, surely he wil not vse such boldnesse as if hee were in a corner by himselfe. For there perchaunce hee would play the wag, and throwe his trēchor vnder foote, and play other wanton prankes: but if hee bee at his fathers table, either hee must behaue himselfe soberly, or else be rebuked for his labor. Let euery man bethinke him of this, and let it be a meane to holde vs in such awe, as the meates which God giueth vs may haue their pure and lawfull vse. That is the thing which we haue in effect to remember vppon this text.

And now he speaketh lykewise of mens housholdefolke, shewing that if we intend to be merry before God, we must also haue a care to instruct those that are committed to our charge. Marke that for one point. It is not enough for a man to liue in the feare of God himselfe; but the father that hath children, and the maister that hath menseruantes and maideseruantes must leade them with him, and there must be one consent in euery household, so as both great and smal doe serue God. For it is an vntollerable leawdnesse, when a man letteth his household play the beasts, so as God is not knowen among them. And what a thing is it that men should looke to be serued of their folke, & in the meane while forget God? There is none of vs all but hee will looke to bee knowen for maister in his owne house: & in the meane while what a pride is it ỹ God should bee thrust out of doores? What a thing is it, that we which are but wretched earthwormes shoulde looke to haue our dueties yeelded to vs, and that God should be defrauded of his? That is ỹ cause why it is sayd expresly, that men shoulde make merry with their housholdes before God.

Neuertheless, hereby God meant also to inure his people to humanitie. For we see a number of men that can finde in their hartes to cram themselues til they burst, & in the meane while passe not though others starue: & it shold seeme ỹ a whole world were little enough to finde one of them. But our Lordes will is that there should be courtisie among men, that whē the maisters haue suffised themselues with meate and drinke, they shold not be nigardly in giuing foode & sustenāce to such as take peins in their seruice, but haue a care of thē. That is a second thing which our lord ment in this text. But now let vs pas on.

After ỹ Moses hath spoken of firstfruites and offeringes, he returneth againe to Tythes, and treateth more fully of them. Thou shalt not forget the Leuite (saith he) which is within thy gates. Euery third yeere shalt thou lay aside the tenth of al thy fruites, and the Leuites shall come and gather them, and lykewise the widowes, the fatherlesse, and the strangers, that thy God may blesse thee in all the workes of thy handes. Yesterday I began to tell you that in old time ỹ Tythes were appointed to the Leuites, because they serued at ỹ altar: & that God would not haue thē occupied about any such labor, as might hinder them either from teaching ỹ law, or frō doing of sacrifice & such other like things. For inasmuch as God had reserued thē to ỹ purpose, his wil was ỹ they should giue themselues wholy thereunto. That was ỹ cause why he exempted them from tilling of ỹ ground, and from such other labors. Besides this, there was also an other reason, which was, ỹ they should haue had a portion in ỹ land which was promised to the lynage of Abraham, for there was a whole tribe of them: but God had excluded them frō it, & put in two tribes in stead of ỹ one, so as Ephraim and Manasses the sonnes of Ioseph made two heads. And so were there twelue portions of ỹ Land. But yet in stead of the Leuites ye see ỹ Ephraim succeeded: for Manasses was ỹ firstborne of Ioseph, & yet was he put after his brother & set in the second place, & made inferior to him. And so were ỹ Leuites excluded. But yet behoueth them to haue their right. And therefore God recompenced them, & lyke as if a man should giue his childe a recompence some other way when he would not haue him to come to ỹ parting of ỹ inheritance ẅ his brethren, euen so stoode the case ẅ the Leuits. Those were ỹ two chiefe reasons for ỹ tythes. Neuertheless it was Gods will ỹ the ouerplus should be deuided among ỹ poore & needie. For ỹ Leuites had not so large a portion giuen thē to make them gluttons & to enrich thē aboue other men: but to ỹ ende they should be as deacons to haue a care of Gods poore folk, and to distribute his almes to his people. Now we see what was the cause of the tithes.

But it is cleane cōtrariwise in the Popedome, where it is sayd that by Gods Lawe the tythes are due to the Priestes. Although (say I) that their Priestes were such as they ought to be, & as they were not the priests of Moloch and of other idols, but that they serued God purely: yet were it a grosse ignorance to imagin that tithes were an euerlasting order set downe for all nations to obserue. Againe it was a flat fond, in that the Priestes being ouerruled by couetousnesse, did beare men in hand that the tythes belonged to them by Gods lawe. For the contrarie is well knowen. And their chalenging of that, was at such time as the whole world was corrupted, and men were vtterly ignorant of the meaning of the holy scripture. For since the time that Christianitie hath begunne to florish, and that there hath bin greater soundnesse of iudgement than was before, it hath neuer bin said that Tythes are due to the Shepheardes, nor to those which haue the spirituall gouernmēt of ỹ Church: but it hath bin alwayes orderly obserued, that Princes & Lords haue taken the Tenthes: yea & in some places and countries which are lesse fruitful, they haue taken the Thirtithes or at leastwise but ỹ Twentieth: whereas in other places where the landes are more fruitfull, & where there is greater abundance thā is ordinarily in other countries, they haue taken the tenthes. Hereupon the priestes and Cleargymen of ỹ Popedome, haue taken occasion to finger all things, & to vsurp vppon all mē most wickedly. For they haue thundered out their excōmunicatiōs against such as would not graūt thē their robberie, so as mē were driue to let them them haue their owne willes. And then fell they together by the eares among themselues lyke a sorte of curredogges about a bone. The Monkes sayd, they bee ours: the Prieſtes sayd they were theirs: and to bee ſhorte, there was nothing but vtter diſorder among them.

Yet notwithſtanding, wee muſt returne againe to that which was touched yeſterday, and which I am about to rehearſe againe now preſently: which is, that inaſmuch as the ſacrificing Prieſtes were found at the common charges of the people, in the time of the olde Lawe, it is good reaſon that the preachers of the Goſpell ſhoulde bee mainteined lykewiſe at this day, as Saint Paul ſpeaketh thereof, howbeit Chap. 14.
not for his owne aduauntage ſake, but to the intent there ſhould not bee ſo great vnthankfulneſſe among thoſe which name theſelues Chriſtians, as to defraud thoſe of their bodily liuing, which preach to them the word of lyfe, & bring them the ſpirituall foode of their ſoules. The thing it ſelfe then remaineth ſtill: but that it ſhould be taken vp in this kinde or in that kinde, that is not ſo: it is not ſo ſayd by Gods Lawe, and therefore what ſhall become of Tythes? Let the poſſeſſion continue ſtill, and let the vſe of them be amended. That is to ſay, becauſe mē ſee euidently that Tythes haue bin wrongfully vſurped, and that the parties which holde them in their handes haue wreſted them by ſuperſtition: let vs now conſider the right vſe of them. And to ſay the trueth, looke how many Prieſtes there are in the Popedome, ſo many theeues are there. I ſay not this according to the holy ſcripture, but according to their own Canons, wherby they bee all excommunicated for theeues & robbers. For their Canons commaund them to put their Church goods in ſuch ſorte, as the poore haue one fourth parte of them, and ſtraungers another fourth part. To be ſhort, the one halfe of the Church goods ought to be beſtowed in almes vppon the poore and vpon ſtraungers. Who ſayes this? Not Gods word, (for the Papiſts make none account of that) but their owne Canons haue ſo decreed. Ye ſee then how al the Byſhops, Chanons, Pryors, and Abbots in the Popedome are excommunicated euerychone from the higheſt to the loweſt, euen by their owne Canons: ſo as there is euery where moſt horrible confuſion among them, I meane euen according to their owne orders. But it is not enough for vs to condemne them: wee muſt alſo haue an eye to our ſelues, and ſee that the right vſe of the thinges which haue bin dedicated to God, bee ſet vp againe: And that where any abuſe hath beene, the ſame bee redreſſed. And how may that bee? Wee ſee it was Gods will that the poore ſhould bee found and maintened by a part of the tythes, that is to ſay of the offeringes which were made in thoſe dayes. After the ſame maner muſt wee come to the vſe of Gods Lawe at this day: and foraſmuch as Tenthes or Twentithes were left euen in old time to Princes and chiefe Lordes, and that the ſame order was ſet downe for the benefite of the Church: Let vs conſider how it may bee imployed to the benefite of the Church at this day. It is not meant that ſuch as beare the name of Prelates and Paſtors ſhoulde glutte themſelues with them: nor that when they haue ſotted themſelues in their pleaſures and delights and ſpent more than needeth in prodigalitie and ydle expenſes, they ſhoulde haue wherewith to maintaine whoredome and other ſtumblingblockes, as wee ſee that the Churchgoods are commonly waſted in ſuch thinges. For we knowe that ſuch doings are againſt the order of nature, and therefore can in no wiſe be iuſtified by Gods word. What is to be done then? Let the poſſeſſion remaine quietly, and in the meane while let men returne them to their right vſe. Let thē be mainteined whome God hath commaunded to be maintayned. And let the thinges be continued which are requiſite for the well ordering of the Church. Moreouer, Let the poore and needy be pityed; Let men knowe them to be the takers vp of Gods rents; and that it is an acceptable kinde of ſacrifice vnto him when ſuch are releeued as ought to be ſuccored. After that maner wee may iuſtly condemne the Papiſtes at this day, yea and take them for Churchrobbers and theeues, by reaſon of their wrongfull chalendging of the thinges to themſelues which belong not to thē. And wee on our ſide ſhall not bee condemned for the lyke, if wee runne backe to Gods will, and diſpoſe the Church goods in ſuch wiſe, as the poore bee not defrauded of them, but that ſuch almesdeedes be done with them, as the neceſſitie of thoſe bee releeued whome God commaundeth vs to ſuccour, and whom he offereth vs as in his owne ſtead, according to this ſaying of his, that looke whatſoeuer wee doe to the poore, hee taketh it as done to himſelfe. Heb. 13. 16
Sith it is ſo, let vs folow that rule. For we ſee how this leſſon is greatly for our behoof nowadayes, and how we may put the ſame in vre. Matt. 6. 4 & 25. 40.

Let vs marke well then, that it is not onely ſayd ỹ the Leuites ſhal come and gather vp their right; but alſo it is added, ỹ the widowes, the fatherleſſe & the ſtrangers ſhalbe ſuſteined lykewiſe. Yea verily: Albeit that the ſtrangers were not ſome times of the body of ỹ Iſraelites, nor of their religion: yet was it Gods will ỹ they ſhould be pityed. Not to nouriſh any filth & vncleanes thereby; (for if folke might haue reſorted thither from all nations, and haue dwelled there, it had bin the next way to haue turned the people away vnto wickedneſſe:) but it ſerued for trauellers, & for ſuch as had intercourſe of marchandiſe with them, whome Gods will was to haue ſuccored when they fel into any aduerſitie. Now ſeeing that the Iſraelites were to releeue thoſe that were not ſo neere neighbors vnto them: what ought wee to doe to our brethren, and to ſuch as are all of one ſelfeſame faith and Religion with vs? If we ſhake thē off & ſuffer them to pine away for pouertie, how greatly ſhall wee bee to blame, ſeeing that God cōmendeth vnto vs ỹ poore ſtrangers, yea euē which haue no acquaintance w̄ vs in the ſeruing of the true God?

But howſoeuer ỹ caſe ſtand, let vs remember in generall, that of the goods which were consecrated in those dayes vnto God, part was to be imployed not onely vppon the Priestes and Leuites, but also vpon the relieſe of the poore, so as it behoued them to haue a part with the priestes so farre foorth as the tenthes woulde yeelde. What is to be done then nowadays? Forasmuch as the Ceremonie of bringing of our Freewill offeringes to a place chosen for that purpose is done away, if wee intend to offer such sacrifices as may bee acceptable to GOD, euery of vs must doe almesdeedes according to his abilitie, and thinke thus with himselfe: Go too, my God hath giuen mee chaunge of meates, I eate one kinde of porredge to day and another kinde to morrowe, and yet might I content my selfe all my lyfe long with bread and water. But God of his bounteousneſſe giueth mee moreouer what meates soeuer I lyke of beſt, yea and chaunge of them also, so as if I bee weary of one meate, I may take another according to my abilitie. Seeing then that he dealeth so with me, what an vnthankfulneſſe is it for mee to deſpiſe him that sheweth himselfe so liberall towardes mee? True it is that our so doing is neither here nor there (as they say,) in reſpect of God: the seruice that wee doe him doth neither amend him nor appaire him: but he giueth vs the poore among vs, to bee succored at our handes, to the ende that none of vs should so glutte himselfe by cramming his owne bellie, as to deſpiſe others that are in neceſſitie, but that wee shoulde bee well aduiſed to make an offering vnto God of the thinges that he hath put into our handes, and that the same might become holy by that meanes. Not that wee should pay it as a raunsome to God: but that the acknowledgement which we make vnto him in hauing compaſſion vppon our poore needy brethren, is as though our Lord should allow of our eating and drinking, saying thus: Now is all lawfull for you, I lyke well of it, I giue it vnto you; and that is because yee honor mee in dooing almesdeedes to such as are in pouertie. Thus yee see what euery man hath to beare in minde as in his owne peculyar and priuate behalfe.

Iob. 35.6. Pſal. 16.2.

Howbeit, for common orders sake, because there are reuenewes appointed to the Church, as I haue touched afore: let vs beware that they bee not abuſed by beeing deuowred I wote not how, or that they be not miſſpent about worldly matters. For men are alwayes giuen to cantle out the poore folkes morſels as short as can be, and it ſeemeth to them that whatſoeuer is beſtowed in hoſpitalitie, is loſt. O (say they) we must locke vp, wee muſt ſpare, wee muſt play the good husbandes: but curſed bee that good husbandrie which regardeth not the welbeſtowing of a mans goods. Therefore let vs haue an eye to the diſpoſing of the thinges which GOD offereth vnto vs, and whereas there haue bin abuſe and ſuperſtition, let vs vnderſtand that all ought to bee brought backe again to their right vſe: and that although the ceremonies continue not ſtill; yet notwithſtanding GOD will not bee mocked: but that this principle muſt alwayes ſtand in force, namely that whatſoeuer hath bin dedicated to GOD, muſt bee diſtributed accordingly. Now there was also a tything of the tythes, whereof I cannot but say some what. For after that the generall tythes were taken vp, the high priestes tooke their tenthes thereof, and afterward layd out a tenth part for the poore. Forasmuch as this third tything was not intended by God, but proceeded of the couetouſneſſe of the Leuites who could haue found in their hearts to haue raked all to themselues: it was meete that they shoulde bee reſtreined. And after the same maner, the Popes Canons that I ſpake of, were made of purpoſe because men ſawe the Church goods deuowred by the Prieſtes, by reaſon whereof it behooued them to bee bridled. The tythes therefore were parted in ſuch ſorte, as the poore might haue their portion, and not be defrauded of the right that was aſſigned vnto them. But (as I ſayd) wee neede not as now to ſtand ſifting of theſe thinges by perceiuing it is enough for vs that wee haue the meaning of the Lawe, and that wee knowe wherein the abuſe reſted, to the ende wee may retaine the right vſe of them ſtill.

Now it is ſayd conſequently, That the Lord may bleſſe thee in all the workes of thy hands. In this text wee haue two thinges to marke. The one is that all our labour would bee vaine purpoſe, if God of his meere grace did not prosper it. Let that ſerue for one poyne. Another is, that if wee will haue God to further vs, we muſt honor him with the goods which he giueth vs, by vſing them in ſuch wiſe as he commaundeth vs. For if hee be defrauded of his right, hee can ſoone bereaue vs of his bleſſing ſo as wee ſhall bee diſpurueied and ſtripe out of all thinges, and when wee thinke our ſelues to haue abundance of all thinges at will, hee will make it to vaniſh away to leſſe than nothing. Thoſe bee the two thinges which wee haue to beare in minde. As touching the firſt, let vs beare in minde that men are commanded to trauell for their liuing, and that ſuch as doe take paynes ſhall be maintained by their labor. But yet muſt not men ſay, It is mine owne policie, it is the labor of mine owne handes that hath gotten me this or that, as wee haue ſeene in the eight chapter, where God fed his people ſome yeeres with Manna, to make them to know that when they were come into the land of Chanaan, albeit that they tilled the ground, gathered the grapes, and reaped downe the corne, yet they ſhould not imagin that their liuing proceeded from elſewhere than from Gods meere goodneſſe who bleſſed them. And that is the cauſe why it is ſayd in the pſalme, that wee may well riſe early and goe to bed late, and eate our bread with ſorow; & yet notwithſtanding all ſhall goe to decay, and God ſhall holde vs vnder foot, vntill wee be ſure of his bleſſing.

True it is that God doth oftentimes multiply the goods of the wicked, & of ſuch as liue altogether by extortiõ, deceit & theeuery: but ſuch kinde of men may well intich themſelues and God beareth with such thinges to blinde their eyes the more with their riches, that they may bee as a poyson to them, and as a baite to choke them withall. For inasmuch as they imagine that they can inrich themselues whether God will or no: he letteth them doe so, yea and he giueth them riches as if hee shoulde say, Gather till yee burst: yet shall it not turne to your sustenance, but it shalbe as a poyson to kill you, as I said afore. For when men inrich themselues after that fashion by wicked practises, wee see what comes of it in the ende. Gods wrath lighteth vppon them, and they be tormented all their life long: and when they looke to inioy the goods that they haue gathered together, Gods curse doth so vtter it selfe vpon them, that they cannot do themselues any good with them: insomuch that although they haue their garners & storehouses full fraught, and their bagges full of money; yet doth God sende them diseases or such other afflictions, by which he holdeth them as it were vpon ỹ torture or racke; as if he should say: What hast thou done thou wretched creature? Thou hast offended mee all the time of thy life, and yet hast thou borne thy selfe in hande that all shoulde goe well with thee if thou mightest heape vp riches ynowe. But thou must now be made to knowe, that all thy raking vp of the riches which thou canst not inioy, will stand thee in no steede. Thus yee see what reward they haue which will needes inrich themselues as it were in despite of God: insomuch that all their heapings to themselues on all hands by vnlawfull meanes, are but as cordes to snare their children withall, as experience sheweth. And therefore let vs be throughly perswaded in our selues, that if we will prosper, the onely blessing of God must suffice vs though wee haue not all things at all. When we haue taken neuer so much paines, yet must we not trust in the strength of our owne hands, nor bee so blinded with fonde presumption as to say, I am an able man, I am politike & can take paines. But let euerie man referre himselfe to God, knowing that it is he which giueth him sustenance. And although I take neuer so much paines to get my liuing: yet must I haue it at his hand, and when I haue asked my ordinarie breade to day, I must doe the like to morrow too, and yeeld my selfe to the wil of him that giueth it mee. Thus much concerning the first point, where mentiō is made of Gods blessing of the workes of mens hands. And therewithall let vs call to minde what hath beene declared thereof more at large heretofore, where our Lorde willeth men to consider how it is onely hee that beareth the sway in making our labours to prosper. Let that serue for one point.

And nowe let vs come to the seconde point which is, that if wee desire to bee partakers of Gods blessing, we must first yeeld him his right: for if he be defrauded of it, he wil reuenge it vpon vs. And that is the cause why hee saith by his Prophet, Do ye complaine that ye be afflicted? Consider the cause, saith hee. Yee haue defrauded mee. Whereof? Of my Tythes, Firstfruites, and all other thinges. Yee beare your selues in hande that yee increase your selues greatly by robbing of mee, and that ye gaine much by defrauding mee of my right. The people of Israel were so witlesse, that they stole the tythes; or if they tythed, they did it but by halues: and likewise of their firstfruits, in steede of making good fulsome sheaues and bundels vnto God, they gelded them and made them verie thinne and lanke: and yet these miserable wretches bare themselues in hande that they benefited themselues greatly by laying vp some little quantitie more than they ought to haue done. Contrariwise our Lorde saieth vnto them: Goe to sirs, shoulde yee haue either tithes, or firstfruites, or any croppe at all, but by my blessing? And think ye that your filching away of any of ỹ things that belong to me, shall boote you? No no: ye must needes be wasted and dye for hunger by reason of your vnthankfulnesse. Therefore let vs learne to yeelde God the things which he reserueth to himselfe: and then will hee blesse vs. As howe? When we beg to be sustained, the firstfruits that God requireth of vs, are that we should waite vpon him, and sue to his meere gracious goodnesse for all thinges requisite to the maintenance of this slightfull life. And afterward when he hath giuen vs whereon to liue, we must vse the same soberly, that our life being ruled after that fashion, may be as another sacrifice to him, and consequently that we giue our neighbours part with vs. Let such as haue wherewith imparte to the poore that want: and let euerie man beware that he filch away none other mens goods, and let vs bee contented with our competent foode and raiment as God listeth to bestowe vpō vs: and in so doing we shalbe blessed at his hand. But what? Our distrustfulnesse, our excesse, and our vnsatiable lusts cause God to withdrawe his blessing from vs, and that we are, as it were dried vp. Also it is seene that in steade of going forwarde we goe backeward: and what doe wee thereupon? Such as haue plentie can no skil to vse it according to Gods ordinance, and to bee thankfull to him for the abundance which hee sendeth them, but they woulde still haue more & more. O say they, this is not ynough for me, & though it be ynough for me, yet it is not inough for my children. And so wee fall to gathering of more & more. But to consider how we come by it, and whether it bee lawfull before God or no, we neuer hearken after it: we goe to it by hooke and by crooke, and wee neuer thinke that wee shall come to a reckening for it before God. To this point (I say) are we come nowadayes. And therefore it is no wonder though wee feele no blessing of God, but that wee bee faine to be set besides it. Againe we may see hereby how colde and faint our prayers are: for our asking of our daily breade at Gods hand is but from the teeth outwarde: and therefore it is good reason that wee shoulde receiue as skant and slender frute as appeareth that we do. Wherfore let vs mark, that if wee intende to feele Gods blessing, and that hee should continue the same towardes vs: wee must offer vp our selues in sacrifice, and all that euer hee giueth vs, so as all may be wholly dedicated vnto him. And when wee see the vse that he alloweth of, let euery of vs behaue himselfe thereafter, that God may be glorified by vs as his intent is to be.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to graunt vs the grace to come to him with humilitie, sorie for prouoking him so many wayes as wee doe without ceasing: and to vouchsafe so to burie our offences, as wee preace into the presence of his maiestie by meanes of our Lorde Iesus Christ, to bee guided by his holy spirit, and to be confirmed more and more in this; that hee holdeth and auoweth vs for his children. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth &c.

On Fryday the xxv. of October. 1555.

The XCiij. Sermon which is the first vpon the fifteenth Chapter.

AT the terme of seuen yeares thou shalt make a yeare of Freedome.
2 And the maner of the freedome shal be after this sort. Euerie creditour shall release the debt of his hande which he hath lent vnto his neighbour, and he shall not constreine his neighbour nor his brother: for it is called the yeare of the Lords release.
3 Thou maist compell a straunger, but as for thy brother, forgiue him.
4 In any wise let there bee no poore bodie among you: for the Lorde will blesse thee in the Lande which the Lorde thy God giueth thee for an heritage to possesse,
5 Yea if thou obey the voice of the Lord thy God in keeping and performing all his commaundements which I commaunde thee this day.
6 For the Lord thy God will blesse thee, as he hath promised, so as thou shalt lende vnto manie folke, and not borrow of any. Thou shalt reigne ouer many Nations, and they shall not reigne ouer thee.

WE haue here a Lawe for the releasing of such as were indetted. Now wee knowe that GOD gouerned ỹ Iewes according to their owne rudenes, insomuch that he graunted them a tolleration in many thinges because they were a people harde to bee ruled. Yet notwithstanding hee ceased not by all manner of meanes to allure them to gentlenesse, to the ende that no man shoulde greeue his neighbour beyonde measure, nor vse too extreme rigour, nor deale cruelly one with another. That is the marke which the Lawe shooteth at which I haue read heere presently, so as yee must vnderstande that it was not Lawfull for them to presse any man with his debts in the seuenth yeare. And it hath beene thought that in this place Moses commaunded the cleere forgiuing of all debtes the seuenth yeare. But in that supposall is no reason at all. For if debtes had beene quite and cleane released: what more reason had it beene that such persons as had yeelded themselues into bondage for the discharge of their debtes, shoulde haue beene released: for we knowe that the freedome of mens persons is much more acceptable, than the releasing of a debte of money. Shall a poore man bee holde as a slaue and make it good with his bodie because hee hath not wherewith to paye that hee oweth: and shall hee bee released which keepeth the money still in his purse, or else vseth some odde by shift, so as hee abydeth freely at home in his owne house? That were no vpright dealing. But the case stoode so among the Iewes, that such as yeelded themselues into bondage for the discharge of their debtes, were not set at libertie againe till the yeare of Iubile which was the fiftith yeare. Therefore it followeth that here is not meant the cleare release of all debtes. For that had beene the way to haue procured more disorder, rather than to haue set downe a rule of courtisie and gentlenesse. For no man woulde euer haue lent any mony the sixth yeare. Againe, men would haue haue beene the more hastie in calling for their debtes, so as their detters shoulde haue beene much lesse priuiledged than if there had beene no release at all. Also there are other reasons which are verie sufficient; insomuch that euery man shoulde haue beene driuen to sell his owne house and lande. To bee short, it is not to be doubted but that Gods intent here, was to commaunde no more but that the seuenth yeare shoulde be priuiledged. And hereby it appeareth that such as haue interpreted the seuenth yeares remission to be the seuenth yeares ende, haue beene too grosly ouerseene. For the making of this law was in respect that the seuenth yeare shoulde be a yeare of solemne rest. Like as God had reserued one day in euerie weeke to bee holy to himselfe: so also was it his will that euery seuenth yeare shoulde be a high solemnitie, so as the grounde shoulde not bee tilled that yeare. The Lande of Iurie was barling ynough to haue borne all yeares, that is to say, men might haue tilled and sowed the grounde euerie yeare saue the seuenth yeare. And that yeare was spared, not for feare least men shoulde haue worne away the heart of the soyle too neere: but to the ende that the people shoulde inure themselues continually to the day of rest, because it conteyned the chiefe point of the Law, that is to wit, that men ought to gather their wittes to them, to giue themselues wholly to the minding of Gods benefites, whereby it is shewed them that they shoulde renounce themselues, and referre themselues wholly to his holy spirite, to bee so gouerned by him, as that their affections and thoughtes may no more ouermaster them. And indeede, because the Iewes did breake the day of rest, and the Propheres coulde not winne them to yeelde to that which was commaunded them: our Lorde saith that hee woulde punish them in such sorte, that if they woulde not, the Lande should take rest by them. Forasmuch as you (saieth he) will not keepe the Saboth dayes accordingly as I haue ordeyned in my Lawe: I will shortly finde out one that shall obserue my Lawe, and that shall be the Lande it selfe. For ye shalbe driuen out of it, and none shall be left in it to manure it; all the Sabothes that haue beene broken must be put into a reckening, that they may bee recompensed againe. Threescore and tenne yeares was the people banished out of it. And looke how many commaundementes there are, so many tornes were there continually of the solemne restingtimes. What restingtimes? Not euerie seuenth day, or euery seuenth yeare onely: but for the space of seuentie yeares together was the Lande to take rest. Yee see then that this seuenth yeare was a confirmation of the fourth commaundement of the lawe, that is to wit, of keeping holy the seuenth day. For in that yeare (as I said) men tilled not the ground. And why? To the ende that folke shoulde haue the better leasure to giue themselues to the seruice of God, and be not so much letted by their businesse, as indeed they had the more libertie to studie this lesson, and to bee well instructed in the doctrine of God. And for the same cause also was it commaunded, that the booke of the Lawe shoulde bee read openly euerie seuenth yeare at the feast of Tabernacles, as wee shall see hereafter in the one and thirtith Chapter.

Nowe that we haue Gods meaning, which is that his ordeining of the seuenth yeare was to the end that the people should haue some easement: let vs assure our selues that the saboth day was not inioyned without cause. Not onely to giue men to vnderstand that our Lorde had forbidden that any man should be sued for his dets that yeare (for that was likewise done euerie weeke): but also to know the thing which we see obiected in the eight and fiftith of Esay; against such as through hypocrisie obserued the feaste, but yet ceased not any whit the more to sue for their dettes. Verily I am much beholden to you, saith the Lorde: for yee say yee haue fasted, and obserued my Ceremonies. But yet is all that euer yee haue done, nothing worth: for the verie substance of it wanteth; whereas yee should be pitifull to your neighbours, yee do nothing else but fleece them and persecute them to the vttermost. And surely that is a goodly obseruing of the Saboth. Therfore dot I renounce you, and I disauow all your doings, saieth the Lord.

Esa.58.3.

So then, we haue here the end of the Law that is set downe here, and also the thing which the same commaundeth. For like as God ment not that men shoulde pleade the seuenth day, to the end they might be the better drawen to obserue that feast, which was to gather men to God, and to cause them to rest in him: so ment he also concerning the seuenth yeare; namely that the Iewes shoulde giue themselues to vpright dealing: insomuch that if it were not lawfull to gather the fruites of the earth, and that the fruites which grewe without tilth were common, so as the poore which had no possessions were partakers of them: it was much more reason that if a man were ouerpinched, he shold not be pursued with rigour of Lawe. But in the yeare of Iubyle, which was euery fiftith yeare; there was a greater freedome, and such a one as extended much further. For if a man were in bondage, hee was then made free, vnlesse it were that hee liked so well of his master, that he bound himselfe to bee his slaue for euer as long as he lined. Afterward, all possessions returned home againe. True it is that the houses in Cities could not reuert again, vnlesse y sellers of them redeemed them within a yeare. But as for Farmes, and other possessions in the countrie; the purchacer was to conuey them backe againe at the fiftith yeare, so as they returned home againe to their former owners. And according to the neerenes or farnesse of the yeare of Iubyle, men sold their possessions the dearer or the cheaper: insomuch that the lands so purchased were released againe within thirtie, twentie, or ten yeares after the purchasing of thē. And of this dealing there was one special reason, which was y God hauing diuided y Land of Canaan by lot, intēded to haue it continue in that order for euer, to the ende that mens poſſeſſions ſhould not be intermingled together.

that

And hee ſaieth expreſly, Other Nations poſſeſſe their landes in feeſimple: but I holde you as my farmours. I will not haue you to be as owners, ſo as yee might ſay this is mine: neither ſhall yee bee as purchaſers of the Lande at my hande; yee ſhal haue as it were but a ſoiourning place in it for a time, and yee ſhall bee but as a Farmer vnder a maſter. Loe heere the cauſe why our Lordes will was that the poſſeſſions ſhoulde returne to the firſt owners againe. But as for that which is ſpoken heere, concerneth but the ſeuenth yeare, at which time euerie man ought to bee releaſed, and no man ought to ſew his detters, yet euerie man ought to reteyne his owne right neuertheleſſe ſtill. For Gods meaning was not that hee which had lent money ſhould loſe it, ſo as hee ſhoulde haue no meanes to recouer his dette againe: (for ſo ſhoulde one man haue robbed another of his ſubſtance; and the vntruſtie merchant that had waſted his goods in riot and exceſſe at his eaſe without care, ſhoulde haue laughed his creditor to ſcorne as ſoone as the ſeuenth yeare were come, which had beene a greate diſorder, and woulde haue cauſed vnthrifts to haue become the worſe): but Gods intent was onely that there ſhoulde a kinde of reſpit bee giuen, that the poorer ſort might not be pinched out of meaſure.

But nowe let vs returne to that which is ſet downe in the texte. In the ſeuenth yeare there ſhall bee a Forgiuing, that is to ſay, a forbearing or a giuing of further reſpite. Hee meaneth not that there ſhoulde bee a cleare acquitall or releaſing for euer: but onely that hee which had lent money, ſhoulde not chalendge his dette out of hande, nor bee ſo greedie and haſtie as to ſeeke it by ſute of Lawe that yeare. And hee ſpeaketh expreſly of the ende of the yeare, to ſhewe that this forbearing or reſpitting ſhoulde not onely bee at the beginning of the yeare, but euen throughout to the ſeuenth yeares ende. And here God meant to bounde his Lawe according to the circumſtance: that is to ſaye, becauſe the ſeuenth yeare was a kinde of reſting time as well as the ſeuenth day was; therefore our Lordes will was that the ſame ſhoulde bee obſerued. Therefore ſaieth hee, as the terme: howebeit not to ſignifie the ende of the yeare, but to betoken the continuance of the time appointed by the Lawe. Yee ſhall giue a reſpit ſaieth hee, and the manner thereof ſhall bee thus: If any man owe thee aught, thou ſhalt not conſtraine him, at leaſtwiſe for the dette of thy hande. As if hee had ſaide, thou ſhalt not take the thing by force, but ſhalt rather forbeare the dette. And why ſo? For this forbearing commeth ſpecially of God: that is to ſaye, God reſerueth that yeare ſpecially to himſelfe, and hee will haue it openly proclaimed as it was indeede, and he will haue the order thereof to be kept.

Hee addeth, In any wiſe let there bee no poore bodie among you. This ſpeech is ſomewhat darke, becauſe the firſt worde that Moſes vſeth ſignifieth Nothing, or it is not at all: and ſometimes when it is ioyned with another worde, (as it is in this place,) it betokeneth ſtoppe that, or ſtaying that. And for that cauſe ſome men vnderſtande that our Lorde ſetteth downe an exception heere, namely ſo there were no poore folkes. For if the detters were ſtaied, they might alwayes bee well contented to pay. But the poorer ſort were to bee borne withal, and to haue ſome eaſement; the vexing of whō other ſort, was a kind of ſucking of their blood, and a drawing of the marrowe out of their bones. Againe the ſeuenth yeares reſpit was as a meane for them to gather ſomewhat towardes their diſcharge.

Moreouer there was the more cauſe why the poore ſhould bee borne withal the ſeuenth yeare, the ground was not tilled that yeare, and therefore Corne might become the dearer by reaſon that there was no gathering of any thing that yere. For it was not with them in thoſe dayes as it is with vs in theſe dayes, that when one peece of grounde lay fallowe, as they ſay, another peece was with corne, ſo as they might haue a croppe euerie yeare one after another wherewith to finde themſelues. In the Lande of Iewrie they gathered not ſo much as one kernell of wheate, Otes, or other kinde of graine in the ſeuenth yeare, neither was it lawfull for them to till the grounde that yeare by reaſon whereof the poorer ſort had much adoe to get their liuing by their labour and trauell. That was the cauſe why ſome haue taken it to bee as an exception when our Lorde ſaide, if peraduenture you haue no poore among you. Well may yee demaunde your dues of ſuch as are wekhie and well able to pay; but beware that ye pinch not your neighbours that are behinde hande. Otherſome take it thus, So as there bee no poore among you; that is to ſay, deale in ſuch wiſe as no man bee brought vnder foote by you, but that the poore and meaner ſort may liue with the rich: and let no man bee ſo greedily minded as to put thinges out of order by his exceſſe, like the great fiſhes that eate vp the ſmaller fiſhes: Take heede that yee vſe no ſuch cruelneſſe towardes your neighbours. Alſo a man might take the ſaid worde as betokening Nothing; as though our Lorde had ſpoken after our common manner and ſaide, No, no, there muſt bee no poore among you. But as for the meaning of the Lawe, it is certaine ynough to vs, which thing ought to ſuffice vs, and it is all that wee ſhoulde looke for.

Therefore let vs vnderſtand that our Lordes intent was to ſay here in fewe wordes, that men ought to behaue themſelues ſo friendly, as no man were oppreſſed, and that although it be not in men to let that there ſhould not bee both poore and rich among them: yet they ſhould ſo deale as the poorer ſort were not troden vnder foote. For wee ſee that ſuch as are wekhie do lay their ſnares, and catch whatſoeuer they can come by, ſo as the poorer ſort edare not come neere the

and if they get but the value of a pinne at their hands, they fleece them of it by and by againe. Therefore it was our Lordes intent to prouide a remedie for that mischiefe among his people. Nowe remaineth that wee apply this matter to our owne behoofe. True it is that this order belonged peculiarly to the Iewes: but yet doth it concerne vs also: namely that we shoulde not vexe them out of measure, which are indetted vnto vs. And it may well bee among those that beare the name of Christians, that they wil not goe to lawe vppon the Sabboth day: and the reason is, that vpon that day euery man ought to haue leasure to withdrawe himselfe to Godwarde, to minde his workes, that wee may all of vs be prouoked to serue and honour him. For, all our life long wee ought to giue our selues to praying and supplication. Neuertheless cómon meetings are made that men may heare the cómon doctrine of saluation, and it is good reason that on the Sabboth day all other cares and thoughts should be laide aside. Notwithstanding let vs take good heede that wee keepe not the single Ceremony onely, but also the intent of God therewithall, which is, that our neighbours be not so vexed by vs, as they may haue occasion to despise God, and to be cast into despaire. For our Lorde will haue vs giue such respit as the poore may not bee ouer grieued. Wee see howe he saith in other places, that wee must not take a poore mans mattres from vnder him: As for example, when a man hath broken payment, if hee bring his bedde to lay to gage, our Lorde forbiddeth the taking thereof, and likewise the taking of a poore mans rayment which hee hath neede of to weare. For if he be a cold (saith he) and thou bereft his bed from him, although hee speake neuer a worde, yet shall his sides curse thee, because thou beest so hardhearted that thou hast no pitie of him when thou seest him afflicted in his bodie. And albeit that the poore man be patient in his aduersitie, yet doeth God in heauen consider thy cruelnie, and in the ende he will reuenge it. Contrariwise he that giueth his poore neighbour his gage againe, and is so pitifull towards him that he cannot find in his heart to see him indure necessitie: although the partie so releeued do play the Churle, and regarde not the good that hath bin done vnto him: yet shall hee haue his good deede to answere for him before me, saith the Lord.

You see then that we must be kindharted both generally and particularly as time requireth. As how? if there come a yeare of dearth, many men will seeke to inrich themselues by it, and they beare themselues in hande, that it is a time euen for their owne tooth: and it is a thing too much vsed nowadayes, as it hath bin at all times heretofore: and woulde God we coulde forget it. But we shal see a number that lye in waite like skouts or spies, and if there come a deare yeare, O say they, this serues well to make me rich; when as in verie deede it is the time wherein they should open their bowels to haue compassion of such as are in necessitie. Wee see that poore folke haue much ado to maintaine themselues though they be succoured: yea and such as heretofore haue beene able to liue in their owne houses without being pinched ouer neere, are nowe driuen to borrow. And why is that? They haue their ordinarie earnings as before: but corne and wine are at such excessiue prices, that they be not able to buy them; euery man shrinkes away and holdes himself short. And as for the rich man that hath wherewith to liue, his minde is vppon nothing else but howe he may inrich himselfe. O (saieth he) this is a fatte yeare for mee, for it is a leane yeare for all others. Alas, heere is a wretched regarde. So then let vs learne that our Lordes meaning by this Lawe is not that we should forbeare to releeue such as are (as yee woulde say) windshaken already: but that if we see a man that hath much ado to maintaine himself, we should not runne vpon him to ouerthrowe him altogether. As howe? If I see a man a little behinde hand, and I haue a mind to some cornegrounde or vyneyard of his; loe hee is in fitte case for my purpose: and if I take him at the vantage, hee is vndone by it, & it is vnpossible for him to scape vtter ruine. And when a man hauing that regard to selfeprofite, indeuoureth to catch away the poore mans possessions; surely although there were no Lawe of God at all: yet doeth euen naturall equitie condemne it. But heere our Lorde sheweth vs his will, which is, that whensoeuer wee see any man distressed, wee shoulde spare him so much the more, vntill hee haue some meanes to recouer himselfe againe; and that wee shoulde not lye in waite to catch from him at euerie occasion that is offered to further the matter: but rather that wee shoulde vse such vprightnesse as to saye, If I beare with him hee will pay mee one time or other, I see hee is willing ynough, I see hee woulde paye mee mine owne and doe asmuch for mee if hee were not ouerpressed otherwise; and seeing I knowe him to bee such a one, shall I nowe set vppon him with rigour? That were euen as much as though I woulde curte asunder his hamstringes that hee might bee able to goe no further. I see he is scarse able to drawe his legges after him, and therefore if I should fall to cutting of his sinewes asunder, and so fell him downe altogether; if hee bee vtterly ouerthrowen for want of lending him my helping hand at his neede, am not I the cause therof? Shal not his pouertie crie out for vengeance against mee vnto God?

Nowe wee see howe this Lawe serued as a policie among the Iewes, and yet neuertheless that it sheweth vs Gods will at this day, because it teacheth vs to beare with the poore and needie. To be short, let vs marke that our sparing of the poore after that fashion, is an acceptable sacrifice to God, and that after the same manner, he will accept all other seruices that we do vnto him: where as if wee performe neuer so manie Ceremonies, and in the meane while haue no equitie nor vpright meaning in vs, we do but prouoke Gods wrath according to the saying of the Prophet Esay which I haue alledged already. If wee resort to sermons, and shewe our selues to haue neuer so great zeale and good will to Gods

worde; and yet for all that, euerie of vs do practise wicked deuises to ouerthrowe our neighbours, so as we seeke to deuour one another like dogges and cattes: our Lorde shalbe much beholding to vs for giuing eare to his sayings, when in the meane while wee make none account of the keeping of them. Nay contrariwise, let vs consider that our comming hither is to bee induced to brotherly loue, so as the rich may beare with the poore, and that where any pouertie is among vs, they may be so prouided for as they may still come forwarde, and bee so comforted as they may eate the breade which God giueth them, with thankesgiuing, and not be driuen to despaire, nor the name of God bee thereby blasphemed. And wee must not tarie till the time of forbearing be proclaimed by the sounde of a trumpet: but wee must holde our selues contented with Gods lowde crying out vnto vs from day to day. And this worde must sounde into our hearts: By which God requireth that wee should so partake with our neighbours that they should no manner of way be grieued by vs: Againe we must not looke for a seuenth yere, because we must haue at this present a continuall rest: Seeing that God hath ridde vs from the olde bondage of the lawe; and therefore hee will haue vs to rest our selues all our life long in him: let vs therefore giue rest to our neighbours, so as they may bee releeued and not haue any occasion of heartburning against vs for our despising and reiecting of them; but that the fatherly loue which God sheweth towardes vs, may be as a bande to tie vs together in brotherly good will as members of one bodie, so as no man doe misuse his brother any more than ỹ hand would misuse the foote, because it woulde turne to the hurt of it selfe. And therefore let vs haue the same consideration of our selues one towards another. Now let vs proceede to that which God addeth.

He saith that his blessing shalbe vpon the people, so as they shall all prosper, and haue wherwith to lend, & not be driuen to borrow: and that they shall reigne ouer many Nations, and no Nation shall reigne ouer them. The cause why our Lord addeth this promise, is to confirme the lawe. And at a word (as I haue said heretofore) albeit that our Lord might command after a precise manner: yet doth he apply himselfe to vs, indeuoring to win vs to him, that we should obey him with a free heart, and not go to worke by compulsion and constraint. Yee see then that ỹ thing which he requireth of vs, is ỹ wee shoulde offer him freewilofferings as they terme them. But let vs marke that the vpright dealing which wee haue treated of, serued but onely for the Iewes. And therefore this promise, I will blesse you, answereth thereunto. For it was lawfull for the Iewes to pursue straungers, such as were not circumcised. After that maner ment Moses. But if any straungers receiued the lawe of Moses, they were priuiledged, as being of the bodie of the Iewish people. But as for them that worshiped not the God of Israel, & were among them but onely in way of traffike or for some other affaires: they inioyed not the benefite of this law whereby the sewing of them for dett was forbidden. And the reason therof was that they kept not the Sabboth for any deuotions sake. True it is that they were fain to rest themselues whether they woulde or no; it was not lawfull for them in any wise to worke; they were driuen to submit themselues to Gods ordinance: but in the meane while they had no desire to serue the God of Israel. And therefore they were not to be spared as in respect of common policy: but nowe that Gods grace is shedforth euery where, we must not make any more difference betweene Iewe and Gentile. For (as saieth Saincte Paule) our Lorde Iesus Christ hath broken downe the partition wall, to the ende that being adopted of God for his children, wee shoulde maintaine brotherly vnitie among our selues, and euerie of vs acknowledge his neighbour to bee as his brother.

And as touching this promise, it was reserued for that time to ỹ people of Israel. But nowadayes, forasmuch as Gods promises are common to all men because hee hath shewed himselfe to be the father indifferently of all men: let vs vnderstand that our Lorde declareth here a generall, that if we feare him and keepe his commandements, hee will blesse vs and make vs prosper: And this promise must bee referred to the circumstance of the place. For wee see how couetousnesse prouoketh vs to catch what we can from our neighbours, because we be not afraid of want. O (say we) If I may not haue mine owne, what a thing were it? True it is that our Lorde doeth indeede permit euery man to haue his right: but yet must not euery man be so giuen ouer to himselfe and to his owne profite, that he should haue no regarde to spare those whom he holdeth as his vnderlings. For whosoeuer hath no regard of him that standeth at his mercie; surely he can finde in his heart, not onely to liue vppon the parties labour, but also to sucke his bloud. If I bereaue a man of the meanes whereby hee should followe his litle trade, so as he is brought vtterly vnder foote: it is all one as if I maimed him in his body, so as I made him pine away all his life after. So then let vs marke well, that as touching this promise, our Lord hath an eye to the eagernesse which euery of vs hath to draw to himselfe. And why do wee so? Because we be afraide leaste we should want. And therefore our Lord saith, No, make more account of my blessing than of all that euer ye can gather. When ye haue vsed al the craft and sleight ye can deuise to fish to your selues by hooke & by crooke, and when yee haue gathered neuer so huge a heape of goods together: al that shall not bring you so much as my blessing, that I multiplie you and giue you so much as shall suffice to maintaine you withall. And although yee haue not so greate store of thinges at once, as you coulde finde in your heartes to wish: yet will I make the thinges auailable which yee haue in your handes. And if it bee but litle, yet shall it be so inlarged, that yee shall haue at your ease. Now we see what Gods meaning is.

And therefore whensoeuer wee be tempted by

by vnbeliefe to catche other mens goods; Let vs bethinke our selues thus: howe-soeuer shall we become rich in despite of God? At whose hande haue we our liuing? Haue wee it not of his meere liberalitie? Nowe hee hath not promised his blessing to any other than to such as walke in integritie, and do so beare with their neighbours, that they trample them not vnder their feete through ouergreat rigour. But if I will needes inrich my selfe by hooke and by crooke; then doe I spite God and prouoke his wrath against mee; and what hope is there then that God will blesse mee? Nay rather his horrible curse must needes light vppon mee. Therefore let vs thinke aduisedly vppon these thinges. And that wee may so doe, Let vs consider howe it is he that giueth wherewith to finde and feede vs, and that hee must bee faine to preserue the thinges that hee hath giuen vs, and to make them auailable for our vse; or otherwise we may well doe what wee can, and trot vp and downe; but all shall bee but lost labour. God (say I) must bee faine to open his hande to giue vs wherewith to liue. And when he hath once giuen it, hee must also maintaine it. For it might slippe away from vs euery minute of an houre, if hee shulde not make vs to inioy still the things that he hath giuen vs. Thirdly hee must also bee faine to giue vs the meane to it, and to turne the thinges to our benefite which hee hath put into our handes. For if wee put them to any other vse, wee shall woonder to see howe they shall come to naught. And why? Because Gods blessing faileth vs. Yee see then howe the thing which we haue to consider when our flesh is so frowarde as to prouoke vs to greeue our neighbours; is that wee must thinke thus with our selues; yea, but what shall I gaine in the end when God is against me? Sure I am that I ought to thinke my selfe beholden to him for all things: and though I had all the worlde vnder my wing: yet were it nothing worth vnlesse God blessed me. Sith it is so, I must haue an eye to him, and beholde mee well howe I may obtaine his blessing: inlarging my heart towardes my neighbours after his example, who sheweth himselfe so liberall towards me.

And Saint Paul giueth the selfesame admonition, not onely to cause vs to spare those that are in our debte: but also to inducee vs to doe almesdeedes, and to succour the needie: for hee exhorteth vs to him that giueth vs seede to sowe. Come on sirres (saieth he): thinke yee that yee haue lost your labour when ye haue compassion vppon the poore, and bestow almes vpon them? Doe yee no more than the husbandman that layeth his seede into the grounde; for he looketh to reape his crop againe at Haruesttime. Therefore when ye doe almesdeedes, ye sowe: and your God meaneth that hee receiueth with his owne hande, whatsoeuer yee giue to the poore, yea and that hee will make it to returne euerie whit of it to your owne benefite, so as yee shall reape fruite of it, not onely at that great haruest time which shalbe at the last day; but also euen in this transitorie life; your God will make you to perceiue that your almesdeedes are acceptable to him, and you shalbe so much the more increased by them. And for proofe thereof (saith he) is it not hee that giueth the Corne euery yeare to sowe? When the husbandman hath sowed his grounde, howe couldee hee sowe it againe the next yeare, vnlesse God gaue it a heade againe? Consider then that when God giueth you wherewith to doe Almesdeedes, it is to the intent to make it fruitful to you. It is al one as if he should giue you seede in your hande and say, that if yee intende to gather fruite of it, yee must first cast it into the grounde. Will the husbandman keepe his corne still in his Garner? Will he leaue his Lande vnsowen for feare of bestowing some quantitie of graine vppon it? Euen so when yee see an vnsowen grounde, that is to say a poore neighbour whom God offereth vnto you, leaue him not vnsowen still, but bee freehearted towardes him, and God will not suffer the seede to be lost which ye haue bestowed vppon him, but will make it to yeelde yee fruite out of hande. And so yee see whereunto the promise that is set downe heere tendeth, namely That God will multiplie you in the Lande which hee hath promised you.

Heere Moses did put the people expressly in mind that their hauing of the Land of Chanaan was of Gods gifte. As if he should say, whence come the goods that yee haue, but out of the earth? And is that Lande yours? No verily, not as in feesimple. Ye haue it but as bayliffes. Your God will be knowen continually to bee the Lorde and master of it. Seeing then that he betaketh the Lande vnto you, may he not at leastwise require some of the fruite thereof at your handes? And that is done when you bee pitifull towards the poore. That is the thing which Moses had respect vnto, when he saide, This lande hath beene promised you, and your God will giue it you in possession. True it is that at this day wee haue not the Land of Chanaan as the Iewes had: but yet whersoeuer wee liue, we be harboured there as it were by the hand of God, and it is he that findeth vs. Seeing then that we haue our life and all thinges else of him, let vs know that it is good reason that we should comfort our neighbours, and that wee shoulde vse compassion towards them in bearing with them, at leastwise if wee will haue God to continue his welldoing towards vs. To bee short whensoeuer we bee not sufficiently stirred vp to referre our selues to the blessing of God; let vs repaire to y thinges which wee knowe by experience. Men cannot finde in their heartes to trust vnto God, but rather are caried away and inflamed with their owne wicked lustes, deceits, and leawd practises, so as they passe not howe they come by thinges so they haue them. But when wee behaue our selues after that leawde fashion, and passe not for the blessing of God as we ought to doe: Let vs come to the exhortation that Moses maketh in this place to vs; namely, that if I haue nothing of myne owne, I hold all thinges of my God. And seeing it is so that hee hath fed me and maintained me vnto this day: should

I not put my ſelfe ſtill into his hande? Though I had a thouſand times more thē I haue, yet would it ſoone be ſwallowed vp: but if I haue very little yea and yet leſſe, my God who hath not failed mee vnto this houre, will continue his bleſſing ſtill, and that ought to ſuffice mee. Seeing then that experience (which is the ſchoolemiſtres of fooles as they ſay) ſheweth vs howe ſtrong Gods bleſſing is are we not too leawd if we folow not ỹ thing that is tolde vs in this text, that is to wit, if we haue not pitie vppon our poore brethren, ſeeing wee haue his promiſe, the performance whereof wee haue had accompliſhed by effect? That is the point wherein God will haue a triall of the loue that we beare to him. Now he ſaith that mercie is more worth than all the ſacrifices in the world: and therefore hee will haue vs to honour him ỹ way, that is to ſay by pitying of our poore brethren, by ſuccouring them, and by bearing with them when it lyeth in our power to trouble them: aſſuring our ſelues that God accepteth the thinges that are ſo done to our neighbours for his ſake. And he will not onely ſhewe himſelfe liberall towards vs by making vs to feele the fruite of our Almeſdeeds; but he will alſo continually increaſe his benefits vpon vs in ſuch ſort that by meanes thereof wee ſhall haue continuall cauſe to bleſſe him and to glorifie his holy name.

Oſee. 6. 6. Matt. 7. 12. & 22. 7.

And now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to vouchſafe to wipe them away, ſo as they may not hinder vs from being preſerued at his hand: and that if he make vs to finde his fauour euen in this corruptible life, we may much more bee inuironed rounde about with all his ſpirituall benefites, that we may ſo grow in them more and more, as wee may neuer be helde backe by the brittle thinges of this world, but rather ſo vſe them as wee may hope on our way ſtill, and communicate together after ſuch a ſort, as it may be to the exerciſing of the faith which wee haue in God, and in his pure doctrine, and for the confirming of vs in the hope which we haue of the heritage of heauen, ſo as wee may tende euer thitherwarde, as we be dayly called thither by the preaching of his worde. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but alſo to all people and Nations of the earth &c.

On Saturday the xxvj. of October. 1555.

The XCiiij. Sermon which is the ſecond vpon the fifteenth Chapter.

7 If a brother of thine become poore within any of the gates in the Lande which the Lord thy God giueth thee, thou ſhalt not harden thy heart nor ſhut thy hand from thy brother that is poore.

8 But thou ſhalt open thy hand bountifully, and lend him ſufficiently for his neede wherewith he is pinched.

9 Beware that there be no point of peeniſhnes in thy heart, that thou ſay nay, the ſeuenth yeare which is the yeare of reſpiting is at hande, and thereuppon that haue a wicked eye againſt thy poore brother, ſo as thou giue him nothing; and then hee crie againſt thee to the Lorde thy GOD, ſo as it become ſinne vnto thee.

10 Thou ſhalt giue him freely, and let not thy heart repine at thy giuing vnto him: for becauſe of this the Lorde thy God will bleſſe thee in all thy woorkes, and in all that euer thou putteſt thy hande vnto.

HEre Moſes goeth on with ỹ ſame matter that was ripped vp yeſterday, that is to wit, that in the ſeuenth yeare dettes ſhould be reſpited, to the intent that the poore ſhoulde not bee ſued nor moleſted. And I told you that the meaning therof was not that they ſhoulde be quite and cleane forgiuen, but that the poore ſhoulde be ſo much eaſed. Now Moſes addeth a larger declaration, That the ſame ought not to hinder men from lending liberally when any bodie had neede. And this is added becauſe men doe alwayes goe about to defraude the Law. Although equitie be ſhewed vs neuer ſo plainely, and that the Lawes be ſet neuer ſo well together: yet are men ſo ſubtile in naughtineſſe, that they finde alwayes ſome euaſion hole, to beare the worlde in hand that they haue not offended the Lawe, and yet the intent of the Lawe maker is defrauded. This is a thing too much accuſtomed; and woulde God there were not too many examples of it in experience. But what? When men thinke themſelues to haue ſet things in as good order as may be, a thouſand meanes are deuiſed to ſcape from them, and thereof commeth ſo much breaking in Law. For the end of good Lawes is to ſhut the way to all peeuiſh, that there might bee no de-haste not quarelling among men, but that euery man might haue his owne right. And inasmuch as Lawes doe shewe that whosoeuer offendeth must be punished, is it not a meane to hold euerie man in awe? But as I saide afore, the Law serues vs but to deuise wicked shifts how to do hurt and harme vntill our hearts be reformed. Neuerthelesse our Lords meaning in this text, was to prouide that the Law which he had set downe should be kept, and that men shoulde not take occasion thereof to withholde themselues from succouring such as are in necessitie. And yet notwithstanding, that which is spoken here was not onely wrested to the defrauding of the Law; but also applyed much worse. For such as were too much wedded to their owne profite, tooke occasion at Gods law to do lesse good and to shew lesse mercie to their neighbours than otherwise they woulde haue done. For why? Had it beene lawfull for them to haue sued men at all times, so as they might haue required their right at all times without exception: they woulde haue lent money in the sixth yeare as well as in the first, and they woulde haue made no bones at all at it. But nowe that a Lawe was set foorth, that there shoulde bee a forbearing of it in the seuenth yeare, if a poore man required succour, euerie man thought thus with himselfe: if I lende him money nowe, it is layde a water, I lose a whole yeares occupying of it, and what a thing is that? It were better that this good fellowe shoulde goe prouide himselfe where hee can: for I intende not to hazarde my selfe in this wise: for what can I tell what will befall within a yeare and a halfe? There needeth but a little hinderance, and beside, I may fall into further pouertie, and then am I too short of my money. Thus ye see how euery man woulde shrinke away, and vnder colour that God had commanded men to vse gentlenesse towardes their neighbours in the seuenth yeare, the poore were disappointed of help and succe, and their throates were cute, so as there was no way for them to ease themselues of their sute.

And hereby wee see yet better, that men not onely be subtile in deuising new shiftes from time to time, to couer their misdoings: but also ỹ whē they haue neuer so good and iust Lawes, they turne them to the cleane contrarie. And this commeth to passe not only in worldly gouernment, but also euen in matter concerning God: wherein we see ỹ horrible corruption of our nature. And this is one point well worthy to be noted. When such as are in authoritie ouer vs, as Princes, Magistrates, and Iudges make Lawes & statutes if wee breake them, that disobedience of ours (as Saint Paul sheweth) toucheth God, and therefore is not to be excused. But when as God commeth as it were in his owne person, and talketh vs his will as it were with his own mouth: if we then dally with him, and shroud ourselues by shifts and subtleties as though hee were not able to see vs: is not that a diuilish malapeartnes? But there is yet a farre greater and more outragious extremity, as I said afore. God goeth about to rule our life aright, he seeth vs pitifully wandering in our own affections: he setteth vs downe an order what to doe: and his will ought to bee as a definitiue sentence for vs to stande vnto, so as wee ought to inquire no further for we know that whatsoeuer God alloweth, is perfect righteousnesse. Nowe when hee hath beene so gracious to vs as to teach vs, What doe we? We not onely fall to dissemble in his Lawe, but also turne al order vpsidedowne, and transgresse the verie Lawes themselues which hee giueth vs to direct vs by: Sith wee see such frowardnesse, wee haue good cause to mislike of our selues, and to condemne our selues vtterly. And therefore seeing wee be of malicious and froward nature, let vs learne to suspect our selues, and to yeeld to Gods good will, that when he hath giuen vs his Lawe, he may also giue vs the grace to receiue it with all singlenesse of heart, so as it may bee to our benefite, and that we may not turne life into death, nor light into darkenesse. Thus yee see what we haue to remember in the first place.

Secondly it behoueth vs to marke here, that the keeping of the outwarde forme of the Lawe is not all that we haue to doe: but that wee must specially obserue the substance of the Lawe. Will wee proue our obedience towardes God? The way to do it is not by Ceremonies, but to seeke out the certaintie of his meaning, and to submit our selues thereunto. For men will take good heede to the worldewarde, that they offende not in such wise, as they may bee punished: and if a man can finde some prettie shift to excuse himselfe withall when hee commeth before the iudge; hee thinkes all his doings to bee iustifiable ynough. A man then will make no conscience to offende, so he haue wherewith to hide himselfe when he is reproued, and that hee can say, as for mee, I vnderstoode it not so: the Law saith not so. He findeth out some little worde that carieth a shewe of contrarietie to the true meaning of the Lawe, and setteth a counterfait construction vppon it, and so beares himselfe in hande that hee hath well ridded his handes of the matter, and that by that meanes he is cleare of it. And therfore let vs learn that it is nothing worth to haue obserued the Lawe as in respect of the outwarde forme of it, that is to say, in such wise as men can finde no fault with vs; but that the chiefe point is to liue soundly & roundly, accordingly as wee see here that it was Gods will that in the seuenth yeare there should bee a respit, that is to wit that men shoulde not sue for their dettes, but suffer it to bee a resting-time, as I declared yesterday.

True it is that the Iewes woulde not vtterly transgresse this order: but yet they thought it ynough for them to discharge themselues of the Ceremonie, and they bare themselues in hand that God might well holde himselfe contented with such disguisings, when in the meane while the chiefe thing was left vndone. For the poore were not pitied to their releefe, but rather men tooke occasion to leaue them vtterly destitute. Insomuch that howe great so euer their neede was, they were neuer the more releeued, and all vnder colour that men could not recouer that which they had lent. Wee see then how men wouldde alwayes oppoose God with ceremonies. But let vs beare in minde howe hee saieth by his Prophet, that he hath an eye to the soundnesse of the heart. Therefore let vs deale faithfully with our neighbours, if wee will haue God to accept the seruice which we yeeld vnto him.

Ier.5.31.

And nowe let vs come to that which is set downe here. If any of thy brethren (saieth hee) bee fallen behinde hand, as leathfull of such as do all wickednesse: harden not thy heart, nor shut thy hande against him. His speaking peculiarly of the Israelites themselues, was not to giue the Iewes leaue to deuour the goods of the heathen, nor to deale cruelly with them: but his meaning was that there shoulde bee the more friendlinesse vsed among themselues, because that besides the kinred that was among them, there was also an vnion of faith. For GOD had shouled out the lynage of Abraham from the rest of the worlde, and had knitte them together into one bodie, whereof hee himselfe vouchsafed to bee the head: and therefore it was good reason that they shoulde maintaine one another, and be the more inclined one to succor another. But hereof the Iewes tooke occasion, to holde fast all that euer they coulde catch: for they construewed all the promises of the holy scripture to their owne aduantage, as though God had laide the bridle on their necks, and had no more care of the Gentyles than of brute beastes. As for example; whereas it is said, Thee shall reigne ouer many Nations: thereupon they concluded, Then is it lawfull for vs to exercise all maner of Tyrannie vppon the Gentiles, and to eate them vp: for they be vncircumcyzed and vncleane, and belong not vnto God at all: therefore let vs sticke what wee can possible out of them, and not spare them. Yea and they streatched the worde South verie farre: for they sticked not a whit to ouerlode the strangers with vsurie to the vttermost that they coulde beare, without any regarde of vprightnesse. Thus yee see howe the Iewes did alwayes restreine the right of Gods promises, bearing themselues in hande that it behoued them to be a litle friendlyer to their neighbours, that is to say to those that were of their owne kinred: And yet euen in y behalfe also they were counted as rauening Wolues, as the Prophet Ieremie vpbraideth them, and as shalbe declared in due place.

Ier.5.26. Mic.3.1.2.

But let vs nowe come backe againe to that which is saide here, to applie it to our instruction. If the Iewes vsed this hypocrisie of couering their couetousnesse with a pretence that they might well pill and poll the heathen and Infidels: let vs see if wee our selues doe not the like at this day. True it is that our Lord commendeth vnto vs the houshold folke of faith aboue all others: (and yet is it not meete that he giueth vs leaue to fleece such as haue not the knowledge of his worde. For hee hath twise vs generally alogether in that hee hath saide by his Prophet Esay, Thou shalt not despise

Gal.6.10.

thine owne flesh, in which saying he comprehendeth all men without exception. Therefore must we behaue our selues vprightly and indifferently towardes all men; and likewise we must haue pitie and compassion vpon all: but when we behold our owne nature, then we find that, the houshold folke of faith are linked vnto vs with a much neerer bonde: in respect whereof it is good reason that wee shoulde loue them more specially as our brethren. Thus yee see after what maner this text is to be vnderstoode, where God saith If any of thy brethren, that is to say of thine owne countrimen. And hee doeth it for that they were linked together in a holy bande, had the true Religion, and were adopted to be the children of God: in consideration whereof it behoooued them to beehaue themselues to bee kinde hearted and pitifull one towardes another, and yet ought they not to haue despised the rest of the worlde as they did.

And whereas it is saide within thy Gates, is to shew that the exercising of our charitie ought to bee according to our knowledge of mens necessities. For wee bee not able to helpe all mens needes. True it is that euen without seeing the extremities that are euery where, we ought to be touched with compassion. When we heare of warres, that one Countrie is hadde burned, another spoyled, and all thinges laide vtterly vpsidedowne; it is our parte to runne to the place to see what hath beene done. But if we be not too too blockish, we may well iudge that those thinges cannot bee done without horrible confusion. Therefore must we pray for those whome wee neuer sawe: for they touch vs, they bee men as well as we, they bee reasonable creatures shaped after the image of GOD. And in that respect we ought to pitie those that are nothing neere vnto vs. But as in respect of straungers a verie man must straine himselfe according to the needs that hee seeth, for I cannot help all of those that are far off from me. But if I see a bodie in present necessitie; then must I be moued to pitie, and I must confesse that God prouoketh and calleth me to the succouring of him that is in neede.

Thus yee see why Moses hath set it downe expressly, that men shoulde haue a regarde of those that are within their gates. The Iewes then coulde well skill to saye, that though all mankinde bee alyed together; yet notwithstanding, the neighbours that are acquainted one with another, ought to vse a speciall friendlinesse in succouring one another. And in deede, euen without anie reading of the holie scripture, euerie man can well skill to saye in his owne behalfe when his neighbour faileth him, Howe nowe? what neybourhood is this? And who teacheth them? lesson? Nature. Euen therefore our Lord telleth vs that if we perceiue any of our neighbors to be in necessitie, it ought to stirre vs vp, so as if wee bee not too too vnnatural, wee must needes be touched with it: and any further pricking of vs in mind thereof thing he saith speaketh when we see our neighbour so distressed.

Now he addeth further, Thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thy hande, Hee might well haue begunne at this point, Thy hand shall not be shut; for that is the matter which hee tendeth vnto effect. But it is not for nought that he saith, Thou shalt not shut vp thy heart. For why, his intent is to preuent the thing that hindereth our welldoing & our succouring of our neighbours that are in distresse: namely, the hardnesse of our hearts. For where pitie is, that is to say if we be pitifull, wee will indeuour to vse such wealth as we haue wherewith. In deede a man shal see a number that can well skill to weepe; but al that they can find in their hearts to do, is but to diddle a fewe teares: they cast forth such signes that a man would thinke their heartes should burst; but to spare one penny out of their purse, that is no part of their thought. Many such hypocrites are to be seene. But let vs haue the true kindheartednesse in vs, and let vs not be hardhearted, but let our hande euer follow our heart. And that is the cause why our Lorde beginneth at this point, That men should not harden their heartes. As if hee should say, will yee be good Almesmen? Will ye be well disposed to succour such as haue neede of your helpe? Then let your heartes bee softened, and not locked vp to holde fast to your selues, but rather to thinke with your selues that God offereth vnto mee here a man, he is my neighbour, and although hee bee neither kinsman nor alie to me, yet is hee a creature shaped after the image of God, and therefore must I put my hand towardes him, and haue some pitie vpon him. As often then as wee haue colde minded part in succouring our neighbours, let vs enter into this consideration that he doeth heere, and so say to our selues: How now? Wretched man, if thou want as hee is, wouldst thou not be gladde that others should succour thee? Yes: and if they shoulde let thee alone, thou couldest skill well ynough to say for thy selfe, Alas, men make no more account of vs then of a dog. Thou couldest well skill to say so; and yet for all that wilt thou thy selfe harden thy heart after the same fashion? Thus yee see that wee haue in the first place to marke vpon this.

And now for the seconde part, Let vs marke how our Lorde speaketh here, in that he saith that our deedes please him not, vnlesse they come from a willing and freedisposed heart. And therefore let vs learne to order our succouring of our neighbours needes in such sort, as we doe it not vnwillingly, so as when our hand is stretched out, there be a wicked affection in vs which may hinder vs from offering vp vnto God that succour which we owe vnto our neighbours when we see them in necessitie. And would God that this lesson were well put in vre, and that euery one of vs did beare it better in minde than we do. For although we doe some Almesdeedes, yet may the world see that our harts are straitened, and that wee cannot come to this doctrine of Saint Paules, that God loueth the liberall giuer, and that hee will not haue men go to worke as it were, by constraint and inforcement, but of a free goodwill. Howe many be there that put this lesson in vre? Nay, the giuer hath alwayes some hartgrudging in himselfe, and would faine draw his heade out of the coller if hee couldo, and his doing of it is as if he were put to his task as they terme it, or as though hee payed some tribute. But our Lord calleth Almesdeedes Sacrifices, to the ende wee should do them cheerefully. And I pray you, if wee will offer any thing vnto God, shoulde it bee as the paying of a tribute, or of some tallage or impost, that is exacted? Shoulde it bee as it were a ransome giuen to theeues or enemies? Shoulde our honouring of our God by doing him homage for the goods that wee haue receiued at his hande, bee by such force and constreint? Nowe wee see in effect, what is imported in these two speeches; namely that wee must not haue our hearts locked vp to hinder vs from well doing, but that not onely our handes but also our hearts must bee open towards such as are distressed, to haue pitie vppon them, and to vse kindnesse to them. Where this is not, there must needes bee all manner of crueltie, as wee commonly see that such as haue most to spare, doe fall to repyning if a bodie go about to wring an almes from them and they make a grudging at it like a dog when one wouldo take away a bone out of his mouth. And if they happe to giue any thing, bee it for shame or for any other cause, it is a death to them to part from it. And surely it were better that such carkasses were rooted out of the worlde, than that they should liue among men. For they bee monsters againſt kinde, they bee foule churles, that coulde finde in their hearts to deuour and swallowe downe all the worlde into their mawes. Or rather they bee men full of vnbeliefe, which haue no more trust in God than deuels, bearing themselues in hande that the earth is not able to finde them. By reason whereof if it come to the point that they must giue any thing, it striketh them to the heart, it killeth them, insomuch that the asking of an Almes at their hande, is as the drawing of a sworde to cut their throtes. Therefore let vs looke to our selues, and when we heare our Lord speake of the not hardening of our hearts, let vs beginne at this point of kindnesse in hauing pitie and compassion vpon such as are in distresse. And therewithall let our hande bee as liberall afterwarde, in such sort as wee may protest that wee offer GOD a sacrifice with a free heart.

And nowe Moses addeth, Beware that this wicked thought come not in thy heart to say, Behold, the seuenth yeere is at hande, and if I smite, my money cannot be dead for the time. He calleth it a wicked thought when we be holde backe by it too much to our owne profite, and in the meane while forsake the parties that is in neede. For were our thoughts well ruled, surely wee should not bee so greatly wedded to our owne profite, but that we would also thinke vpon those whom God com-

1.Cor.13.5 mendeth vnto vs. It is saide that loue seeketh not his owne. True it is that it cannot bee but that euerie man will bee mindfull of himselfe. But Saint Paules meaning in saying so, is that men must not bee caried away with the loue of their owne profite, as who shoulde say they woulde haue no fellowshippe with their neighbours, nor streine themselues to doe any thing for them. Therefore as for those which say, I must haue regarde of my selfe, and therewithall doe despise others, and passe not what they endure: those seeke their owne gaine, and in so doing shewe themselues to be vtterly voide of charitie. Contrariwise, if wee bee kindhearted, although wee be mindfull of our selues, yet are we not so caried away with it; but that wee beare an euen hand and proceede to the louing of our neighbours as our selues. Whereas our nature wholly draweth vs to our owne priuate profite, let vs bethinke our selues thus: What? I cannot separate my selfe from those to whom God hath knit me; for that were a wicked diuorce. If I should holde my selfe alone, and haue no regard but of mine owne aduantage, It were a cutting of my selfe off from mankinde, & I were worthie to be cut from the rest of the world, for it is against kinde. So then, it is not without cause that Moses saith, that when a man is so mindful of his owne profite, and seeketh it in such sort that he taketh it as an occasion to refuse to help his neighbors at all: it is a wicked thought, for thereby wee bee done to vnderstand, that we must not iustifie our selues because that although men be not able to accuse vs so as we may be condemned by mans Lawe, yet doth it not followe therefore that wee be quit before God. If a man come to borrowe mony of mee, and I thinke thus with my selfe, I cannot tell whether this man be able to pay me againe or no, he is a poore man, and when I haue taried a long time, hee may chaunce to growe poorer and poorer, and then is my money loste. Nowe then if this poore man that was to be succoured abide still in distresse, and in the end perish: the other that woulde not lend him, shall not be accused for it nor brought to answere for it before men. And if men cast him in the teeth with it. O (will hee say) It was for mee to seeke mine owne profite, I lifted not to hazarde my selfe after that fashion. Well this excuse may serue afore men: but in the meane while what saith the heauenly Iudge to it? It is a wicked thought, saieth hee: and let men flatter themselues neuer so much, they shall winne nothing by it. Therefore let vs marke that wee must not wey our woorkes in our owne scales, as who shoulde say wee shall goe scotfree because wee haue some startinghole. For our Lorde telleth vs that the thing which beares a shewe to be excusable of it selfe, is cursed in his sight; that is to wit, if wee succour not the partie that hath neede, at leastwise according to our abilitie. And it is the selfesame thing that our Lorde Iesus Christ putteth vs in minde of, where hee saieth that wee must doe good to such as are Luke.6.35. not able to requite vs with the like, and that wee must lende without looking for any gaine. For neither in lending nor in giuing, commonly is there any liberalitie among men, but euerie man hath an eye to his owne gaine. If a man giue, it is to the ende to receiue gifts againe: and if a man lende, alwayes his respect is, that such a one may doe him pleasure and recompence him with the like good turne againe. It is no Liberalitie when wee doe good in hope to bee recompensed for it againe. But if wee doe good to a poore man, at whose hande wee cannot by any meanes reape any profite; that is a point of freegoodnesse, and God alloweth of it, for it is an acceptable sacrifice vnto him. And that is the cause why hee saieth that we should not giue to such as are able to requite vs, but to such as are vtterly vnable, and of whom wee haue no hope to recouer the principall: for it is no Almesdeede, that is to say, no deede of mercie, vnlesse there bee neede: and where is neede, but among such as are not able to recompence? Yea and euen where our money may seeme to bee cast into the water, inasmuch that wee haue succoured such a man as it may bee saide, Verily this is quite lost for anght that I can see? Yea verily, as to the worldward. But our Lorde saieth, I receiue it: yet thinke yee put your almes into a mortall mans hande, but it is I that become debter for it. Although all thinges bee his, yet bindeth he himself in the person of the poore; and shoulde then our ingardlyneesse stay vs from succoring those whom God offereth vnto vs, seeing he setteth them as in his owne steede, and auoweth all to be done himselfe which is done to them?

Moreouer let vs marke that Moses speaketh here, of such as are in neede. For God meaneth not to maintaine wicked folke in ydlenes & naughtinesse. The man that seeketh to waste away other mens goods, and to defraude his Creditors, is not commended vnto vs heere of God: but he speaketh directly of mercy. And that is the cause why he saieth, Thou shalt not harden thy heart. For if wee haue not that discretion: doe what Almesdeedes we will, and yet shall none of them be acceptable. Wherfore let vs marke, that how God speaketh not in fauour of all men, but only setteth before vs such as are in neede & wot not what to doe, and shoulde perish in deede if they were not relieued. Those are they which are to be helped according to our ablitie. That it is, that to make a Lawe of it, it is not possible. God hath set this order among his people, that the poore shoulde be succoured. But he hath not tolde with what summe, nor how often times hee hath not made a tax of it, to say that euery man should beare thus much. Only we must referre to this which S. Paul saith, Let euery man doe that which he doth with a free hart, and not lay enbure vpon me as though they should pay as much as they were sessed at: but let euery man sesse him self of his own good wil, & think thus, although I streined my self a hundred times more, yet could I not discharge my self to my godward. Howbeit forasmuch as he sheweth me this fauor to accept it as an offring of my hand, although I do not so much much as I ought to doe nothing neere, yet doth it please him to receiue ỹ which I giue him, so it be done w a free hart. Sith we know this, albeit that we cannot make a grounded Lawe of it, to ỹ how farre we shall go in succoring our neighbors, yet let euery of vs streine himselfe, and alwayes be doing, with the foresayd free heart.

And it is sayd, Thou shalt not thinke with thy self, the yeare of respit is at hand, and therefore I will not lend. Hereby it is shewed vs, (as I haue touched afore) that if a poore man require help, although he be not able to pay the thing againe out of hand which he borroweth, yet must not wee be cold for all that. For we must thinke, if I helpe this poore man at this time, he is a faithful man, and my succoring and releeuing of him shall set him halfe vp againe, but howsoeuer the worlde go, he may be able to maintaine his trade, and at length he may pay mee all that hee borroweth. But if I vtterly faile him at this time, he is quite sunck, he is brought vnder foote for euer, and hath no meanes to get vp againe: and I am to blame if I see him perish so. Had we this cõsideratiõ with vs, we should not haue the nigardlines that Moses mentioneth and condemneth here. And how so? Let vs knowe that where need requireth, we must not haue such respect to our owne profite, as to let the poore perish in their distresse without lending them our helping hãd.

Again, Let vs wey wel this saying which Moses setteth downe here: namely that wee must open our handes. Hee repeteth it twise or thrice: and that is to shewe vs that there is nothing but hypocrisie in vs, when we pretend to haue compassion, & yet our hand is alwayes shut, and nothing can be wrong out of vs. I haue told you already ỹ a number of folke wil not passe greatly to lye; Alas, when they see poore people: but they beare themselues in hand ỹ it is enough to haue pretended a countenance. But here God reproueth mens dissimulation, if they haue not their handes open: for it is a toke that their hart is hardened, so as there is nothing but beastly churlishnesse in them, and when their handes be not opened, it must needes bee a record of it. Againe he setteth downe that the poore is to be succored according to his neede, and that a gage is to be taken of him, if there be a gage to be had: for it may also full well be vnderstood of the taking of gages. And hereby we see yet better, that our Lordes meaning was not to haue debtes vtterly released by the respit that was giuen in the seuenth yeere: but onely to haue a time of rest giuen for the respectes and considerations which I haue treated of before.

Furthermore it is tolde vs here, that we must releeue our neighbors wants: for our Lord speaketh heere of the lendinges that are doone of almes. And in deede, it is oftentimes a greater almesdeede to lend some cõpetẽt sũme, than to giue a very little. For it may be ỹ the giuing of a little will doe a man no ease at all: but the lending of as much as neede requireth, releeueth him very wel, & he may in time contente his creditor again. That then is the thing whereunto our Lord appointeth vs. And therefore let vs marke the thing which I haue touched already; that is to wit, that although a man cannot set downe a Lawe certeine in this behalfe; yet must euery man be a rule to himselfe, to doe according to his own abilitie and according to ỹ need that he seeth in his neighbors.

Now here is added yet further, That God will blesse such as doe so, according as hee had begun yesterday to promise his blessing to all such as were so liberally minded towardes the succoring of the poore. And this serueth still to correct the cursed vnbeleefe ỹ holdeth our heartes locked vp so as no man mindeth aught else than himselfe and his own profite. For it seemeth to vs ỹ if we forgo neuer so little of ỹ which we haue, we be in ỹ way to be vndone by it. That is ỹ cause why euery man holdes fast, & neuer thinkes hee hath enough. O (say we) it is true ỹ we may doe so and so: but thereby I should be impayred, & I cannot tell what may befall to my selfe. We cast so many doubtes, ỹ we can neuer finde occasion to giue any thing. And why so? Forsooth because I might want it my selfe. But ỹ is a cursed distrust, & such a one as prouoketh Gods wrath. For wee ought rather to hope well at his hand, ỹ as he hath not failed vs heretofore, so he will continue to doe vs good stil. And yet we go to seek these doubts afar off, which we be afraid of: insomuch ỹ it grieueth vs euen to heare thẽ spoken of. If a man shoulde say to vs, such a thing may befal the if thy house should be burned, & all thy goods be cõsumed in it, & thou be driuen to sell thy landes & possessions, in what case wart thou thẽ? None of these songes would please vs, but we would chafe and storme at him ỹ should speake so. And why? For a rich man would faine sleepe in his riches, hee hopeth ỹ he shal stand alwayes at one stay, & he foadeth himselfe in his delights. But in ỹ meane while, if he be to doe any good, he by & by forecasteth, O such a thing might befall me, famine & warre & I wote not what else must be feared. We heape together all ỹ mischaunces ỹ can bee deuised. And to what ende? Euen to shut vp our harts & our hands, ỹ we might do no mã good. Now our Lord minding to correct such distrust, bringeth vs backe to his blessing, & sayth, Know ye ỹ it belõgeth to me to multiply you. And therfore ye may wel hope ỹ when ye seeme to be impaired to ỹ worldward, yee shall haue a greater treasure thẽ if ye had kept all ỹ euer could haue come to your handes, and had neuer done any good to your neighbors to succor thẽ withal. For I am rich enough to fill you againe, euen when you be vtterly destitute of al things. Seeing ỹ our Lord speaketh after ỹ maner, must we not needs be woorse than infidels if wee bee not mooued thereat to doe good? Yea and though we go not to woorke with so earnest mindes as we should doe, yet if wee be not mooued at leastwise to doe somewhat; may it not bee sayd that wee stop our eares against God and giue him no audience at all, yea and that we giue no credit nor trust at all to any of his promises? Therefore let vs learne to wey better ỹ valew of this lesson cõcerning Gods blessing, & let no man rest vpon ỹ thinges ỹ he hath in his own possession, ne put such trust in thẽ as to say; This is my stay, this is truſt in them as to ſay; This is my ſtay, this is the ſtaffe that I muſt leane vpon, Let vs beware of ſuch truſt, for it is diueliſh. Nay rather, let vs think thus; Seeing ỳ God hath giuen me wherof to liue, I am contented with ỳ which I haue, and I hope ỳ he wil alſo prouide for me ſtil hereafter; and in ỳ mean time I wil ſo vſe ỳ which he giueth me, as I may ſuccour thoſe that haue neede. And therwithal I wil put from me al things that may draw me from ỳ obeying of my God, and from ỳ truſt which I ought to repoſe in his goodneſſe. Thus ye ſee how we ought to benefite our ſelues by ỳ promiſes of Gods bleſſing, ſo as they may quicken vs vp, not onely to haue recourſe vnto him, but alſo to vſe liberalitie towards thoſe that haue neede of vs, to the end ỳ our Lord may bee prayſed both of great & ſmall, poore & rich, and al of vs haue our cõtentmẽt in him alone, according to ỳ grace ỳ he ſhal haue beſtowed vpon vs.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in his preſence & acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs perceiue them better, & to touch vs to the quicke, to the ende that knowing his infallible truth, & what his wil is towards vs, we may be moued thereby to follow ỳ same, & to frame our ſelues to his exãple, by imparting our ſubſtance in ſuch wiſe to our neighbors, & by diſpenſing the good in ſuch ſorte which hee hath put into our hands, as we may one day yeeld him a good and faithful account of them, ỳ we haue not bin too much addicted to our ſelues: but ỳ when we ſhal haue indeuoured to doe good according to his meaning, our whole ſeeking may be to liue & die in his obedience, drawing others with vs to the ſelfeſame fayth, ſo as we may all call vpon him as our father truely and vnfeinedly, becauſe we mainteine a right brotherhoode with all ſuch as are knitte vnto vs. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The XCv. Sermon, which is the therde vpon the fifteenth Chapter.

11 For there ſhall euer be ſome needie folke in the Lande. And therefore I commaund thee, ſaying, that thou open thy hand to thy brother, to thy needie and to thy poore in the Lande.

12 When thy brother an Hebrewe, or [thy ſiſter] an Hebreweſſe ſhall bee ſolde himſelfe vnto thee, and ſerued thee ſixe yeres: in the ſeuenth yeere thou ſhalt let him goe free from thee.

13 And when thou letteſt him goe free from thee, thou ſhalt not let him goe emptie.

14 But thou ſhalt lode him vpon his necke with ſomewhat of thy flocke, of thy vyneyarde, and of thy winepreſſe. Thou ſhalt giue him of the things wherewith the Lorde hath bleſſed thee.

15 Remember how thou thy ſelfe waſt a bondſeruant in the Land of Egypt, & that the Lord thy God deliuered thee: and therfore doe I command thee this thing this day.

IT is ſayd in the common prouerb, that Lawes are not made for thinges that are not woont to come to paſſe, but for thinges that are in vre, and which it behoueth vs to practiſe dayly. And that is the cauſe why our Lord in this text ſayth, that his ſpeaking of ỳ ſuccoring of the poore is not without cauſe, for that as long as this mortal lyfe indureth, we ſhall euer finde whereon to execute our duetie, by reledting the neceſſities of our neighbours, becauſe there ſhall alwayes be poore folke among vs in the world. Thus we ſee in effect, ỳ Gods intent was to make the Iewes to take the better heede to his Lawe, foraſmuch as it was a very requiſite yea and neceſſarie thing, that they ſhould be put in minde of their duetie in ỳ behalfe. And thereupon we haue to gather, that the more auaileable a doctrine is to the well ordering of our lyfe, ỳ better ought we to ſet our mindes vppon it. We ſee a number of folk which are fond and curious in forecaſting for things that happen not once in a hundred yeres: they imagine things ỳ are vtterly vnpoſſible: & if the ſhould come to paſſe (ſay they) what ſhould we doe then? They beat their braines about things that haue no profit in them, and in the meane while they ſee not the things ỳ are before their feete. And for proofe hereof, how many are to be ſeene nowadayes, which groſly ouerſhoot themſelues in things that ought to be throughly knowen, ſhutting their eyes at them ſo as they ſee not one whit? And yet for all that, they vſe themſelues exceedingly in ſearching out I wote not what: and if a man aske them why they doe ſo, they cannot tel, but that they be drawen thereto by a fooliſh curioſitie. Therefore let vs haue in minde that our Lordes intent is to occupye vs occupyed ſo farre foorth as is for our behoofe. And that is the cauſe why that in the holy ſcripture, we ſee that God hath not vouſafed to feed our humors with thinges which he knoweth to le of no edificatiō, but restreineth vs to ỹ things which are for our behoofe to put in vre. Let vs consider then that euery of vs ought to looke diligently to his owne duetie: and that is the warning that is giuen vs in this text, where God telleth vs that he maketh not Lawes of things that concerne vs not, but that hee hath an eye to the thinges which we ought to put in practise dayly.

But now let vs come to this saying of his, That there shalbe poore folke continually. This was spoken expreslie, to doe vs to vnderstand that God will try our charitie. For he is rich enough to supply all mens wantes, and it commeth not of any niggardship, that he powreth not out his treasures vpon vs. What is the cause then that God suffereth men to be poore in this world, but onely to giue vs occasion to doe good? Therfore when we see one man poore & another rich, let vs not attribute it to fortune: but let vs vnderstand how it is God ỹ disposeth thinges so, and that it is not without reason. True it is ỹ our eyes shal not alwayes see why God inricheth one & impouerisheth another, we cannot discerne ỹ cause therof certenly. And by that meanes God will haue vs to cast downe our eyes oftentimes, to the end we should yeelde him the honor of gouerning men at his will, and according to his own deuice which is incōprehensible. Yet notwithstanding we haue to remember in generall, the thing that I haue touched already, which is, ỹ Gods distributing of these worldly goods so vnegally, is to know what it is in mens harts, by making a tryall of the) way. So ỹ if a man be rich, he may be the better discerned what a one he is. For thereby hee is inabled to doe hurt, and can the better indomage his enemies. But if he abstaine frō doing euil, if he exerce no crueltie towardes his neighbors, if he hold himselfe win his owne bodies wout couetīg more thā God giueth vnto him: it is a signe of honesty, which had not bin knowē if such occasiōs had not bin ministred vnto him. Again, if a man of wealth be liberall so as he indeuour to doe good to such as haue neede of his helpe, and aduaūce not himselfe through pride & stately nesse, but alwayes behaue himself mildly) is a very good proofe. If another mā be poore take patiently whatsoeuer it pleaseth God to send him, & moreouer be not led to any deceit or naughtinesse how much soeuer he suffer, or how hard soeuer his state be: that also is a good & chooseful tryal. Now the let vs mark ỹ wherein there are both rich and poore in this world, God hath so ordeined it, & it cōmeth of his prouidēce: & therfore wee must hold it for a sure groūd, ỹ there shal neuer want poore folkes.

And now by the way let vs come to that which I spoke of, namely that Gods commaunding of wealthie folke to haue their handes open to succour the poore and needy that are in the land, is not without cause. For it is as it were a setting downe before our eyes, wherein and after what manner he will be serued at our handes: namely in doing him homage with the goods which hee hath bestowed abundantly vppon vs: Yea verily, for he sendeth vs poore folkes to be as his receiuers. And although ỹ almesdeed be done to mortall creatures, yet doth God wel accept and well like thereof, & puteth it into his accountes, as though ỹ thinges which we bestow vpon ỹ poore were deliuered into his owne handes. Trueth it is ỹ as in respect of God ỹ deede ỹ wee doe is no almesdeede, but an homage of ỹ goods that hee hath giuen vs, & for the which we bee beholden to him. Yet neuertheles there is this moreouer, ỹ besides his accepting of the acknowledgement which we yeeld vnto him for ỹ good ỹ he dooth vs, it is all one as if ỹ mercie which we shew to our brethren, extended it selfe vnto him. And ỹ is the cause why it is sayd, that he which shutteth his eares at the crying of the poore, shall cry himselfe vnto GOD and not bee heard. Prou.21.13
On the contrary parte, if wee bee pitifull, and be moued to pitie the poore when we heare of their wants, God also wil vse pitie & compassion towards vs to succour vs againe at our neede. And in the same respect Moses sayth expresly in this text, that God cōmaundeth vs to haue our handes open to the poore that dwel in the land among vs. For God offereth them to vs, to the intent wee should haue no excuse to say, I wist not to whome I should doe good. Seeing then that our Lord ministreth the meanes vnto vs, we must not seeke for starting holes: for we shall bee still guiltie, because we haue not vsed the occasion that was offered vs. Our Lorde Iesus Christ goeth yet further and saith, that he himselfe will not be alwayes with vs, but that ỹ poore shall euer be with vs. For in cōmending ỹ deede that was done to his honour, because ỹ precious oyntment seemed superfluous, whē his head was annointed therewith, he sayd, let it be so for this once: but from thence forth he sendeth his disciples to the poore. And why? for it was all one as if he had sayd, that it was no ordinarie seruice that he required, nor for his own person, nor for the person of God his father, that men shoulde present him with the precious thinges of this world: for he had no need of the: but his will was ỹ looke whatsoeuer men were willing to bestowe vpō him they shold bestow it vpon ỹ poore. And here let vs mark well (ỹ as I haue touched afore) ỹ almesdeedes which we do to ỹ poore, are accepted of God as sacrifices done vnto him. Therefore let vs not deceiue ourselues in our offering vnto him, as though he receiued any thing at our handes: for he doth send vs backe againe, to doe good to such as stand in neede of our helpe. Mat.26.11 Hebr.13.16

Had this lesson bin well borne in minde, the wretched world had not so mispent their labor and mony in foolish pomps, as we see they haue done in the Popedome, where they vse a greate sorte of lightes, & a number of other petie trifles. And why is that? O they thinke that GOD taketh pleasure in paintinges, in imagerie, and in such other gewgawes. That is the thing wherein the world is wholy occupyed: and in the meane while the poore are let alone and forgotten. Contrariwise, our Lorde Iesus telleth vs that ỹ is the thing whereby God wil try whether we be willing to honor him or no. For (as I haue declared already) hee coulde well make all men rich: but he sendeth vs poore folke, to giue vs occasion to keepe our selues occupyed, if we haue any desire to shewe to whom we thinke

our selues beholden for our goods, & be minded to apply them to such vse as he may well lyke of. Therefore if we haue any such desire, the occasion to shewe it is offered vs & there neuer wanteth any. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to consider vppon this place.

It should seeme at ỹ first blush, ỹ this agreeth not with ỹ which we haue seene already, namely ỹ there should be no poore beggers in ỹ land. But ỹ solutiõ is very easie, because it may wel fall out ỹ there should be poore folkes, & yet that all begging be taken away. And soothely it must needes be a great shame for a people ỹ professe God, that there should be beggers among thẽ, because it is euen against common order & honestie. Although we had not the cõmaundemẽt of our God, yet let vs consider according to nature what may insew of suffering beggers to be. First it is a token ỹ the richer sort do deuour all, & that they haue no regard of succoring such as be in neede & penury. Againe, when the bridle is layd loose, we see it followeth ỹ the moe doe giue themselues to roging. For men knowe not to whome they giue, insomuch that when those kinde of people go crying vp & downe ỹ streetes from gate to gate, it cannot bee discerned whether they haue neede or no: and importunatest creatures doe commonly beare away that wherwith the poore should bee fed and maintained. Moreouer the rewarding of such as goe about begging after that fashion, is a maintenance of false harlotry. For there is none so great deceit to be found, as is in these Roges that go begging about. And he that is once nousled in roging, becommeth a theefe in the end. Finally although there were none other inconuenience; yet wee see that those which are once inured so with begging, can neuer fall to any labor afterward, nor learne to doe any good, but are idle bodies and loyterers euer after. Thus ye see how begging is euen by ỹ order of nature to be alwayes condẽned. For it bringeth nothing w̃ it but sinne and corruption, and all thinges must at length needs come to confusion, where begging is suffered & borne w̃. But wee haue Gods commaundemẽt which is a far higher thing, which saith ỹ we must not haue any beggers among vs, but ỹ the incõuenience thereof ought to be preuented aforehand, by relieuing such as want, accordingly as men can discern of thẽ, & be of abilitie to succor thẽ. Ye see then that these two places are not cõtrary one to another. For wheras he saith ỹ there shal alwayes be poore folke; it is to the end (as I haue sayd afore) that ỹ rich should haue occasiõ to offer such sacrifice to God as he requireth, by succouring the needy with such things as they haue in their handes, and by doing it with discretion, by searching out as much as is possible who they bee that haue neede. But that men should giue without discretion, or that it should be lawfull for men to goe begging vp and downe the streetes, or to stand begging at the gates or at mens doores: it is a shamefull thing & against all good order, and bringeth nothing but confusion, as a nourishmẽt of euil in all those to whom such libertie is giuen, as I haue shewed already.

Now remaineth to put this doctrine in practise. First of all we must vnderstand, that according to the greatnesse of mens necessities, God stirreth vs vp euer to doe them the more good, & it is then chiefe time to streine our selues, when there is any famine or dearth. For then we ought rather to cut their owne morsels from vs, than to suffer others to want, the misdoing being so in excesse. And whereas many men take occasion to pinche when they see a deere yeare, bearing themselues in hand that it serueth their turne well to make their hand the better: Let vs vnderstand that our Lord doth then cite vs and declare vnto vs that if euer we be minded to doe him homage with the goods that he hath put into our handes, hee will haue vs to vse it at that time. Let that serue for one point. And whereas we see many poore folke in necessitie, let vs assure our selues that our Lord warneth vs that it is as a waking of vs from sleepe, and that because wee haue not bin sufficiently mindefull of our duetie, our Lord commeth to put vs in remembrance of that which he had commanded vs: and that if we be not too lazie, we must needes inforce our selues, to consider euery of vs the measure that is giuen him & the ability of his power, & thereafter imploy himself. That is a thing that wee haue to marke in the first place.

And as touching the second point, Let vs looke to keepe order and pollicie, so as the shame and dishonestie of begging be not among vs. For why, it is nothing else but a nourishment of wicked rascals, and they will neuer be brought to any good, which are so maintained, but they become roges and idle persons as I haue tolde you before. And in the end they take a pleasure in their begging, and finde it well of their scrippe or wallet, that they would not chaunge it for a yeerely rent: Which thing experience shewes too much. To be short, of Roges, they become robbers, & in the end what must become of that? Therefore let all this be takẽ away, vnlesse we purpose to prouoke Gods wrath wilfully, & to cause thinges to grow euery day worse than other. But yet howsoeuer ỹ we stand, let vs see that ỹ poore be maintained. For if a man forbid begging, & therwithal doe no almes at all: it is as much as if he did cut ỹ throats of those that are in necessitie. Nay, we must prouide for the poore, & redresse their want: for such as are stout beggers and apparantly found not to be pitied, may be reformed. For they do but eate vp ỹ others bread, & rob ỹ needy of that which should be giuen vnto thẽ. That (ỹ) is effect, is the thing that we haue to marke here. But how may ỹ be done? First ỹ Hospitals should prouide wel for such needs. For what a shame is it, that ỹ goods which are dedicated to God and ỹ poore, should neuertheless be applied to other vses? That is not simple robbery, but a robbing of God. Therefore let thẽ be imployed according to his cõmaundemens; & let not ỹ good husbãds in hording vp ỹ things that ought to be bestowed vpon God & vpon those whom he offreth vnto vs. Also according as euery man knoweth ỹ particular needes of his neighbor, so let him indeuour to succour thē, and consider where waste or neede is, and helpe to remedie it. If this be done, then shal beggerie be taken away as it ought to be, and they shall not neede to make a simple forbidding of it: saying, let not men beg any more: & in the meane season ỹ poore be left destitute, to die for hūger & thirst.

And truly it is not for nought ỹ our Lord saith here, thy poore & thy needie which are in thy Lād. He could wel inough haue said, the poore & needie: but he vseth another maner of phrase saying, thy poore and thy needie. As if he should say, if a man bee poore, euery body disdaynes him and turnes his backe to him: and why is that? Because the rich doe beare themselues in hand, that the poore are not worthie to come ny them, & they could finde in their hartes neuer to see thē. But on ỹ contrary part, to pull downe such pride & presumpcion, our Lord sayth, who are thou that despisest so thy brother? He is thy poore, he is thy needy. He pertaineth as to our owne flesh. Therefore let vs wey well the wordes which the holy Ghost hath vsed, that no pride may hinder vs to haue compassion vppon those that are so vnited vnto vs. And let vs marke that they bee our owne poore folkes, ỹ is to say, ỹ the persons which are so in need, are offered vnto vs of the Lord, as if hee should say, it is my will to make such an interchange, as the rich may be mingled wt the poore, & either of them may meete wt other, to the intent they should cōmunicate together, ỹ poore to receiue & the rich to giue, so as I may be honored at the handes of them both, as well for ỹ ỹ rich man hath wherwt to do good, as for that ỹ poore man acknowledgeth himselfe to be sustened & maineined for my names sake, & so both of thē blesse me. That is ỹ cause why Moses speaketh of ỹ poore & needy after such a sorte, ỹ he putteth ỹ rich how it is they themselues whom he speaketh to, & that there ought to be a kinde of mutuel cōmoning between thē & the poore, not to make thē fellowlyke, but to relieue ỹ neede of those whom God offreth vnto thē after ỹ maner.

After this, Moses addeth a law ỹ serued but for ỹ common weale of ỹ Iewes, & substance whereof continueth neuertheless vnto vs at this day. If thy brother an Hebrewe (sayth he) or thy sister an Hebrewesse be solde vnto thee, let him serue thee sixe yeares, & in the seuenth yeere thou shalt release him, and at thy releasing of him, thou shalt not sende him away empte, but thou shalt giue him some Corne of thine owne, according to thy abilitie, that he may liue of the blessing which the Lord thy God hath giuen thee, and that thy seruāt may be as a lyre vnto him. Now we must marke, ỹ in those dayes there were no such seruantes as are nowadayes which take certein wages by ỹ yeere: but they were in bōdage after ỹ maner of those whom wee call bondslaues in Barbarie & in other countries in these dayes. So then they were al slaues at ỹ time, & among the heathen ỹ bondage was endlesse: insomuch ỹ if a man had lued a hundred liues, yet should hee neuer haue bin released, vnlesse his maister had priued him. Moreouer, the man ỹ had such slaues might mary them, & forasmuch as the wretched soules were not free thē selues, their children also were in bondage lyke ỹ beastes ỹ we haue. If a man haue Horses, Kine, Cattel, or Sheepe, hee reapeth ỹ fruite of thē: & so did they wt their bōd seruants at ỹ time. And surely ỹ state of bondage as it was then through ỹ whole world, was very hard. For it was Lawfull euen among Christians. It is not cōmaunded to be abolished: Wee see ỹ whereas S. Paul speaketh of maisters ỹ had such bondseruants & were faithfull, he biddeth them not to set thē quite at libertie, but so deale gētly by all kinde of meanes. Know ye (saith he) ỹ you haue one cōmon Maister in heauē, & that your seruantes be Gods children as well as you: and therefore deale gently wt them, & hold them not in such thraldome as ỹ vnbeleeuers doe. S. Paul, ỹ is to say ỹ holy Ghost speaking by his mouth, thinketh ỹ to be enough. Howbeit forasmuch as the Iewes were priuiledged, & God had chosen them for his owne inheritance: it behoued some moderation or mitigation to be among them, so as they should not vse so extreme rigor as was among the Heathen. Neuertheless it is a good thing, ỹ this slauish bondage is abolished in time among ỹ faithful, howbeit ỹ there continue still some remnantes of it in some places, but yet is ỹ same much more tollerable thē so rough a law could haue bin. For whereas there are some persons which are still taxable (as they terme it) at this day, whether it be in their goods or in their persons: it is of ỹ olde slauery, & they be of ỹ race of such as were very slaues in old time, & of such as might haue bin handled as bondslaues by rigor of Law. But as I sayd, this may wel be borne wt: and it was a vertue worthie of cōmendation, that the parties which had such bondslaues, released them vppon a certaine qualification.

Eph. 6, 9.

But now let vs come againe to ỹ Law ỹ is giuē here to ỹ Iewes. It is sayd that such as were solde should serue by the space of sixe yeeres: and the seuenth yeere is priuiledged here in honor of ỹ Saboth day, ỹ is to say of ỹ rest, whereby our Lord ment alwayes to reduce the Iewes to gentlenes, by bringing them backe to himselfe. As if hee should say, assure your selues ỹ your vsing of such mercie towardes your neighbors, is an acceptable seruice vnto me. For ỹ day of rest was ỹ very marke of Gods spirituel seruice, as is declared vnto vs in many places of ỹ scripture, both in Exodus & Ezechiel where our Lorde speaketh precisely of ỹ day of rest, & also in ỹ xvii. Chapter of Ieremie. Yea & he speaketh in such wise of it, as though all his seruice cōsisted therein. And why is that? Because ỹ on the day of rest, hee called ỹ people to himself, as if he should say, know me, let me be worshipped, let euery man giue his minde to consider my goodnesse, my Iustice, my wisedome, & my power. And therewithall rest your selues in me, and let euery of you forbeare his owne will, and his owne lykinges, that yee may be, as it were subiected vnder my yoke, and I gouerne you. We see then ỹ the day of rest was as ỹ principal seruice of God. Now forasmuch as mē cānot acquaint thē selues wt the dooing of good to their neighbors, nor wil willingly giue ouer their right whē they haue thē at a vātage, & can hardly be be drawen to doe so much as they ought to do. Therefore doth our Lord set this before them here, and say, such as release their bondseruantes doe me acceptable seruice, whereof I giue them the day of rest for a signe & sure token. Seeing then that I set betweene you and me, this token & warrant, know ye ỳ your giuing of release to your bondseruantes is by mine authoritie, so as I am among you & ouerrule you in that act, and your dooing of it is for my sake. Though yee haue no regard of men, because yee thinke yee should not owe them so much seruice, at leastwise yet consider how much you be bound to me. Thus ye see now to what end the seuenth yeere was assigned. Sixe yeeres (sayth hee) shall they serue you, & the seuenth yeere you shal let them goe. And he contenteth not himselfe with the onely releasing of the bondseruantes, but he will also haue men to giue them somewhat wherewith to set vp their trade. And not without cause: For euen the heathen themselues at ỳ same time in which I tolde you, ỳ that bondage was most rife, could skil to say that they were not to be vsed as bondseruants but as hirelinges, ỳ is to say, after ỳ maner of our seruants ỳ take wages by ỳ yeere at this day. Is it not a great shame ỳ the heathē both Greekes and Latins could speake after this fashion, we haue bondslaues, we may vse thē as Oxen & Asses: but that is vilanous, it is out of all order: & therefore albeit that it be lawful for vs by the ciuill Lawes, yet is it against all humanitie, & we ought to haue another regard. As how? Surely we must vse thē as though they were freemen whom we hyred for wages. If ỳ blind wretches spake so, & perceiued that this kinde of vpright dealing was requisite: what shall become of vs? Verily God hath punished such as haue dealt roughly with them. For it was lawfull for a Maister in olde time to kill his bondseruant, & he needed not to aske leaue of ỳ Magistrate to put his seruāt to torture, but he might teare him in peeces one mēber from another, yea euen at home in his own priuate house: & when his Maister had so murthered him, no man sought Iustice or reformation of it. True it is ỳ in the ende men were forbidden to kill thē wout examination of their cases: but yet had ỳ Maisters alwayes ỳ authoritie stil. And because they abused it, God payed thē home with the lyke againe, so as they had a common prouerb among thē, That looke how many bondseruantes a man had at home, so many enemies had he. Also they could well skill to cōdemne thē selues, saying: they bee not enemies borne, but we make them our enemies by our cruelty. Seeing then ỳ the heathē knew thus much: it was requisite ỳ there shold be some greater mieldnesse & humanitie among gods people ỳ were chosen of a singular priuiledge. That is ỳ cause why God sayd expreslỳ ỳ they should bee helped at their departing from their houses in ỳ seuenth yeere. For if a poore man be sent away stark naked, now & then he had leuer to continue a slaue stil, thā to goe seeke what shal betide him he wot not where. A poore man that hath not much to take to, can finde in his hart to take paynes: & so he may haue meat & drinke, hee is at a poynt. Thereupon he taketh paines in his Maisters house: Now if his Maister driue him out of his doores & say get thee hence: He may cry alas, what shal become of me? I haue not a bit of bread to eat, I haue no lodging, I wote not where to become. This sending away of their seruants naked, was an indirect meanes to hold thē in bondage still. For this cause our Lord sayth, whō ye haue bin serued by ỳ space of six yeeres by those ỳ are your brethrē, giue thē somewhat in reward péce of their seruice, according to your ability.

Again, to ỳ end ỳ men should be ỳ willinger to such liberalitie, Look into your stables (saith he) & into storehouses, & into your garners. Because men are alwayes repining: here God falleth to making of an Inuentorie. O (sayes one) I haue not so much to giue: & what wote I whether I my selfe shall want or no? Our Lorde therefore maketh an Inuentorie to discusse ỳ matter, saying, What? Cannot he which hath Corne in his garner giue to him ỳ hath serued him, whom himself he hath drawen in making him to labor for him? Ought he not at leastwise to haue an eye to the corne ỳ is in his garner? He hath husbanded his ground, he hath tilled it, he hath toyled himself about it: & is it not reason ỳ he should taste some sweetenesse & fruite of it? Besides this, he goes to his winepresse & to his stalles: as if he should say, let euery man see what hee hath, for according to your abilitie you be bound to recompense them ỳ haue trauelled for you, & haue bin instrumentes of such blessinges. For if we thanke God w^th^ our mouthes, confessing ỳ it is he which hath blessed vs, & in ỳ meane while make no account of such as he hath sent to doe vs seruice in ỳ increase of our liuing, by taking paynes and toyle for vs: all our thanking of him is but labor & vtter hypocrisie. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to marke vppon this text.

This law is set down lykewise in ỳ xxi. Chapter of Exodus. Notwithstanding, although God had spoken of it after ỳ fashion, yet was ỳ thing not obserued which he commaunded here. And hereby we see how malitious, hardhearted, yea and wilfull stubborne ỳ Iewes were. For as often as God punished them, & they were driuen to sorrow vnto him whether they would or no, they pretended a willingnesse to submit thēselues to him, & to take some good way of amendment, [though they meant it not:] which thing among others he casteth in their teeth, saying: what I haue commaūded you cōcerning your brethren ỳ are your seruants, ỳ ye should let thē go free & free in ỳ seuenth yere: but ye haue not done. Now thē seeing ỳ my lawe is set in force again. Let it be kept. In deed when men be pinched & constrained by necessitie, then they can make some faire couenante & shew well enough. Go to then, let seruantes be released: but immediately after they haue shiftes to bring thē vnder again, as if a man should make a theefe to creepe vnder his arme, as who would say he shold make restitution of his theft, & whereas he pretended to take it from him with the one hand he should conuey it to him again with the other. After the same maner was God mocked with his owne law, yea euen notwithstanding this the Iewes were punished extremely at that time, and sore vpon this that God persecuted them & did set himselfe against them because of their disobedience. As touching the bondseruants that would not vse ỹ freedome that was graunted them, wee shall see more in the next sermon. But as touching the common law; the Iewes were so full of malice, ỹ they refused to giue freedome to their bondseruants.

And here the first thing that wee haue to gather, is the substance of the lawe, which concerneth euen vs at this day. There is no more any such bondage among vs as was then among the Iewes and all the heathen: In deede in some countries the same bondage remaineth still, as in the East countries, in Greece, and in Barbarie, but yet for all that it is the better that the vse of it is abolished, as it is among vs: and that is a very commendable thing. Yet notwithstanding, it behoueth vs to consider, how our Lord admonisheth vs by his lawe, to deale gently with such as do vs seruice, so as wee beare with them and defraud them not of their hire, ne stand vpon rigor towards them to take the vttermost of them that we may, but that we deale vprightly with them, & rule our selues, as those that haue a stay of the selues & looke not to be compelled by lawe, but euery man rightly to rule himselfe. That is the thing in effect which we haue to note in this text. As how? A master that hath a seruaunt wringeth all euer he can out of him without any regarde to him: therin he shewes himselfe to be cruel. If he say, I find him meat & drink, & I pay him his wages: that is true, but he must also haue respect what he is able to do, & what seruice he may reape at his hand. Aboue all things we must haue an eye to this natural vprightnes; that we do not any thing to another body, which we would not haue done to our selues. If a man haue seruants, he ought to think with himself, how would I desire to be dealt with, if I were in their stead? I wold desire to be borne with. Trueth it is that we must make at that point when a seruant wouldè liue idly & do nothing, but wold be kept like a cockney, neuer to put his hande to the doing of any thing. For it is not ment of such as liue disorderly, but only of such as we know to be reasonable. As how? I thinke with my selfe, if I were in this fellowes place, what ought I to do? I speake not here of wishing, but of ỹ reasonablenes which euery of vs knoweth. For when the case concerneth our own profit or disprofit, we can very well skill to iudge of it: but when the case concerneth other men, then are we blynd. But such as haue seruants ought to consider thus with themselues: If I were in their roome, what would I reasonably desire to be done to mee? Then must I not take more vppon mee than my conscience warranteth mee. For although there were no iudge to condemne mee, nor lawe to accuse mee: yet doeth mine owne conscience suffice in that it findeth fault with mee. Thus wee see, that although this lawe belonged peculiarly to ỹ state of the Iewish common weale, where this kind of bondage was vsed: yet notwithstanding it conteineth a lesson beneficial to vs at this day: that is to wit, that it behoueth vs to vse our seruants in such wise, as they bee not oppressed beyonde measure, nor cruelly handled; and secondly that wee be kindhearted towardes euery of them, to do them good, and to shewe in very deede that wee be willing to agree to his good will. For it is not ynough for the mouth to speake vnlesse the hande be aunswerable to the same. That is the thing in effect, which wee haue to marke vppon this text.

Therewithall let vs wey well the words wherin our Lord maketh an inquisition of euery mans goods, & let vs consider howe it serueth to shewe vs that in the ende wee must come to account, so as wee may not thinke to slip the colar and to shift our handes by saying, Do what I can, I shall not bee well reported of for my labour: after which sort some folkes continually repine when they bee spoken to concerning almesdeedes, to whome it seemeth to bee as good as hasing of them to the galowes, if ye do but speake to them of the opening of their purses. To the end therfore that wee shoulde not imagine that such shiftes can goe for paiment before God: let vs marke well howe hee telleth vs here, that he forgetteth not what hee hath giuen vs, but can very well cast vs in the teeth with it. And seeing he casteth vs in the teeth with it alreadie in this worlde; what will he do when all things shalbee brought to light, & when the bookes of account shalbe layd open? Wil there be any excuse then? No: for then euen the secretest thinges shalbee layde open: and what will become then of the things that are apparantly knowen? Shal a man escape the iudgement of God, when he is found to bee a niggard and a churle euen before men? So then let vs beware that we behaue our selues well in this behalfe: and for the better doing thereof, let euery of vs mark the forme of speech which the holy Ghost vseth in this text, forasmuch as it serueth to search vs to the bottom, to the intent ỹ wheras euery of vs hides himself away when he should do an good, no man should shrink backe, but euery man put forth himselfe according to his abilitie & state. Dan. 7. 10. 1. Cor. 4. 5.

Now for a conclusion our Lord addeth here, that the Iewes had beene in bondage in the lande of Egypt, and therefore he commandeth them to be kindharted & pitifull towards those that are in their seruice. And hereby it is shewed vs, that if our Lord haue giuen vs experience of aduersity, we must be the readier to succour the distressed, & not play the proud fooles which cannot abide to heare their former state spoken of, when they haue beene in pouertie, but are more scornefull and disdainfull than such as haue liued continually at their ease. Nay, if our Lorde haue suffered vs to bee pinched, and to stande in neede of otherfolks seruice; let vs print it throughly in our minder, & let it bee as a spurre to quicken vs vp, that whensoeuer we see any folke in necessitie, it may alwayes runne in our mindes, Alas, when I was in their case, what desired I? I could haue founde in my heart that all men should haue opened their heartes and their bowels towardes mee: and shall I nowe shut vp mine? Lo what the declaration that is set down here importeth.

And it is not in this place onely that Moses vseth to say so. For there is not any thing more rife in all his bookes: insomuch that euer after the peoples deliuerance out of the lande of Egypt, Remember (sayeth hee) from time to time, that thou thy selfe hast beene in bondage. Therefore let vs marke, that looke what experience euery of vs hath had in his life, Gods will is that the same shoulde serue vs for an instruction, and that wee shoulde beare it continually in minde. As for example, when a man hath beene a traueller of countryes, he ought to consider into what distresses a man might fall: and hee shalbee the more inclyned to succour others whome he seeth in like daunger. Againe, when a man hath beene pinched for a time with pouertie, and afterwarde commeth to wealth, his former pouertie ought to bee a teacher to him for euer after, to bee the forewarder to put foorth himselfe where neede requireth. True it is that although a man had liued all the dayes of his life in ease, and neuer wist what neede or want meant: yet shal hee not therefore be holde excused before God. But yet forasmuch as wee bee so slacke and slowe to doe good: wee had neede to take to vs the helpes that may serue to quicken vs vp withall. And so let euery of vs for his owne parte cheere vp himselfe to do good. As for the riche which neuer haue tasted any want of the goods of this worlde, if they looke into them selues, they shall finde that God hath visited them some way or other, so as they haue had neede of other folkes helpe. And if they be not starke churles, the same must needes bee as a stroke with a spurre, to thrust them forwarde to weldoing.

To conclude in fewe wordes, the principall purpose of this place, is that besides the vprightnesse which is of nature, our Lord wil haue euery man to bee inclined to mercie, to do good to such as haue neede. But put the case there were none other respect why wee shoulde succour our neighbours but onely this, that wee be men: is not that respect great ynough? Yes, for vnder this worde Man, wee comprehend many miseries. When I see a man in distresse, I finde in my selfe that I shoulde bee subiect to the like thinges, if God had not a speciall regard of mee. There is neither sickenesse, pouertie, nor any other like thing in any body, but that wee our selues are subiect to the same miseries. And what is the cause that wee bee cleare from them? The goodnesse of our God. And the cause why hee spareth vs and beareth with vs, is to the ende that wee shoulde bee mindfull of such as haue need. For it is a very great proofe of Gods goodnesse towardes mee, that hee not onely exempteth mee from the aduersities which I see in my neyghbours, but also giueth mee wherewith to remedie theirs. And therefore it ought to be a sufficient prouocation for mee, that they bee of mine owne flesh, and of mine owne nature, so as there is no difference betwixt vs but that God hath aduaunced the one of vs, and put the other backe. For wee be all of one lumpe, and it is not for any man to glorie, as though hee had his riches of him selfe. If a man bee not so miserable as a number of others are, hee ought not to bee proude of it, but rather to consider that he is so much the more bounde vnto God. Accordingly therefore as God bestoweth his benefites vppon vs, let vs beware that wee acknowledge it towardes him, by doing good to our neighbours whome he offereth vnto vs, so as wee neither exempt our selues from their want, nor seclude them from our aboundance, but gendy vnto them partakers with vs, as folke that are linked togither in an vnseparable bond.

And nowe let vs fall down in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we may returne to him with true repentance, and misliking our former life, craue forgiuenes and mercie at his hande, and bee alwayes ready hereafter to yeeld our selues to his obedience, so as our whole seeking may be to glorifie him in all cases, after such a sort as our whole life may shewe that wee haue well profited in his holy worde. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

On Munday the iiij. of Nouember. 1555.

The XCvj Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the fifteenth Chapter.

16 And if hee happen to say to thee, I will not depart from thee because I loue thee and thy house, by reason that he findeth himselfe well with thee:

17 Then shalt thou take an Aule, and bore him through the eare to the doore, and hee shalbee thy bondman for euer. And likewise shalt thou do to thy wo-manseruaunt, 18 Let it not grieue thee to let him go free from thee: for he hath serued thee sixe yeares as a hyreling of double wages. And the Lorde thy God will blesse thee in all thy dooings.

16 All

19 All the first borne males that breede of thy cattell and of thy flockes, thou shalt sanctifie to the Lord thy God. Thou shalt not labour with the first borne of thy kyne, nor shere the first borne of thy sheepe.

20 But thou shalt eate them, thou and thy household from yere to yere in the presence of the Lord thy God, in the place which the Lorde will choose.

21 But if there be any blemish in it, so as it be lame or blinde, or haue any euill fault in it: thou shalt not offer it to the Lorde thy God:

22 But shalt eate it within thy gates, as well the vncleane as the cleane, both alike, as the fallow deere and the Red deere.

WEe haue seene already the lawe which God placed among the Iewes, whereby bondage was not to continue for euer, but y the person which had bin solde should serue sixe yeres, and afterward be set at libertie. And I told you that although the like law be not among vs nowadays; yet notwithstanding we may gather a very profitable lesson of that which is therin contained, y is to wit, that he which hath any superioritie ouer others, ought to forbeare all tyranny, & to be kyndharted towardes those whom God hath put in subiection to him, so as he reigne not ouer them with crueltie, ne inforce them to all that euer he may, but deale gently with them as with his brethren. And although wee bee not nowadays all of one linage as the Iewes were: yet must it suffice vs that wee haue all one father & one master in heauen, as is declared vnto vs. For by meanes of our Lord Iesus Christ, wee be so vnited togither, that there is such a brotherhood betwixt vs, as cannot be broken without forsaking the adoption which God hath made of vs. And therfore as many as intend to be taken for Gods children, must louingly beare with all those whō they may commaund. Againe, we must come to account, so as if wee will obtaine mercie at the hand of God, & be borne withall by his gracious hand, wee must looke to doe the like to such as are in subiection to vs.

But nowe Moses addeth an exception to the law, whereby he had commanded to set seruants at libertie after sixe yeres seruice; and he sayeth that if any seruant be so well contented with his state, that when his master is readie to sende him away & to giue him reward, he will say vnto his master; Nay sir, I had liefer to tary still in thy house because I finde my self well at ease: then shall his master take an Aule, & bore through his seruants eare in token that hee is his for euer. Yet was not this done without consideration of the case, as is written in the xxi. of Exodus. For there it is sayde expressely that the master shall call to the Iudges, that the matter may bee inquired of by them. For otherwise, euery master might haue made the worlde beelene, that his seruaunt was desirous to bee his for euer. Therefore it behoued the thing to bee prooued; and then was his eare boared through at the doore, to the ende that the matter might bee done openly to the sight of all men. For in such eases there might haue beene much collusion, yea, and also compulsion, and a man might haue beene so vrged by constraint of much beating, that hee woulde haue consented to haue beene in perpetuall bondage. But when the thing was done in open sight, so as the Iudges were called to the matter: then was there no deceite, neither coulde they bee beguyled which did so yeelde themselues into bondage.

And as touching the marking of them, it was a common thing in the East countryes. And it is seene in other Cōtries also, that such as were marked, were of worse state and condition than other bondeseruauntes were: but in this place there is no meaning of any harder bondage than the rest. And because God had graunted that priuiledge among his people; he addeth that if any man woulde needes be a bondeslaue of his own wil, then he should beare some marke thereof. But yet was this marke made without any wounding, as if the tip of a mans eare should bee boared with a pinne or with an awle that were sharpe, it coulde put him to no payne, and it was no more but to make the matter knowen. And whereas God sayth that he should be so for euer, Leuit. 25. 39. we must vnderstand that the yeere of Iubile was excepted, as we may see in other places. And in very deede, the compasse of fiftie yeeres was called a worlde, and the worde that Moses vseth is taken sometimes for the age of a man. His meaning then is, that he which consenteth to be a bondeslaue, shall abide in that state for euer, that is to say euen vntill the state of the countrie be renewed, as well concerning mens Landes as their persons: at which time euery man entered againe into his owne heritage, that God might alwayes be knowen to be both soueraigne Lord and as it were the onely Lorde of the soile, & that the inhabiters were not owners and freeholders, Leuit. 25. 23. but onely as tennauntes at will, or farmers, for those are the verie termes that our Lorde vseth. Therefore his will was that the parting of the Lande which was made by his commaundement shoulde bee kept: the meane whereof was that euery man shoulde returne to his owne inheritaunce & possession at the fiftith yeere, at which time the whole state of the Realme was chaunged in all other thinges. Thus see we now what was the effect of this Lawe.

wee ought alwayes to beare in minde what hath beene treated of, namely that this law was farre other than ỹ law of seruiceship that is among vs. For as now we hyre seruants for wages, whereas in those dayes they were bought and solde, and men vsed them much more hardly than they do nowadayes. If a seruant had beene misintreated at his masters hande, he coulde not depart from him, nor haue any law against him: but hee was faine to obey his master in al that euer he would put him to. If his master would sende him to the feelds, or vse him as a droyle in his house to doe whatsoeuer he had to be done; it was not for the seruant to hang the groyne at it, or to say I cannot do it: for his master would vse him as he listed; in so much as hee woulde marrie him euen spyte of his heart, & take his children from him. And though the seruant were set at libertie at ỹ seuenth yere, yet his children were faine to abyde in bondage still. That is one thing which we haue to note. Now then, seeing that the state of seruants was so grieuous: it may wel be sayde, that there were masters of singular humanitie among the people of Israel, seeing that a seruaunt could find in his heart to say, I am contented to dwell with you still. Freedome (as the Heathen themselues haue saide) is an ineſtimable benefit: & when lawes speake thereof, it is preferred in fauour before all other things. And sith it is so, what a thing was it that a man should giue ouer his freedome, which ought to be as deere to him as his life? Needs must it be said that he was gently delt with. And this ought to make vs greatly ashamed. For seeing a man might safely at that time by the lawes of man, vse his bondseruaunt as he listed: must not those whom Moses speaks of here, needes condemne the person ỹ vseth crueltie towards his household folk, now when we be brydled by the ciuil lawes? Yes: for they had not Iesus Christ as yet reueiled vnto them, who hath gathered vs togither into the spiritual kinred, as hath bin touched heretofore. It was not declared vnto them ỹ God would haue vs to bee members of his only sonne, yea euen bondslaues & such as are of the worst state that is. Sith it is so, let vs haue an eye to our selues: & let not the example that Moses setteth downe here, bee a witnesse before God to condemne our excessiue crueltie against those whom God hath made our vnderlings. Marke that for one point.

Horat. 1. Epist. 10.

Eph. 3. 15. 2. Cor. 12. 13 Gal. 3. 28.

Moreouer let vs marke, ỹ the boring of ỹ seruants eare ỹ is spoken of here, is to auoide ỹ blearing of mens ees, & that the matter should come to open triall. For although there were courteous masters to be found among the Iewes: yet notwithstanding the most part of them were after ỹ cõmon trade of ỹ world, as alwayes we see, ful of malice, ful of fraud, & ful of outrage. For there were of them ỹ woulde haue drawen their seruants by naughtie meanes to say, thou thinkest thy selfe nowe scaped my handes, but I will make thee come againe after another fashiõ. Or else peraduenture he woulde haue flattered his seruant for a time: & vnder pretence of dealing wel with him for a moneth or sixe weekes, hee would haue drawen him into his nettes & snares to bynd himself to this perpetual bondage. For this cause it was our Lords wil that it should passe by order of law, & ỹ the magistrates should haue knowledge therof. And hereby we see how men had always need to be brydled, & to haue their naughtines preuented: for it were pitie else. And although this seeme somwhat hard, yet was it ordeined in fauor of ỹ seruãts rather than of ỹ masters. If there were any such mark here among vs nowadayes: very wel, it were a kind of reproche. And why so? for such a one should shew himself to haue had no heart: for he should rather haue liued of his hãdie labor, & to haue scratched his liuing out of the earth, rather than to haue forgone his libertie whẽ he was to be set free. Therefore ỹ world sees ỹ such a one is but an yldebelly & a very blockhead. Thus it should seeme at ỹ first blush, that God here doth punish the guiltlesse. For if a man be in good state, and therewith is cõtented to yeeld himself into perpetual bondage; should he be put to shame for his labour? Nay, our Lords meaning was to waken vp those that were to enter into such bondage, as if hee should say; Beware what ye do: For they come to nayle you to the dore, to shewe you that ye shoulde bee tyed to this place, to bee his bondseruauntes for euer to whome yee binde your selues, and so you do after a sort renounce that prauiledge which I had giuen you: and therefore looke well about you what you do. We see then that this lawe was not made for the maisters sakes but for the seruauntes sakes, to the intent they should bethinke themselues throughly what they went about to be bound: and ỹ euen when they came to the deed doing, they might bee at choice still to say, I will depart free, I am mine own man, I wil vse the libertie ỹ God giueth me. Thus wee see in fewe wordes, howe Gods intent was not onely to shewe to the maisters that they themselues also were vnder commandement: but also to warne such as had bin misuised, to beware howe they dyd cast themselues into perpetuall bondage. And so let vs make in fewe wordes vpon this text, that the gentlenesse which we owe to our neighbours, is precious in the sight of God. For seeing he hath such a care of it, and hath inioyned it so by his worde: it is a token that it is an acceptable sacrifice to him. Will wee then please God? Let vs vse such gentlenesse towardes our neighbours, that euen they themselues which are in subiection to vs, may haue cause to esteeme of themselues and to reioyce and prayse God, ỹ wee behaue our selues as brethren towardes them. And let such as are maisters thinke alwayes with themselues, This doth not take away nor abolish the spirituall kinred which God hath planted and stablished betweene the great and the small. But seeing hee vouchsafeth them the honour to be their fathers it is good reason ỹ wee also should take them for our brethren, forasmuch as he hath chosen them as well as vs. That is the thing in effect which we haue to gather vpon this text.

And Dauid seemeth to haue had an eie to this Ceremonie in the fortith Psalm where he sayth, Sacrifice and oblation for sinne are not ỹ thing that thou Lorde requirest: but thou hast boared mine eare. As if hee should say that God desireth not sacrifices at our handes, but would haue vs to be wholy his, and to bee wholly giuen vnto him, accordingly also as ỹ scripture exhorteth vs 1 Cor. 10. not only to offer this thing or that thing to god, but also to offer him our bodies and soules, that he may possesse & enioy vs. When S. Paul sheweth vs the seruice which he calleth reasonable; he sayth not, offer of your goods vnto God: but mortifie your selues as true sacrifices. And therupon hauing mortified our humane reason, and all our thoughts and lustes, let vs offer vp our selues (saith hee) as liuing sacrifices to God. Nevertheless Gods meaning is not to haue vs offer vp our selues as temporall sacrifices, so as wee shoulde be willing to honour him to day, & forget him quite and cleane to morrowe: but he will haue vs to be his both in life and death, ac- Rom. 14. 8. cordingly as it is saide in the xiiij. to the Romanes, that our Lorde Iesus dyed & rose again, to the ende that wee should liue and dye to him. It seweth then that Dauids speaking of the boaring of his eare, was to shewe that our giuing of our selues to our God must not bee for a time, & then at the ende thereof to take our leaue of him: but that as wee haue liued in his obedience alreadie, so wee be readie to dye in the same, following his call vnto the ende, without ceassing or altering our purpose. We knowe then ỹ God requireth not sacrifice, for ỹ chiefe thing ought to go before, and that is, to be wholly his.

Againe, when a man dedicateth himself vnto God, it is certaine that all that euer he hath doth follow him. But yet the offering vp of our selues must be all wholly, so as hee enioy both our bodies and our soules, and be glorified throughout by vs. And as touching this matter which wee treate of nowe presently, it is to bee noted that god is not contented with our seruing of him for a time, as a number doe that make faire shewes at first, who thinke themselues well discharged when they haue done a thing or twaine in ỹ honour of God, and therefore would exempte themselues from euer putting to their hand any more as long as they liue. Let vs beware wee deale not so, but rather as I haue tolde you alreadie, let euery of vs make his account, that in as much as God calleth vs to him, we must not shrink from him in the middes of our way: for this life is as a race wherein God intēdeth to exercise vs. Therfore let vs keepe on our way, and indeuour to go forward to the ende. Let vs straine our selues to continue, and let vs liue and dye in the obediēce of him that hath purchased vs so deerely: & let vs holde out in his seruice vntill hee haue taken vs out of this worlde. After that sort is it Gods meaning ỹ we should haue our eares boared, ỹ we might be marked to be his seruaunts for euer, & not for a time. True it is also that God vseth not any Aule to marke our eares withall: but he boareth vs inwardly. For ỹ bondage that Moses speakes of here was earthly, and serued for the state of this world. But God will haue vs to serue him after another fashion, namely by reducing all our thoughts & affections to the obeying of him. And how may that be done? For when hee speaketh to vs, he speaketh to deafe folke, so that the holy Ghost must be fain to boare our eares: & vntil we be touched after ỹ maner, & that god haue wrought in vs, we neuer woote what the seruing of him doth meane. Then let vs marke wel, ỹ God vseth not such a maner of marking as was vsed among the Iewes: but he will haue vs to bee in subiection to him. He taketh no Aule to boare vs through the eare, that ỹ mark might be seene to the worldward: but it behoueth vs to be framed by his holy spirite to giue our selues wholly vnto him, and we must feele his power within vs. That is the thing in effect which we haue to remember vpon this place.

Now let vs come to that which Moses addeth, That the wages of a Seruaunt is double the wages of an hyreling. This sentence is not vnderstood of many men as it should be. For they haue taken it, that the reward which was to be giuen to a bond man at his infraunchising, ought to be double ỹ wages of an hyreling, as though the seruant that tooke wages, had taken but three yeares wages. But that was nothing to the purpose. And the Iewes after their manner, haue inuented yet a more foolish glose, and vtterly corrupted the holy scripture, by mingling their own fancies therwith. For they saye, that a man ought not to esteeme of his life aboue three yeares, and that if he attaine to fixe yeares, it is as it were a double pay. This is much to the purpose, as who should say I could warrant my selfe life til to morrowe, or as though I had my life in mine owne hand, to say, thou shalt liue til such a time. Thus yee may see their beastlinesse, howe there was neither feare of God, nor any right vnderstanding in those blinde wretches. And good reason is it that they which haue so forsaken the light of the worlde, shoulde become brutish after that fashion, so that for all their reading and for all their hauing of the holy Scripture, yet doe they nothing else but bewray their own ignorance. And it is Gods iust punishment for their despising of our Lorde Iesus Christ, whereby they haue cut themselues off from him which is the very soule and guyde of the lawe. But the meaning of Moses is large: namely, that it must not grieue a man to giue liberally to his bondseruaunt, when hee hath dwelt with him the space of fixe yeares. Col. 2. 17.

For why? It is double the wages of a hyreling: as if hee shoulde say, hee deserueth double wages in comparison of a hyreling. Wee haue seene alreadie howe our Lorde hath forbidden men to sende away their seruauntes emptie when they were set at libertie. Thou shalt rewarde him (sayeth hee) according as the Lorde shall haue blessed thee. Looke into thy presses, looke into thy garners, looke into thy stalles: and according to thine abilitie giue thy seruant somewhat, that hee may fall to some trade, and not bee put quite and cleane out of heart. This wee haue seene alreadie. Now hereagainst a man might reply: I had leaner then to entertaine a hyred seruaunt for wages. For if I take one for wages, hee shall serue mee but from day to day, and if hee serue mee well, I can keepe him still:

or if hee serue mee amisse, I can send him away, and that were more for my profite. And therefore it seemeth preiudiciall to my right to giue rewarde nowe to a slaue. A man might alleage after that fashion, as men are alwayes subtle in seeking of starting holes. If the case concerne eyther their profite or their losse; they can bee brought to no vprightnesse or reason. For this cause our Lorde saith here, Howe nowe? Thinke yee not that a slaue doeth, yea double the seruice of an hyred seruaunt? Yes: for if a man hyre a seruaunt for wages, if hee finde him not meate and drinke, hee must giue him so much the more money, that hee may finde himselfe after his owne liking. And againe, if a man find him, hee will looke for a large pittance; and yet he will grudge at it and say; this is no fare meete for a man that takes wages. The man then that is hyred for wages, must bee maintained after a more courteous and liberal fashion, than a slaue. Moreouer, when the hyred man hath done his dayes worke, hee is dispatched, and he goes his way to bed till the next morning that hee come againe to his worke. But the slaue is in a harder case. For the similitude which our Lord Iesus maketh in Saint Luke, is taken of the cõmon fashion that reigned in those dayes. True it is that hee treateth of a farre greater matter, to shewe howe wee bee bounde vnto God. But yet doeth hee alleage this similitude, saying: Behold, if one of you haue a bondseruaunt, whome you sende to labour in your vyneyarde or in your feelde, when this seruaunt commeth home at night starke wearie of his labouring to doe you seruice; I aske you whether his master will saye to him, Come sit thou downe thy turne, & take here my place, and I will serue thee. Nay, his master will say further to him, Sirrha, go fetch mee such a thing, and goe doe such a thing. And the seruaunt dares not bee so bolde as to replye, why so? I haue laboured in the feelde all day, and must I nowe take paynes stil when I am come home at night? Yee see then to what purpose it is sayde nowe that the rewarde of a slaue is double.

Againe, the seruaunt that is hyred by the day hath more ease and priuiledge: insomuch that if hee bee ill delt with, hee may goe his way. But the poore bondslaue is tyed, so as hee must bee faine to serue his master day and night, & there is no regarde had of giuing him any thing for his labour, but so hee be founde neuer so meanly it is welynough. To bee short it is shewed vs heere, that wee ought alwaies to haue consideration of the profite that redoundeth to vs by such as haue doone vs seruice. And although there were no Lawe to compell vs to the discharging of our dueties, yet ought it to bee printed in our heartes, and euery man ought to haue a conscience for the lawes sake, which telleth vs that wee ought not to deale churlishly with our seruants. For if a man flatter himselfe, he is neuer the more discharged before God, but he must be faine to come to account. And those which as now do vaunt themselues because they haue gotten some superioritie aboue others, shal in the end finde that Gods will was there should haue bin some equalitie betwixt them, as S. Paul speaketh therof. For he vseth the selfe same reason when he cõmandeth masters to beare with their seruants, & to spare them. Let there be an equalitie betwixt you saith he. As how? Is it meete that the seruant should be chekmate with his maister? No, but S. Paul would there should be an honorable vprightnes, so that as the master can vse skill to take the labour & trauell of his seruant vnder pretence that he may say, He is mine vnderling, I may command him what I list: so must he also consider the mutuall bonde that ought to be betweene one & another of vs, that he on his own side do answere & acknowledge, God is his master, but not to vse tyrannye; I am his master, howbeit in such sort as I am also his brother, I am his master, but yet is there one cõmon master in heauen, which hath authoritie both ouer mee & ouer them that are vnder mee: & in that behalfe we be all but one housholde. And seeing that God hath called vs all into his house, it behoueth both great & small to acknowledge one another for their brethren, for as much as God hath done vs ý honor to adopt vs to be his children; let not the great ones which haue some authoritie vse any lordlines in reigning after their own will, but let them gouerne their subiects as their household with all gentlenes & curtesie, in such sort as God who is the father of all, may haue highest preheminence, & be honored as he deserueth. Thus ye see in effect, ý the thing which we haue to marke in this sentence, is that euery of vs should look to himself, & yeeld them right which are not able to demaund it, but as dare such a sort in our subiection, as they cannot open their mouthes to complaine of vs. Let vs not crie til their complaint & crye mount vp to heauen; but let vs preuent that, & let vs of our selues be inclyned to pitie & gentlenes. That is ý thing which our Lord aimed at in this sentence.

Now he addeth a promise vnto it, to the ende we shoulde bee the better prouoked to doe that which hee biddeth vs. For although we finde our slackenesse in doing our dueties to bee such, as our owne conscience findeth fault with it: yet doeth selfe profite so blinde vs and bolster vp, that wee cannot bee wunne to open our purse, and to giue liberally of the things which seeme to belong vnto vs. Now then, God perceiuing vs to be so wedded to our owne profit, that a meane not wring any thing from vs, but by meane of profite addeth here, that if wee vse liberalitie towarde those ý are vnder vs, he on his side will bestow vpon vs & increase vs & he more for it. Surely, if there were any faith or rightbeleefe in ý world, should not this promise inflame vs, & moue vs to pitie and compassion towardes those that are in distresse, to succour them and to helpe them? And although that mention bee made here peculiarly of bondseruauntes; and that God commaund some rewarde to bee giuen vnto them: Yet is it a generall lawe of courteous liberalitie. Seeing it is so, let vs marke, that if wee finde our selues to doe good to such as are in need, wee ought to hope for Gods blessing, and that the more liberall men bee in succouring their neighbours, the more will God shewe himselfe liberall towardes them againe. And so farre off are they from diminishing themselues by their giuing to the needy; that it is as the opening of a windowe for Gods grace to raine in at, to the greater increase of their wealth. That is the cause why I sayd, that if there were but one drop of fayth among vs, wee would be inflamed after another fashion to do good. But wee be locked vp, and euery man withholdeth that which hee hath, insomuch ỳ when we should giue, we think the earth must needes faile vs. Wherby we shew ourselues to haue no trust in God. So then, let vs marke well this text, wherein our Lord to soften our hard hearts and to induce vs to compassion, sayth that according to our pitying of the poore and needie, by relieuing their necessities: he also on his side will haue regarde thereof, & multiply vs a hundredfolde more by his blessing, than euer we could haue increased ourselues by our owne couetousnes & nigardship. Insomuch ỳ we shall set open a windowe (as I sayd afore) for Gods grace ỳ is offered vs, if we succour those ỳ haue needle of our helpe. That is ỳ thing which wee haue to consider as in respect of the promise which God addeth heere.

Now afterwarde followeth the Lawe of the firstborne, wherein it is sayd, That all the firstborn Males shalbe offered vnto God, and that they shalbe of- fered euery yeere, in the place which the Lorde shall haue chosen, so they be not faulty, nor in any wise blemished. As for example, if a beast were goggle eied, or blinde, or lame, or had any other ilfauorednes or blemish in it: it might not be offered; but the beastes ỳ were founde, were to be offered in ỳ temple, as God had cõmanded to bring them to the place ỳ he had chosen, according to that which hath bin tolde you heretofore. We know wherefore this Lawe of offering vp the firstborne thinges Exod. 13. 2. was, namely of Gods sleaing of all ỳ firstborne of the land of Egypt: as well of men as of beastes in such time as he was about to deliuer his people out of the bondage of Egypt, & of his sparing of the children of Israel, for the bloud of the paschall Lamb was dipped vpõ their doores, & ỳ was done for their preseruation. Now our Lords will was ỳ the firstborne should be offered vp to him in acknowledgement of ỳ great benefite. For seeing ỳ such a miracle had bin wrought for thẽ, it behoued them to honor God for it, & to be alwaies the more moued to magnifie his grace. But wee see how forgetfull we are in ỳ behalfe: insomuch that if God haue done vs any good turn, in deed we can speake of it & tell it forth with voyce loud enough for a litle while: but by & by it slippeth frõ vs, & we thinke no more of it. But gods powring out of his gratious goodnes towards vs, is to the end ỳ we should mind it continually & beare it in remembrãce euer after. Therfore is it requisite ỳ we should be warned & put in mind of ỳ things which we would els forget. Euen so stoode ỳ case as in respect of the offering of the firstborne. For Gods will was ỳ it shoulde be a memoriall of the sayd benefite, so as it might neuer bee forgotten. And hereby let vs marke, that although wee haue not the like ceremonies among vs: yet doth God still exhorte vs to bee mindefull of the benefites that we haue receiued at his hande. And the excellenter that his gratious dooinges are, the more ought we to be moued by them to exalt them, yea and to deale in such wise that euen when wee be dead and gone; our children may continue in doing the like. Thus ye see what we haue to remẽber concerning the order that was set downe for the offering vp of the firstborne thinges.

It had bin ynough to haue spoken of it once: and why then doth God repeate it againe, but by reason of mens vnthankefulnes? And this concerneth not the Iewes onely, but also vs. Wherefore let vs consider, that whereas God telleth vs that we ought to be mindfull of ỳ benefits which we haue receiued at his hand, yet we cease not to turne our backes, and to shut our eyes ỳ we might not see; and if we be driuẽ to remẽber them whether we will or no, yet are we too too lasie in doing it. Considering then the naughtinesse ỳ is in vs, insomuch that God hath no sooner turned his hande, but that we haue by & by forgotten what he hath done for vs; or at least wise whereas hee woulde that the remembraunce of his benefites should be printed in our hearts, we thinke it ynough to haue borne them in minde a day or twayn: Let vs accustome our selues to the mindfulnesse of them, and consider that wee must not only blame the Iewes for their vnthankefulnesse, but also remember that we ourselues are of nature like vnto them.

Moreouer whereas it is sayde that the firste borne thinges which are to be offered, must bee founde and without blemish: hereby we see how men wold faine beguyle God with their byshifts. For they would haue picked the faultiest of their firstborne thinges to haue offered vnto God, and they would haue thought with themselues, well, this shall be set out to doe seruice withall in the Temple; for it will doe mee no seruice: yonder beast doth but pine away, well, he must serue for sacrifice. This were a playne mocking of God: and yet was it a common thing among the Iewes. But let vs come to our selues: there is none of vs all but he findeth himselfe so ill minded, as to defraude God continually of somewhat that belongeth vnto him. For, (to let passe the ceremonie of offering the firstborne thinges) God requireth that euerie of vs should offer vppe our selues vnto him; and it is good reason that wee shoulde doe so: for he hath redeemed vs from Hebr. 2. 14. thebondage of death. Wee were by nature the bondeslaues of Sathan, and beholde, GOD hath made vs his owne children: therefore is it verie meete, that wee shoulde doe him hõmage with our persons. And as touching our soules, wee knowe that the sonne of GOD spared not himselfe for the redeeming of them. And as for our bodies wee hope that they shall bee rayssed againe to his heauenly glorie. Is it not meete then that GOD shoulde haue the whole possession of vs? But when it commeth to the offering vp of ourselues to him, the world seeth ỳ wee goe to it like cripples and purblinde folke

Who is he that commeth freely vnto God, and that suffereth himselfe to be vtterly cast down & to be stripped out of his sinful nature? Nay, if we goe towards God with the sight of one eye, with the sight of the other we are tied to the vanities of the worlde. If we lende him our eares a little while, by and by wee be listening to some other thing. If we haue any good thought tending towardes him, we be corrupted a thousande waies. Such are the sacrifices ỳ we offer vnto God, that is to wit sinfull sacrifices & full of corruption. To be short, howsoeuer the world go, God can haue no right at our handes. Cal he neuersomuch vpon vs, & be he neuer so importunate with vs, yet are we so hardharted, ỳ we will neuer yeeld him his due. Thus we see that although the ceremony of offering ỳ first borne as wel of cattell as of men, is taken away: yet this Law is not superfluous among Christians: but vnder the shadowes of Moseses lawe, God sheweth vs after what sort we should come vnto him nowadayes: that is to wit, not limping, nor as purblinde folke ranging here and there: but ỳ we should looke to the purging of the wicked affections that are in vs, so as wee may come to him sounde both in bodie & soule. True it is that doe what we can, it is not possible for vs to be without a great number of vices in vs: but yet must not those vices be nourished, neither must we flatter our selues. If any of vs feele anie imperfections in himselfe, he must mislike of it, and being sorie for it, wee must desire GOD to purge and clense vs from our sinnes, that we may be ridde from all the corruptions that hinder vs to become acceptable sacrifices vnto him. When we go that way to worke, that is to say, when eueric of vs fighteth against his owne sinnes by true repentance, although there be many things amisse in vs, yet will our Lorde receiue vs, and
1. Ioh. 2.1. not shake vs off. For we knowe that the bloud of our Lorde Iesus Christ serueth to scoure our all our spottes. And that is the cause why it is sayd Hebr. 3.15. that our sacrifices are offered to God the father in his name. Seeing then that Iesus Christe is there aunswering for vs, although there be spots in vs, yet are they not imputed to vs. But yet must we on our side endeuour to amende them, and by that meane acknowledge the thing that is sayde heere, that is to wit, wee must not offer faultie sacrifices vnto God, nor resemble the hypocrites, which come to him for fashions sake, but in deede make none account of him: so as we should make a faire face of it to the worldeward, and in the meane while foster some secret poyson within, but that we come right hearted to our God as he commaundeth vs. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to remember vpon this sentence of Moseses, where hee speaketh of the firstborne.

Besides this, our Lords meaning was that the first borne should be valued at a summe of money as well of the cattell as of other things: so as the thing that was alwayes aimed at, was the thankfulnesse of Gods benefites. But as concerning these things we will not enter into them as now, for this text requireth it not, neither doth ỳ time serue for it. It sufficeth vs in fewe words to know that our Lordes meaning heere, is that when we haue receiued any gratious good turne, or that he hath bestowed any benefit vpon vs, the remembrance thereof should continue with vs, not for a day or two, but for euer: and that the fathers should tell their children the same, to the ende that he may be honored among vs for euermore. Finally let vs not offer beastes vnto him in sacrifice, as they did vnder the Lawe as appeareth by this figure: but let vs assure our selues that ỳ acceptable sacrifice which God requireth is the offering of ourselues vnto him both in bodie and soule, so as our whole seeking may be to be guided and gouerned altogether by his holy spirite, and that all that euer wee haue be dedicated to his seruice, and applyed to the vse which he hath shewed vs, that he may be glorified in all poinctes.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better, and that seeing there is nothing in vs but all matter of frowardnesse & leaudnes, we may so be renued in such sort, that as long as we liue in this mortal life, our whole seking may be to be guided to the happie ende which we looke for in heauen, and ỳ in the meane time we may liue after such a sorte in this worlde, as he may be glorified in vs, and that whē it shall please him to take vs hence, wee may yeelde our selues obediently into his handes, assuring ourselues ỳ sith he sheweth his selfe so gratious and liberall towardes vs, and gouerne vs in this transitorie life, & of his goodnes giueth vs al things behouefull & necessary, wee neede not to doubt but that he will make vs to attaine to the perfection of the things which are nowe hidden, & which shall not be opened vnto vs, vntill the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewsday the fifth of Nouember. 1555.

The XCvij. Sermon which is the first vpon the sixteenth Chapter.

THou shalt keepe the moneth of new fruites, that thou maiest keepe Passeouer to the Lorde thy God. For in the moneth of new fruites the Lorde thy God brought thee out of the Lande of Egypt.

2 And thou shalt sacrifice the Passeouer to the Lorde thy GOD, euen

sheepe

Sheepe and Oxen, in the place which the Lorde thy GOD will chooſe to put his name therein.

3 Thou ſhalt eate no leauen breade in that feaſt: Seuen dayes ſhalt thou eate vnleauened bread, euen the bread, of ſorowe. For thou cameſt in haſte out of the Lande of Egypt: to the ende thou be mindefull of the day of thy departing out of the Lande of Egypt all the dayes of thy life.

4 And there ſhal no leauen be ſeene in thy houſe, during the ſeuen daies in all thy coaſtes. Alſo ye ſhall not leaue of the fleſhe that is ſacrificed from the euening of the former day till the next morning.

THis preſent chapter treateth of the three feaſts which God ordeined among the Iewes: that is to wit, the feaſt of Eaſter or paſſouer, ỹ feaſt of Pentecoſt or Whitſontide, & the feaſt of Tabernacles or Tentes. Firſt hee treateth of the Paſſeouer, & God ordaineth that it ſhould be diligently obſerued: for it was a memorial of great importance, whereby the people were put in mind, how they had beene redeemed, & put in poſſeſſion of the inheritance that had bin promiſed vnto them. It was behoouefull that ỹ ſame ſhould be knowen: for it was the fundation of all the benefits which the Iewes had receiued at Gods hande, & which they looked for afterwarde. Without that, they had bin no people ſeparated & dedicated to god; neither had they had any hope of ſaluation: for the couenãt made with their fathers had bin diſſolued. Therefore is it not without cauſe, that God would haue that day kept holy, & with ſuch commande. In like caſe was it with the feaſt of Tabernacles, as wee ſhall ſee hereafter. For it ſerued to put the Iewes in minde of their going out of Egypt, and that whereas they had dwelt long time in the wilderneſſe, without houſe or harne, and yet God had euer preſerued them: it behoued them likewiſe to acknowledge ỹ ſame benefite. But we will treate of euery feaſt in his owne order.

Preſently we haue to ſpeake of the paſſeouer. But before I go any further, we muſt marke alſo that God reſpected not only what he had done already; but alſo ment therewithall there ſhould be a figure of thinges to come, whereof we haue now the trueth & ſubſtance, ſince the time ỹ our Lord Ieſus Chriſt hath bin diſcouered to ỹ world. That is the cauſe why S. Paul telleth ỹ Coloſſians, ỹ theſe thinges were but ſhadowes, ỹ body whereof is in Chriſt Ieſus. True it is ỹ he ſpeaketh not there expreſly of Eaſterday by name: but yet vnder the name of Sabbat, he comprehendeth all the feaſtes, & likewiſe al the Ceremonies that depended vpon thẽ. To be ſhort, God had a double reſpect in ordeining the day of the Paſſeouer. The one was to do the people of Iſrael to vnderſtand, ỹ they came not into poſſeſſion of ỹ Land of Chanaan by their own power: but ỹ they had bin led in thither by the hande of God. And becauſe they had bin deliuered by miracle out of ỹ land of Egypt; Gods wil was ỹ the ſame ſhould be declared. Againe, foraſmuch as the ſame deliuerance was a figure of the deliueraunce ỹ was to be hoped for by our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt: this feaſt of Paſſeouer extẽded yet further, ỹ is to wit, ỹ whẽ the people ate of the paſcal Lamb (as they called it) they ſhould thinke thus with thẽſelues: This is a ſhadow & figure of the Sacrifice which ſhalbe once offered vp, wherby the world ſhalbe reconciled & ſet free. And although the thing were not yet apparant to the eye. Yet behoueth it the faithfull to inure thẽſelues to the hope of the redeemer whõ God had promiſed them. And in that reſpect ſayth S. Paul in the firſt to ỹ Corinthians, ỹ Ieſus Chriſt is our Paſſeouer or Paſcall Lambe, and ỹ he is ſacrificed for vs, and that we muſt now eate of that ſacrifice: howbeit not with the leauen of malice and deceitefulnes, but with righteouſneſſe and ſoundneſſe. That is the one point which we haue to remember. 1. Cor. 5. 7.

And that the Paſcall Lamb was not a bare ceremonie without doctrine, it appeareth by that which is written in ỹ twelfth of Exodus; where it is ſaid, ỹ when the Lamb is ſacrificed as it is a eating, if their childrẽ aske what it meanieth: their fathers ſhall anſwere, The Lorde brought vs out of the land of Egypt where we were in bondage, & therfore he wil haue this thing done yerely in remẽbrance thereof: not ỹ the doing thereof one only day may diſcharge vs: but ỹ the ſame ſhould continue printed in our hearts, ſo as in inioying the land of Chanaan, we may vnderſtand ỹ wee cõquered it not by our own ſtrẽgth, but through his good pleaſure, becauſe it was his will to harbour vs here, according to ỹ promiſe which hee had made to our forefathers. We ſee then howe the feaſt of Paſſeouer, was not a ceremony without inſtruction: but ỹ it conteined doctrine in it. And it is an article of great importance: For the world would alwaies haue a great number of ceremonies tõ no purpoſe: & in the meane while it ſeemes ynough to haue ſtore of gay ſhowes. But on ỹ the cõtrary part, God telleth vs, ỹ ceremonies are but toyes & trifles, vnleſſe they leade vs further, & be light vs things cõcerning our ſaluatiõ, ſo as we be taught & cõfirmed in the faith by meanes of them. If ỹ be not in thẽ, they be ſtarke baggage, & nothing worth. Nay, they be nothing els than a corrupting of ỹ ſeruice of God, and the high way to lead vs to ſuperſtition and ydolatry. Exod. 12. 26

As for example, wee see howe they make a great number of disguisinges in the Popedome: but in the meane while they wote not what any of those things meane. If ye come to their Masse, there they play an enterlude, where there are as many fonde toyes as can be. In deede the wretched worlde is rauished at them: but that is because they knowe nothing, but are vtterly sotted, and yet they beare themselues in hande that they haue done a dowtie deede, and ẏ God ought to like very well of it, when they haue so bestirred themselues. But (as I tolde you afore) they be but vaine & fonde Apish toyes. And why so? For God neuer ment to ordeine any ceremonie among his people, which conteined not some good instruction, and serued not to some good ende. And therefore lette vs marke well, that whereas the Iewes had ẏ feast of Passeouer, they had Gods worde also, whereby they were warranted ẏ it was not inuented at the pleasure of men. For God not onely gaue a prefixed commandement as saying: You shall obserue such a day: but also a doctrine with it, & willed ẏ the fathers should teach it their children, & put thē in remēbrance of the deliuerance ẏ had bin made, as in deede it was as excellent a deede as might be. That then was of his appointment.

And so let vs beare in minde, that if we nowadayes haue ceremonies without instruction, they shalbe all condemned of God, who vtterly misliketh them, and we can not alleadge them to be his seruice. For he declareth and auoweth it to be but foolish superstition, when men turne away from that marke, and that it is the next way to put vs quite besides our saluation. And heerein we may defie all the houge heape of pompes wherewith the Papistes will needes serue GOD: for there is nothing in them that God auoweth. Also wee be warned to mingle nothing with the pure simplicitie of the Sacramentes and Ceremonies which GOD woulde haue to bee obserued noweadayes. Let vs holde vs contented with that which is shewed vs: for if wee adde neuer so little to it, surely wee shall make such a minglemangle as will bee nothing worth, after the manner of the Papistes, who (as wee see) haue inuented many thinges of their own head. Wee must haue this and that, say they, Why so? To what purpose? O (say they) it will serue for such a thing: but in the meane whyle there is no instruction to Godwarde. Is it their part to cause a doctrine to bee brought in? It were meete that God should speake. And when men heare him, then euery one shall be edified. But when men thrust themselues in, and fall to forging of fonde deuotions without authoritie from GOD: all must needes be cast downe. The worlde sees how the Papists haue corrupted the true Sacramentes. In Baptisme, the water hath beene esteemed as nothing in the Popedome: for it is no matter if the infantes pisse in it. But as for the holy creame that is in it, O, it is not for any man to touch that: for that is too heauenly a thing. And yet notwithstanding the water is the substance of that Sacramēt, and the whole perfection thereof. But as for the creame, who deuised it? It is a stinking grease that men haue charmed, and blowed vpon, like sorcerers. And should that be had in such reuerence, that the Sacrament which proceedeth from the sonne of God, shoulde be had in no estimation for it? Moreouer, the water (by their reckening) is not good, vnlesse it haue beene coniured, and that a number of charmes haue beene made ouer it, to amaze the ignorant. And therefore so much the better ought we to haue this lesson in minde, that wee may be fenced against all Satans inuentions; which is, that sith wee see our mindes so tickelish, that wee would faine still inuent some newe thing, and we beare ourselues in hande that wee haue spunne a fine threede, when some newe Ceremonie is come foorth by our meanes: it standeth vs in hande to thinke thus, yea but GOD dispiseth all this geere, yea and he sheweth vs that we do but peruert his seruice, when wee adde any thing after that fashion, of our owne. Then is it an intolerable doctrine that no Ceremonies are beholden or to be made account of among the faithfull, vnlesse they carry instruction with them. And that instruction must come of GOD: for it is his office to teach vs, hee reserueth that authoritie to himselfe. And therfore it is to be concluded, that the ceremonies which are set forth by men, are but trifles & geugawes, howe great a shew of wisedome soeuer there seeme to be in them.

And hereby we see also that it was superstitiously done of such as beare the name of Christians, to bring in a feast of Passeouer vnder pretence that the Iewes had it for the respect we are farre diuers. I meane not that we may not haue one day in the yeere, whereon to celebrate the remembraunce of the resurrection of our Lord Iesus Christ: for we must not runne so rigorously into extremities, as that our infirmitie might not haue some helpe, to quicken it vpp withal, that we might the better bethink vs all the time of our life, what benefit the rysing againe of our Lord Iesus Christ hath brought vnto vs. Well then may we haue a day appointed to that purpose for orders sake: but to make a seruice of God thereof, or to thinke that we ought to fashion ourselues after the example of the Iewes, as they had their passeouers, so ought we not: it were an abuse that tendeth to the turning of all thinges vpside downe, and a putting of a vayle before the face of Iesus Christ, ẏ men might not know the light of the Gospell. These things (as I saide) were but shadowes, whereof we haue now the body and substance: and therefore it is a hiding of Iesus Christ, whē men bring in feasts after the maner of the Iewes.

But nowe let vs come to that which is commanded here concerning the Easterday of the Iewes Ye shall eate vnleauened breade or cakes (sayth he) by the space of six dayes, and there shall no leauened bread be founde in your houses. This was done because the Iewes departed in hast out of the Land of Egypt. And it ought to haue made them to think that they went not out with banners displayed, as though their enemies had stoode so in feare of thē ẏ they durst not quetch against thē: for they went away like a sort of poore fugitiues. The women caried their children vpon their shoulders, the men tooke vp their stuffe in their neckes, and fled away priuily, and their enemies would faine haue pursewed them, & they were of strength & power ynough to haue done it. The Iewes on the other side were a people ỳ could no skill to handle a sworde: for they had bin holde in such slauerie, ỳ they durst not once looke vpon a sworde or any weapon of warre. They had bin vsed like Asses and Oxen. Their state had bin as slauishe as could bee. Well then, when the time came that they should depart, it was sayde vnto them, Exod.12.39 Get ye hence. And what bread shal wee haue to eat? What prouision shal there be by the way? Grinde your corne, and trusse it vp quickely in meale vpon your shoulders, and as the time will serue ye shal bake it by the way and eate it. Now when the people had this solemnitie yeerely, wherein they ate cakes whithout leauen: it serued to put thẽ in minde, that when their fathers departed out of Egypt, they were a poore fugitiue people, that ranne away like a Lambe that is pursued by wolues. Ye see in what plight they were. Needes therefore must it bee concluded, that God had preserued them after a wonderfull fashion. For what were the Egyptians? A nation full of pride and cruelkie. A mightie nation, a nation ỳ trusted to their owne force & power; & moreouer a nation ỳ bare deadly hatred to the poore Iewes, an vtter enemy to thẽ, & such a one as desired nothing so much as to roote out ỳ remembrance of them, as the tyranny of Pharao hath well shewed. Now then the Iewes were put in minde ỳ God had made them to escape out of their enemies handes, so as they coulde not but knowe ỳ they had bin helped by him, & that the stayse of their life was to bee yeelded vnto him. As if they should say, Thou Lord hast deliuered vs, not only from ỳ state of bondage but also as it were by fetching vs out of our graues. For wee were as it were starke dead, and had bin past all hope of recouery, if thou haddest not reached vs thy mightie arme. That was the thing wherof the Iewes were put in minde, when God commanded them to eate vnleauened bread. And it was his will ỳ this should be done, not only ỳ same night ỳ they ate the paschall Lambe: but also that the same Ceremony should be continued by the space of six dayes together. And why? God shewed therein, ỳ men be not throughly framed at ỳ first brunt to the doctrine ỳ he setteth downe vnto them, though ỳ same be cleere ynough. Doth God speake? There is no darknesse in his speech. But yet howsoeuer the case stande, wee can not fasten vpon it. For we be so slowe minded, ỳ wee can neuer attaine to his meaning, vntill he haue repeated our lesson to vs diuerse times. That is the cause why hee commaunded expresly that they should eate vnleauened bread by the space of sixe dayes together. As if hee shoulde say, truely the very one nightes eating of the paschall Lambe with vnleauened breade, ought to bee a sufficient instruction to you what is ment by the same. But what? I see well yee be shortwitted, insomuch that if yee haue hearde any thing at Gods mouth, yee forget it out of hande. And therefore when I intende to teach you, I must deale w you as it were by measure and compasse. And therefore if ye haue a good long time afore hande to bethinke ye of the eating of the paschall Lambe, yee will be the better prepared vnto it. Therefore shall yee haue a whole weeke, wherein ye shall eate no leauened breade; by meanes whereof yee shalbe quickened vp to thinke vpon the great and inestimable benefit which God bestowed vpon your fathers in deliuering them out of the Lande of Egypt, so as you may beare well in minde that his deliuering of them was after a straunge manner, and that hee was faine to worke after a heauenly fashion, because ye were in so wretched plight, that yee might seeme to haue beene already swallowed vp of death, and to haue beene already buried in your graues. Nowe we see why the Iewes were expresly commanded to abstaine from the eating of leauened bread.

There were other Ceremonies also; that is to wit, the girding vp of their garmentes, the putting on of their shooes, and the taking of their walking staues in their handes. For in those East countryes they ware long garmentes after the same manner that the Turkes doe at this day. And when they trauciled by the way, they trussed vp their garments aboue their loynes, as the gray Fryers & Iacobines or white Fryers do, and such other that are so greatly combered with clothes. Nowe God did the Iewes to vnderstande that they shoulde bee as wayfarers when they ate the paschall Lambe, and that they should eate it in haste, to put them in remembraunce of the sayde departure out of Egypt. And our Lord did set downe this figure as a lookingglasse for the Iewes to beholde howe their forefathers ate the paschall Lambe, euen when they were hasted to go their wayes, that they might acknowledge so great a benefit. And herein we see how God had a respect to the rudenesse of his people as in deede all the Ceremonies which wee haue serue but for our infirmitie. What doth Baptisme or the Lordes Supper bring vs? Doe they make the death & passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ of more value than it is of it selfe? What helpe find we in the bread, or in the wine, or in the water, to that purpose? Gods meaning then was not to ad any thing to ỳ which we haue receiued in our Lord Iesus Christ: but to beare with our rudenes because he sees vs to be vnable to comprehende the thinges that are gotten for vs by our Lorde Iesus Christ. For inasmuch as they bee too high for vs, God helpeth vs vp to thẽ by the outwarde & visible signes which we haue in ỳ Sacraments. But it behoued the Iewes to haue mo such helps than we. For they had not so plaine a doctrine as is now conteined in ỳ Gospel. Again, Iesus Christ was not yet come, in whom we see all ỳ euer can be wished for our saluation. The heauens were then opened vnto vs, when his side was opened Col.1.22 to washe vs cleane, and his body offered vp for a sufficient sacrifice to reconcile vs vnto God his father, and to doe away all our offences and trangressions. When these thinges were done, then then had we a full warrant of our saluatiõ. Therfore wee in these dayes neede not to be helped with so houge a heape of Ceremonies as the ancient fathers vnder the Lawe were. It is ynough that we be ledde to our Lord Iesus Christ, whervnto fewe signes suffice, that is to wit Baptisme and the Lorde his Supper. For seeing that the sonne of God is contented with those two: we also ought to rest there. Neuertheless, wee see heere howe God vouchsafed to stoope to the infirmitie of his people, by giuing them a liuely representation of their departing out of the Land of Egypt, and by setting them downe as it were in a lookingglasse or painted table; for them to beholde howe he had deliuered them: that is to wit, like a sort of poore people, that were taking their iourney to flee away priuily, and were so distressed as it was not for them to turne heade against so mightie enemies, who were able to haue swallowed thẽ vp at the first chop without any resistance. Seeing then that the Iewes had such instruction; they shoulde haue considered thus with themselues: How commeth it to passe that we be aliue at this day, but because our God hath preserued vs? And how shold our state stand but onely by his meere mercy? For we had perished if he had not reached out his arme to bring vs out of the Land of Egypt. Thus much concerning this point.

Exod. 12. 8. Nowe it was commaunded further, that the paschall Lamb should be eaten with bitter herbes. And our Lorde himselfe speaketh here expressly of the bread of sorrow: as if he had said, although ye eateth the paschall Lambe in rest, and when yee be come to the inioying of the inheritance which I haue promised you: yet must you haue a memoriall of the anguish wherein your forefathers were, and you must thinke y without my fauour you should haue had neither paschall Lambe nor bit of bread to eat at this day: for ye should haue beene vtterly rooted out of the worlde. Consider it therefore, and that yee may be the better moued thereunto, take bitter herbes, that is to say, abstaine from all deintinesse in your eating of the paschall Lambe. For the Iewes were not restreined from taking their repast after their eating of the paschall Lambe, as wee see that our Lorde Iesus Christ in eating of the Paschall Lamb with his disciples, insomuch as they did not only sit downe at a table, but also lye downe after the manner of olde time, which was to eate their meales lying halfe a tone side. Certaine it is that Gal. 4. 4. 5. he kept the Lawe to the vttermost: for hee submitted himselfe to it to set vs free from it. Then must we note that our Lord ate the paschall Lamb after the same maner that was ordeined by Moses, that is to wit, standing vpon his feete, with his staffe in his hande, and his shoes on his feete, and hauing his loynes girded vp like a wayfarer. And after this was done hee tooke his accustomed repast, for this was a solemne sacrifice, and therefore wee must not wonder that it was separated from the common meates: for it behoued all the folke of one house to eate thereof, so as if there were thirtie or fortie persons in a house, euery man hadde his portion of it. And if the housholde were not great ynough, two or three housholdes were called together and they eate in one place, that the sacrifice might be eaten vp hastily. A Lambe was roasted in hast and eaten vp with a morsell of a sweete cake: yea and they were forbidden to seeth it, to shewe that they could haue no leasure to tarrie till it were halfe boyled, but they were faine to deuour it hastily, like folke that were to go their waies out of hand. But howsoeuer the case stoode, it behoued them to eat it with bitter herbs. Whereby we be taught to vnderstande, that deinties doe keepe vs from the dewe consideration of Gods benefites, to be rauished by them. For although it bee sayde, Thou shalt be merrie before thy God: yet are we continually holde backe in this worlde, when we haue some allurement to withdrawe vs frõ God. For if our flesshe haue her likinges, then are we ouertaken in such sorte, that we stye not vp aloft to beholde well the spiritual grace of God. Thus yee see that the cause why the bitter herbes were put to the sacrifice, was to make men to consider the better after what manner the people hadde beene deliuered, beeing erst in so extreme anguish as they were not able to endure any more.

Besides this, they were also forbidden to admit any heathen man to it, vnlesse hee were circumcised. True it is that God commanded that the bondmen being straungers borne should eate thereof. Yea, but that was not before they were first incorporated into his Church by receiuing the signe of circumcision. Hereby it is done to vnderstande, that it was a peculiar ordre giuen of God to his owne people. For Sacraments are peculiar to the Church. They be no things for men to put to vnholy vses, nor to leaue at aladuenture. For our Lorde will haue vs to be gathered together vnder his name. When we vse the Sacramentes, let vs thinke that with ourselues, Beholde here is a treasure that God hath kept and layde vp for vs as for his children. And in deede, if a man should nowe adayes admit as many to the Lordes Supper as would offer come to it: were it not a defiling of the Sacrament? And yet there are a number to be seene, which would haue al men indifferently both rag and ragge to be admitted to it: but such folkes neuer wist yet howe to vse the Sacraments aright. For (as shall be declared hereafter) the Supper of our Lorde Iesus Christ is as vsed at this day the same that the Paschall Lambe was to the people of the Iewes. Wherefore let vs marke in fewe wordes, howe our Lorde hath shewed that this Sacrament was a warrant & pledge of him to his people, that he took thẽ to be his Church, and therefore that it ought not to bee set foorth at aduenture to all commers. True it is that Circumcision likewise was a Sacrament: but there was diuersitie of respectes betweene the one and the other. For by circumcision, folke were receiued into the number of Gods people, so as it was an entrãce into the Church as Baptisme is at this day: by meanes whereof such as by nature are not nõbered in y cõpany of Gods children, are receiued and incorporated into the by Baptisme. And so stoode the case with y Iewes for circumcision: But as for the Paschall Lambe, that was to be kept to the Iewes themselues.

Now

Now it is also sayd, that it was not to bee eaten throughout the whole Countrey; but that it was to bee done in the place which the Lorde had chosen to put his name in. And truely this was not shewed them at the first day, insomuch that they had beene a long time in the land of Chanaan, eare the Arke had any certaine resting place, there was no such place assigned to it. But yet it behoued them alwaies to be obedient to the ceremonie of resorting to ỹ place where the Arke was, vntil mount Sion was marked out. And then were al men bound to repaire thither, euen from the vttermoost borders of the Countrey: all men were to come to Ierusalem, except they were letted by sickneſse or old age. And why? It was not to giue a president for the Pilgrimages which ỹ Papists inuented afterward: For in so doing they shewed themselues to differ nothing at all from the Iewes. Againe, it is not for them to excuse themselues by the example of the Iewes: for ỹ Iewes had a commaundement of God, but the Papistes made their vagaries for their own pleasure: wherin they vtterly renounced Iesus Christ & ouerthrew that which is sayd in the fourth of Iohn, namely that ỹ time was come ỹ god wold no more be worshipped in any place certain, but would haue his name called vpon euery where throughout ỹ whole world. Besides this, we must marke that there was a speciall reason why God would haue the Iewes to reſorte to Ierusalem to sacrifice the paſcall Lambe there: namely to the end yͤ man should attempt to alter any thing in yͤ order which he had set by the Law. And (as I haue said) this ancient ceremonie was a thing of great importance, as wherby the people were informed of their Redeemer, euen that he had brought them out of the land of Egypt, & that he would send thē yet another redeemer, by whom the whole world should be redeemed. Loe heere a ceremonie that imported a wonderfull secret, & therfore it was meete ỹ it should be kept purely. For the doing wherof, god called al the Iewes into one body, ỹ hauing ỹ Sāctuary & the temple there before their eyes, they might be the better put in mind ỹ it was not lawfull for them to adde any thing at their owne pleasure, but that it behoued them to follow ỹ commō doctrine, to vnderstand ỹ God represented himselfe there, and dwelt among thē by meanes of the Arke. Seeing then that the people were so gathered together, they could not but be restrained frō starting out into foolish inuentions: and needes must the doctrine be retained therwithal, as I haue said afore: for ỹ ceremonie was nothing of it selfe, it had ben but as a Maygame or a mockerie. That was ỹ cause why ỹ people were drawē to Ierusalem vnto ỹ place which God had appointed. And so we see now why it was said ỹ they shoulde not do sacrifice in any of their cities or townes, but assemble al together in the Citie of Ierusalem.

It is inioyned further, that they shoulde not breake a bone of the Paſcal Lamb. And why so? As if it were said ỹ it was a meate to bee eaten in haſt, (as I haue shewed afore,) so as they were forbidde to boile any part of it. And hereby God meant to shew yet better ỹ haſt which the people made in departing out of ỹ land of Egypt, forsomuch as it was not for them to set the pot vpon ỹ fire to boile it: for they could neuer haue had time to do it. Therfore were they faine to make haſt, & to eate this Lamb halfe rosted as people preaſſed vpon by their enemies, & as folke ỹ looked to haue bin ouertaken euery minute of an houre: by reason whereof they had no leasure to stand gnawing of ỹ bones, or to breake them to get out ỹ marow, as folk do when they haue time at wil. None of this could they do: but were faine to eate ỹ sacrifice in haſt, & to cast away ỹ reſt. We see then as nowe, ỹ as concerning ỹ deliuerance ỹ had bin wrought alreadie, things were as it were pointed out with ỹ finger in the Paſcall Lamb: & for this cause ỹ very terme it self is expreſſed here, for ỹ Hebrew worde Peſſah is the same ỹ we call Paſſing in Inglish. And by ỹ word our Lord confirmed ỹ thing which we haue spoken of before, namely ỹ this Ceremonie was not a fond deuise to buſie mens heades withall as though they were little babes: but ỹ it importeth instruction to edifie folk withall, to the end they should think thus: This day must we do homage to our God for our life, bicauſe he preſerued vs of his owne mere infinite goodnes, by bringing vs out of ỹ land of Egypt. So then God spake not simply of ỹ thing, ỹ were to be obserued: but his meaning was to shew the end in such wise which he intended, as ỹ people might cōsider, we haue made a Paſſage: & what maner of Paſſage? Euen such a one as we had no legs to go it withall, but God did lift vs vp by his power, and made vs to paſſe ouer it as a gulf of death, not onely in paſſing ỹ red sea, but also whē we were yet in Egypt. For before we came at the red sea, there was another straite to paſſe, which wee shoulde neuer haue scaped out at, if God had not opened vs ỹ way with his owne hand. Yea & his will was that that day should be obserued, to the intent that the remembrance therof should be ỹ certainer.

And for the same cause he poynted out the moneth ỹ answereth to March or April. Howbeit not to eyther of them, but bicauſe wee cannot make a certaine report of ỹ monethes of the Iewes to cōpare them w̄ ours. The reason wherof is, for ỹ they had their moneths intermingled one with another, bicauſe they tooke them according to ỹ Moone, so as they were interlaced together. This moneth therefore was sometime sooner and sometime later, & was named in hebrew Abib, which signifieth an eare of corne, when it beginneth to shoote foorth at the first. Not when the eares of Corne are full ripe: but when the corne beginneth newly to spindle. In deede the time of it selfe importeth nothing: but yet did it serue greatly to the instructing of the people, bicause the setting of it down made them to behold the matter the more presently. Gods putting of thē in remembrance of it was such as they could not but know ỹ meane wherby their fathers were brought out of the land of Egypt. And the very night it selfe was marked, to ỹ end they shold cōsider how god had deliuered them from the thraldom of Pharao. On the other side, had the moneth been marked at the pleasure of men: they wold haue thought it might wel haue beene chaunged for the commoditie of the people. But God commaunded it to be kept, to the end they should know he would haue no part of his ordinance chaunged, nor any man attempt to alter it in any wise.

And nowe we haue to marke in effect, that by the ordeining of ỹ Passeouer day, God ment to set downe a memorial of his doinges among his people, that they might acknowledge his grace, in deliuering them out of the Land of Egypt after that fashion, and that their children myght know that that was the meanes whereby they were come into the inheritance that had beene promised them. Neuertheless, it was not Gods intent to be honoured and serued with a trifling Ceremonie: but his mind was that there should be teaching, that men might be edified by it, and that the Iewes might know that Gods calling of them to him, was to bee serued by them as their redeemer and father. And therefore he would not haue the Paschall Lamb eaten by vnholy and vnbeleeuing folke: but that it should bee giuen alonly to such as were circumcised, and were already of the body of the Church. And seeing it is so, Let vs remember that in all signes which God giueth vs, we must haue instruction annexed to lead vs vnto him. And for as much as we haue the true passeouer in our Lord Iesus Christ, as shall bee declared to morrow: wee must nowe dayes step further. And although we haue not the old Ceremonies; yet let vs hold fast the truth therof, which is brought vs by the sonne of God, as it is declared vnto vs in these dayes by his Gospell.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgment of our sins, praying him to make vs to perceiue more and more we were, when he vouchsafed to call vs to him, as he hath plucked vs out of the gulfe of death, in such sort as we haue now cause to glorifie him, and to giue our selues ouer to his seruice all the time of our life. And for as much as he not only sheweth himselfe to be our father and sauiour in this transitory life, but also calleth vs to the euerlasting inheritance of heauen; according as he had chosen vs thereto before the creation of the world: let vs tend alwayes thitherward, and be the more prouoked to labour to that end, seeing we haue the helpes and Remedies which he giueth vs, and that the badge is kept among vs as he hath commaunded vs by his word. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs, but also to all people & nations of ỹ earth, &c.

On Wednesday the vj. of Nouember. 1555.

The XCviij. Sermon which is the second vpon the sixteenth Chapter.

2,3,4 And thou shalt sacrifice &c.

5 Thou maist not sacrifice the Passeouer within any of ỹ gates which the Lord thy God giueth thee,

6 But in the place which the Lord thy God wil choose to set his name in, there shalt thou offer the Passeouer at euen, about the going downe of the Sunne, iust at the time that thou wentest out of Egypt.

7 And thou shalt roast it, and eate it in the place which the Lord thy God shall haue chosen for himselfe. And the next morning thou shalt returne from thence and goe home to thy Tentes.

8 Six dayes shalt thou eate vnleauened breade: and on the seuenth day which is the solemne feast of the Lord thy God, thou shalt doe no manner of worke.

IT was declared yesterday, how ỹ by keeping ỹ feast of the passeouer, the Iewes were put in minde of the deliuerance of their forefathers made by God. And I toulde you howe it was to double ende. For GODS will was to put his people in remembraunce of the fauour which he had shewed to them alreadie: and againe, he ment to leade them to the hope of our Lorde Iesus Christ. It was then but a temporall deliuerance, which God had made of them out of the land of Egypt: but when he sent his onely sonne, thē deliuered he his people out of a farre worse bondage than that which we haue spoken of. And therfore let vs mark ỹ the Paschall Lamb was a figure of our Lorde Iesus Christ: which thing S. Paule witnesseth in expresse words, saying: Christ our Passeouer is offered vp. Also ye knowe the sentence that is alleged out of the twelfth of Exodus by S. Iohn, where it is said, Ye shal not breake a bone of him. For there he declareth how they came to our Lord Iesus Christ & to haue broken his bones after the accustomed manner, and found him alreadie dead. And how came to passe by the wonderfull prouidence of God, whose will it was that the thing which had beene figured in the Paschall Lambe, should bee layde open to mens eyes in Iesus Christ. And so Saint Iohn applyeth this sentence to the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ, in saying, it is written, Yee shall not breake a bone of him. Yea, but God speaketh but onely of the Paschall Lambe which was offered in those dayes. Yet notwithstanding his intent was to shew, ỹ there was an agreement betweene Christ & the Passeouer, and that in that visible sacrament he ment to foreshewe the redemption that was not yet seene, and that all this was fully accomplished in our Lord Iesus Christ. True it is that the Iewes haue not profited by this admonition: for they were the more inhardened by it. But let vs on our side learne to referre the thinges that were done by our Lord Iesus Christ, to the things that were forefigured in the lawe, & wee shall profit greatly by that meane. For it is not ynough for vs to knowe the storie of the death and Passion of our Lord Iesus Christ; but the chiefe point is to resort to the vse and fruite of it. And that is much the better attayned vnto, by considering the auncient figures. Now it is sayd, ỹ the Paschall Lambe was offered vp, to the end that the houses which were marked with the bloud thereof, Exod. 12 should bee spared of God. For an Angel passed swiftly through the land of Egypt, and slew al the first borne both of man and beast. There was but one reseruation, namely the sacrificing of the Lamb, & looke what doore of a house was dipped with the bloud thereof, that house did the Lords Angel passe ouer. The onely safetie then which we haue, when God vttereth his wrath and vengeance through the whole world, is to beare the marke of our Lord Iesus Christ. For inasmuch as he was sacrificed for vs, & we bee besprinkled w̄ his bloud, God acknowledgeth vs for his own, & vpon speciall priuiledge withdraweth his hand from vs, so as we bee not compriſed nor inclosed vnder the common curse of ỹ whole world. For ỹ land of Egypt was at that time as an image of all mankind. And in deede, we be al accursed by nature & good reason it is that God as a iust Iudge should execute his vengeance vpon vs. But here the faithfull are dispersed and mingled with the faithlesse. And how then are they discerned a-funder, seeing they dwel together? God can well ynough skill to discerne the marke of his sonne. True it is ỹ the state of our life may well be like ỹ lot of the faithlesse and the despisers of God. But yet howsoeuer we fare, our Lord gathereth vs continually to himself. Insomuch that if we be of his flock, he wilbe merciful to vs euē to ỹ end, conditionally also ỹ wee beare the bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ for our badge. At ỹ time the doores of their houses were sprinkled w̄ a branch of Hyssop: but as now our besprinkling must bee spirituall, as S. Peter telleth vs. Would we then ỹ God should take vs to mercie, when his hand is stretched out to punish all the world? Let vs vnderstand ỹ there is no other meane for vs to bee marked by our lord Iesus christ, than only ỹ holy Ghost. For his blood is not now a shedding, that we might make an outward and visible sprinkling of our selues with it: but hee hath shead it for vs in spirite (as the Apostle speaketh of it in the Epistle to the Hebrewes.) That is to say, it was not the only paine that he suffred in his body, but also the matching of the heauenly power with it, that made the bloud of him to bee our washing and clensing. And when wee haue once beene watred with the holy Ghost, then will that bloud be euer fresh and neuer drye. For it is not corruptible, in as much as wee be washed and clensed with it before God. Therefore let vs so put the thing in vre which is spoken of by Saint Peter, as it may besprinkle our soules. As how? Euen by taking holde by fayth, of the inestimable benefite which is brought vs by our Lorde Iesus Christ. And although wee bee full of filth and vncleanneſse: yet doth not God faile to take vs into his fauour, because the bloud that was once shedde for our saluation, is sufficient to wash out all our spots at this day. Thus much for one point. Hebr. 12. 20. 1. Iohn 1. 7.

And therefore let vs rest vpon this point, that although we seeme in this world to bee wrapped vp in the curse of God with the vnbeleeuers, yet notwithstanding we shall bee preserued from aboue: and that if the Angell could skill to discerne the Iewes which had marked their houses with the corruptible bloud of a brute beaste; it is much more likely that God will at this day know the blood of his own sonne, so as we may be discerned by it, and not haue his wrath to fall vpon vs. True it is ỹ we may well suffer some chastisement, for it is good for our soules health. But the end therof will alwaies be good, and God will neuer ceasse to be still mercifull to vs. That is the first matter which we haue to mark as in respect of the former saying, that our Lord Iesus Christ is the fulfilling of the things that were figured in the law, by the offering of the Paschal Lambe.

But let vs nowe come backe againe to Saint Paules exhortation. Hee sayth that because our Easter lambe is offered vp, wee must nowe keepe the feast in eating it, howbeit not with the Leauen of naughtinesse or deceite, but in simplicitie and vprightnesse. Whereas he sayth that our passouer is offered vp, he doth vs to vnderstand that if we wilbe reconciled to God, we must resorte to the death and passion of his Sonne, and not surmise any other Sacrifice than that, which is the euerlasting, because the vertue thereof can neuer fayle. And it is a point well worth the noting: For it serueth to condemne the abhomination of the Masse which is brought into the Popedome. They be not contented with ỹ offering vp of Iesus Christ vnto GOD his Father, and with the one satisfaction which hee hath made to indure for euer: but they beare men in hande that hee is yet sacrificed dayly; whereas Saint Paule telleth vs that wee must holde vs to the Redemption that was purchased once for all. 2. Cor. 5. 8. Hebr. 7. 25.

Nowe remayneth that wee eate of this Sacrifice, that is to say, that wee become partakers thereof. As if hee had sayde, there are two thinges in the paschall Lambe: the one was the sprinkling of the Lambes bloud, and the other was the eating of his flesshe roasted. Now in deede it is the sonne of God that hath offred this sacrifice, and that office belongeth to him alone. The sprinkling of his blood is made in our Hebr. 7. 24.

hearts by the holy Ghost: for that cannot be attributed to ỹ cunning of men. We must now become partakers of this Sacrifice: not by eating Iesus christ after a fleshly maner, but S. Paul had an eye to this partaking that is giuen vs by the Gospel. For we be members of his body, and he knitteth vs so vnto him, ỹ looke whatsoeuer he hath, he cõmunicateth ỹ same vnto vs; so as we liue in him & he also in vs. And for as much as there is no seuerance betweẽ ỹ sonne of God & ỹ faithfull: therfore is he our meate. For we be no lesse fed wᵗʰ his power & his very substãce as in respect of our soules, than our bodies are fed and nourished with bread. Againe, to the intent we should vnderstand that wee haue not our sustenance by haulfes in Iesus Christ: he addeth wine also, to shew that hee is our drinke as well as our meate. That is ỹ thing which S. Paule ment to be broken, in saying ỹ we must now eat of this Easter lamb: that is to wit, that as now we should so cõmunicate with the sonne of God, as we might be knit vnto him by the secret and inarueilous working of his holy spirite, and he become our foode and nourishment, & we be susteined by the same, bicause we must else needs decay through our own feblenes. And this eating is not for once a yeere, but continually during all the time of our life.

Eph. 5. 30.

Iohn 14. 19. 20.

Then let vs learne, that as long as we be in this world, we must dayly frame our selues to the spirituall fellowship which we haue with our Lorde Iesus Christ, and to the confirming of the vnion more and more: for without that, the crucifying of our Lord Iesus Christ will boote vs nothing at al. He is the redeemer of all the whole world: & yet notwithstanding, what a nomber is there, which reape nothing else by his death but the greater condemnation? And that is bicause they refuse so excellent a benefite, wherby they make themselues vnworthy of it, and exclude themselues quite and cleane from it. But when wee communicate with him by faith, then doe we ratifie the grace that was purchaced for vs. And therefore let vs marke, that to bee partakers of the fruite and operation of the death and passion of our Lord Iesus Christ, we must bee linked vnto him from day to day by faith, profiting and growing still in that holy vnion, vntill wee haue the thing wholly and perfectly, which wee haue as yet but in part. After that maner ought we to eate ỹ sacrifice, to keepe the passeouer wel. And for as much as our faith increaseth according to our profiting in the holy scripture: if we intend to communicate wel wᵗʰ the sonne of God; euery one of vs must exercise our selues in the doctrine of the Gospell, and match the same wᵗʰ prayer, beseeching God ỹ seeing he hath vouchsafed to call vs once into his sonnes company, he will maintaine vs therein, & neuer suffer vs to be separated or wᵗʰdrawen from it any more. Therefore must we seeke all ỹ meanes which our Lord hath ordeined, to stablish the communion which we ought to haue in our Lord Iesus Christ.

Eph. 4. 13. 15. 16.

Now S. Paule addeth, that we cannot be partakers of ỹ sonne of God, nor haue any acquaintance with him, if we bee dubble minded ỹ there be any fraude or malice in vs. Then must we be changed if we will haue Iesus Christ for our substanance, that is to say, if we will haue him to feede vs with his substance. Certaine it is ỹ malice and hypocrisie are so rooted in vs, ỹ we must be faine to fight much wᵗʰ them, before we can be rid of thẽ. S. Paul then sheweth ỹ faithful there, ỹ doeng must be reformed, or else Iesus Christ will cut vs off frõ his body. And so although ỹ hypocrite pretend to seeke Iesus Christ & to sticke throughly to him: yet notwithstanding they haue none acquaintance at al wᵗʰ him. For why? They be things vtterly vnpossible, ỹ Iesus Christ should dwell in vs, & yet neuertheles that all maner of deceite & naughtinesse should raigne in vs. And therefore in stead of abstaining from leauened bread as the fathers of old time did in eating of ỹ pascal lamb vnder the law: let vs marke ỹ nowadaies God wil haue vs to discharge our selues of all naughtines & guile. And how may ỹ be? It will not be doone wout great inforcement: for we of our selues are not steady: but the spirit of our Lord Iesus Christ must be faine to worke after such a sorte ỹ vs, as we may be conformable to him in simplicitie & vprightnes. Thus ye see what we haue to gather of this exhortation which S. Paule maketh in ỹ first epistle to the Corinthians.

Now afterward heere followeth the thing that was treated of yesterday, namely the eating of ỹ pascall lamb wᵗʰ their staues in their hands, their shooes on their feete, & their loynes girded. For we cannot haue the companie of Iesus Christ vnlesse we be as wayfarers in this world, to go forward to seeke our inheritance elsewhere. And S. Paul in the Epistle to ỹ Colossians saith plainly that our life is hidden wᵗʰ Christ, and ỹ we must be as dead men, if we wilbe vnined to the sonne of God. And why? For he is in heauen, & therefore it followeth ỹ our life ought not to be tyed heere to ỹ earth. What is to be doone then? If we will haue Iesus Christ to auow vs to bee members of his body, & to quicken vs by his spirite: we must get vs out of this world; not ỹ we should not dwell in it, but ỹ we shold not be wedded to it. For these two things agree very well, ỹ gods children shall be cõuersant in this earthly life, & yet neuertheless be heires & citizens of ỹ kingdom of heauen, accordingly as ỹ Apostle saith to ỹ Hebrewes, ỹ God can well find in his hart to take vs for his children, if we be not tyed to this world, but passe on beyond it. Wherefore let vs marke, ỹ to haue felowship wᵗʰ our lord Iesus christ, we must depart out of this world: ỹ is to say, our earthly affections must not raigne in vs, we must not be married here, we must not bee snarled here: but we must consider ỹ seeing God hath set vs here to make a iourney, yea & short iourney, euery of vs ought to hie himselfe a pace, & to looke well to the leading of our selues of ỹ things ỹ may hinder vs in attaining to ỹ heauenly life. And we must vnderstand ỹ if we do so, Iesus Christ wil come vnto vs & reach vs his hand to strengthẽ vs, ỹ we may be able to ouercome all impediments. For it were impossible ỹ euer we should compasse ỹ matter, vnlesse we were aided frõ aboue. So then, we se now ỹ a man cannot be partaker of the Paschal Lamb, except he haue his loynes girded and his staffe in his hand, ỹ is to say, vnlesse he be like a wayfarer and that he stay not in this world.

And for the same cause also doth our Lord Iesus Christ warne al his Disciples to haue lampes in their hands, & their garments trussed vp, & to be alwaies in a readinesse til he come, & to stand waiting continually for his comming. And as he cõmandeth vs to haue our loynes girded vp, euẽ so willeth he vs to haue lampes in our hands, to shew ỹ there is neither night nor day for ỹ faithfull to make tarience, & therefore ỹ euen in the middes of darknes we must haue light, euen the spirituall light to guide vs; & that we must haue the one foote alwaies lifted vp, to ỹ intent we be not taken vnawares when he commeth, but ỹ we haue minded our way aforehand, to go stil forward to meete ẅ him. Ye see then ỹ the way to communicate aright ẅ our Lord Iesus Christ, ỹ we may bee partakers of the sacrifice which he hath offered: is to make none accoũt of ỹ world, nor to haue any loue vnto it, but to seeke ỹ inheritance ỹ is aboue, & to cõmunicate so one with another here beneath, as it may bee a meane to make vs draw the neerer vnto God. And so wee see ỹ although ỹ figures of ỹ law continue not any longer, yet the truth of them abideth with vs, and it behoueth vs to put the same in vre.

And hereby we be yet better informed of the thing ỹ I haue touched already: which is that the profit which redoundeth to vs by ỹ death & passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ, is much better knowen & beautifullier seene of vs, by laying it to the auncient figure, & by considering how ỹ things ỹ were set forth darkly at ỹ time, are nowe fulfilled to ỹ sight of the eye. And like as it behoueth vs to communicate with our Lorde Iesus Christ: so let vs mark also ỹ God giueth vs a helpe euen at this day in ỹ Sacrament of ỹ Lordes supper, bicause of our rudenes & infirmitie. True it is (as I haue touched alreadie) ỹ our communicating with our Lord Iesus Christ must not bee only a thrise or foure times a yeere, but continually all our life long. Yet notwithstãding we haue nede to be quickened vp, bicause we come not to it with such strength as were requisite. Therefore like as ỹ fathers of old time had the Pascall Lamb: so hath ỹ sonne of God left vs his supper to be a helpe to vs to guide vs vnto him. Will we then be partakers of ỹ supper of our Lorde Iesus Christ? Let vs vnderstand ỹ according as I haue touched before, wee must rid our selues of all malice & guile, & forsake the world. True it is ỹ the Hypocrits do thrust themselues in among ỹ faithfull, & come to defile the table of ỹ sonne of God: but what carie they thẽce but vtter curstednes? Therefore let vs keepe our selues frõ being guiltie of such a treacherie, & consider that if it behoued a man to be circumcised in olde time ere he might eate of the Pascal Lamb: it behoueth vs also at this day to be separated to the seruice of our God, & to be first made holy. And we know ỹ we ought to be circumcised euen at this day: howbeit not by mans hand, but by inwarde reformation of minde, accordingly as S. Paule saith therof in the second Chapter to ỹ Colossians, ỹ whatsoeuer is of our flesh must bee cut off: for there is nothing in it but sinne & corruption. Now thẽ, ỹ we may come to ỹ holy supper of our Lord Iesus Christ, & haue there ỹ warrant which he giueth vs ỹ we be members of his body: let vs looke ỹ we circumcise our hearts. For the figure is abolished: but yet haue wee the accomplishment of all things in our Lord Iesus Christ.

Moreouer, let vs come to ỹ chief point: which is ỹ our Lord Iesus Christ is named our Passouer. For by him must we be deliuered, not out of the land of Egypt, but out of the dungeons of death: and we must passe a passage that were vnpossible for vs, if God drew vs not with his owne hand, & by his own wonderfull power. For we be al borne the children of wrath, and we should rot in our miserie, if god pitied vs not, & reached vs not his hand. And that man beguileth himselfe which thinketh himselfe able to leape out of the myre wherin he is plunged. It is the office of our Lord Iesus Christ to draw vs out frõ thence, according to this saying of S. Iohns in his viii. chapter, If ỹ sonne of god make you free, thẽ shal you be free. Wherby he sheweth vs, that euen from our very comming out of our mothers wombes, we be in ỹ cursed thraldom of sin & death, & shold continue therin vnto the end, if we were not set free from it by him which not without cause hath taken vpon him the title of passouer, to shew ỹ it is his office to set vs free, as I said afore. And heereby we must learn to presume nothing of our selues, but to consider that we must think our selues beholden to the sonne of god for all things, that he may bee magnified, & all those diueliish opinions of freewill & of power & ability to prepare our selues to doe good, beaten downe: so as we may know ỹ as long as God suffereth vs to follow our owne swindge, we shall alwayes abide fast tyed in the chaines of the diuel & of death. And therfore let vs yeeld our lord Iesus Christ his dew honour, which is ỹ we acknowledge him to bee the partie which hath set vs free. Iohn 8. 36.

And herewall let vs marke further, ỹ when we bee graffed into his body, it is not for vs to serue sin. For, to be graffed into the body of out Lord Iesus Christ, & yet notwithstanding to serue Sathan, are two things as contrary as fire and water. Nowe then if wee intend not to disfeate the power of the sonne of God, & to bereaue him of his office: we must be in liberty to serue god. And let vs not think ỹ he ment to beguile vs in telling vs that that office belõgeth vnto him. But it becommeth vs on our part to offer our selues vnto him, & not to maintain willingly the cursed bondage wherin we be. For the very cause why men perish therin, is that they sooth themselues and fall asleepe in it, and come not frankly to Iesus Christ. Now then let vs note ỹ ỹ true mark of our Christendom, is ỹ we be in freedom to do good, & ỹ we haue a pure & free wil to dedicate our selues to god. Not that we can do it perfectly so long as we be in this world, (for we see how S. Paul, who had profited far aboue a nomber of other men, mourneth and confesseth that he is stil held as a captiue in part:) but for ỹ the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ must neuertheless worke so farre in vs, as wee may not bee held quite backe by these Rom. 6. 3. Rom. 7. 14. 23.

worldly things. But let vs marke also ỹ our Lord Iesus Christ hath not only drawē vs out of ỹ gulfe of death, but also will haue vs dayly to passe further. And forasmuch as we be not quite & cleane rid of this bondage of sinne: this passing on must continue still. What is al our life then? It is a continuall holding on to attaine to ỹ full and perfect freedome which God hath promised to his children. And ỹ is ỹ cause why I sayd ỹ it behooued vs to eate the Pascall Lamb euery day. For Iesus Christ is not our euerlasting Passouer, for ỹ he is sacrificed euery day: but for ỹ we doe daily take benefit by him, & for that he maketh ỹ vertue of his sacrifice continually auailable by his holy spirit. Notwithstanding, howsoeuer ỹ case go, yet must we still keepe on forward, vntill we bee taken out of this world.

This doctrine ought to be very common, yea and when it is preached, euery man will thinke he knowes it wellynough: but in the meane while where is ỹ practise thereof? Where is the sayd freeheartednes to shewe by our deedes that our Lord hath broken the bondes of Satan, so as we serue not sinne any more? Where is ỹ earnestnes of minde to proceede more & more vntil we be gone quite & cleane out of the world? And yet must we exercise this doctrine, & put it in vre, if we wil be acknowledged for mẽbers of our Lord Iesus Christ. But we cannot haue him to bee our Redeemer, except he haue alwayes ỹ saide title of Passeouer. And that is in respect of vs: for he hath made his passage, by comming downe into
2. Tim. 3. 16 the world & by reconciling men to God his father, & by being receiued vp againe into his glorie and Maiestie. Therfore there must not be any more chaunge in Iesus Christ. But we on our side must be made perfect in him: and as soone as he calleth vs to be of his body, we must begin to depart out of ỹ dungeons of sin, from whence we must withdraw our selues euer more & more, and still trauell to attaine to the heauenly righteousnes. To be short, let vs note that a Christian may well perceiue whether hee haue profited in the Gospell or no, by examining whether hee be withdrawen from the worlde or no, and whether he be ready and weldisposed to depart from it as oft as it shall please God to pull him away from it, so as his heart be not tyed to it as long as Matt. 6. 21. he is heere beneath (For looke where our treasure is, there is also our heart with it) but that seeing Iesus Christ is our full life and felicitie, we alwaies tend to hinward, & euer haue our mindes lifted vp on high.

And let vs marke further, that to keepe the passeouer aright at this day, it behoueth vs to be vnited together, accordingly as we see how God hath giuen a strait commaundement thereof in this place, where he saith it is not Lawfull to eate the pascall Lambe in any other of the Cities or townes of the contrey, but ỹ they ought to assemble together to the Temple. Which thing I haue told you heeretofore, was doone to preserue the religion in his purenes. Will we then nowadaies be partakers of our Lord Iesus Christ? Let vs agree together that there may be a true brotherhood among vs. For if we bee at ods among our selues like dogs & cats, Iesus Christ must needes disclaime & disauow vs. And therefore let vs not imagine our selues to be vnited to Iesus Christ, except there be good agreement and brotherly loue among vs. And wherein must that be? We may not conspire together as the wicked doe for they make confederacies and ioyne hands together to make warre against God. Curssed be such vnion: it behoueth vs to bee farre off from such dealing. Nay, we must reforte to the temple of God. And although we haue not now a materiall temple as the Iewes had then in Ierusalem, (for our meeting togither is for common orders sake, and not after the manner of the Iewes, who had a place certaine appointed out to thē:) although (say I) we haue not the like figure; yet must we walke as in the presence of our God, we must be [illegible] ruled by his word, we must haue one melody of [illegible] faith to praise God as it were with one mouth, & we must shew our selues truly to be al one in him. Thus ye see how wee must be gathered together to Gods Church, if we will bee partakers of our Lord Iesus Christ.

And herein we see, ỹ these scorners which runn away from ỹ order of ỹ church, exclude theselues from al hope of the heauenly life. They can say wel ynough ỹ their intent is to be Christians: but yet for al ỹ, inasmuch as they forsake ỹ vnitie of faith, yea & euen fight against it by despising all order: is it not to be concluded, ỹ they cannot be partakers of the Pascall Lambe, at leastwise after ỹ true maner thereof which we haue nowadaies? Let vs marke well then, ỹ to be partakers of our Lord Iesus Christ, we must not be only vnited in ỹ doctrine of ỹ gospel: but we must also make confession of our faith, in assembling all togither as though God were present with vs. And truely we know how it is promised vs, ỹ where two or three are gathered togither in ỹ name of Iesus Christ he will beare rule there, & be present among thē. And therfore let vs haue a diligent regard of resorting vnto Sermons. And therwithal, let vs vse ỹ Sacrament of the Lords supper, ỹ we may take one another what is ment by it. For in the xii. of Exodus our Lord sheweth vs full well, ỹ wee must profit in his schoole, to be partakers of ỹ Pascall Lambe. If thy sonne aske thee what this act of ours betokeneth: Thou shalt answere, wee were bondslaues in ỹ land of Egypt, & God pitied vs. Thus ye see what we haue to doe at this day, not for ỹ eating of a rosted Lambe: but to be made partakers of our Lorde Iesus Christ in spirit and truth. Wee must inquire diligently to know ỹ benefits which our Lord Iesus Christ hath brought vs. And herein is our negligence bewrayed. For it is ynough for vs to heare Iesus Christ spoken of: yea & there are a great sort which haue not the skil to discerne the father from the sonne. They know not whether Iesus Christ were sent by God his father or nō: insomuch ỹ now & then a man shall finde more beastlines in those ỹ haue their eares dayly beaten w the Gospel, than among ỹ Papists. Nay it is to bee openly seene. Why then come we to Sermōs, but to be taught? Nay, there are a nōber which fulfil ỹ prouerb ỹ saith, a foole doubteth of nothing. And they ỹ haue most need to learne, think themselues to know most, & that they need not to ope their mouths to ask which is Gods truth. But as for vs, let vs inquire. And for ỹ doing thereof let vs marke, ỹ it behoueth vs to liue soberly, for if we go to worke proudly & presumptuously as a nõber do which think thẽselues so great clerks (as I haue said) ỹ no man cã teach thẽ any more than they know alreadie: wee shall be ful enough, yea euẽ till we burst: but it shalbe but with wind, & we shalbe voyde of all light of life. But if wee can finde in our heartes to bee taught of God: we must bee learners, that is to say, lowliminded: and we must vnderstand that we haue neede to proceede further. And truely the verie vse of the Lordes supper ought to put vs in minde, that our cõming thither ought not to be without instruction. For (as I declared yesterday) a sacrament without teaching & instruction, is a deade thing, and a mocking of God, and a defiling of the thing it selfe. Therefore as oft as wee come to the supper, let it bee a whetting of vs, to make vs inquire of ỹ things that we know not sufficiently before though we haue had some tast of them. And truely if it be not lawful to admit young children to the Lords supper, vntill they knowe what is meant by that Sacrament, and wherefore it was ordeyned: shoulde such as haue liued a fortie and three-score yeares come to it like dogges or swine? And yet we see they doe so: and woe be to them for it. So then let the visible signe which our lord hath ordeyned be a meane to spurre vs forwarde the more, that wee may seeke to profite more and more in the knowing of Iesus Christ, specially seeing we be no more troubled nowadayes with reforting to a place which God hath appointed. For wee haue Iesus Christ who is Gods temple, and hee is not shut vp within any certaine place, but filleth both heauen and earth, with his power. True it is that in the nature of man wherewith he clothed himselfe, he is gone vp into heauen: and yet for all that, hee ceaseth not to dwell here in vs. So then we must go to Ierusalem, we neede not to goe on pilgrimage, but only to make our repaire to the son of God, and we shall finde in him the whole fulnesse and perfection of the Godhead. Neuertheless wee must marke well also, that forasmuch as the fathers of olde time had not the thinges that are geuen vs at this time, it shal be to our sorer condemnation, if they haue beene diligenter than we in exercysing ỹ figures & shadowes, and that we nowadayes be lasie and colde, so as the substance be put into our handes, and yet we make no reckening of it. The Iewes were faine to resort to the Temple of Ierusalem, leauing their houses and householdes. And their wiues and children were faine to come trotting thither, with great trauell and not without charges. And why? Ye shall resort to the place which the Lorde shall haue chosen to set his name in. He saith not to dwel there throughout, but to shewe his presence in such wise, as it may be knowen that we bee vnited to our God, not onely by figures and shadowes, but also by his dwelling among vs. As nowe there is not any one place which God hath chosen to put his name in, that hee might bee called vpon alonely there: but wee haue God manifested in the flesh. For what is Iesus Christ? Euen so is he intitled by Saint Paul. Seeing then that hee calleth vs to himselfe, and that we neede not to make any long circuites to finde him, but rather that he preuenteth vs, and that all his desire is to drawe vs to God his father: shoulde we nowe be lasie and colde? What excuse wil there be for vs, when the Iewes tooke such paine hauing but ỹ first principles like yong childrens Apsies, and ỹ we nowadayes being brought to the full perfection, doe fare neuer the better by it, or at least-wise it standeth vs not in so much steade, as the auncient figures stood the Iewes vnder the law. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vppon this text, where it is saide that they resorted to the place which the Lord had chosen. 1. Tim. 3. 16.

Now finally for a conclusion, Moses telleth them that there should bee no Leauened breade in all their borders during those dayes: and secondly that on the day of the passeouer, they should keep as great solemnitie as on the Sabboth day. And hereby he sheweth that it is not enough for vs to absteyne from fraude and malice, but that we must labor to the vtterm oft we can, to put away al filth frõ among vs. For if I alledge, that as for my selfe I will bee no hypocrite, and in the meane time doe suffer stumblingblockes in the Church, yea or mainteyne them: I must not thinke my selfe therefore discharged. It is saide, There shall no leauen bee seene in thy coastes. As if he had said, Euerie man must haue an eye to himselfe and to his house, ỹ ye be not defiled in any thing that may hinder you to eat of the pascall Lambe in all pureness. Therefore beginne at your selues and at your owne householdes. But yet therewithall bee so watchfull also, as there may be no corruptiõ in al ỹ rest of the people. Wherfore let vs haue an eie nowadaies to the wel practising of this doctrine, and let euerie man looke narrowly to himselfe. And afterwarde let such as haue householdes to gouerne, looke to the purging away of all filth and vncleanesse. And then generally, if there be any stumbling blockes among vs, which may put thinges out of order: let vs all looke to the reprooving of them out of hande. And aboue all thinges let vs assure our selues, that to bee partakers of Iesus Christ in true pureness, wee must begin at the cleansing of our selues, ỹ God may gouerne vs, and that our passeouer may be kept in spirit and trueth, by casting ourselues vterly downe, and by yeelding to forbeare all our owne thoughtes and affections, so as wee may keepe a spirituall Sabboth, not for one day onely (as I said afore,) but ỹ we may continue therein during all the time of our life.

Now let vs kneele downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs to feele thẽ better than we haue done, that they may so mislike vs from day to day, as euery of vs may inforce himselfe to repaire vnto him, and to frame our selues in such sort to his righteousnes, as all our whole life may bee ordered, &c. And so let vs all say, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Thursday the vij. of Nouember. 1555.

The XCix. Sermon, which is the third vpon the sixteenth Chapter.

9 Thou shalt recken seuen weekes from the time that thou beginnest to put the sickle into thy harueſt: thou shalt begin to recken seuen weekes:

10 Afterward thou shalt keepe the feast of weekes to the Lord thy God, with a freewill offering of thy handes, which thou shalt giue as the Lord thy God shall haue blessed thee.

11 And thou shalt reioyce before the face of the Lorde thy God, both thou and thy sonne, and thy daughter, thy Manseruaunt and thy Maidseruaunt, and the Leuite which is within thy gates, and the straunger, the fatherlesse, and the widowe which are among you, in the place which the Lord thy God will choose to set his name in.

12 And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondseruant in Egypt: and thou shalt keepe and do these ordinances.

MOses teacheth heere of the seconde great solemnitie which was kepte yearely among the Iewes: and that was to giue God thankes after the gathering of their harueſt. And this day was named Pentecoſt, [that is to say fiftie dayes,] becauſe there were seuen weekes betweene Easter and that, so as there were nine and fortie dayes betweene those feastes, whereunto one being added for the feastday it selfe, made fiftie. And the Greeke worde signifieth the same thing: but the Hebrewes called it the feast of weekes, and all commeth to one thing. Thus then we see now what this feast was whereof Moses speaketh here, that is to wit a meane to put them in minde to honor God for sending his benefites to the sustenance of man. And this concerned all manner of fruites of the earth: Howebeit vnder one kinde, all the rest were cõprehended, as if God had exhorted his people to confesse that all good thinges come of him. The summe then is, that we must acknowledge not onely that God hath set vs in this worlde, but also that he sheweth himselfe continually to be a fosterfather, and that he mainteyneth vs, and that he maketh the earth to yeelde fruite to finde vs withall, and at a worde, that we liue by his meere liberalitie. True it is that this ought to be done at all times of our life; howbeit by reason of mens grosseneſſe, it was requisite that there shoulde bee yearely a feast kepte vppon some one certaine day of the yeare. Moreouer (as I haue tolde you alreadie) the feastes of the Iewes serued not only for the benefites that God had bestowed vppon them alreadie, but also for a seruice. And so, to be short, Gods will was that the Iewes should giue him thankes one day in the yeare, ỳ therby they might be prouoked to acknowledge all their life after, that they were susteyned at his hande, so as they should neuer take anie repast, but that they shoulde thinke thus with themselues, wee haue offered sacrifice to God after harueſt: whereby we were put in minde that it is hee which hath sent vs our sustenance. Therefore are we hypocrites, if we thinke not vppon his goodnesse dayly, or if wee turne not to him as often as we eate or drinke, to acknowledge him to be the author of al welfare. So then, this solemne protestation made once a yere was not a discharge for men to forget God all the rest of the time, but rather a meane to make them thinke, Goe too, we haue kept here a solemne feast for one day, that it might be a schooling to vs all the yeare after, that if wee haue any thing wherewith to susteyne our selues, it is Gods doing who hath had pitie on vs.

But nowe the ceremonie of this feast is no longer in vse, and yet the trueth therof abideth with vs still. And so wee receiue good and profitable instructiõ by ỳ doctrine therof, reason wherof it cannot be thought to be abolished, and ỳ it was written alonely for the Iewes. For it was Gods will that men shoulde bee taught by it euen to the worldes end, and that they should be put in minde not to swallowe vp Gods benefites into our paunches without thinking vpon him, but rather that wee shoulde be bolde to giue him thankes, as oft as we either eate or drinke; so that whensoeuer we take any repast, we may consider howe it is hee that giueth it vs, first opening the heauen to giue moysture and foyzon to the earth, and afterward giuing power to the earth to beare fruite, and finally blessing the Corne when it is sprung vp, that it may prosper to yeeld foode vnto vs. Seeing then that we perceiue al these things, let vs haue regard to benefite our selues by them. True it is (as I haue touched afore) that we must not haue anie one day certaine in the yeare, as the Iewes had: rather ought wee also to bee as young children. If a man alleadge for his excuse, that if hee do not his duetie, let him not vse his reward giuen him as a little childe hath: it will not serue to excuse him. Folke doe not vse to giue a young childe his breakefast till hee haue prayed vnto God, because hee hath not the wit and discretion to doe it, vnlesse he bee compelled vo it by some certaine order. Nowe then if an olde fellowe of the age of thirtie or fortie yeares eate his meate without praying to God, he deserueth not to bee beaten with a rodde, but to bee driuen away and to bee abhorred as a swine. And if hee alleadge, I haue no rule as is giuen to young children: what is that to the matter? Hast thou not discretion enough to do so much of thy selfe? Hast thou liued so long in the world and doest thou not yet know that thou oughtest to yeelde God thankes for the good which hee doth vnto thee? Therefore it is saide that the Iewes were young children in comparison of the Christians: for God had giuen them rules according to their infirmities. As now although these thinges bee past away in respect of vs; yet are wee the more bounde to acknowledge Gods grace in his feeding & maintaining of vs. And why? The perfecter y the doctrine is which is imparted to vs in the Gospel, the more plainly ought wee to acknowledge the benefites of our God towardes vs. That is the thing which wee haue first to remember out of this text.

Nowe it is saide, That the people shall reserue in Ierusalem to offer freewillofferings. God pointeth out these thinges more particularly in the three and twentith of Leuiticus, where he sheweth what offeringes were to bee made on the behalfe of the people. Howbeit, hee speaketh there but of euerie particular person, and hee saith, Ye shall bring offeringes according to your deuotion. For although there was a lawe certaine; yet behooued it their offeringes to bee made with a free will, and not as by compulsion, accordingly as it is saide, that God loueth such as offer vnto him willingly and not as of necessitie. Yee shall see manie that will be liberall to Godwarde; howebeit, it is but a thing of constraint, which kinde of dealing God vtterlie mislikeeth. A man may spoyle himselfe of all his goods, and yet doe God no such seruice as hee shall like well of, if it bee not matched with his free will, as I saide afore. Besides this, GOD left it to euerie mans owne choyce to offer what hee thought best, but yet he addeth according as the Lord thy God shall haue blessed thee. To the intent that men should not withhold through niggardlinesse, as they be commonly wont to doe: God putteth them here in minde of his blessing: as if hee had saide, be well aduised, true it is that in this case I lay the bridle on your necke, offer what you your selues thinke good, I meane not to inforce you to any thing; I would haue the offeringes which you bring vnto mee, to be of a free will. But yet for all that, ye must come to account for it. Who is hee that blesseth you? If yee haue had a good and plentiful harnest, to whome are you beholden for it? Ought yee not to consider howe it is I y haue opened my hand wide, to the end that your hearts also should be open themselues wide on their parte? Know ye therefore that I haue allured you, by multiplying you; wherefore when yee haue a good croppe, looke that yee employe your selues so much the freelier in doing my seruice.

And hereby wee bee warned to looke neerely to our selues, that euerie of vs may put forth the good thinges which God hath committed vnto him. Here is mention made but onely of Corne, Wine, and such other thinges. Then if God haue inriched a man, hee must see that hee suppresse not Gods blessing, by keeping it close. For wee see there are Cormorantes which haue no care of otherfolkes pouertie: they thinke they may scrape all that they can come by, and that no man ought to haue any parte of their goods. On the contrarie part it is declared here, that accordingly as euerie man hath receiued aboundance at Gods hande, so must hee impart vnto his neighbours: for that is the ende which God aimeth at. And if wee thinke not of it, we must come to account for it: and wee shall finde at length, that God will impute it to vs for theft, when wee shall haue deuoured his goods after y fashion, without hauing anie pitie vppon the needie to succour them. In like case is it with spirituall giftes. For according as euerie man is of abilitie and skill to succour his neighbours, so is hee bounde to discharge himselfe and to put himselfe forwarde. Otherwise GOD will shewe vs to what purpose hee had bestowed his benefites vppon vs, and that wee haue fayled in our duetie. That is the thing which wee haue to beare away in that Moses alleadgeth Gods blessing to stirre vp the Iewes to offer sacrifice y more largely, after as God shall haue increased them, knowing that hee bindeth them thereby vnto him.

And whereas he saith, That they shall reioyce with their children, their menseruauntes, & their womenseruauntes, the fatherlesse, the widowes, and the strangers: thereby hee sheweth that his lawe was not ceremoniall onely, but that it tended also to the doing of almesdeedes: as indeede our Lord hath at all times shewed, that those are the very sacrifices which he requireth. True it is that parte of the thinges which were to be offered, were to be brought to the Altar, & there to be burned in sacrifice: but yet for all that, it was alwayes prouided that of the rest, the poore should be fedde and maintayned as well as the priestes & Leuites: and nowe doeth Moses speake thereof againe. Wherefore let vs marke, that euen in the time of the Ceremonies and shadowes of the lawe, God neuer required sacrifice, but that he willed men therewithall to haue pitie vppon the needie to succour them, according to this saying of his by his Prophet Osee. I require mercy & not sacrifice. True it is y he had commanded both of them: but he sheweth y such as think to discharge themselues by cõming to y church, and by offering their giftes there, doe beguile themselues, and that all their doinges are but hypocrisie, if they bee not kindehearted in succouring the needie, & in doing of Almesdeeds. For I pray you, can wee aduaunce GOD anie whyt by offering of our goods vnto him? Can we inrich

Iob. 35.6. Psal. 16.2. inrich him? Wanteth he any thing? True it is that hee requireth oblations: howebeit, that was to the end that men shoulde acknowledge euen by eyesight, that they were bounde vnto him. It was a kinde of puting of them in minde of it. Yet notwithstanding it stood them alwayes in hand to consider, that they could not otherwise discharge themselues, than by giuing part of their goods to such of their neighbours as had want. Thus ye see howe the meaning of Moses was, that when the Iewes offered their sacrifices after harueſt, it was not enough for them to acknowledge with mouth and outward gestures, that they were bound vnto God for his sending of them wherewith to liue, but that it behooued them also to shewe towardes men that they intended to be faithfull stewardes of the thinges which he had put into their hands, and desired nothing but to be well discharged of them.

And to moue thē more thereunto, he telleth them That they themselues had beene bondslaues in the Land of Egypt, which warning peale hath bin set downe in other places heretofore. For wee know that when men liue at their owne ease and in pleasure, they bee not greatly touched with compassion though other men die for hunger: & euen so was it with the Iewes when they were come into the land of Chanaan after they began once to waxe ful. For the land it selfe was fat and specially because God had blessed it. Therefore doth he bring thē backe to the minding of their former state, and of the cruel bondage wherein they had beene. Consider (saith he) how ye haue beene bondslaues in the land of Egypt, and that as then ye would faine haue been gently intreated. When ye were too greeuously vexed, ye cried out vnto mee. Now therefore know ye that ye poore & needy which are among you, do craue likewise to be regarded at your handes, and that I for my part do make account of them. This is the effect of the matter conteined in that place.

Now to the end we may make our profit by it, let vs cal to mind the saying of the prophet Osee accordingly also as it is alledged by our Lord Iesus Christ, that is to wit, that God requireth the sacrifice of Almesdeeds. As if he should say, that he is not contented that men shoulde vse some Ceremonies towards him, but will haue vs to be kindharted in releeuing such as haue need of our helpe, if we haue abilitie wherewith to do it. And if men play the thankeleſſe churles with vs in forgetting the good which we haue done them: it is enough for vs that God alloweth our dealing, and putteth it into his booke of accounts. Also let vs bethinke our selues howe glad wee woulde haue beene of releefe, if euer wee were in necessitie, that the same may moone vs to pitie, and that we be not blinded with our wealth. I say to such as haue abundance, let them not lie welt'ring in their pleasures, and withdrawe their hand from succoring the poore: but let them cōsider that if euer they themselues felt the want of these worldly goods, they woulde bee glad that euerie man shoulde reach out his hande to releeue them: and therefore let they themselues doe the like. Yea and although wee had neuer felt any want, yet let vs consider that want may fall vpon vs hereafter. For what are we? Who can exempt himself from the stroke of God that he should not be driuen to begge his bread, yea though he had all the goods of the world? How of we see great store of examples. Seeing it is so, let no man be proude of his goods, but let vs al consider that we be men, and let vs not despise our owne flesh, as is saide in the Prophet Esay. And let vs not say, what be the widowes what be the fatherles children? what be strangers to vs? But seeing that God offereth it commendeth them to vs, let vs assure ourselues that wee cannot haue any soules more nigh vnto vs to whome to doe good. For when wee weene to bind men vnto vs, to haue recompense at their hande; wee shall be disappointed of all assayes, and good right it is that it shoulde so. But as for the thing that is put into Gods hand, that cannot perishe nor bee lost. Let vs marke then that Gods offering of the Strangers, the widowes, and the fatherles vnto vs, is as if he shoulde say, he made them his bayliffes to take vp his Rentes and Reuenewes. And when we bee to doe him homage for the benefites which wee haue receiued at his hande; let vs assure ourselues, that hee accepteth and auoweth all that euer is done to those whome hee speaketh of here by Moses.

Nowe we knowe what was done in the feast of Pentecost, namely that the holy Ghost was sent down vpon Christs disciples, and that there was a kinde of renewing of the worlde, to erect the kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ: for there he vttered his power, yea more than hee did in his resurrection. For what had we bin the better for Christs rising againe in his own person, if he had not powred out the grace of his holy spirite vppon his Church, to shewe that hee was set at the right hande of God his father, to fil all thinges and to dwell in vs, and that he hath such soueraigne dominion ouer all thinges, that we be in safetie when we be in his protection? And if wee looke well vppon the matter, we shall find that the lawe was giuen the same time as after the Passeouer. For it is saide that the people came to Sinay the thirde moneth after their departure out of Egypte, the same day that they departed from Raphidin. Nowe that was the first day of the moneth, and the fiftenth day was the day of the Passeouer. And according as the moonethes were as then, which went by the course of the Moone, there was one whole mooneth added. And so in deede there were fiftie dayes from the Passeouer to Gods setting foorth of his lawe vppon Mount Sinay, so as the feast of Pentecoste or Whitsuntide was referred to that time. Now we know that the lawe coulde do men no good, if it were but onely giuen them: for it is a deade letter. And againe, it killeth vs, because it sheweth vs our duetie, and wee be all transgressors of it, so as it condemneth and accurseth vs. What are men the better then for the publishing of the Lawe? Nothing at all, but that it sheweth them howe they bee bereft of all hope of saluation, and that they be all damned before God. And that is the cause why Saint Paul saith, that the Iewes at that time receiued the spirite of bondage, in terrour and feare saith he. It is sufficiently shewed in the nineteenth of Exodus how the Lawe affrighteth those that receiued it. For they went backewarde and entreated that God would speake to them by the mouth of Moses, because they could not heare his voyce but they must needes die for it. Ye see then that the Lawe taught men the will of GOD. But what? Forasmuch as wee be cleane contrarie to his goodnesse and righteousnesse: the lawe of it selfe can yeeld nothing but death, accordingly also as Saint Paul speaking thereof in the seconde to the Corinthians, saith, that it is a letter which killeth. Therefore it behooued the lawe to be renewed, and that God shoulde publishe it after an other fashion, not writing it in tables of stone, but in our heartes by chaunging them. For by nature our harts are as hard as stone, as it is said by the Prophet Ezechiel. Therefore must God be faine to soften them, & to make thē pliable, y they may be obedient to his lawe. Ye see then how the lawe was published after an other fashion vppon Whitsonday, than it was in olde time by Moses. For it was not deliuered vs in tables of stone, but God wrought so in vs by his holy spirite, that wee were then renewed, and the same continueth still at this day.

And therefore let vs marke, that besides the admonishment which the Iewes had to doe homage to God for their haruest and for their bodily sustenance which he gaue them: they had also a resemblaunce of the thinges which were fulfilled at the cōming of our Lord Iesus Christ, at which time GOD made another manner of Whitsontide than had beene in the time of the figures. For at that time he vttered the grace of the holy Ghost. Yet for all this, it is not meant y we should keepe a feast of Pentecost: it is cleane contrarie. Seeing that the thinges which were figured vnder the law, were fulfilled in our Lord Iesus Christ, and that the figures themselues are ended: if we bring them backe againe, wee doe wrong to him which hath brought the full accomplishment of all thinges. If the shadowes which were vnder the lawe, do come vp againe; Iesus Christ is to no purpose. So then let vs marke that the holy Ghost was not sent vnto vs, to the ende that these figures should continue still: but to shewe that we differ from the people of olde time. True it is (as I saide afore) that there is no ill in it for the Christians to haue a certaine daie wherein this historie shoulde bee declared vnto them: For we must not tie our selues to so streit a precisenesse, that it should not be lawfull for vs to vse that helpe for our infirmitie. But to make a service of God thereof, and to take example at the Iewes, as though it behoued vs to fashion our selues like vnto them, or as though the feast of Whitsontide ought to be obserued at this day, by reason of the sending of the holy Ghost: that were too grosse a fondnesse. Let vs vnderstand then, first that the Iewes had but a figure & shadowe of the trueth: and on our owne part wee may knowe in Iesus Christ, that God hath not figured anie thing in vaine, but that all the ceremonies of the Law tended to verie good purpose because the effect of them is shewed vs in him. Therefore let vs holde vs contented therewith, and now let vs learne to reioyce in the presence of our God, and to make otherfolks partakers of our mirth. Col. 2. 17.

The Iewes were commanded to resort to Ierusalem as soone as harueste was done, & not only to reioyce there, but also to impart of their goods to their neighbors, so as there might be a common gladnes among them, and God might be glorified with one accord. And now that these things are at this day accomplished: what haue we to doe? We must not run trotting to Ierusalē to worship God there and to doe him homage there. For we must lift vp our hands euerywhere, howbeit so as they be cleane. And moreouer for asmuch as GOD hath not only sent vs a harueste of corruptible fruits to nourish our bodies withal but also powred out y infinite riches of his holy spirit and sent vs the liuing waters as is saide in Ezechiel: let vs vnderstand that it is to y end we should haue the mirth whereof S. Paul speaketh in the fourteenth to the Romanes. Let vs now reioyce then seeing our Lord hath shewed himselfe so bountifull towards vs, that hee hath not withholde any of the cheefe good thinges which he had, but hath powred vppon vs all the benefites that concerne the endles life and heauenly glorie. Seeing then that we haue receiued the holy Ghost, let vs also be ioyful in our harts. As how? By withdrawing ourselues from y vanities of this world, & by holding our selues contēted with the fauor of our God, praising him euen in the middes of our afflictions. Albeit that wee haue not all things at wil in this world: yet let vs not cease to hold on still, assuring our selues that it ought to suffice vs that our God is fauourable to vs, & that he sheweth vs his loue. When wee be at that point once, then shall wee haue such peace and contentment in vs, as passeth all the ioyes of this world, yea and putteth away all the sorrowes that may trouble vs. And when wee haue such gladnesse our selues, wee must to the vttermost of our power make them partakers of it, which haue need. For if the Iewes were commanded to cal the widowes, the fatherles, and the strangers to make merie with them, in spending of the goods which God had giuen them: much more reason is it, that seeing the spirituall gifts which God hath bestowed vppon vs, belong to the common building vp of the Church as saith Saint Paul in the twelfth to the Romanes, and also in the twelfth of the first to y Corinthians, we should take heed y we defraude not our neighbours of the thing which GOD hath appointed for them. Exod. 19. 16. Deut. 5. 25. Heb. 12. 19. 2. Cor. 3. 6. Ezech. 11. 19. Ezech. 36. 26. Ezech. 47. 9. Rom. 12. 6. & 1. Cor. 12. 7. Phil. 4. 7.

Let vs marke also that as nowe there is no more any stranger as in respect of vs. For whereas God had separated the Iewes from the gentiles: nowe it is his will to bee knowen through the whole worlde; there is no more diuision of bodies; the wall is broken downe as saith Saint Paul in an other place. Seeing then that God Eph. 2. 14.

hath knit vs together after this fashion, and that Ierusalem extendeth through the whole world as Zach. 2. 4. the Prophet Zacharie speaketh thereof: wee ought to bee the more moued and prouoked to make al our brothers partakers of the ioy which wee haue receyued by the spirite of God. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to marke vppon that text.

But herewithall wee must marke that Moses in this place leaueth out two feastes which are spoken of in the three & twentith of Leuiticus, the cause whereof is for that the people were not streitly bounde to repaire at that time to Ierusalem to worshippe there. There was the feastes of Trumpets and the feast of * Affliction; and although Moses speake here of no mo than of three solemne feastes: yet doeth it behoue vs to interlace these other two with them. And as touching the feast of Affliction, let vs marke that our Lorde ordeyned it not without cause; but it wil serue vs verie wel to the expounding of the text which is dek with alreadie. For wee be taught that the Iewes had certayne dayes in the yeare, to the ende that the trueth shoulde abide vnto vs, and that it shoulde beare his full force among vs all the dayes of our life. It behooued the Iewes to humble themselues both by fasting and otherwise in acknowledging their sinnes: and thereupon to make a solemne confession of their misdeedes, in humbling théselues to God, and in crauing forgiuenesse for the same. I saide afore that this was not ordeined without cause. For wee see howe men do couer their faults as much as they can, and that they bethinke not themselues of them but by constraint. They alwayes drawe backe if they bee not thrust forwarde: for to their seeming it is a matter of melancholie. True it is that wee cannot thinke vppon our sinnes without greefe of minde: but yet is it for our welfare. And therfore in the second to the Corinthians Saint Paul
2. Cor. 7. 8. saith, that this kinde of sorrowing is not to bee shunned, neither ought men to be sorie for their sorrowing when they be put in minde of their sinnes. For why? It is a sorrowing as pleaseth
Luke 15. 17. God greatly, and gladdeth the Angels of Paradise, and bringeth vs infinite ioye in the ende. And forasmuch as men make merrie & reioyce when they haue offended God: their condemnation must needes be dubble, and needes must this sentence bee accomplished vppon them
Luke 6. 25. which saith; Woe bee to you which laugh, for yee shall weepe and bee sorie. And so let vs marke that because men will not willingly know and perceiue their faultes, it was Gods will that there shoulde bee a yereminde of them, that the Iewes might bethinke them of the great number of the sinnes which they hadde committed, and humble themselues. Not that their so doing acquitted them: but to the intent it shoulde bee a warning to them all the yeare after.

Nowe then, their fasting and their protesting of themselues to be guiltie before God: was to the ende that when they were gone home into their owne houses, they shoulde consider thus with themselues: Alas it is not for one day onely that it behoueth vs to craue forgiuenesse for wee cease not to offende our God, euen minute of an houre we be entring into a newe bonde with death. For although God haue pardoned vs; yet returne we to our sinne againe, and there is no ende of sinning: insomuch that as long as wee bee in this worlde, there are euer some vices lurking in vs, and our corruption is so great, that it is vnpossible for vs altogether to absteyne from doing of euill. Then behooued it the Iewes to thinke vppon their sinnes, and meete was it that the sayde feaste shoulde be an instruction to them for all the yeare after. Thus howsoeuer it was, they hadde the figure. But we in these dayes must haue the truth without any such Ceremonie. And thereby wee see what superstition was among the Papistes: for they turned this feast of Affliction or humbling into their Lenton fast, saying that in that time they punished themselues with fasting, that they might acknowledge their sinnes: and they alleged the example of the Iewes. Yea, but we must alwayes come backe to the diuersitie which S. Gal. 4. Paul in the Galathians putteth betweene vs and the fathers of olde time, for els what am wee the better for the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ? If wee at this day must still haue the shadowes that were vnder the lawe: where is the freedome that he speaketh of? I meane not such a freedome as shall lay the reynes lose in our neck, to liue as we list. No, but y wee should not bee trayned vp any more like lule children Gal. 4. for that was continued vntill the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and vntill hee had fashioned himselfe to the worlde. But as nowe we must let the figures goe, and all that belonged to that rawnesse; and wee must goe to the verie pith and substance of them. And therefore whereas the papistes haue ordeyned their Lenton fast in steade of the feast of Affliction, which God had ordeined among the Iewes: It is but an Apetoye. I forbeare to speake as nowe of the other abuses and illusions conteyned therein: for they vpholde that their fasting of fortie dayes is after the example of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Yea but let them then absteyne from all meate and drinke, and bee as Angels of Paradise. Nay, they cramme themselues so full at their dinners, that at night they bee still cumbered with that which they had receyued before: and yet notwithstanding they will needes beare Iesus Christ in hande, that they fashion themselues like to him. Hee was exalted farre beyonde all state and nature of man when he fasted fortie dayes and fortie nightes: and hee did it to shewe his diuine power, and to magnifie the Maiestie of his Gospell: and these dreamers take vppon them to counterfeite his doinges. And after what sort? In cramming themselues, as I saide afore. Surely it was euen a deuice of Satan, to deface the heauenly power which was vttered in our Lorde Iesus Christ. Againe if they will needes resemble the fonte of God in fasting fortie dayes, they should doe but once in all their life. For Iesus Christ fasted but once in all his life. And why then will they goe beyonde him? Beholde the sonne of God discharged himselfe with once fasting, and these doctors will needes beare the worlde in hande that they followe the example of Iesus Christ. Besides this, they will needes frame themselues to the fashion of the Iewes also & because there was a feast among the Iewes, wherein it behoued them to afflict themselues: these men will also needes doe the like. Yea, but that was not Gods intent. For it was a commaundement peculiar to the Iewes, that they shoulde obserue the saide feast, as whereof the ceremonie was giuen vnto them. Neuertheless the truth thereof remaineth to vs, to shewe vs that as the Iewes punished themselues once a yeare, to take instruction thereby according to their small skill: so nowadayes wee must be sorie for our faultes as long as we liue.

And herein we see further, that the Papistes haue not onely played the hypocrites, but also moste shamefully and diuelishly exalted themselues against God. For first of all their fasting of the Lent, and their going to shrift, is but to haue the freer scope to dispise God, and to let him alone, and to turne their backes vpon him all the yeare after. They make a sorie countenaunce and wring their mouthes, and play the Popehypocrites when they come to the passion weeke as they tearme it, and yet afterwarde they chide the matter with belking out this diuelishworde, that they sende it away into Galile, and so like villains they skoffe at God and all religion. The tongues ought to bee plucked out of their heades which dare blaspheme after this fashion. And it is not the baser sort of the common people, but the wiser sort and as will needes be counted I wote not what, which vse that kinde of speech. And so ye may see what confusion is among them, sith they despise God after this fashion, and fall to kicking against him, like wilde oxen, and yet in the meane while wil needes shroude themselues vnder the example of our Lord Iesus Christ. But a man may see not onely that the thinges wherewith they woulde please God are baggagely trifles, but also they vse so shamefull abhominations as doe well bewray that they rebell against the holy Ghost, and against the Maiestie of God. And yet are they not contented with that, but they proceede also to the murdering and martyring of Gods children, shedding their giltles blood euen without any remorse or scruple of conscience. For when they come to shrift, they neuer bethinke them of that, but they confesse how they haue not obserued such an Apes toye, and howe they were not at masse such a day, and how they haue omitted the doing of such a flimflam. To be short, they mocke God openly. And if a man shewe them their wicked life by Gods worde: they be so vtterly past hope of amendement, that they spitte at all warninges and harden their hearts more and more, because they be forepossessed with such intollerable pride, that they fall to set vp their hornes euen agaynst GOD. Thus yee see what wee haue in effect to remember concerning the feast of Affliction.

Also there was the feast of Trumpets, which serued to put the Iewes in mind, that they ought to stirre vp themselues to be vnited in God. For as for them the haue glosed that it was in respect of the offering vp of Isaac in Sacrifices, (as the Iewish Rabbins haue fantastically surmised) they say nothing to the purpose. But it is not to bee doubted that God ordeined the feast of Trumpets or Cornets, of purpose to stirre vp his people to returne vnto him. And why? For they ought to consider thus: Although wee haue not the Trumpets sounded dayly to call vs to the Temple, yet ought we to remember that God calleth vs dayly, to the intent we should yeeld ouer our selues wholly vnto him, to worship him, & serue him, as he requireth: and moreouer bee knit & vnited together, that we may drawe still neerer and neerer vnto him. Thus yee see what manner of instruction the Iewes had by the feast of Trumpets. But what a thing is it that Christians wil needes haue the like guise, and resemblaunce of it once a yeare by ringing of Bels? Indeede the Papists do their indeuour to follow this commandement. For at euerie of their solemne feastes, they thinke that God is well paide, when they haue roong their belles lustily, and wakened the Ghostes of such of their friendes as are deade. Lo what witcheries they haue among them, yet stil at this day. But is it not apparant that the making of such a feast is against the intent of God, because it serued but for the people of olde time that were vnder the lawe? When the saide feast was obserued yearely, such as heard the Trumpets were warned by it all the yeare after to thinke thus: wel, although we be farre from Ierusalem, and cannot repaire thither dayly to doe sacrifice in the Temple: yet are sacrifices offered there in our behalfe, and God is worshipped there in the name of vs all. Neuerthelater, wee must not forget the good that GOD hath doone vnto vs: but euerie of vs must serue for a Trumpet to stirre vp himselfe, that our liues may be aunswerable and conformable to the thinges that are done daily in the Temple. Lo what the Iewes had. And what haue we nowe?

The figure (as I haue saide afore) is passed away and abolished by the comming of our lord Iesus Christ. Then remaineth it that wee our selues shoulde be Trumpets, that is to say, that wee should waken vp our selues, because we be besotted, yea and euen so wedded to the worlde and to the vanities that are here beneath, that it neuer commeth in our mindes to thinke vppon God. Therefore must wee not onely feele the sounde of a Trumpet or of a bell, but rather an inwarde remorse of good conscience, so as wee repent and bethinke vs thus: How now wretched wight? Beholde, the liuing GOD stoopeth so lowe, as to speake vnto thee dayly, calling and alluring thee by meanes of his Gospell, and crying vppon thee without ceasing, to come vnto him: and yet for all this wilt thou continue deafe still? Then must thou returne vnto him, when hee draweth thee so carefully fully: and thou must not tarie till there bee a solemne holyday to call thee to the Church, there to keepe the feast of Trumpets: but it must serue thee al thy life long for a spurre to make thee to return vnto God. That is the thing (say I) which we haue to beare in mind. And as much also is to be noted concerning sorrowing: For it is not for one day onely that wee must be sorie in our heartes and bethinke vs of out sinnes. But forasmuch as we fal to them incessantly, & there passeth not any day wherein we offend not GOD: let vs match it with sorinesse, and let vs mourne for it, and not play the vnthrifites which make a skorne of all that euer a man can alleadge to them out of the worde of God: but let vs bee afraide of his iudgementes and threats, and yet therewithall let vs not doubt but he will giue vs whereof to reioyce, and that although wee bee faine to passe through many sorrowes and hartbitinges in this worlde, yet in the ende he will deliuer vs from them, to make vs partakers of the heauenly rest. After this maner (say I) must wee put this doctrine in vre, concerning the feastes which the Iewes had of old time in figure and whereof wee haue nowe the truth & substaunce, as it is brought vnto vs by the seruice of God.

Now let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, so as wee may returne vnto him, with true and vnfained repentance, and bee stirred more and more to amende our faultes, knowing that our good God is ready to receiue them all to mercie which come vnto him with lowlinesse. And that for asmuch as he hath graunted vs the grace to haue nowe so full light of his Gospell, as may wel inlighten vs throughly: it may please him not to suffer our eyes to be blindfolded, that wee should walke any more in darkenesse, but to graunt that wee keepe y right way, and indeuer to bring others into the same, so as God may be glorified with one common accorde of all men. And that for the performance hereof it may please him to raise vp true and faithfull ministers of his word, &c.

On Fryday the viij. of Nouember. 1555.

The C. Sermon which is the fourth vpon the sixteenth Chapter.

13 Thou shalt keepe the feast of Tabernacles seuen dayes, after thou hast gathered in thy corne feeldes and thy vineyardes.

14 And thou shalt reioyce in the feast, thou, thy sonne, thy daughter, thy manseruant, and thy womanseruant, the Leuite, the straunger, the fatherles, & the widowe which are within thy gates.

15 Seuen dayes shalt thou keepe the feast to the Lorde thy God, in the place which the Lord shall haue chosen: for the Lord thy God, will blesse thee in all thy fruites, and in all the workes of thy handes: and therefore shalt thou reioyce.

16 Three times a yeare shall all thy males appeare before the Lord thy God in the place which the Lord wil choose: that is to wit, in the feast of vnleauened bread, in the feast of Weekes, and in the feast of Tabernacles: and none shall appeare emptie before the face of the Lord.

17 But euerie man shal giue according to his abilitie, euen according to the blessing of the Lord thy God, which he shall haue giuen thee.

WE haue here to treate of the feast of Tabernacles, which was a memoriall of Gods preseruing of the Iewes in the wildernesse, where was no house. For he had kept them by the space of fortie yeares vnder Tentes, and small boothes: the cause wherof was that he had so remoued them from place to place, that they had no leasure to builde, nor stuffe wherewith to builde. Therefore it was meete that they should be put in remembrance of it, that being come into the lande of Chanaan, they should not giue themselues to iollitie, and forget it when God had set them at rest. For we see how men are giuen to fall asleepe and to nestle themselues when our Lorde remoueth them not. To auoide this danger, it was Gods wil that [illegible] shoulde yeare by yeare depart out of their houses and dwell in Tentes, that is to say vnder open skie in arbers made of boughes, and [illegible] seuen dayes together minde that [illegible] For it was an incredible thing that God [illegible] haue preserued so great a multitude of [illegible] with their yong children, in boothes & [illegible] wout houses. We knowe y houses serue [illegible] off both cold & heat and al other discom[illegible] Needs therfore must it be y god wrought [illegible]

wonderfull fashion, and it was meete that his goodnes should be acknowledged in that behalf. We see then nowe wherefore this feast was ordeyned vnder the lawe. For the seruing of God stifled not in ỹ peoples shifting of their places, for it had beene but a stage play, to haue come to Ierusalem, and there to pinch themselues, & to dwel a while in Cabanes, vnlesse it had beene to some ende, and that they had beene taught some thing whereby to magnifie Gods name, & to put their trust in him: accordingly as I haue declared heretofore that all ceremonies must implie some learning and instruction, or else they be but pelting baggage: yea it is but a mocking of God, if the faithfull be not edified, that they may alwayes liue in the feare of God to rest vppon him and to call vppon him with the better courage. If it bee not so, it is but superstition and the thinges are not onely vnprofitable, but also abhominable before God. Nowe then the feast of Tabernacles was a traynment to the people of Israell, to shew them that if they were at rest and at their ease in the land of Chanaan, they had not alwayes beene so, but that God had led them after a straunge fashion through the wildernesse: and that if they were contented with Cabanes and arbers, it behoued them also to applie themselues to the praysing of God for his deliuering of them out of the Land of Egypt by so manie miracles. The Iewes as foolues that woulde faine discharge themselues to Godwarde by hypocrisie, did indeede keepe the feast it selfe, but they lefte the meaning of him that had commaunded it. For euen to this day still they keepe the feast according to the letter, and they haue a number of pretie apes toyes which they obserue diligently. As, that their Cabanes be not too close, but made full of holes, nor that the boughes bee not too thicke planted, but so as a man may see the starrs through them, and that there bee Loopeholes to looke vpon the skie, so as the skie may glimse vpon their eyes. All of them (I say) doe vse such trifling toyes, but in the meane while they consider not whereunto God meant to direct them. By which example of theirs wee bee the better warned not to regarde the letter of the lawe but to seeke the ende which God pointeth vs too. And seeing that the Iewes had such instruction: let vs consider what fruit we ought to reape nowadayes of the feast of Tabernacles. It is not nowe any more in vse that wee shoulde be bounde to the keeping thereof: but yet the doctrine thereof continueth still, and concerneth vs as much or more than the Iewes. And our keeping of the feast of Tabernacles must not be for a weeke or twayne, but for all out life long, and why? For if wee be not straungers in this worlde, we shall haue no part in the kingdome of heauen. Will we haue God to auowe vs for his children? Let vs keepe on our way here beneath, affiuring our selues that this life of ours is but as a iourney, or rather but as a race. And it is not enough for vs to goe, but wee must also runne a pace, holding on our way still to that ende, and alwayes straining our selues to attayne vnto it. For except we streine and inforce our selues we shal neuer get one steppe forward, but wee shall rayre fower backe for it. Agayne we see howe slow we be, and how manie meanes Satan hath to hinder vs: and therefore we must euen fight against such impedimentes. And so let vs marke, that the thinges which wee reade here in Moses, declare vnto vs that for asmuch as it was Gods will that the Iewes in the time of the lawe shoulde haue a weeke to put them in minde howe they had beene as pilgrims in the wildernesse, and that he had maintayned them there after a straunge fashion: we in these daies (because the figure is abolished) must repaire to the trueth, that is to say, wee must remember that God harboreth vs in such sort in this world, as that he wil not haue vs to nestle here, nor to be so intangled in it as to make it our euerlasting resting place, but to flie vpward still, and to bee here as birdes sitting vppon a bough. True it is that God is so fauourable to a great number, that they neuer remooue from home of all the time of their life, and yet they be neuer the lesse Christians for all that: but yet must not any man make him a nest vppon earth vppon imagination that he will rest here. Where as Saint Paul saith that he had no rest, he meant it specially of himselfe and of certaine others of the faithfull, whome God tossed from post to piller. But as for the meaning of the mind, that must needes bee common to all the faithfull, namely that they haue no restingplace in this worlde. Although then that GOD do beare with some mens weakenesse, so as they neuer remoue out of the place where they were borne, but continue at home still in their owne houses: yet must they consider that they ought to bee alwayes readie and to haue one foote set forwarde, against the time that it shall please God to remoue them into some straunge countrie so as they make not their reckening to be so setled in any place, that they shoulde not departe from it, but rather bee readie to goe, whensoeuer GOD calleth to fleete anie whither else. 2. Cor. 7. 5.

Againe, let those whome God remoueth vnderstande, that he giueth them the prerogatiue aforehande, to put the thing in vre which the holy scripture sheweth vs: namely, that we bee made pilgrims here beneath, to the intent wee shoulde haue our resting place in heauen: and let it confirme them so much the more in ỹ hope of ỹ life to come, so as they may pluck vp a good hearte when they bee so driuen from place to place, and not be too much greeued at it, because it is a warrant to them that God hath reserued a better restingplace for them. After that manner ought all of vs together to obserue the feast of Tabernacles. Let such as remoue not, thinke neuertheless, that they haue not any perpetuall state of abiding in anie place certaine, but must offer themselues to GOD to goe whithersoeuer it pleaseth him. And as for them ỹ are fain to remoue out of their countrie, and are drawen a farre off, let them vnderstande that Gods walking of them after that fa- 2. Cor. 5. 6. Hebr. 11. 13.

shion in this worlde, is to the ende to drawe them out of it, and that they should not set their mindes vppon it. Yee see then howe with one common accorde, we shall make a good obseruation of this feast, I meane as spiritually. For nowadayes we haue not anie more the figures of the lawe: but yet must the trueth of the Gospell needes bee conformable to the figures that were among the fathers of olde time. And herewithall wee must also be readie to remoove a good pace, so as wee must not be tyed nor holde backe to this corruptible life, but goe to GOD with a free heart whensoeuer it pleaseth him to take vs hence. And indeede, what house soeuer we dwel in in this world, our bodie is always going away. If a man be asked which is his cheef house, he will not goe seeke his chamber, nor his kitchen, nor any other of his houses of ease: but hee will say it is his bodie. Nowe let vs consider what our bodies are. Wee may wel build vs houses of square stone. Riche men make them pallaces, and laye all their lande aboue them thereto. Their building is substantiall, it is able to indure much, it is not to bee feared that it will rotte ouer hastily, nor that it will bee marde with winde or wether; neither is there anie thing in it to be altered: And though some hanginges of it bee to be remooued, that is all one; the walles are so good, that at a hundred yeares ende they bee as sounde as they were at the first day. Well may a man make such a building: but can wee builde our bodies so, as they may be of any long continuance? No. Our Lord therefore doeth laughe those foolke to skorne, which are so blinde that they imagine they shal liue euer the longer for their building of their goodly houses, bearing themselues in hand that it is a meane to make them tarie ℣ longer time in this worlde. But (as I saide afore) all houses are nothing in comparison of our cheefe house, which is our bodie. If a man passe not for hys chamber, nor for his kitchen, nor for his parlour, but woulde go seeke some corner in his stable, and betake himselfe to that, saying, this is the surest and substancialleſt place, I had leuer tarie here thē in anie other part of al my house: folke woulde laugh him to skorne as a foole. Likewise if a man be proude of his house, and haue no regarde of his owne person whereof he ought to make much greater account: it is euidēnt, that he is out of his wits, and vtterly voide of reason. What is to be doone then? Wee must come backe to this lesson of Saint Paules, that 2. Cor. ℣ 1. if our outwarde man decay, wee haue a building prepared for vs in heauen. For this lodging of ours must decay, and fall quite downe, but yet shall wee be fully restored againe, and then shal wee dwell in an vncorruptible house. There Saint Paule sheweth vs the thing that I spake of before, namely that our bodies (when we haue neuer so great account of them) are but as arbours made of Leaues, which are of no continuaunce: one blast of winde will blowe them quite and cleane downe. Seeing it is so, let vs walke in lowlinesse, and lift our mindes aloft: for wee haue promise that there we shall be immortall & vncorruptible. And we must not thinke it strange that our bodies shoulde bee compared to Arbors of leaues which are of no continuance: for take mee the strongest bodie in the worlde, and yet cannot the force therof continue long time in one state; but that if the saying of the Prophet Esay be founde true as in respect of our soules, it must needes bee verified much more of our bodies: namely that a man is but a flower, and that allbeit he flourish for a time, yet is one blast of winde enough to make him to wither, and to bring him to nought. Such is our strength euen when it is at the best. But besides this, there is none of vs which feeleth not a great sort of inconueniences in himself, to the intent we should forsake this present life, and not bee too much addicted to it. Take me the strongest man that is, and hath hee not some disease or other that will not suffer him to indure long? Againe if a man be once past a certaine age, he falleth by & by to declyning; insomuch that a man may see and perceyue with his eyes, that euen without sickneſse he slydeth away like water. Insomuch most men doe neuer thinke of it: but what boteth it thē to blinde themselues? Nay it is a monstruous thing that euerie bodie shoulde see how a man goeth to naught, and yet bee so blinde as not to perceiue it in himselfe. On the contrarie part, if our Lorde be so gracious to the sillie soule as to remoove them to and fro, and to put them vnder many diseases: it is to quicken them vp to goe forwarde with earnester willes to their heauenly inheritaunce, because they doe but hang their winges in this worlde, continually drooping nowe after one sort and nowe after another, and liuing as it were halfe deade. Seeing it is so, let them vnderstande that God worketh for their benefite and saluation. And it is a very profitable lesson, when wee haue learned to keepe the feast of Tabernacles spiritually: that is to say, when we haue learned to passe in such wise through this worlde, as wee goe on farther.

And if we be demaunded howe such persons can be Christians, as are setled in wealth and at their ease: the aunswere thereunto is that every man must beware first of all that hee flatter not his owne ease too much. For we heare howe S. Paul saith, that wee must not cocker our flesh in ℣ lusts thereof. And why? Because there is no when wee once beginne to followe our owne kinges: they be so far out of order, that there always somewhat amisse in them. They there fore which will be lodged after their hearts fire, so as there may be nothing amisse in the state: doe put themselues in great hazard falling into a sounde sleepe, and of ling themselues in such wise in the worlde, they may neuer thinke more vppon the ly rest. And therefore a man cannot keepe good a measure nor too stayed a hand in that halfe. Not that wee can bee tyed to any rayne rule, for we must vse Gods creatures ly. If wee shoulde be scrupulous at euerie what woulde come of it? Either wee should uer be thankefull to God for the benefites he bestoweth vppon vs, because we bee not sure that he hath giuen vs leaue to vse them freely: or else wee shall become hardhearted and stubborne to vse them as it were in despite of GOD, by meanes whereof all thinges shoulde bee corrupted. So then, we must vse our houses as wee doe all other commodities of this present life, without making any scruple of conscience in the matter. But yet therewithall, we must beware (as I said afore) that we giue not the bridle to our flesh, by satisfying the desires thereof: for it is a bottomlesse pit, and we can neuer come to the bottome of it.

Againe besides this, let such as are planted commodiously, beware that they fal not asleep. But rather whereas the children of this worlde doe wcher in their delightes, and so feede themselues with them, that they vtterly forgette the kingdome of heauen: Let the other sorte learne to consider thus: Goe to, albeit I bee planted here to my commoditie, yet must I not be tyed too much to this world. Wheras my lusts would holde me backe, I must so fight against them, as all the impediments in the worlde may not restraine me frō looking continually towards heauen. After that manner must the faithfull deale. And such as are not planted at their heartes desire, must consider how our Lorde putteth them in mind, to goe continually forwarde to the rest of heauen, warning thē of it both earely & late, a thing which is for their benefite, & behoofe to be put in mind of. Insomuch that if the Iewes had such instruction as was meet for them: ẏ exercise that God giueth to his faithful ones nowadayes in planting them not ouer much to their liking, is a far better learning than was the auncient ceremonie of the law. Whosoeuer then do find any discōmoditie, and are not at their ease; let them vnderstande that God by that meanes pricketh & spurreth thē to seeke the rest of heauen, & strengtheneth them therewithal in ẏ hope which they haue of their saluation.

And this concerneth not onely a mans housing, but also all other things as I said afore: so as ẏ body with al thing belonging therunto, is the chiefe house which we haue. Therefore if we be now & then diseased, so as we cānot take so quiet rest as we faine would, nor haue things ready alwaies at hand: let vs consider ẏ our lord handleth vs like wayfarers. When a man shalbe in his own house which is well ruled, they faile not to serue him at his own houre, & to haue such meat prepared for him as he best liketh: but if he be abrod in the country, he shall not haue al ẏ he would: for folk are not acquainted with his complexiōs & whereas he is wont to dine at such an houre, he must be faine to tary an houre or twaine longer. And again, when he hath supped peraduenture he shal not be so well lodged as in his owne house. Now must wee apply all this to our selues: namely ẏ in this world we be as waifarers. Therfore if our Lord do now & then disappoint vs of things ẏ we desire, it is to the end wee should run a pace through this world & alwaies keepe on forth stil, til we come to ẏ kingdome of heauen, & not be tyed & fastened to ẏ earth. Thus ye see how this lesson extendeth generally to al things that concerne this transitory life.

And yet neuertheles it is said expresly, That she Iewes in keeping this feast should be merry, & also make other men merry with them. Whereby we see ẏ we ought not to be sad, though our Lord make vs to waste away by litle & litle. Or rather hee sheweth vs ẏ he will not haue vs to make anie ouersūptuous building here below, but ẏ we shold be contēted with our lodgings of boughs which wil soon rot. Sith it is so, we must not be sory, but rather reioyce in our God. And it is a very profitable point and well worthy to bee noted. For it may be ẏ some man wil be sufficiently warned to depart out of this world, in ẏ he sees himself sick, or in ẏ som strange mishaps befal him: by reason whereof he thinkes vpon death ouerofte, and doth nothing but mourne, desiring to be dispatched at the first push. Such are to bee seene: but yet for al that, their departing is not without sorowing. For what ioy can they haue, except they know that God draggeth them through ẏ world of purpose to lift them vp to heauen to the companie of the Angels? If they know not that, surely they shal haue their harts alwayes distressed with anguish and greefe, accordingly as we see how the vnbeleeuers repine, and neuer commit themselues to GOD, but murmur and grudge against God. And although their mouth speake not, yet haue they no gladnes nor rest in their harts. Then let vs learne to keepe ẏ feast of Tabernacles after such a sort, as we may be merrie in the Lord: that is to wit, as it may not greeue vs that our bodies should consume away by litle and litle, vntil they be turned again into rottennesse; or that our Lord should cut vs quite off frō our bodies, & vtterly dispossesse & bereaue vs of all ẏ euer we haue in this world. For why? Hee doth it to draw vs vp to heauen. Therefore let vs goe ioyfully, and let our hart be inlarged to giue our selues wholy to our God. That (say I) is the thing which we haue to doe.

And it is the same thing ẏ S. Paul speaketh of, howbeit hee sheweth vs ẏ meane also how to put this lesson in vre. True it is ẏ by nature we seeke not to be dissolued or cast downe. If yee say to a man, my friende, are you willing to die? It were against nature for him to say yea, vnles it were to some better ende: for his desire is to haue being stil. Indede the vnbeleeuers do besot themselues in their desiring to be: for this beeing of theirs is but to cram themselues, to eat & drinke, to fil their bellies like swine, to sleepe like beasts, and to looke vppon pleasaunt thinges, as folkes that are caried altogither with sensualitie. Those are the things wherein the vnbeleeuers repose themselues. And in the meane while they be so dull, that they consider not that that beeing of theirs is no being at all, and that the state of this present life is but a shadow which is euer fleeting & neuer at any stay. But contrarywise when the godly say, it is good to liue, thereupon they conclude, that it is not for them to couet death vnlesse it be to exchaunge for the better. Neuertheless, when they take holde by faith vppon the heritage which God hath promised them then are they desirous (and not without iust cause) to depart out of this mortal body, ỳ it may be renewed againe. We see then as nowe, howe we may dwell with ioy in tentes: that is to say, by being assured that after wee be passed out of this worlde, we shalbe taken vp into the resting place which God hath prepared for vs, & which was purchased for vs so dearely. Therfore let vs go on with a free courage, & let vs not cease to keepe on our pace, vntill we be come to our end. And let vs always conclude with our selues, ỳ it is enough for vs to hope continually that the heauenly rest shall not faile vs, after that God hath exercised vs in this world, and tossed vs to and fro. Thus ye see in effect how we ought to keepe this feast with gladnesse.

Now for a conclusion Moses addeth, that they must resort thrise a yeare to Ierusalem, and there shew themselues before God, as many as were males, & none to come empte, but euery man to make some offering to God, according to the blessing that God had given him. This maner of speaking that the Iewes shoulde come before the face of God, serued for the better expressing that the sanctuary was not a vaine and vnprofitable figure, but that God vttered his power there, to shew in very deed ỳ he dwelled among his people. If Moses had saide singly, yee shall resort to the Sanctuarie: euery of you shall make his offering before the Arke of couenant: the Iewes had not bin so wel certified, that their comming to call vpon God in the sanctuary, was not in vaine. For they might haue said, very wel, indeed wee haue the figures & ceremonies, but yet are we not sure ỳ God wil heare vs. But when it was said, ye shal come shew your selues to god, it was a greater edifying of them, because they were wel assured that the ceremonies of ỳ lawe were not deceiuable. Yet notwithstanding, it was not to make thẽ to set their minds vpon the visible signes, & so to hold themselues still downe: but they were to consider, ỳ although God stoop to apply himselfe to our infirmitie, yet is it not his meaning therfore to hold vs downe to these earthly thinges: but contrarywise his comming downe to vs, is to make vs to stie vp & to seeke him aboue; so ỳ when we haue visible signes, we should consider ỳ his glorie surmounteth ỳ heauens, & is infinite, & therefore that we must worship him with our minds lifted vp aboue ỳ world, and aboue al things that are corruptible. And so yee see that this maner of speech where it is said, ye shalbe in the presence of your God when yee be come into his sanctuarie: was profitable, and imported a very good lesson to the Iewes. For why? God shewed in very deed, that he had not instituted those signes without cause, but that thereby he made his grace and power to be felt of the faithfull, when they came thither to call vpon him. But yet for all that, it behooued the faithfull therewithal to worship God spiritually.

Esa. 66.1.2. For we see howe the Iewes are reproued for this: in ỳ they corrupted his seruice, by reason ỳ they supposed to shut him vp within their Temple. Shall I dwell in a house made with mans hande saith the Lord? If the Iewes had replyed & said, Why not? for it is said, when ye come to the sanctuarie, ye shall bee there before the face of your God. Yea, but that is no excuse. For Gods ordeining of his sanctuarie to dwell there, was not in such wise that hee woulde forsake his heauenly glorie: but to come seeke men here beneath, and to lift them vp aboue. We nowadayes must remember the like.

For when God sendeth vs his word, and addeth ỳ sacraments for a confirmatiõ of the same, it is asmuch as if he shewed vs his face, at leastwise so farre as we are able to abide it. For we be rude and earthly, and cannot beholde God as he is, and therefore he is faine to applie himselfe vnto vs. Yet notwithstanding wee must seeke him after the maner that he vttereth and declareth himselfe vnto vs; as we be not tyed to the visible signes, nor intangled with them as we see the wretched Idolaters are, which alwayes take occasion to turne away from GOD by meanes of the helpes which hee giueth them to bring them to him. Therefore let vs beware of such abuse. Indeede when we speake of the Lords supper, wee can well enough say that Iesus Christ is there present, and that we possesse him. When we come to the receyuing of the bread and ỳ wine, we can say they be no empte signes, but that we haue there the very substance, insomuch that Iesus Christ imparteth himselfe to vs, so as wee bee fedde and nourished with his body and bloode. So then Iesus Christ offereth himselfe to vs in his supper. But is it to be saide therefore, that he commeth downe from heauen, and that he is to bee sought after in superstitious manner, as the Papistes and such other like doe in these dayes? No; but it serueth to lift vs vp to heauen, and to make vs vnderstand that although Christ dwelleth there, yet wee ought not to doubt but that his power reacheth vnto vs, and that we be made partakers thereof, and that when we receiue the bread & the wine, they be true warrantes of that which I haue saide. Yee see then that we be in the presence of our God, by beeing partakers of Christs last supper. As much is to be saide of Baptisme, namely that in the water of baptisme we behold the bloude of our Lord Iesus Christ, and the redemption which he hath purchased for vs: so as it is to vs as a liuely picture; & not only that, but also wee haue the trueth ioyned with the image and portrayture, as the effect must needs bee felt and perceiued. Neuertheless it standeth vs alwayes in hande, to bewart that wee abuse not the Sacraments: namely that wee be not so fleshly, as to sticke to the world: but that seeing God is come downe vnto vs, we also on our side doe mount vp vnto him: and therewithall offer our selues, that our Lorde in giuing vs his sacramentes, giueth vs not rittleraties and childishe trifles to busie our heades withall: but that hee giueth vs the verie trueth, to the end we should be knit vnto him, and that we might feele that his power is euer at hande with vs. Thus much concerning the saying where Moses speaketh against of Gods presence, & cõmaundeth ỳ Iewes to resort to Ierusalẽ, whẽ God should haue chosen ỳ place: & in the meane while to resort to ỳ place where where ꝯ arke of ꝯ couenãt & ꝯ sanctuary were set vp. And finally he sayth, That they should not come empty before the Lord, but that euery man should bring somewhat according as God had blessed him. Some haue taken this text to bee a kinde of promise, as though God had sayd that such as resorted vnto him, should not go their way againe empty. True it is that if wee seeke God, wee shall finde plenty of all good things in him, according as it is sayd, Come vnto him and ye shall be inlightened, and your faces shall not be ashamed. Therfore let vs not thinke that wee shall want any thing if wee seeke God, for he will fill vs; as hee is riche, so is he liberal, we shal be satisfied, and haue our fil of al thinges ꝯ wee haue neede of for our saluation. Then is it very true in it selfe, that all such as offer themselues before God, shal not return empty according as it is written; Open thy mouth and I will fill it. But as in respect of this present place, it is certaine that Moses speaketh of Offringes: and wee must not bring in any other glose. For hee declareth that euery man ought to offer according to the gifte of his hande, that is to say, according to his abilitie. For that kind of speeche were straunge to vs, if wee were not made to vnderstand it; namely, that euery man ought to consider what GOD hath giuen him, that hee may doe him homage for it. Therefore loke what wee haue in our hande, that let vs vse to offer vnto God, and to make sacrifice to him withall. In the tyme of the Lawe, the offeringes were applyed to such vse as wee haue hearetofore, and wee neede not to reuiue the Ceremonie any more. As nowe it remaineth that wee doe homage to GOD at all tymes, with the goods that hee hath bestowed vpon vs. And howe may that bee doone? By Almesdeedes. For wee cannot increase him by bestowing any thing vppon him: but yet hee accepteth whatsoeuer wee giue to the poore. Thee are the sacrifices which hee requireth and alloweth nowadayes. Therefore must we followe them there. And seeing that our Lord offereth himselfe vnto vs, not thrise a yeere only, but manifestly in the person of his sonne Iesus Christ, so as hee dwelleth with vs continually: let it bee a meane to drawe vs to him euen with an earnest minde, that wee may haue our hande alwayes open to offer vnto him. If wee had the Sanctuarie, and that it behoued vs to present our selues thrise a yeere at Ierusalem: wee should doe the thing that is commaunded vs heere, and yet should not that serue to excuse vs from doing of Almesdeeds al the yeere after. For if there were no more than the Ceremonie, it were a smal matter as I haue said afore. But where is Gods Temple now? Beholde Iesus Christ, who filleth ꝯ whole world; he is with vs, & dwelleth euen in our soules. Sith it is so then, let vs see ꝯ we imploy our selues to make our offeringes: seeing that our God doeth vs ꝯ honour to appoint vs to be his Sanctuaries & Temples; inasmuch ꝯ euery Christian man is ꝯ Temple of the holy Ghost, & euery Christian hath ꝯ honorable title of Priest: and ꝯ otherwise we shoulde neuer be counted ꝯ temple & house of God: it is good reason ꝯ euery man should occupy himself incessantly wout end, in offring him ꝯ sacrifice of praise, so as he may bee acknowledged in all his benefits & blessings which he bestoweth vpõ vs.

And it is not only the doing of Almes deedes, ꝯ he accepteth for sacrifices: but wee must also serue him & worship him, w al our thoughts, with all our desires, with all our affections, and with al our members. So then, that wee may not appeare emptie in the presence of our God, let vs looke ꝯ we bring him good fruites & such as he requireth: & let vs bewarc ꝯ we bee not vpbraided, as Ieremie vpbraided ꝯ Iewes when he said, What haue I done for thee my vine? I haue planted thee, I haue dressed thee; & thou bringest me forth bitter fruite. Therefore let vs bring good fruit to our God, seeing it hath pleased him to till vs, to the end we should doe good, and not be vnprofitable. And how may that be? True it is that we cãnot bring any thing to him, neither can he be inriched: but when we indeuer to glorifie him in our whole life; that is the fruite which he requireth and maketh account of. Seeing then that he graunteth vs the grace: let vs profit continually vnder him, & let not vs on our side be emptie. Notwithstanding, it is certaine that we haue not one drop of goodnesse, vnlesse he giue it vs: for we be barrein. In deede we be too fruitful in bringing forth euill: there are too many bryers & brambles to be found in vs: but as for ꝯ good corne, there is not one graine to be found in vs, vntill God haue put it in vs. What is to be doone then? We must pray our God to blesse vs, that is to say, to powre out his holy spirite so vppon vs, as wee may haue good fruite to bring vnto him: that wheras we be nothing, he may giue vs a being; and whereas we be nought woorth, he may make vs some what worth by his manuring of vs, so as hee may be glorified in vs. For it is not ynough for vs to haue Gods gratious giftes in vs; but he must also make vs to put them to the vse whereto he hath ordeined them. And heere let vs call to mind what hath beene declared heeretofore: namely that God will not haue vs all to reioyce our selues, but also to make our neighbours partakers of our gladnesse: and also to call vnto vs, not onely the husband and his wife, and the father and his children ꝯ but also euen those that are furtheſt off from vs, and to indeuour to bring them after such a sorte before the face of our GOD, as the veryest straungers and those that are furtheſt off from vs, may bee partakers of our mirth and feele the benefite of it, bicause it is made common, according to the same saying of Moses in this present Text, that the strangers, the widowes, and the fatherles must be merrie with those that present themselues after that maner to God, to offer sacrifice vnto him.

Now let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better, that being vtterly in misliking with them, we may seeke to be reformed by his worde, and profite therein more and more: And that for as much as he doth chiefely commaund vs to passe through the world, and to aspire to ꝯ kingdome of heauen; we by this making of vs to feele our owne wretchednesse, may bee stirred vp by the same meane to seeke the saluation which he hath promised vs, and whereinto our Lord Iesus Christ is entered to guide vs thither by his example: And that in the meane while we may be confirmed by the power of his holy spirite in the doctrine ỳ he giueth vs, so as we may neuer be turned from it for any impedimentes that can be vs, but that we may alwaies keepe on our course till he haue rid vs of this mortall body, and clothed vs againe with his owne immortall glory. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

The Cj. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the sixteenth Chapter.

18 Iudges and Officers shalt thou make thee in all thy Cities which the Lorde thy God giueth thee throughout all thy Tribes, to iudge the people with iust Iudgemement.

19 Thou shalt not wrest the Lawe, nor haue regarde of persons. Thou shalt not take any reward. For gifts blinde the eyes of the wise, and peruert the wordes of the righteous.

HAd wee continued in the same soundnesse of nature wherein God created vs: ỳ order of Law (as men terme it) should not be so needefull, bicause euery man should eary the law in his heart, so as no man needed to be compelled to obedience, but euery man should know his rule, & wee should all with one accord followe that which is good & rightful. And therefore law is as a remedie against the corruption ỳ is in men. As oft as there is any talk concerning earthly gouernmẽt, we must vnderstand ỳ therein we haue a mirror of our frowardnes, in ỳ we are faine to bee compelled to ỳ following of vprightnes & reason. For they that are in authoritie, haue the sworde in their hand: and to what end? To represse such as burst out into excesse and outrage. And whereof commeth that, but that whereas mẽ ought of themselues to seeke the thing that is good and iust, they turne it vpside downe, and goe about to bring all to confusion, if they bee not letted? Surely it is a great shame, (considering that God hath created vs after his own image, & giuen vs dominion & soueraignte ouer al his creatures,) ỳ we should be faine to be inforced to it by reasõ of our naughtines. Picke me out the most despised of all men, & yet doeth he carie in himselfe the image of God, and the saide token of soueraigntie. Yet for al that, wee bee faine to become vnderlings, and that is bicause of our sinne, as I saide afore. Let vs know therefore that God hath not stablished the order of earthly gouernment without cause: but that he had an eye to ỳ corruption ỳ is in vs. Hereby we be well warned (as I saide afore,) to humble our selues, seeing our sinnes require such remedie. But yet ought wee to magnifie Gods goodnes, for ỳ he hath prouided aforehand, ỳ all should not go to vnrecouerable confusion among vs, which thing woulde come to passe if we might do what we listed. For if the strongest might goe away with the gaine, what would come of it? It were much better for vs to be in ỳ forestes among wolues and wilde beasts, thã to be among mẽ, if all things were at libertie. For no beastes are so woode, as we are our own lustes. Therfore let vs acknowledge ỳ wonderful goodnes of our God, in ỳ he hath had such care to preserue vs, ỳ forasmuch as he saw we coulde not maintaine our selues vnlesse there were lawes to hold vs in, & Iudges to execute ỳ things ỳ are set down in writing: he hath prouided for al. Also hereby we are put in mind to loue the state of Iustice, forasmuch as we know it a singular gift of God, & a meane to preserue mankind. If we loue the light of the Sunne bicause we cannot liue without it; and if we loue bread and whatsoeuer else belongeth to our sustenance: let vs also loue ỳ order of Iustice. For it is to no purpose to haue meate & drink & all other commodities, seeing ỳ without lawes & Magistrates we should bee depriued of all Gods blessings, and it were better for vs to be dispatched out of hand, than to eate vp one another as it would come to passe. And therefore we must esteeme ỳ order of Iustice, to be a prefident of Gods grace, and we must make account of it as it is worthy, euery of vs indeuouring al ỳ he can to maintaine it: For wee shewe our selues to bee deadly enemies to peace & to the cõmon weale, if we loue not the state of Iustice. And all such as trouble it, & go about to peruert it, are as theeues, and are to be esteemed as enemies of mans welfare. In so much that all men ought to fight against them, when wee see them goe about to bring in such horrible confusion among vs.

Rom. 13.4. 1. Pet. 2. 14.

Gen. 1. 26.

Now it is not for nought said here when the people were come into the land which God had promised vnto them, they should make Iudges and Magistrates euerywhere. This matter hath beene expounded alreadie in the sixt Chapter: but yet is it not without cause that GOD repe-repeateth it heere againe. For he intendeth to shewe that it is to no purpole to haue good and iust Lawes, vnlesse there be men to set them in force and to put them in execution. This hath beene told you afore; neuertheleſſe it is requisite that you be put in mind therof again. For we see how God speaketh of one thing oftentimes, to the intent we should set ỹ more store by it, and thinke vpon it, and not forget it. Euen so doth he now confirme the former speeche which he had concerning Magistrates. And indeede, it is not without cause ỹ the common prouerb termeth them the soule or life of the Lawe. For what are all the lawes and statutes of the world? They be but dead things. They be lapt vp in paper, and are nothing worth, vnlesse there be men chosen to giue them their force & to make them to bee obeyed. And so ye see what God meant here in saying that the people should choose. Surely such freedome was a singular gift: & we see it is not graunted to al men. Where Princes haue soueraignty, they appoint Iudges at their owne pleasure and liking, and ambition beares all the sway there. In so much that a Courtier which is in credite, shal not onely obtaine offices for himselfe, but also cause them to bee giuen to others at his appointment. Nay there is yet greater and more shamefull corruption. For offices are set to sale nowadays as wel as al other kind of marchãdize. Seeing then that we behold such examples, wee must needes thinke it an inestimable gift, when God graunteth a people or Nation libertie to choose their owne Iudges and Magistrates. And verily when God gaue that priuiledge to the Iewes, it was a ratifying of his adoption, and of his choosing of them to bee his heritage, and that he meant to haue them to bee in better and more excellent state, than any of their neighbours, who had kings and Princes, and no such freedome at all.

Now as this thing deserueth to be had in great estimation: so ought they that haue obtained such benefite, to vse it with a good and pure conscience. For what is the cause that our Lord beareth vs of his benefites, but that we marre them by our abusing of them? We know wel that whatsoeuer God bestoweth vpon vs is desirable, for we see ỹ commoditie therof: but yet in stead of vsing of it holily with thanksgiuing, wee will needes make it to serue our lustes. Nowe when God seeth his benefites turned so to our bane, & that we draw them cleane contrarie to his meaning: he bereaueth vs of them. Are we distitute of them? Wee see whereof it commeth: And we thinke it straunge: but wee consider not howe God hath borne with vs a long time, and that in the end he wil not haue his gifts to be scorned & reproched. Therfore whatsoeuer God hath done vs any good, let vs learne to maintaine ỹ same by our good & pure vsing therof. For ỹ next way to make the possession therof to abide with vs, is to beware that we defile not the things which God hath sanctifyed to our profite. And therefore if we haue libertie to choose Iudges & Magistrates: forasmuch as it is an excellent prerogatiue (as I said afore:) let it be maintayned and vsed with good conscience. When a people hath this prerogatiue, let them looke well to the setting vp of their Iudges, that thay may bee as the Lieuetenantes of God. Wherefore let no such men be put in place, as will either be brybed, or haue bin leaudly giuen aforetimes, or as are vnable to beare such a charge: But let such bee sought and founde out as are meete for it, as though they were marked out by God. And because we haue not sufficient discretiõ to choose aright: let God bee called vpon. For it is not ynough to seeke out such as are meete and sufficient to execute an Office; but for as much as wee may bee beguiled in that case, by reason of our owne weakenesse, and by reason of the deepe dissimulation that is in men, in so much that when neuer so narrowe search hath beene made, yet the euill will euer set it selfe foreward: let men desire GOD to ouerlooke them, and to giue them wisdome and discretion. Thus ye see what we haue to marke vppon this saying, where commandement is giuē to choose and ordaine Iudges and Magistrates.

And it is sayde expressely, In euery Citie. For what a thing were it, if men shoulde bee driuen to goe farre to seeke Iustice, when disorders are committed euerywhere? Seeing that misdemeanors are rife and touch vs neere: if the redresse should bee delayed too long, it would not boote at all: a hundred faultes would bee committed, before one could bee prouided for. Therefore doth our Lord say, ỹ they should bee appointed in euery Citie: as if he should say, that men haue alwayes neede of some bridle. And that is the thing which I touched afore, when I saide that we which are created after the image of God, and ought to raigne ouer al creatures, haue neede to bee held in subiection. For as wee haue peruerted the order of nature, so is it meete that God should cut vs short, & shew vs that wee bee so farre vnable to rule, that wee bee not meete to haue freedome, but had neede to bee helde in awe. So then let vs learne, that whersoeuer vice and corruption is, there ought the remedie to bee applyed out of hande. True it is that there was in deede a soueraigne Court of Iustice in Iewrie; yea and wee haue seene in the first Chapter, that the hardest matters and the cases of greatest importaunce, were referred to Moses. Yet notwithstanding, it was Gods will that there shoulde bee some order euerywhere, that if any disorder were cõmitted, it might bee prouided for out of hand, & men should not neede to run farre to require Iustice For in very deede it behoueth Iudges & Magistrates to watch, & not to tarie till they be called vppon & importunately required, but punish ỹ euil as soone as they see it. I say as soone as they see it: for they ought to spie & keepe good watch. It is not ynough for a Magistrate to punish ỹ he knoweth to be wicked: but he must also make diligent inquisition, as wee haue seene in other places. And if men went ỹ way to worke, matters should be in better order. That is ỹ thing which we haue to marke, in ỹ our Lord will haue Iudges and Magistrates in euery Citie. For otherwise

Deut. 13. 14.

many

many euils might be committed, before any redresse could bee had, so as the remedie woulde come too late as I haue touched before.

Furthermore, whereas Moses addeth that they must giue iust iudgements, and gouerne the people after that maner: it serueth to confirme that which wee heard euen nowe, namely (first of all) that men can not gouerne themselues, except they haue superiours to guide them, which thing is plainely expressed concerning the Iewes, whom God had preferred before all other nations. Let vs vnderstand then that of good right wee bee dispossessed of the freedome which God had set in mankind. For why? We turne the good into euill: and therefore is it meete that we should bee bereft of it. A man in health shall haue liberrie to eate what he listeth, and he shall not bee deale with so precisely: he needeth no Phisition to forbid him such a meate, or to restraine him from drinking, otherwise than in such measure or at such an houre. But if a man bee sicke, he must bee at obedience, he must keepe a dyet, he must bee holde short like a childe, and he is restrayned of all thinges that he lyketh, in so much that if he commaund his owne seruant to bring him this or that, his seruaunt must not be so bolde as to doe it. Yea and when maisters bee diseased, they are subiect to their seruantes, so as they cannot inioy their owne goods. And why? Because they be not meete to haue them; by reason of their disease which ouermaistreth them: and therefore are they fayne to bee as vnderlinges. Euen after the same manner standeth the case with vs: insomuch that if wee were in deede whole and sounde, God woulde guide vs after another fashion. But forasmuch as he knoweth vs to be so corrupted, he is fayne to compell vs, yea and to restraine vs in such sort, as wee haue heard of. Thus much concerning the first point.

Againe for the second, Moses declareth and setteth forth that which I said cõcerning choise making: namely that in the seate which GOD hath dedicated to himself, no such persons must be put, as turne all thinges vpside downe. For if such be chosen for publike Magistrates, as leade a wicked trade, as in whom there is no feare of God, no honestie, no vprightnes, but wildnesse, wantonnesse, and disorder; or in whom there is no more wisedome than in Asses, but to be short are madbrayned or frantike: if such (I say) be set in place of publike office; it is not a dishonouring of men, but a working of high treason against God, bicause it is a defiling of his seate. So then it behoueth vs to wey well how Moses saith heere, that when it commeth to the chosing of Officers, men must not set vp Idols, nor iudge of them without tryall. And why? Bicause it is a dishonouring of God, to set such persons in his roome, as are not worthy to haue the ruling of a house. Yea shall see a man that is not able to gouerne his owne household, such a one as is not to bee trusted to for any thing, folke shall say of him, yonder fellowe is a foole, hee is a dizard, hee hath no reason, hee hath no stay of himselfe, hee hath neither wit nor discretion to guide himselfe or his household: and yet for all this, shall men goe and set him in the seate of Iustice? He is a man that cannot liue quietly with his wife: & shal he be able to keepe a whole Citie in quiet? Men preferre him to bee a counsellor. And to what end? To see the peace maintained. And how can that be? Hee hath no mee lee his wife and household to gouerne, and yet he is not able to weelde them. When he is at home, he is not able to guide his wife and his children. How when thinges go arsiuerse after that sorte, God is openly despised. So much the more therefore doth it stand vs in hand to marke well what Moses saith heere: namely that the choosing of Iudges & Officers is not a matter of fourmalitie, or a Ceremonie; but a holy thing wherein men ought to proceed with all reuerence: and that God laieth not his bridle vpon any peoples neck, as if he should say, Take whome yee lift at aduenture without consideration: but he pourpoynteth out the persons, and pointeth them out with his finger. Looke to it (saith he) that ye vse discretion in choosing the persons that shall haue the ruling of the people. For the word: To iudge importeth to gouerne. And secondly, let them iudge vprightly sayth he. Whereas he speaketh of gouerning, it is not without cause. For it is to no purpose to choose such as haue needeof Tuition. To prefer those to the guiding of others, which ought to be put vnder the direction of others, is too great a skorning of God. Again, the cõmon weale concerneth Iustice and vprightnesse. Therefore his choosing of officers before they be well knowen and throughly tryed, is surely a marring of all good order. And therof come so many changes & turmoyles. We wonder to see our Lord ouerthrow Common weales, and to behold how the Nations that were free, are greatly diminished & ouerwhelmed with tyranny: but wee looke not from whence all those thinges proceede. The ground thereof was the abuses which were committed, bycause there was no regarde had of the mainteining of the state which God had established, nor care to follow faithfully the order that God had inioyned. So much the more therefore doth it stand vs in hand to beare well away the things that are tould vs heere.

Moses hauing sayde so, addeth nowe. That men must not wrest the lawe, nor haue respect of persons, nor take rewardes or gifts. And he addeth the reason. For gifts (saith hee) doe blind the eyes of the wise, and peruert the wordes of the righteous. First he setteth downe heere a generall rule, that men should not wrest the Lawe. For in deede wee may liken equitie to a right lyne: and if it wrythe to the one side or to the other, by and by it is iniquitie. And therefore Moses speaketh, thou shalt not wrest the Lawe, that is to say, thou shalt haue thyne eye vppon the lyne of Iustice, and followe it without swarving one way or other. And heerewithall he sheweth howe the same may bee performed, namely by respecting no mans person, and by eschewing to take rewardes. For when we consider a deede simply in it selfe; euen nature teacheth vs what to doe. True it is that wee had needs steede to call vppon GOD continually: for wee see howe weake of vnderstanding and courage wee bee euen in the thinges that are most euident: oftentymes wee bee starke blinde in them. Then must not men presume vppon their owne wit, and thinke themselues wise ynough to iudge of all thinges that are set before vs; but wee must vnderstand that it is a heauenly gifte, as Salomon declareth. And if wee bee combered in the smallest matters; howe shall wee doe when we come to giue sentence of matters of great weight? Iudges therefore must first humble themselues, and consider that if they bee not gouerned by Gods holy spirite, they shall not bee able to holde them to true Iustice; and therefore they must referre themselues to GOD and aske counsell at his mouth, that they may bee taught by his word; and they must giue themselues ouer to his spirit, and submit themselues thereunto.

1 Kin. 3. 10

But besides this, Moses ment to shewe heere the cheefe causes of all the impeachmentes of Iustice. For (as I sayd afore) if wee haue an eye simply to the deede, without respecting the person, so as wee bee not possessed aforehande either with fauour or with hatred: it is certaine that wee can skill to giue sentence aright. And if it couldde bee brought to passe that the parties should not come in sight, that it might not be knowen who were the playntife and who the defendant; so as the Iudges might not bee allured and carryed away either with bryberie, or with flatterie, or with lyes and glosses, or with such other thinges; but that the case might bee layde before them simply and nakedly as it is: wee should not see the thing which all the world now reweth, that is to wit, that men commonly can obteine no right and Iustice. For by nature (as I sayd) we can wellynough skill to say, this is good, this is iust, this is vpright. But assone as the parties come in our sight, that we see they be our neighbors or friendes; or the one a great man or a rich man, and the other a poore man; and there is bringing of allegations on both sides, so as one seekes to win the goale by threatninges and bragges, another by sweete wordes and presentes, and bryberie trotteth a pace to make way: all then will be turned vpside downe, and they which sawe cleerely before, become nowe starke blinde. And therefore let vs marke, that it had beene ynough to haue sayd in one word, that men must not peruert the law, but that men are vnable to keepe themselues from euill, if they be not told how and after what maner they may maintaine themselues in soundnesse and vprightnesse: namely by hauing no regard of the persons; and by shunning all couetousnes, for taking of rewardes.

As for the worde Person, I haue expounded it elsewhere: namely that wee must not respect whether a man bee riche or poore, great or small, a straunger or a neighbour, and such other like thinges. For the woord person signifieth another thing heere, than is ment by it in our common speech, when we say, There is a person, that is to say, there is a man or one of mankind. For in this place the worde which Moses vseth in Hebrew, signifieth a face, visage, or countenaunce. Wee must not then regarde the countenance. And what is ment by that? The things that are seene, the states of men, and their outwarde showe. And the worde Shewe expresseth the meaning of Moses well ynough. Then must thou not rest vppon the outwarde showe; For if I see a man poore, I despise him; if I see him riche, I honour him; if I see a man of authoritie, I stand in feare of him; if I see a wretched abiect, I make no accoũt of him, but rather holde skorne of him. See howe the outwarde showe here marreth all. I see a man that is able to pleasure mee; O, I will incline to him, that he may pleasure mee againe. I see another that can doe mee neither good nor harme; O, it skils not howe he speede. Againe, I see one by whose hurt I may aduauntage my selfe: I will doe it. And why? Bicause my minde lookes no further but to the outward showe. Nowe wee see the meaning of Moses, and I haue spoken of it alreadie in the first Chapter of this booke: howbeit it is not for nought that the holy Ghost maketh rehearsall of it againe here.

Deut. 1. 17.

Wherefore let vs learne in fewe wordes, that such as haue an eye to mens persons, that is to say, regarde the outwarde showe, cannot holde their owne to deale vprighly and indifferently; but that they must needes bee moued either with feare or with fauour, to giue the vpper hand alwaies to the wirked person that standeth in the wrong. And why? For feare least he should be reuenged: and else for hope to be benefited againe at his hand for the fauour that he shall haue receiued. And therefore let vs remember, first that God requireth a stoutnesse in them that are Iudges. If they see a riche man or a man of honour: well, let them take him as he is, and yet neuertheless iudge the case as it requireth. But this stoutnesse of minde is seldome to be found any where. For although the Iudges doe purpose with themselues to follow ỹ law, yet are they commonly seased with a kind of fearefulnes, by meanes wherof they be daunted whẽ it cõmeth to ỹ point ỹ they should stand to their tackling. And therefore is there good cause why such as sit in the seate of Iustice, should resort to God, & carefully pray him to strengthen thẽ in such wise, as they may not be like to reedes ỹ are shaken w̃ euery winde, but freely follow ỹ course that God hath appointed them, without swarueing or bowing any maner of way. Let vs marke then first of all, that we must haue this stoutnes of not being afraide at the sight of any mans greatnesse or countenaunce, that his authoritie or riches doe not any thing auaile him, but that the case may stand in firme state, without hauing our eyes dazeled to say, This is a great man, and therefore I must fauour him.

Againe on the other side, I saide also that wee must not despise such as are had in contempt to the worldwarde. Bicause I see a man is poore, I beare my selfe in hande that it makes no matter though I doe him wrong. For wee bee oftentymes at that poynt. If there bee a man of no reputation, we thinke our selues discharged if we can say; well, I haue doone wrong to a poore creature, which is not taken to bee of the common sorte: but that is nothing, for no man complaines of it. But God will haue right and equitie to be ministred to all persons. Therefore let such as are aduaunced to degree of honour thinke, that if they despise the meaner sorte and such as seeme to be the outcasts of all the world: they shall giue account for it. For if God vouchsafe to regard those kind of folke, and to haue a Psal.116. 6. care of them; yea and (which more is) do name himselfe their defender: wil he suffer them to be so troden vnder foote, and to bee borne downe with oppression and tyranny, without reuenging them? So then, Iudges must match their stoutnesse with gentlenesse, and incline themselues euen to the meanest, receiuing them into their protection, and looking to the maintenaunce of their cases when they be good and rightful. Thus ye see what we haue to remember in this text.

Were this rule well held, we should not heare so many complaintes, neither should thinges be so farre out of order. But what? yee shall see a good iudgement giuen, and a fault or offence punished as it ought to be: and byandby in the turning of an hand, ye shall see the like case goe vnpunished. And why is that? Because the persons of men doe beare al the sway. There is a case wherin a man is conuicted by the thinges which he himself was to speake: it falleth out apparant, and thereupon he is to haue some punishment, and he hath it in deede. And why then is not the like done in al other like cases? O because the partie is fauored. In deede men seeke many colours and disguisings: & it is so much the woorse: but yet cānot God be deceiued, whatsoeuer shifts be made to shroude our matters with all. Neuertheless the worlde sees howe this respecting of persons peruerteth all right, and that it is almost an ordinarie thing. Insomuch that for some one nice point, a mā is oftētimes graueled in a case, which of it selfe were plaine & manifest ynough, if the parties themselues came not into the play, that the Iudge might giue sentence vprightly, without respecting the outward showes which I spake of afore. But the Iudges being preuented with the regard of the persons, doe cast great doubtes where none at all is, to say this & that. And what is the cause thereof? Alwayes the respecting of persons. And in deede, in some cases a Iudge will goe through with them, and dispatch them quickly: and in some other in all pointes like, he will haue so many deuises, that he can neuer determine it. Wee see then howe great the leawdenesse of men is in this behalfe. Yet for all that, our Lord wil not haue the instruction which he deliuereth here to his people, to be lost or vnprofitable. Therefore let vs looke that we make our profit of it.

And let vs marke that as Iudges and Magistrates are forbidden to haue any respect of persons: so is the same warning made to vs all. For what is the cause that wee fayle so ofte in dooing our dueties, but that wee bee so preuented with this respecting of parties? Therefore let vs haue such stoutnes of corage, as no greatnes, no pompe, no authoritie, no honour of this world may get the vpper hand of vs to peruert vs. And on the other side, let vs haue such myldnesse as wee despise not the meaner sorte, but rather bee gentle to receiue them. Thus much in effect concerning the woorde Person.

Now there is a second point concerning bribery and rewardes. Thou shalt not take gifte, sayth the Lord. He saith not, thou shalt not sell Iustice: but he saith, thou shalt not take. And why so? he addeth the reason: For gifte (saith he) do blinde the eyes of the wise, and peruert the woordes of the righteous. Heere is a reason well woorthy to be weied. For it seemeth at the first sight, that to take some presentes is not euil nor to bee condemned, I meane in a Iudge. For he speaketh here of the presentes and gifts that are giuen in respect of some case that is to bee heard. As for example, a malefactor laboureth to escape vnpunished, and hee goeth about to win the Iudge by sending him some present. Likewise another man puts himselfe foreward, and to haue sway against his aduersarie in partie, hee goes and gives the Iudge somewhat likewise. Now our Lord saith not, Beware of it: If thou receiue a present to fauour the partie that giueth it thee, it is ill done, and it is a setting of Iustice to sale. God speaketh not those precise wordes: but he saith, Beware of taking: for it is vnpossible that he which hath taken, should behaue himselfe vprightly and not swarue aside. Neuertheless there are a good sorte to be found which will say, As for me, although I take, yet doth it not therefore follow that I will swarue from myne office: For when I haue taken on both handes, I will giue him the glike which thought he had won me by his giuing. And is that so euill a thing? Why then may he so foolish so bring it me? If he bring, I take but yet for all that, I step not aside from my dutie. Such kinde of folkes would make GOD a lyer. For we heare how it is sayd heere, that gifts doe blinde the eyes of the wise. If they thinke themselues so sharpe sighted, that the receiuing of rewardes cannot dim their eyes: God sayth the contrary. And if they thinke themselues so constant, that they cannot be bowed, God telleth them that as soone as they haue taken any gift, they bee vtterly marred, and there is no more soundnesse in them. Now then it is a grosse a fondnesse to say, I will take rewardes, & yet for all that, I will keepe my selfe well enough from turning away, or from swarning from the right. But that is vnpossible; for then should God haue lyed in this text. Thus ye see what we haue to remember in the first place, concerning the second point.

Now therfore, they that sit in the seat of Iustice ought to thinke thus: doth he that bringeth me presentes, bring them of good will as one neighbour to another, or as one friend to another? he bringeth hee them rather for some matter that he which he hath before me? Then if a man haue a cause before a Iudge, & the Iudge take a present of him, he offendeth god. Who so? Because God hath so-forbidden him, and he knoweth wherefore. It is not for man to say, It makes no matter, I wil take heede well enough for being bridled by it. But it is a tempting of God when we deale so, and God will hold shorne of our ouerweening, and will shewe vs that we bee not of such abilitie as wee imagine our selues to be, and that he did not without cause tell vs, that when wee be lyme fingred to draw presents vnto vs, and to hold them fast when we haue them: then are our eyes blinded, and then are our hartes wrested, so as wee haue no more wisedome nor vprightnesse in vs. Seeing that God sayth so, it is not for vs to reply against it. And in deede, whosoeuer they be that boast themselues to be vnable to be corrupted, or to bee made to steppe aside by taking of presentes: they needs not to bee brought before God to bee conuicted, but euen young children may iudge of them. It is too common a thing, and I could alledge examples thereof that are knowen inough. For there are some which are growē into so great vnshamefastnesse, that they sticke not to say, As for me, I will take on all handes. This hath bin heard, and there are witnesses now that can beare me record of the matter. And in the meane season what protested they? Tush, I wil not be corrupted for all that. No: but when lyke children haue seene that Iustice hath the fist to fide, and that a leawd man hath gotten the vpper hand in all cases, what is to bee sayd of it? As for him, so he might play his prankes, and deceiue his fates: he had cast his cardes afore hand. And on the other side, those to whome the presentes were brought, went lyke swine casting vp their groynes, so as there was lesse honestie and shame among them, than is euen among the heathen men and infidels. This hath his cause: and yet notwithstanding they pretended in their talke to be holy men. O there were a godly and sweete wordes as could be: yea, but when the matter commeth to be spoken of, euen boyes and idiots will giue their verdit of it for the thing is too much knowen. Seeing then that our Lord telleth vs here, that if mē receiue bribes, their eyes must needes be dazeled, and their hearts corrupted: let vs beare wel in mind, that except we will poyson our selues wilfully, we must first of all keepe this rule, namely that Iudges must not take any thing, at leastwise of any body that hath aught to doe in Lawe before the, but vtterly abstaine from so dooing, vnlesse they intend to turne away from all good order, right, and equitie.

And herein we see how our Lord who knoweth our diseases, or deineth immediatly meete & conuenient remedies for the same. What remaineth then but that we on our side enter into examination of our selues, and euery of vs searche himselfe narrowly? For the thing that maketh vs so bolde to tempt God, is that none of vs entereth into himselfe, to looke neerely to his own vices and infirmities. But if we had the discretion to bethinke our selues, wee would consider thus. Alas, I needs not any thing to peruert me, I am so frayle alreadie as may bee: though there were no occasion at all to surprise mee, I would seeke occasion of my selfe. And what wil I doe then when I meete with any euil occasion, or any cause of misdealing? I shall stumble and fall flat downe. So then, if wee aduise our selues wel of our vices it is certeine that we would seeke all the helpes that could be to preserue our selues. But seeing that God preuenteth vs, and on the one side sheweth vs how feeble and weake we be, and that on the other side, whereas we might fall into such mischiefe and inconuenience, he prouideth for it and saith, My friendes, true it is that ye be subiect to euill, but the way for you to bee preserued from it, is to abstaine from such a thing, and to take such a remedy: seeing (I say) that God speaketh so familiarly vnto vs, if wee refuse him, I pray you dooth not our vnthankfulnesse deserue, that wee should be caryed away vnto all euill, and that Satan shoulde driue vs and beare vs quite away, and that God should forsake vs and suffer vs to fall into grosse offences as all the world might abhorre vs?

Now then, it standeth vs so much the more in hand to marke well this sentence, where it is sayd that if men withstand not the temptations that may beguile them; of wise and discreete, they shall become blinde; and of iust they shall become vniust. God speaketh not here of such as haue alwayes bin naughtipackes, in whome neither reason nor vprightnes hath bonne sway at any time: but of the wise and righteous. And that is such a monstrous thing as ought to make our hayre to stand vp vppon our heades. As how? That giftes and presentes shoulde haue such force to corrupt, as that they should blinde the eyes of those which were of good discretiō. Now it is certeine that discretion is a singular gift of God. When wee speake of wisedome, we must not thinke that it groweth out of mens braynes, but that it is the gift of God. Ye shall see that God hath indued some mē with a good wit, by meanes whereof he behaueth himselfe in such wise, that he dooth good and commendable thinges. And yet if God let him alone, so as he giue himselfe to this corruption of taking rewardes: by and by the light which God had giuen him, not onely becommeth dim, but also goeth quite out. Therefore let vs learne to looke to our selues, and (as saith S. Paul) let such as suppose they stand beware least they fall. For our Lord vseth here a horrible threate, whē he saith that they which saw clearely enough, shall bee blinded if they giue themselues to taking of giftes: and that they which were well and holily disposed, shall be peruerted and turned away vnto euill. When we heare this, ought we not to stand vppon our gard and to keepe good watch; least we be surprised by Satans wiles? So then, let vs preuent such temptations a good way aforehand. And sith we see that our Lorde forewarneth vs: let vs stand in feare, and not run rushing against him wilfully, nor fall to stubbornnesse: but rather consider with our selues how that euen they which haue bin as halfe Angels, may be ouerthrowen and thrust out of the way, when they haue giuen themselues to it, & would needes vse too large dispensation. Wherefore let vs al learn to reine our selues short, and to submit our selues to the gouernment of our Lorde; and then we need not doubt but that if he haue giuen vs wisedome and discretion, he will strengthen vs more and more therein, and make vs to continue in them vnto the end; so wee goe to worke with praying vnto him continually to preserue vs, as I haue sayd afore.

Now let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe to touch vs in such sorte, that we returne vnto him with true repentance: & that such as haue publike charge, may behaue thémselues so dutifully, as they may be able to yeeld a faithful reckoning of ȝ charge that is committed to them: and that all priuate persons may in such wise suffer themselues to be gouerned by them, as God may reigne among vs, and haue all souereigntie, so as both great & small may be obedient vnto him. And for the bringing hereof to passe, it may please him to stirr vp true & faithful Ministers of his word, &c

The Cii. Sermon, which is the sixt vpon the sixteenth Chapter, and the first vpon the seuenteenth.

20 In all cases thou shalt follow the thing that is right, that thou maist liue and inioy the land which the Lord thy God giueth thee.

21 Thou shalt plant no groue of any maner of trees neere vnto the Altar of the Lord thy God, which thou shalt make thee.

22 Also thou shalt not set vp any Image: for that doth the Lord thy God hate.

The Seuenteenth Chapter.

THou shalt not offer to the Lorde thy God, either Ox or Sheepe that hath any blemish therin: I say thou shalt not offer any euilfauoured thing: for that is abhomination to the Lorde thy God.

HItherto Moses hath commended equitie & vprightnesse vnto vs, saying that those which are appointed to bee Iudges, ought to maintein euery mans right without swaruing. And thereupon he sayd, that as many as intend to continue in such soundnesse, must beware in any wise of taking rewardes: for if they take any, by and by they be corrupted, by & by they be blinded. And it is not to be replyed here, that a man may well receiue a present, & yet haue no meaning to fauor any wicked case. For ȳ holy ghost hath giuen sentence, that the man which is so giuen to taking of presentes, shall bee blinded though he were the sharpest sighted man in the world. Nay, he hath a towell before his eyes already, and besides that, whereas he was well & holily disposed before, now hee is quite peruerted. We see then how it is a deadly poyson, for a Iudge to receiue any presentes in any wise.

And now to hold men the better in awe, Moses addeth Gods promise, as if he should say, that we must not be wedded to our owne profit, whē God on the otherside offereth vs his blessing, & telleth vs that he will prosper vs, so we stick vnto him. And whether were it better for vs, to inrich our selues by vnlawfull meanes which God condemneth, and which shall come to an euill end: or to haue Gods fauor present with vs, and that the same should neuer faile vs? Thus we see now to what purpose Moses addeth this sentēce, That men should follow vprightnesse. Verily euen to the intent they may inioy Gods fauor & thou maist possesse the land (sayth he) which the Lorde thy GOD giueth thee, and that thou maist dwell therein. This is a continuing of the same matter still, which I haue declared before: namely that whereas God might commaund vs in one word, yet notwithstanding to win vs to him, he is so gentle that hee bindeth himselfe to vs, and maketh a couenant with vs as it were betweene two parties. He hath authoritie enough to commaund vs, and it is not for vs to aske wherefore. Againe, he is not bound to promise vs any thing for we owe him all that we haue, and he is indebted to none of vs. Neuertheless he vouchsafeth to yeelde to our infirmitie, according ly as we haue seene heretofore, that after his requiring of ȳ which is our duetie, he addeth that we shall not be disappointed in seruing of him. Yet must we not conclude thereupon, that wee can deserue aught at his hand: but rather we see his infinite goodnesse, in that hee promiseth vs his fauor freely after that fashiō. And therefore we ought to be the forewarder in doeing whatsoeuer he commaundeth, notwithstāding any impediments that might hinder vs to pluckе vs back. Vnexcusable are we in these dayes, if we feele not the force of his promises in quickening & stirring of vs vp to obey him. Hath God commanded? That ought to suffice vs. Notwithstanding howsoeuer we be slowe and negligent, he addeth this help, that he commeth to win vs by gentlenes, as if a father should flatter his child. See we this? Verily it not needes be ȳ our hearts are too too much hard-haue cleane if they relent not at such goodnesse? Therefore when we feele that Gods commaundements touche vs not sufficiently to the quicke: let vs take these promises here, to stirre vp our selues the more, and to spurre vs the more forwarde.

Againe, let vs marke well the speach howe he saith, Thou shalt followe vprightnesse in all cases. The wordes are; Vprightnes, vprightnes shalt thou follow. So doth Moses speake, how beit that some men translate it, Thou shalt follow iustice vprightly. But when all is throughly looke vnto, he meaneth nothing else but that men should beare an euen hand in executing of iustice, following the right by streight line, and perseuering stedfastly in it without swarueing. I say it behoueth vs to marke well this saying, byeause men will needs alwayes discharge themselues to Godwarde by peeces: but as for to go through stedfastly with all things that he commaundeth; that is a very rare matter, (as the world seeth) specially in those which haue the handling of the lawe. Thus it is ỳ though they be wicked, yet wil they be ashamed not to haue some goodly shew: & so now and then a man shal find some vprightnesse and iustice in them. But haue they done right to one man? To morowe they will deale contrarie-wise with another. Haue they punished one misdoer? There shall go vnpunished for it, after as the persons are fauored and borne out. This parable is to be seene in maner continually: and it is sayd that there is no vprightnesse. And this is to serue God: insomuch that when iustice is not vsed in the ministration of iustice, those that are punished cry out vnto God for vengeance, as though they were wronged. And therefore Moses thinks it not enough that men should simply doe iustice; but bee will also haue them to proceede with it, and to continue it, so that there may be iustice vpon iustice: that is to say, a continuall holding on, so as no vndifference may be perceiued, nor any diuersitie of weights and ballances, nor any respect of persons: accordingly as hath bin sayd heretofore, that men must not leane to the one side for any fauor, nor forsake a good cause for any hatred, but be of such stoute courage that they bow not any way or other for any thing. That is the way to maintaine iustice.

This lesson is apparant enough of it self: there remaineth no more for vs but to fall to the practising thereof. But as I sayd, it is a very hard thing for men to frame themselues to keepe an euen hand. So farre off is it, that this was written in vaine: that it is sayd ỳ if we will prosper through Gods fauor, wee must keepe order continually among vs, so as euery man may haue his right: and that on the contrary part, without we doe so, God threateneth to bereaue vs of his blessing though he had giuen vs it before. And thereof haue we see so many chaunges and alterations happen in the worlde: namely for that when God hath blessed a people, & set them in a good state as were to be wished, by & by they fall to ryoting, so as the gouerners abuse their authoritie, & the people take libertie to doe euill, when they see ỳ their Iudges are corrupted, by reason whereof God is faine to lift vp his hand, & to take away quite and cleane all that euer he had bestowed vpon that nation. Wee see examples thereof too commonly. Wherefore let vs stand in awe, and let vs learne to liue the warelyer in the obedience of God, when he hath set vs in any prosperitie. Let euery man according to his abilitie, further the maintenãce of iustice: and let such as haue the sword in hand, vse it in such sorte as God may be honored, & not be driuen to bring vs to our arreignment for breaking of the order which he had set among vs: That is the effect of the thinges which we haue to remember in this text.

Now Moses addeth, That men should not plant any tree neere vnto the Altar of the Lord, nor set vp any manner of image. Wherby he prouideth ỳ there should be no resemblance betweene the & the Idolaters & Gentiles: and also that there should not be any memoriall of long continuance, for feare least they should learne or accustome thẽselues to doe sacrifice in diuers places. So are there two reasons which Moses hath an eye vnto in this text. The one is, ỳ he would haue ỳ seruice of God separated from all ỳ superstitions of the heathen. The other is, ỳ he would haue folke to accustome thẽselues to the worshipping of God, and to offer their solemne sacrifices in the place where ỳ Arke of ỳ couenant was, and that there might not be any peculiar religion throughout all ỳ countrie: As touching ỳ first, it is a point wel woorth the weying, ỳ God will haue his seruice to be such as he himself requireth & appointeth, & that he will not in any wise haue vs to meddle with those ỳ inuẽt & deuise superstitions on their owne head. In ỳ first place, Let vs marke thẽ how it is not without cause, ỳ God is so charie of ỳ seruice ỳ we be to doe vnto him. For in deed, is it reason that men should stand in defence & maintenance of their owne right, and that God should be disappointed of his? And is there any thing more precious & holy, than ỳ honor which we yeelde vnto him, in protesting him to be our God & father, of whome we hold all ỳ euer we haue, & at whose hand we looke for saluation? Is there any thing more holy than ỳ? Thẽ let vs learne to be attentiue when ỳ holy scripture speaketh to vs of the seruice of God. For it is a thing ỳ passeth all other in dignitie. Marke that for one point.

And it standeth vs so much the more in hand to giue our indeuour thereunto, because wee see ỳ world holdeth skorne to yeelde God his due obedience. If a man speake to a blasphemer, or to a despiser of ỳ orders of ỳ church, or (to be short) to one that is no better than a dog: if a man tell such a one of his leawdnesse: To whom do I any wrong, saith he? If he had giuen a man a fillip, or had chaunced to haue spoken a crosse worde, as small as ỳ wrong is, he would haue confessed his fault and say de, I haue done amisse: and yet is this but against a mortall man. But when hee shal haue spit God in the face, tush, it is nothing, it is no wrong to any mã. Dayly shal a man heare such speeches. Insomuch ỳ if God bee blasphemed, and his maiestie so shamefully dishonored as would make a mans hair arise to see it: it is all one, there is no account made of it. But let vs mark (as I sayd afore) that our Lorde will haue his seruice to be placed formost & in highest degree: and when the case concerneth the ruling of our lyfe, we must begin at that end; To wit; To honor him as he deserueth.

Moreouer, let vs marke wel that it is not without cause, that he will haue his seruice so farre vnlyke all ỹ superstitions of ỹ heathen. For euen of our owne nature we be too much giuen to the corrupting & disguising of thinges, by meanes whereof the pureneſſe of the true religion is peruerted. Euery man hath in himselfe a storehouse of idolatrie, though hee be not prouoked thereto by others: & in what case then are we, when we light vppon stumblingblockes and occasions, yea & euen go to seeke them? I see idolaters ỹ haue disguised & falsified ỹ whole seruice of God, & I shall goe borrow of them I wote not what; because this thing or that thing lykes me, I shall goe put it to that which our Lorde hath commaunded me. Am not I by and by snarled in the same folly that they were, which played ỹ naughtipackes before me? Yes surely. For although I regard neither ỹ one nor the other, yet haue I many vain fancies in my hart. And if I fal to seeking of such thinges of set purpose: it is all one as if I did cast my selfe into Satans snares. And therefore let vs mark, that our Lord meant to preserue his seruantes from a deadly plague, when he sayd that they should holde them to ỹ pure simplicitie of his word, and not resemble ỹ paynims and infidels in any case. In those dayes the heathen for deuotion sake, made shadowes about their Altars, lyke as at this day in ỹ Popedome, if a place be darkesome, it seemeth to thẽ to cary some maiestie in it, and the simple sorte are as it were amazed when they come into a Caue, and where the windowes be dimmed with red or blewe glasse, mens eyes dazle at it, and sillie simple soules feele a kind of motion in thẽselues which maketh them afraid & astonished; and to their seeming, it is good to sturre them vp to deuotion, bearing folke in hand that it is a reuerencing of God, whereas in deede it is stark foolishneſſe. After the same maner did the heathen in plashing of trees to make places darke, that when men entered into them, they seemed to be agast, as though a woolfe had bin at their tayle as they say, by reason whereof they were moued to some fearefulneſſe. Now forasmuch as this custome was among the heathen, our Lord will not haue the faithfull to resemble thẽ. Thus in fewe wordes, we see heere how all maner of resembling the vnbeleeuers is forbidden vs, if we intend to serue God in such wise as hee may lyke of it and take it in good woorth.

And this warning is as needefull for vs nowadaies, as it was for ỹ Iewes in the time of Moses. For what a nũber of deuices are there in ỹ Popedome, which haue bin taken from the superstitions of the heathẽ? All that euer is termed Gods seruice in the Popedome, is but a cõfused heape, gathered out of the thinges that are commaunded in the Lawe of Moses, & the thinges that are seene to haue bin obserued of the Heathen: And to colour the matter wal, they alledge that in so dooing, is least the Iewes should vpbraide the Christians ỹ they haue not so goodly ceremonies in their Churches, as they haue. And therefore they must needes haue this and that, after their example. True it is ỹ they haue not bin so bold as to kil brute beastes in sacrifice; for ỹ had bin too detestable. But yet they reade vp their Lampes, their perfumes, their strayners, their altars, and a certaine maner of sacrificing, though it be not of Calues, Oxen & Sheepe. Besides this, the Iewes had their washings & dooings before the Papistes would needes haue any. To be short, the Iewes were so throughly counterfeited, that to all seeming, they could not tell that they had mo goodly ceremonies in their temples, than ỹ Christians had in theirs. But ỹ was high treason against God. And if there had bin no more but meere folly in it, it might haue bin better born w^th. But it tended to the darkening of the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, by drawing a new veile ouer him. The veile ỹ God had commaunded to be in ỹ temple, is reason considered, they fal to hanging vp of another ỹ was made by ỹ hand of man: by means whereof Iesus Christ is as good as hidden, so as men can not behold the maiestie ỹ should shine forth in him. For he is liuely image of God his father; & in him whose his person or face we see whatsoeuer belongeth to our saluation. Now they fall to making of impedimẽts by such ceremonies, ỹ the worlde can not looke full vpõ Iesus Christ. And they are not contented w^th the intermingling of the things God had ordeined for a time and ỹ is vnder, they haue also borrowed of ỹ obseruances of the heathen. True it is ỹ euen in this case they pretended some color, as who should say that the world could not be drawen frõ those foolish ceremonies, & therefore it was better to let them stil vnder the title of God & his seruice, than vnder ỹ title of idols as they haue done before: by that meanes the seruice of God was saued.

Let vs mark then ỹ all that euer is termed by the name of Gods seruice at this day in ỹ Popedome, is but a confused botchpotch of all maner of superstitions; for they cannot shew that the holy scripture hath appointed men to do so. And whence haue they fetched their ground, but of a desire to counterfeit the things ỹ were vsed among the Iewes & Infidels? Sith it is so, what a thing is it if we shall now fashion our selues vnto them, and suffer a sort of polling hands & ceremonies to bee layd vppon vs, and binde our selues to ỹ keeping of thẽ, to ỹ intent we would not be too far vnlyke those ỹ name themselues Christians? It is ỹ same corruptiõ which God condemneth in this sentence. For it is not God will ỹ we should haue any resemblãces to those which haue w^thdrawen thẽselues frõ the pure teaching of his word. Therefore let vs be contented to haue Gods seruice reformed & stablished according to his cõmaundement. That is the thing which we haue to obserue in the first place.

As touching the second poynt, it is sayd that God would haue but one ly one Altar to offer their sacrifices. At this day, this is no more in vse; we haue no more any materiall altar. For whereas the Papistes vse altars, in so doing they deface the death and passion of our Lord Iesus Christ as much as they can. Neuertheleſſe, Gods intent at that time, was to keepe his people in the vnion of faith, by allowing them but one Altar.

And now it is sayd, that they should not set vp any wooden hill of long continuance, in any certeine place. For by that meanes they might haue accustomed themselues to worship God there, or they might haue made some chappell for deuotion, and so had all bin mard. And therefore not without cause were they forbidden to plant any trees in the places where they sacrificed: for Gods Sanctuarie was to be plãted at length vpõ mount Sion. And as many as intended to serue God purely, it behoued them to resort thither, in theyr one common accord, and one true vnitie of beliefe. Lykewise nowadayes our Lorde Iesus Christ hath left vs his holy supper, for a warrant that he dwelleth among vs, and is alwayes present with vs by his power: insomuch that although he be exalted aboue the glory of heauen, yet doe not we faile to be knit vnto him to bee members of his body, to haue one common lyfe with him, and (at one word) to be fed and nourished by his substance. And because it is a secret that passeth all vnderstanding of man; he hath warranted it vnto vs, by ỹ visible signe of his supper. Come we then to the table of our Lorde Iesus Christ? The bit of bread and the draught of wine which we receiue there, doe represent vnto vs, ỹ Iesus Christ is truely our food, & that we be so incorporated into him, ỹ we be partakers of his owne proper life. By meanes whereof Iesus Christ is so present with vs ỹ we must all needes be gathered together vnto him.

But we see at this day what hath bin done in the Popedome. Was there a table for the receiuing of the Communion? No, it was turned into an Altar. And that was one corruptiõ aforehand For as I haue sayd already, it is not for any man to sacrifice Iesus Christ any more. That office belonged peculiarly to himselfe, and he discharged it throughly, & now must we receiue ỹ sacrifice that was offered vp vnto God, & let ỹ worde alone. Neuertheleſſe it is not enough with thẽ that there be but one table; they will needes haue three or foure: euery man buildes me his chappel, & there sets me vp an altar. Although it were a good thing of it selfe to haue one altar among ỹ Christiãs: yet doe they breake ỹ vnitie of faith, whẽ they build seuerall chappels after ỹ fashion. For why? It is ỹ will of Iesus Christ that there should be one common supper, & ỹ all his Church should meet together, & that the receiuing therof should be as a true band to hold the faithful in one with him. But they go to say their deuotions in such a place, & to sing Masse in an other place: And ỹ is an open defying of God, & a setting vp of idols in his stead. It is a turning of Gods tẽple not onely into a Swines stye, but also into a stinking dungeon of all abhomination & idolatrie. And therfore let vs marke, how it is not without cause ỹ God teacheth vs in this texte ỹ although we haue not ỹ auncient ceremonie of Sacrifycing Oxen & Sheepe: yet notwithstãding we ought to be vnited in faith, and not ad any thing at al to ỹ which is cõmãded vs, but simply keep this rule inuiolable, ỹ we vnderstand how & after what fashiõ God wil be worshiped, & agree thereto, wout presuming to put any thing to it. Deut. 12. 32.

Now also Moses sayth, That they must not offer vnto God any beast that hath any maim or blemish in it. He hath told vs hitherto that men must not meddle wth idolaters, nor haue any resemblance to their superstitions. For the true religion must be held in his pure singlenesse. But that is not all. For they that offer vnto God, & turne not away after the fond deuotions of men, must moreouer serue God soundly, that is to say, their discharging of themselues towardes him, must not bee lightly, as men doe commonly nowadayes. For we see howe men defraude God of his right. In deede when we be indetted vnto men, we discharge our selues one way or other: but whereas we be indetted vnto God, all our seeking is how to scape from him. True it is ỹ we wil indeuer to defraud men also: but yet wil we be ashamed to vse libertie towardes them as wee doe towardes God euen in dalying with him. If we owe a man either custome or rent, we will not stick to conceale it if wee can, if wee be of euill conscience: But yet for all that, wee will not be plucked too much by the eare: for wee thinke wee shall gaine nothing by so dooing. So then, as touching ỹ dettes ỹ men doe owe one to another, they discharge thẽ: but it skils not for God. Although he call vpon vs & threatẽ vs; yet euen after he hath shewed vs our duetie, we cease not to defraud him stil, yea & we be quite past shame in it. Verily we wil not sticke to say, it is good reason ỹ he should be honored & serued: but yet we wil haue this seruing to be after our owne fashiõ. But he requireth a right obedience. And what doe wee to him? Very well say we, we must discharge our selues to Godwarde. And after what maner? In mocking of him. Insomuch ỹ although ỹ doing of some ceremonies be nothing worth; yet notwithstãding men beare thẽselues in hand ỹ God ought to hold himself contented therewth, and that he dealeth too rigorously wth vs if he require any more of vs. For this cause it is sayd ỹ men shall not offer any thing in sacrifice which hath either blemish or spot. For vnder one kinde Moses cõprehendeth ỹ whole; as if he had sayd, let vs not thinke our selues escaped when wee haue serued God by halues and peeces; but wee must go to it soundly & roundly, so as we doe our duetie towardes him throughly in all pointes. True it is that there was a special reason for the Iewes: for ỹ Iewes were admonished ỹ their sins coulde not bee wiped out before God, but by meanes of ỹ sacrifice ỹ was to be offered. For it behoued them to lift vp their mindes aboue the world, vnto ỹ trueth, to say, there will bee a payment to discharge all our dets: whẽ Iesus Christ commeth, he wil reconcile vs to God his father, and discharge vs of ỹ bond of death, wherein we be bound. Therefore it behoued ỹ Iewes to haue their sacrifices pure & cleane, ỹ they might bee led by them to our Lord Iesus Christ, and their faith be lifted vp aboue the world, to know that there is not any satisfaction nor offering that we can bring on our side to please God withall, but that he must be faine to giue vs the thing that we want to offer vnto him.

Notwithstanding, we must generally beare in minde ỳ which I haue declared already; namely how Moses sheweth vs ỳ we must so roundely yeeld vnto god that which he requireth, as he be not disappointed, as we heare him cõplain ther-Mal.1.13.14 of by his prophet, that although the Iewes did not vtterly refuse to pay ỳ tenthes & firstfruites: yet they did it but by halues. But God cannot away with such parringes, nor to be played with lyke a little childe. And hereby wee may learne ỳ our seruing of God must not be by pangs and fittes onely, & afterward fall to lazinesse: but ỳ it must be done soundly & substantialy throughout, with obedience to his word. And again, ỳ in our doinges there must be no hypocrisie nor cõstreint: but ỳ we must goe to work ẅ a free will, & not set a faire countenãce on it to ỳ worldward, & in the meane while haue a back shop that displeaseth God: nay we must go to work freely, as I sayd afore. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to remember vpon this text. Wee nowadayes doe not offer any moe Oxen or Sheepe: but ỳ offerings which we make vnto God, are of Rom.12.1. our owne selues & of all ỳ euer he hath giuẽ vnto vs, so as all be dedicated vnto him, & applyed to such vse as he alloweth; or else it is but vncleanesse. For if God haue giuẽ me a thing, & I abuse it: I am a traitor to God, because I vnhallowe ỳ thing which he had dedicated to the cleane cõtrarie vse. And therefore let vs mark, ỳ to please God in offering our selues vnto him, we must do it soundly, wout blemish or spot. True it is ỳ there can be no such perfection in vs, but ỳ very great fault may be found in our seruice of him: but yet must we alwayes holde vs to this principle, ỳ we come to God vnfeinedly, and whereas there are infirmities in vs, we must resort to our Lord Iesus Christ. For al our spots & blemishes are done
1.Iohn 1.7. quite & clean away by his bloud. And ỳ is ỳ cause
Hebr.13.15. why it is said, ỳ wee offer our prayses vnto God by him. If there were any sacrifice clean on mẽs behalfe, it were ỳ sacrifice of prayse: for when we fall to ỳ magnifying of Gods name, & confesse ỳ we be beholden to him for al good things; our so dooing seemeth to bee cleane. Howbeit forasmuch as we haue our lips so vncleane, ỳ we cannot yet discharge our selues in ỳ behalfe: therefore it standeth vs in hand to resort continually to our Lord Iesus Christ. Our sacrifices then are steyned with some spot & vice or other; ỳ is true: but yet must wee haue this roundnesse & soundnesse, of tending vnto God ẅout inforcement, necessitie, or hypocrisie. When we be at ỳ point, our Lorde will accept our sacrifices, as though they were offred vp vnto him throughly pure & perfect, & vtterly faultles. In deed it is by means of our Lord Iesus Christ; for there must wee be grounded as I said afore. But if we haue ỳ vertue, then doth God accept ỳ sacrifices which we offer vnto him, so we be not snarled ẅ hypocrisie, & come not to him as inforced or constreined, but with a free will. Therefore if men will serue God, they must beware ỳ they seek not to please men by it, as it often falleth out ỳ they thinke it enough to make some faire shew, & therein do content & sooth thẽselues. We beare our selues in hand ỳ we haue done al ỳ can be done, yea but we neuer entred into our selues, to giue ouer our selues wholy vnto God. Wee neuer sounded our selues to finde whether there were any euill intermingled, that we might be purged of it. And yet is that the ende which wee should haue begunne at, that our comming vnto God might not be as by constreint. For if it were possible, we would exempt our selues from all obedience, and neuer come to reckoning with him for it. But contrariwise wee ought to serue him with a free disposed minde. Then let vs consider, that if wee intend to make our lyfe allowable before God, then in all our thoughtes and all our affections we must haue this substantiall foundacion of dedicating our whole lyfe vnto him, so as our senses and desires be made captiues vnto him, and hee so reigne ouer vs, as our chiefe desire may bee to bee ruled by him and by his holy spirit, and to frame our selues in such wise to his will, that we take nothing in hand but that which lyketh him. When wee goe that way to worke then shall our sacrifices bee pure and cleane.

Besides this, let vs marke also ỳ we must likewise offer vnto God all ỳ euer he hath bestowed vpon vs. As for exãple, when we do almesdeede, let euery man apply ỳ giftes which he hath receiued, to ỳ common benefit of ỳ Church. Those are ỳ sacrifices of good sent, at least wise if they be without blemish or spot. For a man shall not edify ỳ Church when he himself is led with ambition & vainglory. And as for such a one, let him not thinke ỳ he hath offred any thing vnto God. For it is but vtter abhominatiõ, whẽ things haue not their right end, by giuing thẽ ouer again into Gods hande which had committed them to vs, & by putting thẽ to such vse as he hath remaunded. Again whẽ a man ỳ doth almesdeeds is led thereto by vaine ambition, to boast himself before men, & to be esteemed & honored for it; his dealing after ỳ fashion is but vncleanes before God. Now then, let vs learn to haue an eye vnto God, that our sacrifices may bee without blemish or spot.

Moreouer, as concerning ỳ order of ỳ Church, & of all other gouernment, we must vnderstand lykewise ỳ all our sacrifices must be so purified as God may accept them. As for example, ỳ ordeyning of Ministers to preach Gods word, and the doctrine of saluatiõ, the creating of Magistrates & the choosing of Officers, are sacrifices which we offer vnto God. Now we must offer them without spot. For if a man bring in any corruption in those cases, it is high treason to God, as I haue sayd afore. Therefore let vs bethinke our selues throughly, & consider ỳ although these things according to ỳ letter, were inioyned to the Iewes in ỳ time of ceremonies; yet must we apply them to ỳ sacrifices ỳ are in vse and force at this day. And for performance thereof, let vs come back to that which S. Iames sayth, namely ỳ he which commaunded the one, hath also commaunded the other; & that he which forbad the one, hath also forbidden the other. Will wee then please God in all the seruices which we doe vnto him? Let there be no parting of stakes, as if we woulde say, I wil do this for the honor of God, & for the rest he shal beare with me & giue me leaue to do as I list. For in so doing we would be hailfellow w God. And therfore let vs vnderstand ỹ the righteousnes of the law is a thing that cannot be deuided, neither is it for vs to rende it in peeces. Wherfore let vs submit our selues to the rule ỹ is giuen vs, after such sort as is conteined in ỹ Law of God. And therwithal let vs mark further, that we must not haue dubble or dissembling hearts, but that wee must submit our selues wholly vnto God. And if we cannot attaine therto at ỹ first as were to be wished: yet notwithstanding that must be the mark that we shoote at. Now we see what our Lord meant to require in this text.

But to the end wee may bee the more prouoked to deale soundly and substantially: let vs also marke this speech that Moses addeth here for a conclusion, namely that it is abhomination before God. For men do alwayes make themselues beleeue, that they cease not to serue God though there bee nothing but dissimulation and hypocrisie in all their doings. And we knowe howe hypocrites are puffed vp continually with this foule presumption, that although there bee nothing but counterfeiting in all that they do, yet (to their seeming) God is neuertheless beholden to them; and all is wellynough so there bee some gaie painting and some faire shewe. In deede they dare not vtterly deny that there is any fault at all in them: but yet would they still haue men in hande, that there is much good in them which God accepteth. As for example, when ỹ Popish Priests say their prime & hours, besides that they doe but bibblebable, their minds are elsewhere; one thinks vpon his kitchin, and another vppon his harlot. Well, they will graunt that this is ill done, and that they ought to bee more heedefull in their praying. But yet will they vphelde, that so they haue a finall intent to pray vnto God, it is a good and commendable deede; and their comming to Church deserueth verie much, so they haue this final intent to serue god there, though their mindes be distracted about other things. When they haue once worshipped a puppet, and taken a little holy water, though they looke vpon a woman after an vnchaste sort, although they be caried away with couetousnes, or although their mindes bee occupied about some other wicked, shamefull, and hellish lust: yet it skilles not, so they haue the saide finall intent of seruing God; all is wellynough, so they make a shewe of seruing God, notwithstanding that they spite him by all the meanes they can. Likewise in their fasting, though a man cast him selfe into all manner of leawdnes and ruffianry, yet if he fast vppon a deuotion, O thats a holy man, there is no more fault to be founde in him. Thus is it not possible to ridde the hypocrites of the false and diuelish opinion wherwith they be bolned, of paying God with this pelting trash, which is nothing else than abhomination before him; and in the meane while, to spite him in all the residue of their life: so as a man can neuer winne them so beleeue, that God vtterly misliketh all that euer proceedeth not from a sounde heart. So much ỹ more therfore doth it stand vs in hande, to marke well this saying which Moses setteth downe for a finall conclusion: namely that such dealings are abhominable before god. Indeede the blinde & ignorant wretches deeme it not so to be; nay, their doings are commended of men; behold (say they), here is a goodly vertue, here is a good desert. But we must come before the great Iudge, who hath giuen sentence already, that such things are but trash, filthines, and vanitie. And he is not contented with saying so; but he saieth also that they be vtter abhomination or lothsomnes. For indeede, besides their dalying w him to make him as an ydoll, they fal to opē defying of him. If mē thought not god to be starke blind, durst they come before him with a dubble heart, & fraughted ful of hypocrisie? No surely: it woulde make them euen agast at it. For whē they play ỹ hypocrites after ỹ fashion, it is al one as if they came to stop gods eyes, ỹ he might not discerne their dissimulation and cursed hypocrisie. So then let vs marke well, that we must not stay our selues vpon mens bearing of themselues in hande, that to their seeming they faile not to do well, and to deserue wel at Gods hand, though they go not to worke with a free corage, nor with hartie and substantiall soundnesse: Let not such follies runne in our heads. For God not onely reiecteth such thinges as pelting baggage of no value: but also auoweth them to be all abhominable before him, and that he will not suffer his seruice to be so shamefully disguised, without taking horrible vengeance for it. And therfore let vs know that he will haue euery of vs to examine our selues; & sith we see al our thoughts and affections to be corrupted, so as there is nothing in them but dung and vncleannesse: let vs pray him to reforme vs in such sort by his holie spirite, as he may be serued and honored by vs, and wee apply to good and holy vse the thinges that he giueth vs: and that therewithall he make vs to profite more and more in his obedience, vntill we bee come with a free will, to serue him with so good a corage, as wee may be wholly dedicated to his honour. And that we may so doe, let vs repaire vnto our Lorde Iesus Christ, that our spotes and steines may be scowred away by his pureness and perfection, as he hath promised vs. If wee shall doe so, then will our God approue of our life. Prou. 11. 20. 1. Pet. 1. 19.

Now let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgment of our faultes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, that wee may from henceforth fall to amendement and resort to his mercie, and that in the meane season he reforme vs in such sort to the obedience of his Law, as it may shine forth in all our whole life, and hee also beare with vs in our frailties, vntill he haue ridde vs quite and cleane of them. And so let vs all say, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Munday the xviij. of Nouember. 1555.

The Ciij. Sermon which is the second vpon the seuenteenth Chapter.

2 If within any of the Gates which the Lorde thy God giueth thee, there be found either man or woman that hath wrought wickednes in the sight of the Lord thy God, by transgressing his Couenant,

3 And hath gone and serued straunge gods, and bowed himselfe before them, whether it bee the sunne, or the moone, or any of all the host of heauen, which I haue not commaunded,

4 And it is told thee, and thou hast heard of it: then shalt thou inquire diligently. And if it be true and certaine that such abhomination hath beene committed in Israel:

5 Thou shalt cause that man or that woman which hath committed that wicked deede, to bee brought out of the gates, and thou shalt stone them with stones, till they die.

6 At the mouth of two or three witnesses, let him that is worthie of death, dye: but at the mouth of one witnesse, let no man dye.

7 The hands of the witnesses shalbe the first vpon him to kill him, and afterward the hands of all the people. And so thou shalt ridde away that euil from thee.

Deut.13.v.6

WE haue seene heretofore, that if there were either man or woman which went about to counsell others to peruert the seruice of God: they shoulde die for it. Nowe here is a Lawe, yet more sharpe: that is to wit, that if there be any idolater founde among the people, whether the same bee man or woman, is muste cost the party his head and his life, yea though hee haue not gone about to corrupt others or to intice them to leawdnesse. Truely this seemeth rough dealing at the first blush, as we see howe they blame God for vsing such seueritie against such as vppon deuotion did any act contrarie to his trueth. Because wee wey not Gods honour as it is worthy, wee make greater account of a mortall creature than of the liuing God. For if a man haue practised against his Prince, or gone about to alter the publike state: hee shall be condemned to death without any sticking. Againe, if a man bee vnderstoode to haue had secrete conference with his Princes enemie, to haue shewed him fauour, or to haue conspired with him; no bodie will excuse such disloyaltie: and yet for all that, all this dealing is but against men. But if a man turne away from the seruing of God to gad after y dols: men thinke hee ought to bee borne withall, as though it were a thing of nothing. Whereby wee bewray, that wee passe not for the diminishing of Gods honour, or for the defacing of his maiestie. But wee bee no competent Iudges in that case. Therefore let vs remember what is saide heere, and not thinke that God passed measure, when hee did set such price vppon his honour.

Nowe it is saide, If there be founde either man or woman, to the intent that no fraikie should bee a shrowding sheete to any euill doing. For els it woulde bee saide, it is a womans deede. If a man of wit, courage, and vnderstanding had done it; it had beene to haue beene regarded: but seeing it is done by sillie soules that are ready to be deceiued, is it meete that they shoulde be haled to death for it at the first dash? Sir I pray you howe we bee wont to qualifie things. But God on the contrarie parte intending to preuent such shiftes, by telling vs that wee shall not passe whether it bee man or woman, but that the deede of it selfe is so detestable, as that it ought not abide vnpunished. Yet notwithstanding, before wee proceede to punishing, he will haue vs to vnderstande perfectly howe the matter goeth, and hee will haue the truth of the thing tryed out. And therefore hee saith, When it is reported vnto thee, inquire diligently thereof: and if thou find it true, then shalt thou take the partie which hath committed such crime, and stone him to death. Hereby our Lorde sheweth vs (as he hath done afore) that wee must not bee hastie to proceede rashly vnder pretence of any good will or zeale: but vse aduisednesse that thinges may be well knowen. And that is well worth the noting. For wee see howe vnaduised zeale doth often carie men away, and make them to offende GOD. And when it is done, then they say, I did it of a good intent. Yea, but GOD telleth vs heere, that in this behalfe wee must behaue our selues discreetely. And in deede, God meaneth not that men shoulde so falsely abuse his name: For what a vile thing is this; that I shall suppose that I serue GOD and yet in the the meane season haue no equitie nor vprightnesse in me? Is it not a foule iniurie, so to intermingle Gods holy name with mine owne follie and lewde imagination? Wherefore let vs well weigh ỹ God, by this place hath condéned that same too too violent heate which men haue, when they suffer themselues to bee so caried away by their zeale (as they say) without any moderation or stay at all. Let that serue for one point.

And it is some what more when he saith, If the thing be reported vnto thee. For therein wee haue to note, that faultes cannot bee punished among men, vnlesse they come to knowledge. Insomuch that a number of offenders escape the handes of worldly Iudges, though they haue offended more foully than others, and be worthy of great blame: and that is because God hydeth their vnhoneste dealings. For there are sinnes which make haste to come to their condemnation, which God thrusteth forward: and there are other some which linger, and God keepeth them as close as if they were buried. And hereby earthly Iudges are warned to be watchfull in serching out of thinges. For inasmuch as they perceiue, that after neuer so much paine taken in boulting out of matters, which belong to their office to haue knowledge of, yet a great sort of thinges doe scape vnseene: they ought to bee so much the more diligent. They cannot knowe all thinges: and why? for they be but men. Yet notwithstanding, for asmuch as God hath commaunded men to punish euill deedes as soone as they come to knowledge: we must consider howe his meaning is, that because nothing can be hidden from him; therefore although men require nothing of vs, nor make any inquisition or suite in Lawe against vs heere beneath: yet must wee euer bee faine to come to accoumpt before him. It is saide that an ydolater shall bee punished, for God hath commaunded him to bee stoned to death, vppon knowledge that hee is such a one. Nowe put the case that a man turne away from the pureness of Religion, and worshippe ydolles in secret. In deede hee cannot be touched by order of Lawe, neither shall hee abide iudgement for it. But yet must bee thinke in the meane while, that God will not suffer his eyes to be dazled. And therefore wee may gather vppon this text, that our Lord reserueth al those faultes, to his owne iudgement, which are not punished by ordinarie Iustice in this worlde. Not that hee pardoneth not those which returne vnto him by true repentance: but my meaning is of such as harden themselues in their hypocrisie, and take occasion to growe worse and worse, because they bee not reproued of their wicked deedes. But yet let them not thinke they haue made the better market for all that. For whereas God telleth the iudges of the earth that they ought to make diligent inquirie: because hee himselfe hath no neede to do so: he telleth vs that all faultes shall come before his iudgement seate, and that the hypocrites may well shrowde themselues for a time, but in the end they shalbe rooted out: and not without cause. For (as I haue touched afore) thinke wee that God wil leaue his honour in the fudder? Seeing it is his wil that euen men should be maintained in good reputation, and that all outrages shoulde be punished: what will he doe when the case concerneth his owne maiestie, & that his glorie is diminished by the malice of men? Ought such dealing to scape vnpunished? Wil God suffer himselfe to be mocked after that fashion? It will bee alledged that all of vs haue beene ydolaters, & so we are al worthie of death. And their saying so, is as it were to stirre vp all men against God. For the folke that make such replies, seeke but to poyson mens heartes, that Gods honour might bee lightly esteemed, and that we might quarrell with him when wee feele our selues touched.

But first of al (as I said afore) we must mark ỹ our Lord speaketh here of ỹ punishing of ydolaters, where order is stablished according to his word. If God had not begunne at that ende, his order had beene amisse. But seeing hee hath shewed howe men ought to serue him, and giue a sure rule thereof, telling vs that we must simplie doe whatsoeuer hee commaundeth; and seeing that both great and small are taught what God they ought to worshippe, and which is the true Religion: if a man or a woman doe afterward turne away, and become forsworn and disloyal to God by stepping aside into the superstitions of ỹ heathenis there any excuse to be admitted in that case? Then let vs marke wel, that this Lawe was made at such time, as God had alreadie stablished a Lawfull gouernement, directed according to his owne word. But wee haue all beene ydolaters. As howe? Euen by meanes of the horrible desolation, ỹ happened through ỹ whole world, as is to be seene yet still in the Popedome. Had this lawe bin well obserued at the first, Christendome had not bin so sore decayed. For had they beene punished which were the first ydolaters & had falsified the Gospel, and corrupted the pureness which was at that time: surely Gods order had bin maintained and preserued much better. But what? When hypocrites were once crept in, which would needes seeme holier than all other men; then inuented they many corruptions: and the more they were born with, the more did the mischiefe spread it selfe abroad, so ỹ it became a poyson that vndoeth al. The cause then why the Church of God came to such desolation: is that men haue not bin held in awe, that the pure simplicitie of the Gospel might be maintained, and God worshipped according to his word, so as mẽ might not assay to deuise any thing of their own braine, but that al men both great & smal, might be made to obey the doctrine which they knew already to be of God. Had this bin done: there had bin no such desolatiõ as we see stil at this day. And therfore let vs beare in mind, ỹ Gods speaking here, is but of such countries or Cities, as haue had ỹ grace to haue ỹ true religion stablished amõg thẽ, so as he is worshiped there, & they haue al consẽted to admit ỹ order which is set by God; & therfore if any of thẽ do afterward turne away, he deserueth to lose his life. As for exãple, wee haue now the light of the Gospel, whereby our Lord holdeth vs bound vnto him, to serue him & to be his peculiar people. Seeing then ỳ his Religion is knowen vnto vs, and that discipline is set vp among vs: if any of vs hereafter turne away from it, and giue himselfe to ydolatrie, spiting God wilfully: doeth hee not deserue punishment? Yes. For had a man committed any thing against the state, and after his giuing of his othe to the Magistrate, had broken it againe by doing some deede to the contrarie: surely he shoulde be punished for his vnfaithfulnesse. And what shalbe doone then, if men daly with God, falsifying the faith which they haue giuen vnto him, so as they confederate themselues with his deadly enemie Satan, and with ydols which serue but to deface his glorie, his maiestie, and all his seruice? So then, if the skorners of our dayes replie, that if ydolaters shoulde bee punished, all of vs shoulde die: the aunswere is easie, namely that if the Lawe of God had bin executed, as had bin for our benefite and behoofe, Christianitie had not beene so corrupted as it is, neither had Religion beene so imbased as wee see it is. For the remedie thereof was good and behouefull: but men haue not vsed it. And that hath caused all thinges to come to vtter confusion. Therefore it standeth vs the more in hand to take warning, that if this Lawe helde vs not in awe, wee shoulde alwayes bee in daunger of withdrawing our selues from the seruing of God: and he shold no sooner haue giuen vs his word, but it shoulde by and by vanish away againe, through the malyce and vnthankfulnesse of a great number, which woulde soone ouerthrowe the state that is stablished at this day among vs. Marke that for one speciall point.

Secondly let vs marke, howe it is not said that all ydolaters in generall should be punished, but onely such ydolaters as liue in some Church of God where order is set alreadie, and where Religion is certainly stablished, and thinges are sufficiently knowen. For then, if any man do wilfully playe the naughtipacke, and forsake the pure seruing of God, and defile himselfe with ydolatrie and superstition: that person deserueth death. Besides this, let vs marke well, that (as I saide heretofore) if wee bee not punished before men, we must early or late come to account before God: and there we shall finde that we haue deserued, not onely to be stoned, but also to bee vtterly banished from the euerlasting saluation. And why? Because we were baptised in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, euen before we knew any thing at all. True it is that wee haue beene mistaught: but that excuseth not our disobedience, but that wee our selues to the vttermost of our power, haue falsified our baptisme: for wee haue beene corrupted with ydolatrie. So then, our Lorde might with good right thrust vs quite out of his kingdome, and hee could doe it well ynough: neuertheleese wee see howe he hath gathered vs home to him. Nowe therefore let vs bethinke vs of the state wherein we haue beene: & being ashamed of our selues, let vs craue pardon at Gods hand. And as I haue saide afore, let vs not be ashamed to confesse our selues to bee wretched offenders, that God may vse no violence against vs, nor enter into the rigour of his iudgement towards vs. And that is the cause why it is sayde in Ezechiel, Thou shalt remember thine owne wayes, and be ashamed of them. For there God speaketh of the repentance of such as had beene deceiued for a time by ydolatrie: declaring that when they were brought againe into the right way of saluation, they ought to be verie mindfull of the euill which they had committed, yea they ought to thinke vppon it with shame and confusion. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in minde. So that although God drawe not his sword, to punish our bodies, yet faile we not to bee guiltie and damnable before God. Neuertheleese, we must vnderstand that hee will alwayes haue pitie vppon vs, if wee preuent his iudgement, & condemne our selues aforehand, acknowledging our selues to be worthy to sinke for the ydolatrie and superstition which we haue followed, but that God haue pitie vpon vs. But (as I saide) we haue wherewith to comfort vs, because we knowe ỳ he is readie to receiue vs to mercie, when wee acknowledge our sinnes, and repaire to him after the fourme manner. That is a thing which we haue to mark further, where it is said that if ỳ thing be reported, men must inquire of it.

Now he addeth, that the parties which haue done the wickedde, shalbe caried out at the gates: and why so? For (saith Moses) hee hath committed abomination before the Lorde, whether it be man or woman as hee had saide afore. For it is such a sinne as is wicked and grieuous in the eyes of the Lord. Wherin he doth vs to vnderstand, that we must not iudge after our own imagination, whether that deede be worthy of death or no. For it is a thing which beguileth many men, & mooueth them to striue against God and to blaspheme his Law: that they will needs giue sentence of their selues according to their owne opinion. But contrariwise our Lord bringeth vs backe here to his will. It is euill in my sight (saith he) it displeaseth me; I abhorre it. And hee telleth vs moreouer, that we must rest vpon his worde, saying, I haue commanded it. Hereby therfore let vs take warning that wee iudge not at all aduenture & with diuelish boldnesse as these gallants do nowadays, which would not haue religiõ to come in iudgement for the punishing of blasphemie and such other like things which are committed against ỳ honor of God. To be short, they would not haue the Magistrates to sit in iudgement vppon any fault committed against ỳ first table. If any fault be committed against men, as robbery, rape, murther, or aduowtry, they be contented that ỳ shalbe punished, but if Gods name be blasphemed, if any abhomination be committed to the putting away of al feare of god, if heresies spring vp to y trouble of the Church, and to the peruerting of all order: they would haue that to be suffered & excused. And what leadeth them thereto, but the saide hellish pride, that when a thing misliketh not them, they thinke ỳ God shoulde yeeld to their lyking? But herin appeareth their

ouerweening matched w vngodlines of making none account of God, forasmuch as they can finde in their hearts that his maiestie should be so lightly esteemed at all assayes. Howbeit, let vs for our part marke what is set down here, namely that if any euill displease the eyes of the Lord, it is not to be borne withall: neither must wee in that case leane to our owne wisedome, as if wee wouldе say; O, I will shewe my verdit of it. No, no, we must thinke it ynough that God holdeth it for abhomination, and that hee cannot away with any such thing.

Furthermore he expresly sendeth vs backe to his word, to the intent wee should see it proued to our faces, that they which are such ydolaters ought not to bee excused: for they make warre against God. And is the crime of rebellion a venall sinne? Is it a fault that may bee pardoned, without making any countenance of doing any thing to it? If a man doe of wilfull malice rebell against his father or his mother, his master or his superior: it shalbe throughly weyed, and continually aggrauated to double & treble the fault. And shall a man be so rebellious against God as to defie him, and to doe quite contrarie to his will and intent: and shoulde we still cocker and fauor them that haue so grieuously offended? We see that our Lord speaketh but onely to such as haue bin dulie taught his wil aforehād. For he sayde not to the heathen, or the vnbeleeuers, I haue commanded you this, or I haue forbidden you that. No. And therefore this lawe must concerne a people that hath receiued Religion afore, and among whome some certaine rule is setdowne and stablished. Nowe then, when God hath once commaunded one thing and forbidden another, and hath tolde vs that his will is so: what remaineth more for vs, but to frame our selues thereafter? And as for those that refuse his yoke, can they say it is through ignorance, and through some fonde deuotion? Indeede it may well bee so: but yet there lyeth another crime shrowded vnderneath, namely the contempt of Gods worde; yea there lurketh secrete malice, hypocrisie, and pride: and all these (saye I.) are mingled togesther. Therefore must all excuses cease, and we must acknowledge that all such as haue beene duely trained in the worde of God, are lesse excusable than the ignorant.

And this is not to be applyed alonely to temporall iustice: but forasmuch as it is God that speaketh, let vs marke that accordingly, as wee haue proceeded in his doctrine, and he shewed his will vnto vs; our sinne is the greater if we followe not whatsoeuer he commaundeth vs. To this poinct must we come: it is God that hath spoken vnto mee, he hath graunted mee the grace to knowe howe hee will haue me to walke, and therefore seeing that hee inlighteneth mee, I must not stumble, I must not play the blinkarde nor the blinde bussarde: but I must take heede to the obeying of his doctrine. If we doe not so, we see that this foresaide punishment belongeth vnto vs: and if wee be not chastised by the hand of man, it is readie for vs from aboue. For God can well skill to vpbraide vs with the fauour that he hath shewed vs, in that hee hath vouchsafed to teach vs his will. Insomuch that although the poore ignorant soules were halfe to be excused; yet so it is that on our behalfe the crime is out of all square, when wee set our selues after that fashion against Gods will which is knowen vnto vs. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vpon this place, where it is expresly saide; that God hath not commaunded those things. Also let vs learne generally to iudge of Gods will according to his teaching of vs. For oftentimes we will needs lessen mens faults, or aggrauate them; and yet in the meane while we looke not at the thing that is tolde vs. Therefore let vs beare in minde, that Gods will is conteined in ỹ holy scripture, and ỹ that is the place where we must seeke it: & when we see that God speaketh so or so, let vs hold vs to it without any gainsaying.

Nowe Moses addeth, that the hands of the first witnesse shalbe first against the partie that is to bee stoned, and then the hands of al the people. Wherein he ment to shewe, that witnesse must not be borne, but with feare. But nowadayes, many men make no great conscience to giue euidence at allauenture against their neighbours, because they bee not put to the executing of the sentence. Hereyppon one goes and with his false tongue doeth wounde some man that is but halfe guiltie, or peraduenture guiltlesse altogether. And he bears himselfe in hand, that a iob with his beake is not so great a matter; by reason whereof he passeth not at all to speake against all trueth. Yee see then the verie cause why there is so much libertie of forswearing nowadayes; is, that such as giue euidence against their neighbours, are not put to the executing of the Iudges sentence. But it was Gods will that their shoulde bee another order among the people of Israel; namely that hee which gaue the euidence, shoulde cast the first stone at the partie, as who shoulde say; it is thou that putteſt this man to death. By meanes whereof folke were restreined from bearing witnesse against any man, vnlesse the matter were true and certaine. For he that had giuen the euidence, sawe himselfe dubble guiltie both of tongue and hand, in murdering an innocent if hee had not deposed the trueth. Wee see then howe it was not without cause, that God commaunded this Ceremonie; namely that the witnesses should bee the first in stoning the parties that were condemned to death by ỹ Iudges. And hereby they were all done to vnderstande, that no offender was put to death, but by the witnesse of such as had proued his offence by their owne knowledge.

Neuertheless God willed also that the hands of al the people should ioyne with them, to shew that all of vs must bee furtherers of the maintenance of his seruice, and of the pure Religion. If any trespasse haue beene committed between man and man, it shalbe pursued by such as haue taken the hurt or losse, or by such as haue to do therewith, or else some common sollicitor shal haue the prosecuting of it for them all. But when Gods honour is defaced, then ought euery

man to bestirre himselfe: and it is a singular fauour that God sheweth vnto vs, when hee imployeth vs in so honorable a thing, as the maintenance of his maiestie, to be as his Attourneys in that behalfe. For what are we? Now if God doe vs the honour to declare vnto vs, that he wil haue his honour maintained by vs and by our hands: shoulde we be negligent in that case? So then wee see nowe what was Gods meaning, in commaunding all the people to helpe to stone the ydolaters. For thereby it is done vs to vnderstande, that wee ought to haue a care to maintaine Gods seruice purely among vs; and that euery man must bee earnest and zealous in this behalfe, that (as much as in vs lyeth) wee suffer not religion to bee had in skorne or to bee peruerted: But that if wee beare good will to the common weale, when all thinges are well ordered, and that wee loue to haue equitie and vprightnesse among vs: there is much more reason that we shoulde bee verie chare of the worshipping of God purely, that men turne not away from his woorde, ne wander away wilfully from the Religion that hee hath stablished. For although that wee nowadayes, bee not bounde of any necessitie to the keeping of this Lawe, as in respect of the Ceremonie: yet doeth the substance thereof abide with vs. Euerie of vs is not to stone ydolaters: but yet our Lorde doeth vs to vnderstande, that wee must at leastwise haue so great regarde of his honour, that (so farre as lyeth in vs) wee suffer not his name to bee scorned, and his religion troden downe: but that euerie of vs doe set our selues there against, and make himselfe an aduersarie partie in that behalfe. That is the thing which wee haue to note. And so, although the Ceremonie of the Lawe be not such amongst vs: yet doeth the substance thereof stande in force still, and wee ought to obserue it.

And for the same cause also it is added expressly, that they must roote out the euill from among them. Whereby he doth vs to wit, that the suffering of ydolatrie and superstition, is a canker-worme and corruption that infecteth al things. And as I saide afore, if men had beene well bridled at the beginning, surely they had neuer come to such Apostasie; that is to say, they had neuer withdrawen themselues after that fashion from the obedience of God. For what else is Poperie, but a corruption which hath drawen all men from the obeying of God, so as all became backesliders, all haue gone astray, and all haue broken the promise of their baptisme? And whereof came this, but of mens nourishing of the euil by their winking at it and their concealing of it, vntil the infection was so spred abrode, that both great and small were poysoned therewith? Nowe then, if wee will holde ourselues in the pure obedience of God, let vs doe our indeuour that the mischiefe may bee rooted out from among vs, specially being a mischiefe that bringeth so greate an infection with it: For it is not possible for vs to scape infection, if it abide among vs. And for the same cause the Apostle (in the Epistle to the Hebrewes) exhorteth vs to Hebr. 12.15

plucke vp the wicked weeds, before they bee full growē: for it wil amaze vs when they shal pick out our eyes; and yet there is no remedie but it must be so, if we suffer them to growe any long time. Therfore as soone as we see any euil sprout out, we must take it away as much as we can, that we may bee quite and cleane rid of it. Yea and although one man coulde not be infected to wickednesse by the example of another, yet is Gods wrath kindled and increased still among vs, whē the euill abideth so vnpunished. And therfore S. Paul speaking of the incest that was suffered among the Corinthians, saieth vnto them, Put away the euil from among you. As if he had saide, yee wretched men, the crime that is among you prouoketh Gods vengeance against your whole Nation, if it bee so suffered: and therefore if you intende to be exempted from Gods wrath, let not that euill bee suffered or nourished any longer. And this is a sufficient proofe of that which I haue touched; namely that God in commanding all people to put to their hande to the staining of ydolaters, sheweth vs that the thing concerneth vs all: and that for as much as it mooueth vs his attourneys, it is good reason that euery of vs should indeuour to discharge himself of his duety. And thereunto doth God himself exhort vs, in that hee sheweth vs that the suffering of such euil, is an infection & deadly plague, and that our bearing with the thinges that are cleane contrarie to his maiestie, is a prouoking of his wrath against vs. 1 Cor. 5.13

Now remaineth, that wee come to this Law that a man shall die at the mouth of two or three witnesses, but not vpon the euidence of any one singleman. This Law serueth for order of gouernment. And indeede the very Heathen were taught by nature to follow this order, so as they could not say it was requisite that a matter should be proued by a couple of witnesses. And this was printed in their mindes, because our Lorde will vse to holde mankind continually in some kinde of vprightnesse, and that discretion should be vsed. But we haue this doctrine the better confirmed, in that God speaketh it with his owne mouth: he saieth, that a man shall die at the mouth of two or three witnesses, and not vpon the report of any one. Then let vs beare in minde, that things ought not to be iudged at aduenture without lawfull proofe. Neuertheless, it may bee that euen the iudge himself may sometimes be a witnesse in a matter: and yet notwithstanding he must iudge contrarie to that he knoweth & wil say, he doth amisse. Nay, he could doe no otherwise, and hee doeth well. For if I bee a iudge, and no bodie but my selfe doth knowe a man to be faulty, so as I cā haue no witnes of his doings: I must let him alone, because I cānot remedie it, & he must be quit by my sentence. And this dealing of mine is no preiudice to any offender: I cōdemn him before god as he deserueth: but yet I let his crime alone vntil it be reuealed, vntil God discouer it and bring it to light. Nowe then let vs marke that for ciuill orders sake, wee must alwayes obserue this rule, that we iudge not but vppon good proofe, so as the matter be proued and

and verified.

Hereupon it is saide that there must bee two or three witnesses. But sometimes men to couer their faultes and misdeedes, wil needes require an infinite number of proofes, which thing was to be seene in those lastie blouds, which woulde needes be wiser than God, and had inuented a very straunge lawe here in this citie of Geneua, which was that they would not be contented w two witnesses, vnlesse there were a Proctor beside. This went they about to controll Gods law, and all vprightnes of nature, and the thing which hath hitherto bin maintained of ỹ whole world. And what was the cause thereof, but that they would faine haue committed al manner of lewdnes, & bleared out their tongues against god, and yet there might neuer haue been any sufficient witnesse to haue conuicted them thereof? For had there come two witnesses, yea, three or foure, yet had mens eyes beene bleared, and all that had beene nothing. Therefore let vs note, ỹ this law was set downe, to make vs hold ỹ meane betweene the two extremities.

The first extremitie is, to iudge of a mater before it be throughly proued, for so to do is euil, & in so doing men are too hastie. Therfore is it requisite, that there should be a two or three witnesses of it. And whē there be a two or three witnesses, it is not for men to reply, as who should say it were meete that fower or fiue witnesses should be sought for, & that the matter were neuer wel proued, except there bee a spokesman with the witnesses. And that is a flat mocking of God. Let vs then beare in minde, that seeing our Lord hath told vs, that the offender shall dye at the mouth of two or three witnesses; it is to bee supposed that ỹ knowledge of the matter ought to suffice vs, so as there ought to bee no wrangling against it, but that iustice ought to proceede to execution. And we see how needefull this admonition is for vs. For men would euer shrinke back if it were possible: & if there bee any apparant colour to hyde their misdeedes, they beare themselues in hand that their hands are cleane inough of them. But here our Lorde summoneth vs, saying that if there bee two witnesses, ỹ iudge must not shrinke backe: for if he do, he is confederate & companion with the wicked, vnlesse he put to his hand to the redresse of their wickednesse. Thus we see nowe, that in saying that two or three witnesses are sufficient, for the conuicting of a man to haue deserued death: our Lord meant to cut off occasion of all shifts that men deuise to cloake their misdeedes withall.

Now furthermore, let vs apply this doctrine to our selues also: & let vs vnderstand that seeing God hath set such order in temporal iustice, hee will keepe it towards vs. But are we not sufficiently conuicted, that wee haue beene estranged from the worde of God? First euery of vs hath his own conscience to reproue him: and what a number of witnesses doeth that counteruaile? The Heathen haue saide, that it is as good as a thousand. Then if a man be condemned in himselfe, what shall it boote him to iustifie himselfe, seeing that his sinne gnaweth him and preferreth inditementes continually against him? For there is no man (howe blockish so euer he bee) whose owne conscience doeth not continually sting him. Therfore let vs learne to plead guiltie before God, seeing he stirreth vs therto inwardly & sheweth vs our faults: Besides this, the prophets and Apostles & the verie sonne of God himselfe, are faithfull witnesses of it, as the prophet Esay nameth him. Seeing we haue them to conuict vs; what should we henceforth seeke for startingholes? What wil that boote vs? And wee haue not the holy scripture onely; but wee haue also the thicke clowde (as the Apostle tearmeth them in the Epistle to the Hebrewes) of all the faithful & of al the holy martyrs which euer suffered for the name of God: & shall not al those be sufficient witnesses to condemne vs before ỹ iudgement seat of our Lord Iesus Christ? Nowe if we make no account to benefite our selues, by the example which they haue giuen vs: but do wilfully forsake the doctrine after we haue knowen it: what condemnation do we deserue? And that is the verie cause why S. Paul alleageth this text to the Corinthians, that iudgement standeth vppon the mouth of two or three witnesses. And whereof speaketh he there? Of his owne Epistle & of his owne comming: for hee sayeth ỹ he will come to the Corinthians. Not that I haue not written vnto you sufficiently already, sayeth he; or that I haue not warned you often ynough heretofore, and yet you continue stubborne and hardharted still. But thinke you that ye shal winne any thing thereby at Gods hand? Know ye (saith he) that iudgement shalbe taken at the mouth of two or three witnesses. Sith it is so, let vs bethinke our selues; and forasmuch as we see that God hath beene so gracious to vs, to giue vs so many prophets after him, & that Iesus Christ himselfe & his Apostles haue witnessed vnto vs the trueth of the Gospel: let them not be witnesses against vs to our condemnation, but rather let them be witnesses of our faith: and let vs bee so confirmed in the grace of ỹ holy ghost by our Lord Iesus Christ, as we may continually keepe on our course, and followe the vocation wherevnto our Lord hath put vs & called vs.

2. Cor. 13. 1

And now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs feele them better; that thereby wee may bee the more inflamed to serue him and woorshippe him; not onely as in respect of the ceremonie, but also by applying all our whole life to his obedience, and by giuing of our selues wholly to the soundnes which he sheweth vs by his holy word: And that we may endeuour to bring other men to the same, & not suffer those to stray which are alreadie in the right way; but with one common accord hold them together in the sheepefold which are come into it alreadie, and drawe others thither by our good life & conuersation, preuenting all causes of offence & disorder, whereby the true religion might bee peruerted. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people, and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewsday the xix. of Nouember. 1555.

The Cixij Sermon, which is the third vpon the seuententh Chapter.

8 If a thing be too hard for thee to iudge betweene bloud and bloud, betweene cause & cause, betweene wound & wound, & there be wordes of strife within thy gates: then shalt thou rise and get thee vp to the place which the Lorde thy God shall haue chosen:

9 And go to the Priests & Lenites, & to the Iudge which shalbe in those days, & aske; and they shall shewe thee the sentence of iudgement.

10 And according to the content of the sentence which shalbe declared vnto thee by those of the place which the Lord shal haue chosen, so shalt thou do: and thou shalt take heede to do according to all that they informe thee.

11 According to the sentence of the law which they teach thee, & according to the right which they tell thee, shalt thou do. Thou shalt not turne aside from the thing which they shewe thee, neither to the right hand nor to the left.

12 As for the man which through presumptuousnes will not obey the high priest which is there to minister before the Lorde thy God, or the Iudge: that man shall dye, and thou shalt put away euil from Israel,

HEre is the order shewed vs how to end matters in lawe. Forasmuchas when men are at controuersie, we see they be so wilful & hardharted, ỳ by their good willes they woulde neuer come to any end: God declareth ỳ it was his wil there should bee some soueraigne court of iustice among his people, against the sentence wherof there shold lye no appeale. True it is ỳ all people are taught of nature to do so. For if it were lawfull to make continual appeales: mens frowardnes is such (as I said afore,) ỳ their controuersies would neuer come to any end. Therfore is it requisite ỳ there should be some certaine stay: & that is it which our Lord hath declared in this text. Againe, as touching worldly gouernement, this order is greatly auailable, forasmuch as the thing which nature followeth through ỳ whole world, is ratified by the mouth of God: & that is a thing which ought to be well marked. For sith we see ỳ God hath humbled himself so much as to shewe vs the order of ciuil gouernment; we must conclude ỳ he alloweth of it. For otherwise he would not medle with it: & it were a dishonoring of his maiestie. Do we then see ỳ our Lorde in his lawe hath treated of ỳ order which wee ought to obserue among our selues? Let vs assure our selues thereby, that it is a thing which hee well liketh. Marke that for one point.

Againe, sith we see after what fashion he will haue vs to behaue our selues, & hath set ỳ same down particularly: it is yet a greater confirmation. And as for Iudges which are set in authoritie & preheminence: let them vnderstand that their doings are an acceptable sacrifice to God, because he beareth record therof in his law, and ỳ the people also do conform themselues so much the more willingly thereunto. Wherefore we must vnderstand, ỳ the peruerting therof were a rebelling against God, & a despising of him. Thus we see now how needful a doctrine it is for vs, & how greatly to our edifying, ỳ our lord hath declared, ỳ there should be one chiefe court of Iustice for men to rest vpon, that they might not be in continual dout.

Neuertheleſſe we must note ỳ our Lord would not admit appeales in all cases indifferently among his people. For he saith, If there happen any hard case, whereof the iudgement is doutfull, & ought to be determined, because the Iudges (namely) inferior Iudges of euery citie) be grouded in it. Wherfore sets he down this? Because it had bin too great a toyle for the people to haue bin driuen to repayre to Ierusalem for euery matter of sixpence, or I wote not what such like. We see (as I haue sayde afore) howe there are some vnsatiable men, and such as could alwayes be contented to findge themselues so they may scold others. Nay ye shal see some so spitefull, ỳ though they should eate their owne fingers, yet they would go forewarde with their sutes in Law, and whē they had wasted away their own substance, they would euen hazard their liues also, to procure trouble to their aduersaries. Seeing then that it is manifest that such folk are caried away with rage, or at leastwise with desire of reuenge: it is good to bridle them. And that is the cause why God woulde not haue all cases to come to Ierusalem. For he had set a good order, namely that there shoulde be iustice in euerie Citie, yea and men of vnderstanding, to giue iudgement of such matters as were to come to triall before them. Prouided alwayes that the cause were not harde and doutfull.

So then let vs marke, how it was Gods will that the controuersies should bee ended with speede, without troubling of the parties too much. And seeing that his intent was such, wee ought to frame our selues thereto as much as is possible for vs. And therefore if men intend to stablish a good order of gouernement, and such as God alloweth: let them followe this rule, that quarels be not maintey ned betweene man and man, but that if there be any controuersie they may soone be set at one againe, so as the suite in Law be not prolonged, nor men posted ouer from one to another, but that things may bee so ordered, as the parties may not be suffered to followe still their owne inordinate wils. True it is that this vice cannot be so corrected, but that some remnant of it will abide still. Yet notwithstanding wee muste goe as neere the marke as we possibly can, seeing that our Lord directeth vs thereunto.

Againe, if a man intend to prouide for the pacifying of quarels among men, so as might may not ouercome right: yee see that ordinary Iustice cannot be forborne. For inasmuchas God had chosen the people of Israel; it is certain that he prouided the best meane that could be deuised for the mainteyning of them in peace and concord. And in verie deede they were all of one linage, descended of the race of Abraham: and therefore inasmuch as there was such a brotherhoode among them; it ought to haue beene the easier to haue continued them in quietnes. On the other side they seeing themselues separated from the rest of the world, and being there gathered together into one bodie in the name of God ought to haue born one w another in reuerence of that holy bond. Yet notwithstanding for their further preseruation, God ordeyned this meane that there should be Iudges in euery Citie. Then let vs conclude, that as long as men liue here beneath; they cannot forbeare Magistrates, by reason of their infirmities. Truth it is that euery man ought to carie the Lawe in his heart, and euery man ought to doe al men right of their owne accord: but we be blind and our affections cary vs away; and besides that, wee subdue not our vnderstanding, neither do we holde our lusts captiues as we ought to doe. Therefore we haue neede of a bridle for them. And that is my meaning, in saying ℣ wee ought to loue the state of ciuil gouernement, and to reuerence it; namely because it is a necessarie meane to maintain mankind in this world, and wout it al things would go to horrible confusion, insomuch ℣ wee should not only become as Dogs & Cats; but also beworse than wilde beasts. Greately therefore ought we to bewaile our state, seeing ℣ (as I haue shewed afore) wee which beare the Image of God cannot vse our freedome to behaue our selues according to reason and equitie. Yet notwithstanding, seeing we be so sore corrupted, we must vnderstand ℣ Gods remedying of our discases after that fashion, is a poinct of his singular goodnes towards vs. But howsoeuer ℣ case stand, if we wil eschewe ℣ men scratch not our one anothers eies, ne eat not vp one another: let vs follow ℣ rule which our lord sheweth vs here, namely ℣ there be Iustice in euery Citie & in euery other place, and ℣ such as beare ℣ sword do watch so as no man oppresse another, no man work any outrage or iniurie, nor no man presume further than is lawfull. Marke that for one poinct.

Now let vs come to that which is set downe here concerning Appeals. If there rise any difficult & doubtful case, betweene cause and cause, wound and wounde, or blood and blood. As if he should say, if there bee any cause either criminall or ciuile whereof there riseth doubt, and men cannot decide it by giuing definitiue sentence on it: let the resort to the high courte. We see then that Appeales are ordeined as wel for matters of life & death, as for matters of trespasse. And now let vs see whither God woulde haue men to appeale. To Ierusalem. True it is that he doth not as yet name the place, because it was not appointed out as ℣ time. But he sayth, Thou shalt go vp. And Moseses speaking after that manner, was after a sort in way of prophesie, because the situation of Ierusalem was higher than all the rest of Iurie. But vntill the Ark was set there, it behooued them to resort to the place where that was. Againe, here is no speaking of the king. For the time was not yet come that God would set vp a kingdome among that people: ℣ was to be stablished in the person of Dauid. Yet notwithstanding there were alwaies Iudges, accordingly as wee see how Iosua succeeded Moses, and consequently the rest of the Iudges vnto Samuel, at which time ℣ people would needes change their state. Therefore vnto Samuels time, there was this order among them, that God raised vp certaine Iudges in Israel, which represented ℣ state of a king vntil the kingdom was stablished. That is ℣ thing which Moses meant in this sentence, when he saide, ℣ men should resort to the Iudge which should be at that time in Israel.

Also it was his will that the high Priest with his fellow Priests the Leuites, should haue authoritie to giue sentence of Iudgement. And why? He addeth; Because they could giue sentence according to the Lawe of God. And finally, vpon that sentence of theirs hee will haue men to rest: and that if any man disobeyed it, he should be punished with death, that by that meanes pride might be corrected in Israel. Now wee see what God intended to commaund concerning Appeales. There were Iudges in euery Citie: but yet there was one aboue them all as in the degree of a Prince. Not that it went by inheritaunce: but looke whomsoeuer God raysed vp by his holy spirite, him it behooued to gouerne the people. And wee see it came so to passe afterwarde. As oft as the people fel away from God, it was to their owne confusion: and as soone as he had pitie vppon them againe, hee raysed them vp Iudges newe againe, as the holy liystories doe shewe vs. There were in deede soome interruptions at such time as the people were worthy to be punished, insomuch ℣ all went to hauocke, they were giuen ouer vnto bondage and to the tyranny of the Infidels which were their enemies: bue as soone as God vouchsafed to gather them home againe, there was a newe Iudge set vp againe. Iudges 2. 17. 18.

And herein we see yet better, that it is a token of Gods presence, when we haue order of iustice among vs, so as there are men to gouerne vs which walke in the feare of God, and execute their charge faithfully: it is as much as if God came downe to vs & shewed vs his face. Contrariwise, when the order of gouernment is peruerted, it is as though God turned his backe to vs. If the magistrates be corrupted, & peruert al right & equitie, or if tyrants get dominion ouer vs: let vs vnderstand that God forsaketh vs, and withdraweth himselfe from vs, & is mynded to make vs feele his absence by such signe of his wrath: and that then wee haue good cause to mourne. But if wee see the lawes florish, & there be men that feare God, to make them to be executed, it is all one as if God made his face to shine vpon vs, and declared his loue towardes vs, and that hee is minded to maintaine vs vnder his protection. And it serueth to make vs to loue the state of worldly gouernement the better, seeing it is such a token of the goodnesse of our God, and of his fatherly loue towardes vs.

But as I sayde afore, the high priest and the trybe of Leuy were appointed to bee Iudges in all harde cases. It may seeme strange at the first sight, howe it commeth to passe that GOD woulde haue the priesthood to entermeddle in ciuil gouernement: for they be two things farre differing. Wee knowe that when Aaron was ordeyned to bee the high priest, Moses had the gouernement of the people. Nowe the Priesthood went by inheritance, and so did not ỹ temporall gouernement. In so much that Moses left his own children as priuate persons in their owne houses without any publike authoritie, & Ioshua who was not of any kinne or aliance vnto him, was his successour. The same order continued afterwarde, in so much that God raised vp whome hee thought good, nowe one of one trybe, and nowe another of another. Notwithstanding, it behooued the Priestes to hold them selues contented with the spirituall gouernement of the Church, and they ought not to take vppon them the ciuil gouernement. Why then doth God here set them in highest degree to iudge? Vndouredly, it was to ordeyne a Councell for him that was to bee the chiefe Iudge, and to holde the people in the better awe, as it it had beene sayde that all Appeales should come before God. For (as I haue declared afore) men can very hardly bee brought to giue their consentes, to obey a sentence that is against them. Therefore, to the ende that no man shoulde take leaue to stande in contention, God sayeth there shalbee a soueraigne Iudge, at leastwise to beare sway in Counsell of hard cases, and such as are giuen in fourme of iudgement. And to the intent that thinges may bee iudged according to my lawe, the high priest and the order of the Leuites shalbee present there. Nowe wee knowe that they were expounders of Gods lawe. For with that condition was the priesthood giuen vnto them, namely that they shoulde bee Gods Angels and messengers as the Prophet Malachie speaketh of them. And

Deut. 31.7.
Iosua, 1.2.

Mal. 2.7.

therefore when men asked counsell at their mouthes, it was not to haue some dooting dreame of mans deuice, but to haue the certaine vnderstanding of Gods lawe. That then was the cause why the chiefe authoritie of iudgement was committed to the order of the priestes with the Iudge whome God had set vp.

But before wee goe any further, let vs note that vnder pretence of this text, the Pope hath vp his hornes, and vsurped such tyranny as we haue seene him vse in the Church of God. For thus doeth hee reason. Seeing that the chiefe authoritie of iudgement was giuen to the Priestes, it is to bee concluded that there ought to bee one head ouer all the Church. Againe, for as much as the sentence of the high priest was to bee holde without any gainsaying, the thinges that are determined by the Apostolike sea (as they terme it) ought likewise to be holde without gainsaying, and it is a deadly and unpardonable sinne, to incounter any thing that the Pope shall haue pronounced. But here we haue two thinges to consider, which are of sufficiencie to resolue all such and so childish argumentes. For first, the gouerning of the whole worlde by one man, and the gouerning of some one countrey or prouince by one man, are not both one. God hath made here a ciuil lawe for the countrey of Iewrie. And we knowe that at that time there was but one Temple, & that it was not lawfull for them to worship God or to offer sacrifice vnto him in euery citie. If a man had buylded any altar, it had beene abominable, and that citie must haue beene rased. And Gods doing hereof, was but to hold ỹ people in one right vnitie of faith. The like ordre was but one temple in the land of Iewry: so was there but one high priest. But must this be exteded to the whole world? No, not so. There needeth many mo: for what one mortal man nowdayes is able to weeld so great a charge? Againe, it were meete that there should one temple bee builded in the mids of the worlde, ỹ men might come rūning to it a foure or fiue thousād leagues off to worship God. And do ye not see what an absurditie that were? Therfore it were too grose a fondnesse to cōclude thus; There was but one temple & one high priest in al Iewrie, ergo there ought to be ỹ like throughout the whole worlde. For then ought there also some litle nooke to be made, where men might so assemble together, as they should not needs to go past foure or fiue dayes iourneyes from home: but we see that that were vnpossible, and moreouer it were contrarie to nature. Marke that for one poynt.

And secondly let vs marke, that the Leuitical Priesthood is come to an end & quite put down by the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ into world. Moreouer the high priest was a figure & shadow of our Lord Iesus Christ, and therefore it were an abolishing or putting away of the trueth, if men shoulde haue a high priest to be the vniuersall head of the Church, as the Pope woulde make men beleeue. It is saide that there was one high priest, one chiefe Iudge,

yes, & one king in Israel. Now if a man wil conclude hereupō, that there ought to be one high-priest through the whole world; there must also be but one chiefe king: & so should all common weales be cast downe, & the order which as now is distinctly set among kingdoms, dukedomes, & free cities, should be but a confusion accursed of God. And in what taking were wee then? Nay, wee must go to the chiefe point of all, which is that thereby our Lorde Iesus Christ shoulde be robbed of his right. For now that he is come, the kingdome is stablished euerlastingly in his person, & he is set ouer all the Empires and kingdomes of the worlde. Also he hath taken vpon him the euerlasting priesthood, ouer all order & gouernement of the Church. Not that there shoulde not as now be any mo Bishops & shepheards, as the scripture speaketh of them: but ỹ Iesus Christ be the only head, & the residue but as inferior members, and that the body be gouerned in such wise, as all things may be subiect to him of whome it is saide; This is my welbeloued sonne, Heare ye him. And so wee see that ỹ Pope is a traytour that robbeth Iesus Christ of his soueraignitie, by making of himself highpriest ouer the Church of God.

And by the way, if it be alledged that it is requisite there should be some meane to end quarels and controuersies that might rise for religion the answere is, that so there be an order set, there needeth not any one man to be set ouer al the rest; but they may assemble together w one consent accord, as we see hath bin done in times past. True it is that the men of olde time had a certeine order in the Church for the great Prouinces, namely that there were certaine Patriarches: but as for to haue any one head ouer the whole Church, that was neuer agreed vppon, so long as there was any pureness of the Gospel or any tolerable gouernement. But as soone as all things were confounded after a barbarous or rather beastly maner; then did the Pope lift vp his hornes. In deed he stroue long time against the Bishop of Constantinople. But howsoeuer ỹ case stood, it fell out anon after that all thinges were corrupted & confounded, & men wist not any more what the gouernment of the church ment. So then let vs marke, ỹ if it be said, that like as it is requisite there should be some stay for the pacifying of ciuil quarels, and for the determining of criminal [illegible]; so it is good reason that there should be [illegible] chiefe court of prerogatiue, for the appealing [illegible] rise & contention in doctrine: yet it followeth not that one man only ought to haue supremacie ouer the whole world: for (as I haue shewed afore) that is quite contrarie to nature. What remaineth then? That men assemble togither, & that Iesus Christ beare the chiefe sway among them.

But we must wey well the things that are contained heere. It is said that ỹ Priest must iudge according to the law of God. Wherein it is shewed that our Lorde layeth not the brydle loose on the necke, eyther of all the priestes together, or of the iudge which was in those dayes in state of a king: but that al of them ought to be subiect to the law: and that (as I said afore) God meant to reserue the soueraigne authoritie to himselfe, so as men should receiue definitiue sentence at his mouth, & that the persons which were to giue the sentence, should be but as instrumentes of his holy spirite, & expounders of his lawe. Therefore let vs marke wel, that God ment not here that men should do any thing on their own heads, but that his lawe should beare the sway, specially in Ierusalem rather than in any other place. But now let vs see what the Pope doeth, & what all the bastardly Councels haue done whereunto he would tye vs. There is nothing amongest them but to say: that the holy Ghost gouerned them; for as for the holy scripture they did let that alone. In deede they gaue it the honorable title of Gods word: but when they ment to determine what they thought good, was it according to that which God hath declared? No: but they tooke another rule; which is, that the Church cannot erre because it is gouerned by ỹ holy Ghost: & that as touching the holy scripture, it leadeth vs into perfection, but we must mount vp yet higher: for if we haue not the reuelations of the holy Ghost, it is nothing: If a man holde himselfe to that which is conteined in the holy scripture, it is but an vnperfect thing with them; but as for that which is determined by ỹ Church, that must be held inuiolable, and no man must in any wise gainsay it. Againe, the holy scripture (say they) is a nose of wax, which a man may wryth euery way, & there is no certeintie in it: but whē the church hath once pronounced a thing, there is no more dout in it. After ỹ maner went all the rable of them to worke, so as they haue troden ỹ holy scripture vnder foote. Although they grant in words that it proceeded from God: yet haue they taken it to be but as an apse, and as a cōmō doctrine: affirming that the Reuelations which haue beene giuen vnto them, are much higher doctrine. These blasphemies they haue not been ashamed to vtter, & their bookes are ful of them. Insomuch that they say that the holy scripture is a pliable thing (as I haue declared afore); so as if wee should sticke to that which is conteyned there, our fayth shold neuer be certein. And therupon euery man followes his owne fancye. Seeing they were come to such extremitie, a mā may wel perceiue ỹ the holy scripture bare no sway amōg thē. But on ỹ cōtrarie part it is said, ỹ the highpriest must be a iudge, not only in matters concerning the spiritual gouernment of the church, but also in ciuil cases; & that he must follow ỹ law though the case concern but the temporal iurisdiction. If it be so, what is to be done whē they haue to deale with ỹ law of God? Whē the case concerneth the saluation of mens souls, religion, & faith, which are things ỹ passe all the whole world: Shal men therein forsake the holy Scriptures? Shall men in those cases ouerrule matters at their own pleasure, as if they woulde say, This seemes good to mee, this hath ỹ holy Ghost reuealed vnto mee? See yee not how God is shamefully mocked in this behalf? So then, let vs mark wel, first that our lord ment not to giue infinit power either to the Priests or to ỹ Iudges, but ỹ he hath sent & referred them backe to his law, ỹ they might iudge according to ỹ same. In deede here a man might reply; that euery man might say; It is not according to Gods lawe, vnlesse the exposition ỹ is giuen thereof be to their own liking. And truely the heretikes are so wilful, ỹ they wil neuer be conuicted. Akhough the holy scripture be alledged vnto them, & that the texts be set downe neuer so cleare & infallible; yet wil they not ceasse to contend stil, euen whē their own consciences condemn them, as saith S. Paul. Al this is true: yet must not they which are in auoritie abuse it, as though it were lawful for them to say; This is ỹ law, let it be followed. Neuertheleſſe, the Pope & al his clergie haue left ỹ holy scripture: & what should we do then but repaire to this rule; ỹ seeing God woulde haue the temporal iurisdictiō to be gouerned by his word, there is much more reason ỹ the Church should not be otherwise gouerned than by ỹ holy scripture. Whereſoeuer temporal Iudges are, they be lawmakers; neither haue they libertie to make new lawes for the spirituall gouernement of the Church. To be short, men must hold their peace, all mouthes must be stopped, men must content themselues with that which is set down by Moses, by the Prophets, & by the Apostles, & thereupon must men rest altogether. Seeing it is so ỹ God hath not authorised men to bee lawmakers as in respect of the spirituall gouernement of the church: let vs conclude ỹ it is not lawfull for vs to turne away from the law & from ỹ holy scripture: but ỹ we must hold vs to it. And so yee see what we haue to marke vpon this text, where it is said, ỹ the Priests & the Iudge for ỹ time being shall iudge according to the law of God.

Tit. 3. 11.

And in very deede I haue declared a litle alreadie, that we ought to receiue Iesus Christ, as wel for our Iudge as for our highpriest. For Iesus Christ hath a double office: in somuch ỹ besides that he is our chiefe prophet of whom we ought to hold al our doctrine & to feteh all trueth: he is also our soueraigne king, & highpriest. Howbeit forasmuch as they represented his person, being as it were his shadowes & figures: it behoued thē to follow this law. As now there are no mo such shadowes & figures (as I saide heretofore) because the sonne of God is come into the worlde, ỹ old priesthood is passed away, & the old kingdome is abolished. Therfore let vs be contented to haue an inferior order, ỹ is to wit, that ciuil gouernement be so maintained as Gods law do alwayes beare chiefe stroke, & as all men in the mean while haue a regard what is lawful for thē. When kings, & princes, & magistrates are to make lawes, let them vnderstand that if they make them of their own head, it is a marring & confounding of all things. For God saith, it is by me that magistrates discerne what is good and expedient. Therfore let them call vpon the spirit of God, that he may giue them wisdom & discretion to make good & conuenient lawes. And let them that sit in the seat of Iustice, referre thē selues to God, and seeke to bee ruled by his holy spirite. Let them that haue the spirituall iurisdiction knowe, that it is not lawfull for them to meddle any further than with the preaching of Gods worde, and to speake as out of his mouth, and to deliuer the doctrine faithfully which is contained in the law and ỹ Gospel, let them holde themselues within those bounders, and take no further vppon them. Thus yee see in effect howe wee ought to put this doctrine in vre.

Esa. 7. 14. Hebr. 1. 2. 8. & 2. 17.

Pron. 8. 15. 16.

And it is said expreſly, That man shall stand to the sentence which is giuen by the Iudges and Priests, and that the party which disobeyeth is iustly to be dealt with because of his pryde. Hereupon the Pope would needs grounde, that it is not lawefull in any wise to stand against the things that haue bin determined by the Councels. What? Beholde, the Pope hath sit as cheefe of the Councel, and the Byshops and prelates haue consented thereunto, and shall a man come and set himselfe against it, and say ỹ it was il decreed. O that were an intolerable crime in deed, God wilnot haue such pride to be borne withall in his people. This (as I haue sayd afore) may easily be ouerthrowen, as thus that forasmuch as this text treateth of matters of lawe, it treateth not of doctrine. For God hath deliuered his lawe, and hath said that men must not turne aside neither to the right hand nor to ỹ left. In so much that whē Moses gaue instructions vnto Iosua, he said to him, thou shalt follow whatsoeuer is conteined in ỹ law, & not swarue aside one way nor other. Behold, Iosua is ordeined to be the cheefe Iudge, to hold the people in good order, he is their head, and representeth our Lord Iesus Christ: yet for al ỹ he saith not to him, Thou shalt doe whatsoeuer thy mind giueth thee to do, & whatsoeuer is good & right to thine own seeming: but thou shalt do as ỹ meanest of all the people, submitting thy selfe to the doctrine which is giuen thee for the guiding of the Church. So then, as touching Gods seruice, and religion, wee see howe the lawe hath euer borne the swaye, and it behoued all men to haue their ears open and redie to receiue whatsoeuer is set forth there, and that no man might presume to stand against it, or to ouerrule it, for making of the people to murmure. Now therfore forasmuch as here is no speech concerning any other things than of matter in lawe, how they ought to be ended, and of the pacifying of quarels which else would be endlesse betweene man and man; the solution is very easie: namely that if a man stande against a definitiue sentence, his meaning is to peruert all order, and he is an enemie to mankinde, and woorse than a theefe. He that robbeth or murthereth, shalbee punished, and yet his breaking of the lawe, is but in some one point: but as for him that breaketh ỹ ciuil order, he openeth the gap to theft, to murther, and to all confusion: his meaning is that there should bee no more modestie nor humanitie among men. Therefore ought hee to bee taken as an enemie to all goodnes; and (according to Saint Paules saying) they that would set such disorder among men, set not themselues against creatures, but do make warre against the liuing GOD, because all soueraignetie is of him. Nowe then, it is not to bee marueiled

that it should be sayde, that the partie which disobeyed the sentence of the prerogatiue court, should be cut off from among the Israelites.

And by this sentence wee be put in minde of that which hath beene spoken before: namely ỳ our Lord maketh so great account of the earthly policie, that he will haue it mainteined yea euen with mens liues. Precious is mans bloude vnto him; for men are shaped after his image: but yet doeth he not so much beare with a man, but that he will haue him stoned, & put to death, if he be disobedient to ciuill order. Therefore we can not by any comparison iudge how precious and holy a thing in Gods sight the authority is which he hath giuen to Iudges & Magistrates. For if any man step vp against it, he shall die for it. And why? Is a mans life no more worth than so? (for so will some men alleadge.) Yes: and make ye nothing of the image of God which shineth foorth much more in Magistrates, because God hath printed his marke in them? Againe, what is the life of one man in comparison of the liues of a hundred thousand? For the whole nation perisheth without remedy, where this order is not holde, that there be Magistrates, and that men yeelde obedience vnto them. For the men that can not finde in their heartes to bee gouerned, woulde become deuils, if there were no order of gouernement, that they might be holde in awe by their superiours: all would go to hauocke. So then it is not without cause ỳ God hath ordeined ỳ the party should dy which is disobedient to the order of Law. And therefore so much ỳ more ought we to yeelde to ỳ which is tolde vs here, & to humble ourselues in that behalfe, and to bow downe our neckes willingly & obediently to such as hold the sword of Iustice. For in so doing, we offer vnto God such sacrifice as is acceptable to him, & he receiueth it as we see in this text. And if we disobey the men whō he hath set in ỳ degree, we be his enemies and make warre against him, (as I sayd afore) and wee shall haue too mightie an aduersarie for vs to ouercome.

And he speaketh purposely of pride. For it is impossible that a man shoulde be so stubborne as to withstande the publike magistrate, & to ouerthrowe the order of the common weale, if he be not caried away with pride & diueliish ouerweening. So then, will we amend this rebelliousnes against the Iudges and Magistrates? Let euery of vs frame himselfe to a good lowelinesse. For if we be not puffed vp with pride, it is certaine that all men will keepe on his course, and thinges will be quiet among vs. What is the cause then that order is so peruerted? It is for that men can not finde in their hearts to yeelde so farre vnto reason as to say, let ỳ Lawes oberrule vs. And consequently let such as are appointed for Magistrates looke that they mainteine their state, & do their indeuour to beate downe such pride; and let all men submit themselues meekely to the order which God hath appointed. And Moses hath noted this thing, of purpose to shew that Gods vsing of such seuerite & rigor against ỳ disobedict, is not without cause. For in ỳ case, we must not simply looke vpon their disobedience, but proceed yet higher, namely ỳ they be led with an ouerweening of themselues, ỳ they be ful of pride & spitefulnes, and ỳ if there were any meekenes in thē, it would be discerned by their submitting of themselues to ỳ hand of God. But forasmuch as they be ful of pride & intollerable statelinesse, so as they wil not stoope either to God or man, but reiect al ỳ euer is: it is not to be wondred at, though God cōmand such persons to be put to death.

And he sayth expresly; thou shalt rid away euill frō Israel. For (as was touched yesterday) when wickednes is suffred, it is a marring of al thinges & a generall infection followeth vpon it. At the first, the greatnesse of the mischiefe is not perceiued that commeth of the pardoning of a sinne. Well, it passeth for once. Yea, it seemeth but for once. But it turneth to the infecting of all afterwarde; because that by ỳ meanes the euill was fostered still, and men stept not to the redressing of it in time: & so God is faine to punish our negligence. Now then let vs marke well, ỳ for this cause Moses warneth vs heere, ỳ if we suffer naughtines to settle, it will marre & infect all ỳ is, before it can be redressed: and that it is too late to go about it; when men haue tarried till the infectiō hath gotten the vpper hande.

Also he speaketh of the example saying, that others hearing thereof shalbe afraide, and by that meanes, pride shalbe corrected. Fitst of all we see hereby, ỳ pride is an odious vice before God, seeing he vseth so violent remedy ỳ he will haue the party to answer it with his life. And secondly let vs mark also, ỳ the punishmentes which we ought to execute belong to example. And ỳ is the cause why it is sayd, ỳ they which spare an offender in leauing his fault vnpunished, shalbe guilty of ỳ vndoing of the whole nation: for by ỳ meanes, the residue do fall to leaudnes as well as he. And when folke see a wicked deede cōmitted, & the party is not punished for it; euery man taketh libertie to do ỳ like. Therfore let vs take warning by these examples, ỳ we may be able to apply thē to our instruction: & when we see thē punished which aduance thēselues; let vs learne thereby to walke in meeknes. And although it were better for euerie man to learn by himself, thā by beholding ỳ punishmēts of other folks: Yet notwithstanding it is a great grace of God, whē he teacheth vs by other mens harmes. Let vs mark moreouer, ỳ if we cōtinue without amendment when we see ỳ punishments ỳ are executed by the authority of God; I say if we continue without amendment: our sinne increaseth so much the more. God warneth vs by a great many of instructions, yea & of chastisements also which he executeth; and wee make none account of them: nowe is it any wonder if in the ende wee see our Lorde sende so great and excessiue disorders, that wee wote not where to become? Then let vs learne to profite in this schoole, as oft of GOD lifteth vp his hande to punish the wicked: and let vs vnderstande that he teacheth vs by their example: wherfore let vs stoope, & let euery of vs yeelde to obey him with true meekenesse.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, so as we may all of vs seeke to frame our life according to the rightneſſe which hee ſheweth vs, and not looke to be drawen thereto by compulſion of the earthly ſworde, but rather that the ſworde of Gods worde may haue ſuch power in our heartes, as it may make vs to ſacrifice ourſelues vnto GOD, killing all our fleſhly luſtes, and renewing vs to ſuch a kinde of life, as our whole deſire may bee to haue God reigne ouer vs, and that we may be wholly reformed, according to his holy will: and that therewithall we may followe the orderly policie and ſpirituall gouernement of his Church; and that all the things which he hath ordeined for our benefite, may be ſo maintained & obſerued, as both great and ſmall may ſubmit theſelues thereunto. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo to al people & nations of the earth. Reducing all poore ignorant people out of the bondage of errours and darkeneſſe wherein they are holden: That ſo be he may bring thē to the knoweledge of his trueth: And that for this purpoſe it would pleaſe him to raiſe vp true & faithfull miniſters of his worde, &c.

14 When thou art come into the Lande which the Lord thy God giueth thee, and enioyeſt it and dwelleſt therein, and ſayeſt I will ſet a king ouer mee like as all the nations that are roundè about mee:

15 Then ſhalt thou make him king ouer thee whome the Lorde ſhall chooſe from among thy brethren: him ſhalt thou ſet ouer thee to be king, and thou muſt not ſet a ſtraunger ouer thee which is not thy brother.

16 But he ſhall not multiply horſes to himſelfe, nor ſende the people againe into Egypt to increaſe the number of horſes, foraſmuch as the Lorde hath ſayd vnto you, yee ſhall neuer hence foorth goe any more againe that way.

17 Neither ſhall he take him many wiues, leaſt his heart turne away. Neither ſhall he gather him much golde and ſiluer.

Deut. 16. 18. HEretofore Moſes hath ſpoken of the Iudges that were ordeined in euery citie to gouern the people, and ſpecially of the cheefe Iudge to whom all thinges were referred. Nowe he addeth that if ỹ people be diſpoſed to chooſe a king, he ſheweth what manner a one he ought to be. And firſt he ordeineth that he muſt be taken of the linage of Abraham: and ſecondly he declareth his duetie to him, to the intent he ſhould not go beyond it, nor play the Tyraunt in ſteede of playing the king. That is the meaning of Moſes generally. But here we muſt conſider what is the cauſe, why God ſetteth not vp a king by his owne authoritie, but rather leaueth it to the likeing of the people. For if he allowed the ſtate of a king, or if it were a thing that he liked wel of; ought he not to haue ſhewed the way, that the people might haue obeyed whatſoeuer he had cōmaunded them? But he ſayeth, When thou art come into the Lande which thy God giueth thee, and inioyeſt it, if thou wilt chooſe a king as other Nations haue. Hereby it ſhould ſeeme that God was not willing there ſhoulde bee any kingdome in Iewrie: but that if the people were ſo deſirous of a king that they could not be helde from it, then he granted it them by way of ſufferance. Notwithſtanding this, wee heare howe it is ſayde in Geneſis, that the ſcepter ſhould not be taken from the tribe of Iuda, nor the gouernour from betweene his legges, vntill the perſon that was to be ſent were come & had appeared. This propheſie was not a curſe that ſhould come vpon the people, nor a vengeance of God: but rather a ſingular and ſpecial fauour aboue all other. For in ſaying ſo, Iacob declareth that God would ſet vp an euerlaſting king, by whom ſaluation ſhould be ſent throughout all the world. And vntil the time of the manifeſting of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt it behooued the people ſo be maintained full in hope of him: and God gaue vnto him the kingdome of Iuda and that whole tribe. We ſee then in fewe wordes, that this kingdome was a figure of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, and as a warrant which God gaue to that people, that he himſelfe reigned ouer them, and the kinges of Iuda ſerued alwaies to holde the people vnder Gods protection, as it were in the perſon of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. For albeit that all the Princes of the worlde be called Gods children and his lieftenaunts: yet notwithſtanding, the kingdome of Iuda had that title after a more ſpeciall and holy manner. And therefore wee ſee it was Gods will there ſhoulde be a king among his people, euen becauſe it was the full perfection of all felicity, that Ieſus Chriſt ſhould be the head of them.

The

True it is ỳ if disputatiõ should arise cõcerning ỳ gouernmẽt of mẽ; it might be said ỳ a free state is much better thã to be vnder a Prince: but here is no cõtrouersie of any such matter. And in deed such disputatiõs are not very profitable. For they ỳ are vnder ỳ gouernment of a Prince, must not be fickleminded to make any alteration. And those to whõ God hath giuen liberty & freedom, ought to vse it w thanksgiuing, as a singular benefit & treasure ỳ cannot be prised sufficiently. And as for ỳ kingdom of Iuda, there was a speciall respect in ỳ, as I haue said afore: namely ỳ it was the image of the truth which was in our Lorde Iesus Christ, in gathering vs to himselfe to make vs Gods Church & his owne flocke. For ỳ is better than al ỳ gouernment in the whole world. If a mã should cõpare a principality, or a free state of a Senate, or whatsoeuer els can be imagined for a cõmonweale, with ỳ grace which God giueth vs in shewing himself to vs in his own person, of purpole to reigne ouer vs himself, & to take ỳ charge of our welfare, & in establishing his only son in ỳ office & dignity: I pray you is it not much better to be vnder ỳ obedience of our Lord Iesus Christ, & to haue him to reigne ouer vs as our souereine Lord & King; than to be Kings & Emperors euery one of vs? Yes verily. So then wee must conclude ỳ seeing God ordeined Iudges frõ ỳ beginning, hee sheweth therby ỳ it is a desirable thing for folk to be gouerned in cõmon & to haue laws to reigne among thẽ, ỳ there be no succession by inheritance, but ỳ euen those which are chosẽ [to beare office] be bound to yeelde account of their doings, & haue not absolute libertie to doe what they list or to say: I will haue this thing: Is shalbe thus done. This did God shew, whẽ he gouerned his owne people by ỳ hand of Iudges. And for the same cause did he vpbrayd & blame ỳ Iewes for requiring a king to be their head & to reign ouer them. It is not thou (sayth he to Samuell) to whõ they haue done this wrong. True it is ỳ thou hast executed my authority in ỳ thou art of my setting vpbut their vnthankefulnes & disobedience toucheth me, in ỳ they can not abide ỳ I shoulde haue the gouerning of thẽ. And afterward he addeth, wel then let them haue a king. But it shalbe to their trouble: for he shall spoyle their houses, take away their sons & daughters, consume their substance, lay taxes & tallages vpon them, & (to be short) vse them like wretched bondslaues. See what they haue wonne by requiring a king.

And in this text our Lorde sheweth, ỳ as in respect of worldly gouernmẽt, he had chosen ỳ best thing ỳ could be, namely ỳ the Law should reigne ouer the people, & therewithal ỳ there should be Iudges in euery citie, & a chiefe gouernour ouer all, to the intent ỳ matters might be determined and concluded, as was declared yesterday: howbeit with this most noble condition, which God reserued to himselfe, namely that our Lorde Iesus Christ should reigne ouer them. For it behoued thẽ to be vnder one head, howbeit not simply of a mortall man, but of ỳ sonne of God. But inasmuch as ỳ time was not yet come that such grace should be shewed: it behoued the hope therof to be feeded with some figure. And ỳ was the cause why it was promised by the mouth of Iacob, that the scepter should not depart from the tribe of Iuda. God did purposely choose out one tribe, & when he ment to set vp the king, he sayd that the reigne of him shoulde be durable vntill the comming of his owne sonne, who was the true heire, and the very partie to whome the crowne belonged, namely our Lord Iesus Christ. Thus haue wee nowe a briefe declaration after what sorte God ment to stablishe a kingdome among his people, howbeit, that was in respect of our Lorde Iesus Christ. But as in respect of worldly gouernement, the best and most desirable state, was to haue Iudges, that is to say, to be in libertie, and yet notwithstanding to bee ouerruled by Lawes. Nowe thereby we be doone to vnderstande, that although all worldely gouernment deserue to be esteemed as a holy thing, & behoofefull for the maintenaunce of mans state, yet notwithstanding, when it pleaseth GOD to giue vs a meane kinde of gouernement, voyde of tyranny, wherein the Magistrates doe rule after such a sort, that the Lawes haue their due course: the same is a speciall priuiledge, and wee ought then so perceiue thereby that God is neere at hand to vs, & that he pitieth vs as his houshold-folke, and as those that are of his flocke, & his owne heritage. Marke that then for one point. But therewithall we must marke also, that when we shall haue knowen Gods grace in his gouerning of vs in this earthly and transitorie life; it is nothing in comparison of the spirituall kingdom of our Lorde Iesus Christ, & therefore ỳ we must highly exalt or praise this benefite ỳ God vouchsafeth to gouerne vs by the hande of his onely son, yea and we must esteeme it, not onely more than all the libertie of the worlde, but also more than al the kingdomes and Empires of ỳ world. But anon this point shalbe touched now againe.

Furthermore let vs marke, that God intending to set vp a king, did tarry neuerth eleese till the people required one. And ỳ was to put them in a desire, that they might not afterward rebell against the king that was to bee set vp. For the vnthankefulnesse and malice of the people bewrayed it selfe, in that they coulde not finde in their hearres to holde them to the state which God had stablished already. And what a thing had it been, if he had set vp a Monarchie among them at the first day? For it is a farre more tollerable thing for vs to haue gouernours that goe by choyse and election, who in executing their office shall knowe themselues to bee subiect to the Lawe: than to haue a Prince whose worde must stande for reason, and whose childe must inherite, though he be neuer so very a babe, and consequently obeyed; though hee be the willfullest foole or the cruellest person in the worlde. Therefore it is a farre more tollerable state to haue Iudges and Gouernours. Nowe if the people of Israel could not away with this state, but wold needs through a wicked desire seek to haue a king: what would they haue done if God had at ỳ first day saide vnto thẽ, I set this or ỳ houle to reigne ouer you, & it behoueth you to obey the king? What murmuring would there haue beene?

Gen. 49. 10.

What

What practising would there haue bin? Therfore it was Gods wil to make ỹ people willing, to ỹ end there might be no occasion of rebelling, whē Dauid was to be made king. Verily we see what fell out. For soothly, their requiring of King Saul, was 1.Sa.8.5. 20. through a foolish ambitiō & spyte, which they bare to their neighbours. When they sawe how there were kings in Egypt, in Edō, in Ammon, in Syria, & in the other Countryes: they thought there was nō such dignitie & statelines amōg thēselues because there was no royall seate among thē. And therfore they would haue one. But see their folly. When they had chosen Saul, although he vexed thē & put them to as much hardnes as could be: yet notwithstanding they were so wedded to him, ỹ they would needs keepe ỹ crown to his childrē, & not suffer Dauid to reigne. Albeit ỹ God had declared ỹ Dauid was the mā whō he had chose, and ỹ they had not the authoritie to choose any other to be their king: yet ỹ people chose Saules son, as who would say, we will haue this house to continue for euer, yea euē as it were in dispute of God. And (as we see) was Dauid mainteyned in his kingdome, any otherwise than by Gods stretching out of his hand to preserue him? The people fel within a while after to rebelling against Dauid, & the example of Absolon sheweth ỹ the
2.Sam.15.14 insurrection was so great, ỹ Dauid was forsaken of the most part of his subiectes. So then it appereth ỹ if ỹ people had not bin as good as daunted aforehand, ỹ kingdom which God had determined on in his own purpose, had neuer takē place, neither would they haue submitted thēselues vn to it but by cōpulsion. But yet behooued it thē to obey it. And so by ỹ meane ỹ people were prepared therto by requiring a king of thēselues; & yet they found thēselues disappointed of their expectation. For it was not Gods wil to stablish the blessed kingdom at ỹ first, wherby ỹ whole world was to haue saluation: but hee chose a king of the tribe of Beniamin, & yet it was said ỹ the scepter should not depart frō the tribe of Iuda. Wherfore doth God turne away frō ỹ which he had spoken by ỹ mouth of Iacob? This was done not ỹ he is variable, not ỹ he repenteth him; not ỹ he intended not to fulfil ỹ prophesie: but for ỹ he was not minded to let his blessing appeare so soone, because of ỹ peoples seditiousnesse, in respect wherof, he hid it, or at leastwise delayed it til they had acknowledged their fault, & repented thē therof. And this doth shew vs sufficiētly wherfore god in this place reserueth not to himself ỹ chosing of ỹ king which should gouerne his people: but sayth thou shalt require one. It was to the end that his reigning should be of the more authoritie, & he bee ỹ better beloued of his people; so as euery mā should submit himself to him, & therby know in very deed, ỹ there was no greater happines, than to be vnder ỹ house of Dauid, forasmuch as the same was a shadow & figure of the sonne of god, who was to bring saluation & full perfection of al good things. In effect we see here two things. The one is that our lord blameth the people for their importunitie, in ỹ they would needs be aforehand w̄ him in desiring a king: as if he should say, You wil not suffer me to make him: (true it is ỹ I wil neuer forget you, but I wil set such rule among you, ỹ ye shal haue cause to thanke me & to reioyce of my goodnes.) But yet wil you be malicious & frowarde, ỹ when I shall haue giuen you a Iudge, you shall desire a king. And this frowardnes of yours shal cause me now to set vp the kingdom which I haue ordained, & which I haue reserued to my selfe, that is to say, of the tribe of Iuda. Yet notwithstanding our lord foreseeth ỹ he wil set vp ỹ kingdom, but that before & ter the people are made fit to obey, & haue acknowledged their sin, because they had committed change against Gods wil, & before ỹ he should come. Thus are all these places easily made agree. And hereupon we may gather a good lesson, which is that when God hath promised vs any benefite or token of his mercy, we must not our lustes in awe, and not runne whether they lendge him to do that which he hath sayd, when we list, but vse patience, and be quiet vntil God shewe vs by effect that he ment not to deceiue vs, in promising any thing ỹ belonged to our saluation. Here then is a generall rule, which is in all Gods promises we must be patiēt, & not be hastie as to say, how goes this geere? why doth God make delay? why performeth he not ỹ thing which we hoped for at his hand? Let vs beware of such impatiencie, seeing the example of ỹ people is such as we see it is in this place. But let vs be stil when God hath promised vs any thing vntil ỹ cōuenient time therof be come: & if we feel yet shal not this hinder vs but ỹ we may pray vnto him for it. For wherfore doth he exhort vs & cōmand vs to pray, but to ỹ intent we shal charge all our care & sorow vpon him, & make cōfort of it? Therfore we may wel pray vnto him whē we are stirred vp to impatience: for by that we euer refer all things vnto him. & good reason it is ỹ he shold dispose of thinges according as himselfe hath determined in his owne purpose, & not after our fancie. Also let vs beare in mind what I haue touched afore; to wit, ỹ seeing God hath giuen vs a cōuenient state, & we be gouerned by Iudges & magistrates, as ỹ doe now reigne ouer vs: we ought to giue God thanks for ỹ benefite, & to take good heed ỹ we prouoke not his wrath by our fonde fickleness, in desiring this or ỹ, and in saying why is it not thus or thus? For whē we wil nedes alter things after ỹ fashion of our own pleasure, we make not warre against men, but we defie God, & thrust him far frō vs so farforth as he should not reigne ouer vs. Therfore let vs be short, seeing there is some forme of gouernement among vs, let vs learn to thank God, & to hold vs vnder ỹ shadow of his wings, & not to cause this or ỹ through foolish ambition. For we see what happened to ỹ people of Israell. True it is ỹ God chose them a king: howbeit, ỹ was but to punish their wicked desire: & euen so wil it fal out to others. And in deede, we see how he giueth large scope to ỹ king which was set vp, namely to do as he list, saying, Thou shalt not reigne as a Prince, but as a tyrant, and shal execute al maner of tyranny ouer you, and yee must bee faine to abide it, spyte of your teeth.

But howsoeuer wee fare, let vs learne to re-ferre all the benefites that GOD giueth vs to this world, to the spiritual kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ: assuring ourselues that though we had all thinges else at will, and liued here in neuer so great pleasure and welth, and had such gouernors as demeaned themselues as gently towardes vs as were possible: all this were nothing whilste our Lorde Iesus Christ reigned ouer vs, and bare all the swaye. On the contrary parte, though we be tormented according to the flesh, (as we see a number of people exceedingly vexed with tyranny) and that we haue not so much as bread to eate: Yet notwithstanding the blessednesse which God sendeth vs in that our Lord Iesus Christ reigneth ouer vs, ought to be preferred before all other thinges, and wee ought to take all afflictions patiently, so we may haue the assurance of his reigne ouer vs. Nowe the sceptet of our Lorde Iesus Christ is not a materiall sceptre, after the manner of the royall sceptres and scepters which Kinges and Princes haue had at all times: but it is the Gospell, which is the true token of his presence. And wee see howe he taketh vs for his people, wherof we haue a sure warrant, in that he will haue vs to be gathered together into the vnitie of faith by the doctrine of his gospell, and by that meane be made the heritage of God.

Let vs come now to that which Moses addeth concerning the office of the King. Hee sayeth first, That the king must be chosen from among the people. Thou shalt take one of thine owne brethren (saith he,) and thou shalt not go seeke a stranger. And surely by the prophesie of Iacob, the king was to be chosen of the tribe of Iuda. Why then doeth God speake generally of the whole linage of Abraham, and not marke out the kingly house by name? For it should seeme that hee ment not to declare that prophesie. Let vs marke what hath been sayd already: to wit; that the time was not yet come, and that the fauour which God had promised by the mouth of the Patriarke Iacob, must be kept close as yet for a time, by reason of the peoples vnthankefulnesse. Behold, wherefore God had spoken it so long time before: nowe he made mention of three hundered yeeres or thereabouts, he sayth there shalbe a king among you. As how? Shall the prophesie vanish away and be of none effect, which had bin vttered three hundred yeeres before, and spoken by the mouth of Iacob? Ought it not to haue beene set forth much more clearely at the publishing of the Law? Yes, but our Lorde doeth vs to vnderstande, that the people had drawen as it were a veyle before it, by reason wherof, in steede of comming to light, it behoued his fauour to be as it were hidden away in the darke. That is the thing which God meant to shewe in this text in saying, Thou shalt choose a king from among thy brethren, without passing out the house, as had beene doone afore. But howesoeuer the case stande, Gods holding backe of his fauour for a time, was no vtter abolishing thereof. Then did hee delay his promise of setting vppe a king of the tribe of Iuda: but yet hee did not vtterly bereaue his people of that hope. And so yee see, how the people of themselues made an interruption: and yet that God for all his chastising of them, vseth gratious goodnesse and moderateth his rigor: insomuch that the thing which he had ordeined abideth still, sauing that the time thereof is prolonged.

Let vs marke therefore, that God to correct the faultes of his people, doeth hide away his fauour for a time, so as it is not manifestly seene: but yet in the ende he wil cause it to come again. Thus ouercommeth hee our naughtinesse with his infinite goodnes, and we see it by experience. But yet sometimes wee feele it not though our Lorde shewe vs it. Howesoeuer the case stande, let vs learne by the example of the Iewes, that if our Lorde at any time withdrawe himselfe from vs, and seeme not to performe his promise to vs; our owne faults are the cause thereof, for that we be frowarde and haue pulled backe Gods hande when hee would haue reached it out to haue discharged his promise towardes vs. For how many times aday prouoke we his wrath? And is not that a kinde of shutting of the doore against him, that hee might not come at vs to make vs partakers of his goodnesse? Therefore when we haue thrust backe his grace after that fashion, if it appeare not againe vnto vs out of hande, we haue to humble ourselues, acknowledging that we our selues are to blame. But yet for all that, we must not be discoraged, but we must pray God that although he haue deferred the performance of his promises for a time, yet wee may not be vtterly bereft of them, howsoeuer the world go, but that after we haue languished for a time and bin chastised for our offences, we returne again without faile, and inioy ſ thing which he hath promised. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to gather vpon this text.

And whereas God forbiddeth his people to haue any straunger to be their king: there are two reasons which we ought to marke well. The one is ſ that kingdome was a Sacrament of our Lord Iesus Christ, and therefore it was not meete that it should haue come to the hande of an vnbeleeuer or ydolater: for that had bin a defiling of holy thinges. If heathen kings reigned ouer their like, it was not to be wondred at. For although some vnbeleeuing kinges reigned ouer the people of Israell by Tyranny, as was done by the Babylonians and afterward by the kinges of Assyria: yet doth it not followe but that there was alwayes this exemption, that God had still a peculiar kinde of reigning, whereby he shewed as in a lookingglasse, that ſ people was gathered together as into his owne house. Therefore if a straunger had bin set vp in the seate of Dauid, it had beene trecherie against God, & the reproch had bin offered to God and to his onely sonne. For when the kingdome was stablished in the line of Dauid, this promise was added; I will be his father, and hee shallbe my sonne. And the Apostle declareth that it was so honorable a tide that it belonged not euen to the Angelles. True it is that the Angelles are sometimes called the sonnes of God: howebeit, that is not without an addition; whereas Christ hath it, because he is preferred before all creatures. Now then, had hadde they chooſen an ydolater, and ſet him vp in the ſeate which God had reſerued for his own onely ſonne, who was eſtabliſhed in his infinite grace, who was the marke of his diuine maieſtie, and who was aboue all the principalities of the world, yea and aboue heauen it ſelfe as in reſpect of the creatures; as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of him, in the firſt chapter of his Epiſtle to the Coloſſians: what a thing had that beene? Had it not beene an vnnaturall confuſion, and too ſhameſull a defiling of the grace of GOD? Then lette vs marke that for the firſt reaſon why GOD woulde not haue a ſtraunger to ſit in the ſeate of Dauid.

And in ſo dooing, God ment alſo to ſhewe a dreadfull diſpleaſure, and to make the people to knowe howe they were vtterly accurſed, in that they were diſappointed of that kingdom, & that Gods Lampe was after a ſort put out. For, that ſimilitude is often ſet downe vnto vs in the holy ſcripture, to ſhewe that God maketh his light to ſhine vpon his people, and that although there be not at all times great light, yet there ſhal euer be a Lampe howſoeuer the world goeth. And the ſeconde reaſon was, that if a ſtraunger ſhoulde haue reigned, he would ſoone haue changed the religion, as wee knowe that the heathen will alwayes needes ſette vp their owne ſuperſtitions. And why? For commonly they haue not the feare of God to keepe them in awe: but rather they thinke God to be boundevnto them if they giue men leaue to worſhippe him and ſerue him after ſome ſort, & yet for all that they wil needes turne all the ſeruice of God to their owne luſtes and liking. If the Turke get the ſouereignetie in any countrey, although he be contented to abide the Chriſtians (as they call themſelues): Yet doeth he worke them all the ſpite and reproch that can be to diſcourage them. Where the Papiſtes beare ſwaye, they defile al the puritie of Chriſtian doctrine, and they can not abide that the Goſpell ſhoulde be preached, or that the Sacramentes ſhoulde be putely vſed: but they will needes put all to hauocke, and in any wiſe ſet vp their owne ydolatries. Thus yee ſee what would haue come of it, inſomuch if a ſtranger ſhould haue reigned ouer the people of Iſraell, it hadde bin the next way to haue ouerthrowen the whole Lawe. Not without cauſe therefore did God expreſſely prouide that they ſhoulde not chooſe any other king than of the lynage of Abraham, ſuch a one as were compriſed in the couenaunt, and bare the marke of the Church, that is to wit Circumciſion, which was the like Sacrament to the Iewes, that we haue noweadayes of Baptiſme.

1.Kin.11.36.

But nowe muſt we apply this to our owne vſe, and vnderſtande firſt of all that the kingdome of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, muſt bee mainteined in ſuch ſoundeneſſe, as that wee muſt beware of bringing any defilemẽt into it. And what is the kingdom of Chriſt? I haue told you already it conſiſteth not in any viſible things, or in any things belonging to this preſent life: but it is the gathering of vs together by his holy ſpirite, into the hope of the heauenly life: and the preaching of the Goſpell vnto vs, that it may bee as a rule to holde vs vnder the obedience of God. And although the Sacramentes bee viſible of themſelues: yet are they neuertheleſſe ſpirituall, as in reſpect of their ende, as all other Ceremonies are. We come hither together; well, it is a viſible thing: we kneele downe to praye vnto God, & that is viſible alſo: but yet it aimeth at a higher ende, and hath a reſpect which is altogether ſpirituall. So then, let vs learne that the kingdom of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt ought so be maintened in his full ſoundeneſſe: that is to ſay, we muſt beware that wee mingle not any corruption with the things that he hath commanded in his Churche, ne thruſt in ſuch perſons as may ſerue to ouerthrowe the common weale: For if we ſhould chooſe falſe Sheepheards and men of wicked doctrine, or of leaude converſation, were it not a diſhonoring of Ieſus Chriſtes kingdome and a putting of all thinges to hauocke as much as in vs lieth? Seeing then that the children of Iſraell were forbidden to ſet vp a ſtraunge King in the ſeate that was a figure of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt: nowe that we haue the ſonne of God to gouerne vs, not in ſhadowes as in the time of the Lawe, but in full trueth; nowe that we haue our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt who is called the ſonne of righteouſneſſe as the prophete Malachie ſpeaketh him, who telleth vs that he is neere a kinſman to vs, and ruleth in the middes of vs rather a tyrannie were it if we ſhould deface his miniſtery and not maintaine it in ſuch pureneſſe, as that he might alwayes reigne by his worde, and that euerie man doe him homage, and both great and ſmall knowe him, and he haue alwayes his preheminence among vs? Thus yee ſee howe the firſt point is that God commaundeth vs howe we muſt haue a ſpeciall care of his Churche, ſo as there may be no defilement to hinder Chriſtes reigning ouer vs as he ought to doe.

Malach.4.2.

Nowe as touching the ſeconde reaſon, let vs marke alſo that if God haue giuen a people the grace to chooſe Kinges, Princes, Magiſtrates or Iudges, they ought to haue great regarde that the ſeate which God hath ordeined for the welfare of mankinde, be not giuen to a man that is an vnbeleeuer. For the people that chooſeth either king or Iudge, without diſcerning whether he be a man that feareth God or no: doe put the haultre about their owne neckes wilfully. And when they ſhall chooſe, and take Magiſtrates that are either deadly enemies of the Goſpell or Hypocrites, that ſeeke nothing elſe but to turne all thinges vpſidedowne, or worldlinges that coulde finde in their hearres to treade all religion vnder foote; is not the admitting of ſuch men as an opening of the gate vnto Sathan, that he might haue place among vs? Is it not a reuiling of Gods grace, to the ende that all abominations might haue their full ſcope? So then whatſoeuer wee chooſe Iudges, Magiſtrates, Gouernours and Officers of Iuſtice, let vs take warning by this text, to looke for this marke in them, that they bee men which feare God, and are aſwiſe deſirous that Religion ſhoulde be maintened in his pureneſſe: For otherwiſe it is all one as if wee woulde driue God from vs, and seeke to banish him from among vs; which is too cursed a trayterousnesse. And thus much concerning earthly gouernement. After wee haue indeboured that the spirituall religion of ỹ church may bee maintayned: let vs likewise be so minded towardes the state of the temporall sworde and ordinarie iustice, that such as sit in iudgement may bee all one with vs in brotherly religion, and that the holy bande of faith may knit vs together in obedience to one selfesame God. And hereof there is a faire confirmation in the thinges that Moses addeth: for it deserueth to bee treated of immediatly, and we shall see it in place conuenient.

But he sayeth expressely, That the king which shall haue beene chosen, must cause the booke of the lawe to be copied out in the presence of the high priest and of the Leuites. Nowe let vs see why God hath made this so strait ordinance, that there should bee a booke of authoritie for the kings vse. Is it meete that a man shoulde bee ignorant and vtterly vnacquainted with the doctrine of God, when hee came to the crowne? No. For Gods will is that his lawe should bee knowen both of great and small, as wee shall see by his protestation hereafter. The secrete thinges belong to your God himselfe: but yet it hath pleased him to set his worde here before you, & ye must not say any more that it is a hidden doctrine, either for your selues or for your children. Wee see then howe it was Gods will that his lawe shoulde bee common both to great and small. And shoulde he then that was brought vp in the house of the crowne, bee a beast? No. Ought he not to bee instructed in the Lawe? And if hee ought, was it not requisite that hee shoulde haue a booke of it? Yes for sooth. And what is ỹ cause why God woulde he shoulde haue a copie of the booke at such time as hee were put in possession of the kingdome? It was to the ende hee shoulde exercise himselfe to bee double bounde, & vnderstande that if priuate persones bee bounde as pupils in Gods schoole, & to giue good heede to the doctrine that is preached or written, it is much more reason that the person which hath the charge of the whole bodie, which is set vp in the name of God, and hath God come neere vnto him, shoulde bee diligent to profite in the same schoole. Therefore let vs marke how it behoued a booke to bee appointed out specially for the king, and the same to bee written after a solemne fashion, and the Priestes and Leuites to bee witnesses thereof, and the same to bee deliuered vnto him as by the hande of God. For it was all one as if God had sayd vnto him; Go to, I haue giuen my lawe to all my people, & I will haue the remembrance thereof to bee renewed yerely. For the booke was brought foorth, & the bloud of the sacrifice was sprinkled first vppon the booke and then vppon all the people, to the ende they shoulde consider thus; wee be linked in vnseparable bonde with the lawe of God. But when this was done, there was a seconde booke brought and deliuered into the kin[illegible] as if it had beene saide vnto him; [illegible] thee much more than any priuate persons, to knowe thy duetie: namely that thou shouldest be better learned than all the rest, and shewe them examples, and behaue thy selfe in such wise as all the people may take thee for their guyde. That was the thing which our Lorde meant in this text.

And in deed, let vs consider a little how hard the charge of princes is. Although a Iudge had not past one citie or one towne to gouerne; yet shoulde he finde himselfe much cumbered: and what shal he do then, hauing a whole realme? It standeth al Magistrates and Officers of iustice in hãd, to apply this to themselues, & to know ỹ their charge passeth all their abilitie, so as they shall neuer be able to go through with it, except God giue them his holy spirite. But yet for all that, he wil not haue them to be negligent in ỹ mean while. What is to be done then? All Magistrats and al such as haue publike charge, must vnderstande that if it behooue other men to bee diligent to read the holy scripture, to haunt Sermons, to bee confirmed more and more in the doctrine, and to be well edified thereby: they themselues haue twyce as much neede to be so. And forasmuch as God hath aduaunced them to preheminence; it behoueth them to haue recourse to him dayly, and to call vppon him, and not to be so vainglorious as to thinke, O, I am able ynough to guyde my selfe, and to gouerne others. No no: Let them rather consider themselues to bee vnable, vnlesse God giue them power and strength, with wisedome and discretion to guyde themselues: Therefore let them desire to be taught, that others may frame themselues after their example, and let all resort vnto God, indeuouring to profit in such sort in his schoole, as the great men may haue wherewith to gouerne well, and the meaner sort may by that meanes bee allured to obey quietly; so as al mé may bee guyded vnto God with one common accorde.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them in such sort, as wee may seeke his mercie with true repentance, and hee graunt vnto vs, not onely to burie our faultes past, but also to reforme vs, that our whole seeking may be to please him, & to frame our selues in all points to his will: and also that in the meane whyle hee beare with vs in all our infirmities, vntill he haue rid vs quite and cleane of them. And so let vs all say; Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

The Cvj. Sermon which is the fifth vpon the seuenteenth Chapter.

16.17.18 But hee shall not &c.

19 The which hee shall haue with him, and reade it all the dayes of his life, that hee may learne to feare the Lorde his God, and keepe all the wordes of the Lawe, and the Ordinaunces to doe them:

20 That he lift not vp his heart aboue his brethren, nor turne not from the commaundement to the right hand or to the left, that he may indure long in his kingdome, both he and his sonnes in the middes of Israel.

WE sawe yesterday why GOD commaunded kings to haue a booke of the law. For although they had beene taught afore, yet when they were come to that state, it stoode them in hand to thinke that they had more neede than euer they had to rule themselues by Gods word, considering how hard a thing it is to gouerne a people, and that God must be faine to worke in that behalfe, and men must acknowledge themselues far too weake, that they may seeke ỹ help that is needeful for them; namely to be guyded by God, and for attainment thereof apply their studie to his worde. For it is in vaine for vs to hope that God will giue vs counsel, vnlesse wee seeke it in his lawe. If a man say that God will welynough giue him his spirite, & yet in ỹ mean while despise all the helpes, as the reading of ỹ holy scripture, & the hearing of Sermons: is it not a mocking of him? And so ye see wherefore it behoueth the kinges to haue a booke of ỹ lawe. There is a saying of a heathen man which is taken for a common prouerb, namely that ỹ common weale is happie where wise men holde the helme, or where such as hold the helme do giue themselues to wisedome. And that is a very rare thing. But yet men see that al this is very true: For when men are chosen to gouerne a people, it is meete ỹ they should haue wit and reason in them. And it is not ynough for a man to bee of some courage & discretion aforehande ere hee take the gouernment vpon him; but he must also indeuer to profit continually when he is come to it, and thereunto doth euen experience it self prouoke him: for our true wisedome is to harken to God when he speaketh to vs, and to obey his doctrine. So then wee see how needful it was for kinges to bee exhorted to read Gods worde most specially, and to giue themselues thereto, as wel for shewing example vnto others, as also for necessities sake, euen because their charge is ouerhard & high, surmounting all capacitie of man.

Now it is said expressely, that they may learne to feare the Lord, without turning either to the right hand or to the left. For it is not ynough for a king to haue a booke in his palace for fashions sake. It were to no purpose to make a faire shewe, as who should say, Looke yonder, there is the lawe of God, Gods booke is in the kings palace, as we see how the worlde contenteth it selfe continually with ceremonies. And in deede, the Iewes being peruerters of all things, and so farre possessed with the diuel that they haue gone about to deface the substance & whole power of Gods worde, whensoeuer this booke came in question among them, O say they, it must be written in such manner of parchement, & it must haue this & that done vnto it. But these things are more than childish, and yet in the meane while they haue let the chiefe thing alone. Let vs marke then that Gods intent was not to make a booke that should be as a relike, to be shewed for a mouerie that the king might haue a marke of his dignitie aboue all others: but the reason that is set downe here, is that he should learne to feare God. Now although this bee spoken expressely concerning the kings of Israel, (as was declared yesterday:) yet is it verie good reason, that they which are magistrates at this day, (considering that their gouerning is in the name of our Lord Iesus,) shoulde set their mindes vppon the doctrine of saluation, & indeuer to profit therin, aiming alwayes at the marke which God hath set before thē, namely to learn to feare him, knowing wel that vnlesse they haue the feare of God it is vnpossible for them to glorifie him, and al thinges within a while must needs go to wracke.

And by the way, let vs marke also, that here the holy Ghost meant to shewe vs the vse of the holy scripture. For (as saith Saint Paul) it is behoofefull to make the man of God perfect in all good workes. Therefore whensoeuer we read the holy Scripture or heare it preached, let vs haue this regarde of profiting in the feare of God, and let vs not think our selues to be so forwarde, that wee shoulde not needs go on still all our life long. A man might thinke it strange that it shoulde bee sayde, that he should learne to feare God. For why? Should a king bee a nouice when hee is once chosen? Ought hee not to bee well knowen aforehande to bee a man of excellent vertue? Yes verily. But yet doeth it stande vs in hande to bee learners still the feare of God is a thing that is not learned perfectly at the first day. And therfore let vs continue in it all the time of our life, and yet wee shall finde that when wee haue liued neuer so long, wee be but in the middes of our iourney. The thing then which wee haue to marke in Moſeſes words, is that when kings haue ỹ booke of the lawe, they muſt not keepe it ſhut, or ſet it out to ſhewe like a relike; but the king muſt exerciſe himſelfe in it, & his reading of it muſt not bee as it were but for a paſtime, as who ſhoulde ſay, I haue read it, and that is a ſufficient diſcharge for mee: but it muſt bee to the ende that hee which was in good forwardneſſe alreadie, and had ſerued God in his youth, ſhoulde bee the more quickened vp to doo ſo ſtill: knowing well that in as much as God commeth ſo neere vnto him, hee is the more ſtraitly bounde to liue vertuouſly. That is the very thing in effect which wee haue to beare away, and moreouer wee muſt euery one of vs apply the ſame to his owne vſe, as I haue ſaide afore.

Nowe it is ſayde likewiſe, that they bowe not aside right hande nor to the left. Wherein it is ſhewed vs that the feare of God is the true rule, which beeing throughly rooted in vs becommeth a good and ſure loadſtarre to vs throughout all our life. For what is the cauſe that wee gadde after our owne likinges, and wander here and there; but that wee haue not our eye vpon God? Therefore wee may conclude that all they which turne aſide eyther one way or other, doe ſhewe ſufficiently by their life, that they bee deſpiſers of GOD. But will we haue a good remedie to inſtruct vs, and to direct our life in ſuch wiſe as it ſhall abyde continually in the right way? Let vs feare God: and this feating of God preſuppoſeth a willingneſſe and deſire that wee haue to obey him. If a man alledge that hee feareth GOD; and yet in the meane whyle regardeth not to bee taught by him: I pray you doeth hee not ſhewe that all is but hypocriſie, yea, and vtter ſhameleſneſſe in him? As for example yee ſhall ſee many in theſe dayes which pretend to bee verie deuout: but they cannot abyde to heare one worde of admoniſhment for their better inſtruction: it is ynough with them to make ſome faire countenance. But when Moſes ſpeaketh heere of not learning to the right hand or to the left, he preſuppoſeth that which is true, namely, that if we feared God, we woulde be deſirous to bee taught his will, and to know what things hee liketh of, that wee might frame our liues thereafter. That is one thing more which wee haue to remember vppon this text.

Now let vs come to that which is ſpoken here ſpecially concerning the kings of Iſrael. They be forbidden to gather great numbers of horſes to returne againe into Egypt. In deede it wilbee ſaide likewiſe hereafter, that they muſt not multiply the number of their horſes for couetouſneſſe ſake. But here is ſet downe a ſpeciall reaſon, which is, that this couetouſnes of theirs might prouoke them to go downe into Egypt, either vnder pretence to reuenge the wrongs and iniuries that had beene done vnto them, or vnder any other colour. But our Lordes will was, that although the children of Iſrael had beene miſintreated, & tyrãnouſly dealt with; yet notwithſtanding they ſhoulde acknowledge that they had beene harbored in Egypt for a time. True it is that they were forbidden to haue any familiaritie with the Egyptians: his will was to haue them vtterly diuided from them, becauſe hee knewe well that it woulde be their decay: and yet for all that hee woulde not haue them to make warre vppon them, but to abyde ſtill at home. And nowe hee ſayeth that the king muſt not multiply ỹ number of his horſes: For when a prince hath the helme in his hande, hee will take greater enterpriſes vppon him, than a commonaltie will doe. In deede ſome times there may hap to be ſome braynleſſe perſons, which would ſet all thinges in a broyle: but yet a Prince is alwayes boldeſt: and that boldneſſe is a cauſe of much confuſion in the worlde. That then is the cauſe why it is ſaide, that the king ſhall not gather him ouer many horſes to goe into Egypt when hee had made himſelfe ſtrong. And why ſo? For God forbiddeth his people to go that way any more for euer.

Nowe wee haue to note here, that when wee haue receiued any diſpleaſure, if the workers thereof haue done vs any good in times paſt, wee muſt lay them both into the balance, and the good muſt counteruaile the euill. Truely although this commaundement were not, yet were it not lawfull for vs to deſire reuenge: inſomuch that euen this one reaſon ought to ſtaye vs and withholde vs, namely, that if wee bee beholden to a man, and he chaunce afterwarde to doe vs ſome wrong, wee ſhoulde call to mynde the good that wee haue receiued at his hande, and the ſame muſt bee as a brydle to vs. And it is the very ſame thing which God conſidered when hee woulde not haue his people to practiſe any thing againſt the Egyptians. But what ſoeuer came of it, he would not that there ſhold bee any familiaritie betwixt them, & not without cauſe. For it was ſo frowarde a nation, that his people could haue learned nothing but euill among them. Againe, their idolatrie was as exceſſiue and out of all meaſure as could be. Therfore was it good that the children of Iſrael ſhold bee vtterly ſeparated from Egypt, leaſt they might bee wrapped in their ſuperſtitions. And we ſee howe greatly the Prophets ſtoode vpon that poynt: and yet it booted not at all. For it was the place which the children of Iſrael fled vnto for refuge, as oft as they were troubled by other nations. In ſo much that when the two kingdomes of Iſraell and Iuda were at diuiſion, if the one had the helpe of the Aſſyrians, the other reſorted into Egypt, and ſo were the cauſe of their owne deſtruction. And all this miſchief fell out, becauſe they did it againſt this forewarning, for God had forbidden them ſufficiently afore hande. Therefore let vs beare in minde, that when wee ſee corruptions before vs, wee muſt not enter into them wilfully, except we intende to tempt God: but when wee ſee occaſi-ons of euill, wee shunne them not, but rather runne into them, and wee wil needes bee ouerhardie. And therefore let vs learne to abstaine from all things that may seduce vs or make vs ouershoote our selues.

Nowe it is saide afterwarde, That the kinge shal not haue vp much gold and siluer. True it is that 1.Tim.6.10. couetousnesse is forbidden to all men as the roote of all mischiefe, where with when a mans heart is once possessed, he must needs be snarled in al the snares of Satan. Insomuch that if a man be giuen to couetousnes, hee becõmeth cruel, vsing all manner of outrage, violence, & crueltie. Agayne he falleth to pilling and polling, & maketh no conscience to deuour other mens substances. Afterwarde he falleth to periurye, cousinage, vntrustinesse, trecherie, poysoning, and whatsoeuer euill he can besides. And when malice is once set on fire, he proceedeth euen to open murder. To be short, if a man suffer himself to be wunne to couetousnes, he must needes become a verie bondslaue to Satan. Why then doeth hee forbidde here onely kinges to gather much gold or siluer? Surely our Lord giueth not priuate persons leaue to inriche themselues, when he forbiddeth kinges to do it: But rather the cleane contrary For if such as haue a better meane then wee, ought to be clensed from that vice: what ought we to be? For if any men should haue libertie to gather golde and siluer, kinges ought to haue it most. But God hath forbidden it them: and therefore let all other men looke to themselues. But Moses speaketh expressely here of kings, as of those that haue most neede of remedy, because they haue greater occasions of gathering than any other men. For when a king reygneth in a Countrie that is riche and plentifull, it is a temptation vnto him: insomuch that when he sees his subiects liue at their ease, he thinketh thus with himselfe, it will neuer grieue them to giue me such an impost, & when he hath raysed one tax or tallage, there is neuer any ende or measure of his gathering afterward. And so ye see how kinges haue need of the sayd restreint, by reason of the said temptation which is of more force towardes them than towardes other men.

True it is that all men are tempted to gather goods & to inriche themselues: but forasmuch as they haue not the like opportunities to bring it to passe, it is as it were an abatement & a cooling of their courages. A king hath means to drawe to himselfe continually, and to inriche himselfe more and more: for he hath authoritie to leuye taxes & tributes, and by that meane to lay vp much for himselfe. Therfore it is requisite that this euil should be corrected in him. And Psal.119.36. 37. in that respect did Dauid say, Lord reforme my heart, that it bee not giuen to couetousnes: and turne away myne eyes, that they be not intangled, beguyled, and carryed away at the sight of golde & siluer. Why doeth Dauid speake after ỹ manner? For he had much more neede, than if he had liued still in the house of his father Iesse: hee had beene there but as a poore countrey cloyne or sheepeheard: and thereuppon he had followed his common trade of liuing. But being once become king, and hauing the riches of the whole lande before his eyes, so as no man could let him to gather as much as he would: such opportunitie was a prouocation to his flesh, & hee might soone haue ouershot himselfe as men commonly doe. And therefore hee brydleth himselfe, saying, Lorde, keepe wee. And in deede, if he had not beene preserued miraculously by ỹ goodnes of God, hee had soone beene corrupted at the sight of such opportunities. Thus haue wee nowe the reason why Moses forbade the kinges of Israel expressely to gather much gold and siluer.

For (as I haue said afore) accordingly as occasions are offered vnto vs, so must wee also be brydled and held in, when our flesh tempteth vs to any thing: and there is none other remedie than that which I haue tolde you of. Although then that this be spoken to kings: yet may wee gather a lesson thereof that shalbe common to all men. And therefore whensoeuer wee meete with any opportunitie that may drawe vs vnto euill, let vs see that wee learne to represse our lustes, & make a shielde and bulwarke of this admonition, lest wee step aside to some vanitie, because we be ouerfrayle. That is the thing whereof all of vs in generall ought to take warning, when wee see that the king was forbidden to gather much gold & siluer, because he reigned in a plentifull countrey.

Also here is mention made consequently of wiues: namely, that the king must not take many wiues. It is certaine that this rule is common to all men. For although some of the Patriarches had many wiues: yet was it not therefore lawfull, for we must haue recourse to Gods institution. True it is that mans custome may well pervert the doctrine: but yet can it not change euill into good for all that. It is God that ordeyned marryage: and as he is the author thereof, so will hee haue men to holde them to his pure institution. Nowe did hee create two wiues for Adam? No: and yet (as sayeth the Prophet Malachie) hee had abundance of spirit in him. It had beene no harder a matter to him to haue created two or three women than to haue created one. Was God letted by any vnabilitie? Nay, and yet he created two in one flesh. Sith the case standeth so then, it is a changing of the order of nature & a despising of God, when a man taketh two wiues. O (say they) the Patriarkes did so. Yea: but thereby it appeareth that the custome of men cannot alter Gods ordinance, how great vertue or holines so euer be in them. And it serueth also to shewe ỹ such as shielde themselues vnder the example of other men, offend double. For is it meete ỹ Gods authoritie should be diminished vnder pretence ỹ men haue done this or ỹ? And therfore let vs vnderstand, ỹ it was neuer lawfull for any man liuing to take two wiues in mariage at once: for it is a breaking of Gods order. Why then is it forbidden here but onely to kinges? Because there was more libertie. And the thing that I haue touched already is the better confirmed vnto vs in this text.

If a priuate person had taken two wiues, hee should haue beene neerely looked vnto. What? Shall I go giue my daughter to him that is maryed alreadie? Shee shalbe sure to haue sorrowe to her soppes: shee shall liue in continuall stryfe and vnquietnesse. Yet were shee better to bee dead out of hande. But men were so desirous of honour, that if a king required a daughter of theirs to his wife, they easily condescended vnto it. What? I shall haue my daughter maryed to a king. And it was a blynding of a womā when shee was sued vnto by such a one. Nowe then, for as much as kinges had larger scope in this case, and consequently might more offend God? our Lorde hath specially forbidden them to haue many wiues, and moreouer because the example of such as are in authoritie, is woorse than the example of priuate persons. If a common person doe any euill, it goeth no further than his owne house and his next neighbours: but hee that is in authoritie standeth vppon a skaffolde, and is seene afarre off: and if he ouershoote himselfe; the corruption of him spreadeth throughout the realme. Therefore it was requisite that God should forbid kinges to haue many wiues, euen because the corruption therof woulde haue spread ouer the whole lande. And although it could not be letted altogither: yet came it first from the heathen. And if it bee asked from whence the hauing of many wyues came, it wilbee founde in the house of Cain, & not among the people of God. This leawdnesse then of hauing many wyues, was brought vp by Satan. And the Patriarkes were intangled in it: as in deede it is harde for a man to keepe himselfe from a thing, when it is once growen into a custome; for then it seemeth to be permitted. Yet notwithstanding to the intent it should no more be so, because there was occasion therof, our Lorde forbad kinges to haue many wiues.

But heere it might be demanded, what is to be sayd of Dauid, and much more of Salomō, in respect of wiues as well as of riches. It cannot be denyed but that Dauid had many wyues, and as for Salomon, he had many moe, and he seemeth not to haue bin blamed in that behalfe, for the scripture speaketh but of the turning away of his hart after strunge women which infected him with their superstitions and ydolatryes. And as touching gould and siluer, wee knowe how it is sayd that Dauid gathered so great a masse of them that Salomons Temple and his palace were buildid therwith. Therefore there was a maruelous riches. Yea and it is said expresly, ỹ in the raigne of Salomon, men made no more accompt of gold and siluer, than of grauel, ỹ quantity therof was so exceeding great. And there seemeth to be some contrarietie in the scripture, in as much as among other thinges our Lord sayeth that hee will cause the gould of Arabye and all the riches of the worlde to bee brought to Ierusalem. And why should he promise that, if he ment not that kinges should be riche and wealthie? Nay, it is a figure of the kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ. If this blessing of God bee set downe as so worthie a thing, howe are kinges forbidden to gather golde and siluer? As touching wiues, no doute but both Dauid and Salomon offended in that behalfe, and Salomon most. As for Dauid, hee had many wiues: and all the excuses that can bee alledged, wil not be able to iustifie him before God. But howsoeuer the case stande, he did it not through inordinate lust. For he had maryed Michol Saules daughter, and hee coulde haue contented himselfe with that one wife, if shee had not beene taken away from him by force. And when she was giuen to another man, it was lawfull for him to take Bersabee.

Againe, there happened other things afterwarde, so that if a man consider wherefore Dauid tooke many wiues: surely there wil euer be some occasion to excuse him to the worldward; but yet for all that, he was blameworthie stil before God. And as touching Salomon, he rebelled openly, as a man too much giuen to ỹ flesh, in that he proceeded euen against the prohibition that was giuen both to himselfe and to all other kinges. And it appeareth what insued to him for it. For, that hee was so abused and deceiued by strange women, it was a iust punishment: and because he had taken such libertie to himselfe, God shewed him that he had cast himselfe into Satans snares. When a fish thinkes to swallowe vp other fishes, he himselfe is caught or choked by that meane. Euen so was Salomō faine to receiue his payment, because hee gaue himselfe too much to his delightes and pleasures. And it is a dreadful thing, & a thing that ought to make the hayre to stande vp vpon our heades, that so excellent a man, indued with so great giftes of Gods spirit, shoulde become an ydolater, and fall away from the pure seruing of God, specially being himselfe a prophet to teach the whole worlde, and a lampe to direct not only the children of Israell, but also the verie Infidels, and to draw them to the knowledge of the trueth. O that such a man shoulde ouershoote himselfe after that fashion! And whereof came this? Euen of giuing heade to his owne lustes: & therefore God payed him his iust hyre. Seeing we know this, ought we not to quake at such vengeance set before our eyes? Yes, and therefore let vs marke wel, that whereas Dauid and Salomon had many wiues, it was not without fault and transgression: and thereby wee see so much the more howe needefull this lawe is. For if God had neuer forbidden kinges to haue many wiues, had not their libertie beene yet the more excessiue? Yes verily. For they cannot bee withholde from rebelling against God. Their flesh carryeth them so away, that they forget the thing which ought to bee best knowen vnto them. This text ought to bee noted aboue all others, specially for kinges: and yet they thinke not of it at all. And therefore wee see it was not for nought, that GOD preuented that mischiefe.

But we must vnderstand by the way, how it is not ynough that the law be set downe, vnlesse God write it in our hearts by his holy spirite: For else it is but a dead letter, and so will kill vs, because wee shal bee iustly condemned by 2.Cor.3.6

the doctrine therof, which serueth to bereaue vs of all excuse. Therefore whensoeuer our Lorde commaundeth vs any thing, let vs learne that wee must runne vnto him, that he may write the things in our heartes, which we read written in paper or parchment. As touching riches, wee must not conclude that there was the like fault. For why? When Dauid gathered such a masse of golde and siluer, it was to build the temple of God, and not to make any other enterprises, as wee knowe. Againe, wee see not that he grieued his people, though there were great complaints after the death of Salomon: but of that wee will treate hereafter both for Dauid and for Salomon. The intent of Dauid then was good and holy, forasmuch as in gathering all thinges together which were requisite for the building of the Temple, hee attempted not any thing which was not commaunded him of God. Also the meanes were lawfull. For hee layde no tyrannicall charge vppon his people. As for Salomon, hee had the greate riches gathered aforehande by his father. And againe wee must marke, that a greate parte of those thinges were such as hee had conquered of the Infidels, and their spoyles were as yee woulde say, presentes, which God had giuen him, as is spoken thereof in the Psalme. And therefore Salomon for his parte might lawfully vse all those goods, specially forsomuch as it was sayde, that the kinges of Tharsis and of all the yles and farre countryes shoulde come and bring golde and siluer, and all manner of precious things, and againe, that there shoulde bee giuen vnto him of ỹ gold of Arabia, because it was Gods will that the kingdome of Israell shoulde flourish after that manner. It was lawfull for Dauid and Salomon to gather treasure, so it were not vppon ambition and pryde, nor to vndertake fooliſh enterprises and to ouershoote themselues into looseneſſe of life, and also, so the people were not grieued by it with any impositions, but that Dauid did but onely receiue the golde and siluer that was brought vnto them. But whether Salomon exceeded measure or no, I am not able to affirme. Wee see what his disobedient sonne Roboam sayde, namely that whereas his father had beaten the people with roddes, hee woulde beate them with whippes, and he would lay vppon them as much as they coulde beare, vntill hee made all the backes of them to bowe. In which saying, Roboam vaunteth of his fathers tyrannie. And wee may well gather therby, that there was some exceſſe in Salomon. So much the more therefore ought wee to marke, that God hath not for nought forbidden kinges to gather great masses of golde and siluer. And for the same cause also did Dauid vse the prayer which I haue rehearsed before: for there was good cause for him to doe it. He saw the temptations that myght assayle him on all sides, and hee coulde neuer haue withstoode them, if God had not strengthened him with his power. And in the same respect hee protesteth that Gods lawe is deerer to him than golde and siluer, and that all the riches of the worlde were nothing to him in comparison of Gods lawe, because hee saw there his true felicitie and glorie.
